The expression, "must needs go through Samaria," is like the other expression of Jesus in Matt. 18: 7, "it must needs be that offenses come"—i. e., they are necessitated, "unavoidable," because of the environments of this present evil world. So "must needs go throu' Samaria," simply meant go that way or not at all, unless he went by sea, or a circuitous route by crossing the Jordan. And we have no evidence that either of these routes would have been practicable.

Another very common mistake is to say [illegible] for [illegible]. Also we hear men say "jedge" for judge. Another man has the habit of using a subjective when an objective is required. One of his favorite mistakes is "to we," "to I." He's been to college and seldom preaches without "dishing out" some Greek or Hebrew. So these mistakes are not made by those regarded illiterate, but by persons of fair attainments in some respects. This makes it all the more noticeable. So, as "dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savor: so doth a little folly in him that is in reputation for wisdom and honor." Ecc. 10: 1.

But, brother, don't say "cove-yas," "jedge," or "Izzel" for Israel, nor "Judas [illegible]," nor holiday for holy day, nor "trump [illegible] skins" for "triumph of the skies."

Now this is all said in good spirit, and let none of us get "riled" about it. We all make mistakes, but let's stop making such glaring ones as those noted above, especially if we have A. B. or A. M., or some other distinguishing mark "tagged" on us.

An Observer.

ALLELUIA! ALLELUIA!

Alleluia! alleluia! Let the holy anthem rise,
And the choirs of Heaven chant it in the temple of the skies:
Let the mountains skip with gladness and the joyful valleys ring
With hosannas in the highest to our Saviour and our King!
Alleluia! alleluia! He endured the knotted whips,
And the jeering of the rabble and the scorn of mocking lips,
And the terrors of the gibbet upon which He would be slain:
But His death was only slumber—He is risen up again.
Alleluia! alleluia! Like the sun from out the wave,
He has risen up in triumph from the darkness of the grave;
He's the splendor of the nations, He's the lamp of endless day,
He's the very Lord of glory, Who is risen up to-day!
Allelnia! allelunia! He has burst our prison bars,
He has lifted up the portals of our home beyond the stars:
He has won for us our freedom—'neath His feet our foes are trod—
He has purchased back our birthright to the Kingdom of our God.
Alleluia! alleluia! Blessed Jesus, make us rise
From the life of this corruption to the life that never dies!
May we share with thee thy glory when the days of time are past,
And the dead shall be awakened by the trumpet's mighty blast!

WOMAN'S WORK.

This is an interesting subject to me because I feel it a great privilege to have some church work I can do but I am somewhat like Paul: I want to see it done decently and in order. I surely hate to see the church work drag and be a secondary affair: but it seems to me if a woman can be a superintendent of a Sunday school and do ten times better than some man in her church it would not be right to take the work and him loaf around and shirk his duty; for if so, when will he work out his salvation? Seems to be the nature of most of us to excuse ourselves that some one else can do better than I can. Moses excused himself to the Lord when called to be a leader: but notice he did not settle the matter within himself but let the Lord decide and he obeyed the command. We feel, I am sure, that most young men do not take up church work as they should, but is it not due, to some extent, to the lack of spiritual education? All young men and boys, as I see it, should attend the business meetings, especially the quarterly meetings, whether official members or not. Some one might ask why. Well, one reason is that a disciple is a learner and the young men especially should be learning how to do the church work, for they are expected to fill the older men's places and to do better work than the older ones have done. Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all things will be added to you. I heard a young man say a few years ago he would not miss quarterly meeting for anything. He was engaged in a business that was paying him about $2.50 per day, but said, "I will not work next Saturday, for it is quarterly meeting at my church." And also said, "It is not all in dollars and cents." He was not a member of the Methodist Protestant church, I am sorry to say, but was a member of Friends church. Do we not need our church filled today with just such young men as this young man? His father and mother were regular attendants at the church meetings. Now it just appears to me this young man was following the teaching of home.

Now do the parents insist and advise, or in other words, persuade and explain to the boys the importance of attending these meetings as they should? That's a question, to my mind; or do they feel it not at all necessary but are willing for them to stay away. We surely do need, as I see it, a real spiritual education along these lines and where shall we get it? The home is the best place to teach these boys and girls I know of. It is an old saying, Show me the mother and I will show you the man; but what about father? He also has his responsibility. Once a little boy was following his father through the snow; he there could see his father's tracks so plain. The father on looking back could see the little fellow taking such long steps and said, "Son, what are you trying to do? Why are you taking such long steps?" The little one said, "Father, I am just stepping in your steps." See how the prattling little boy was being moulded and his destiny sealed by his own dear father's life and walk. Do we not see the need of walking circumspectly? Are father and mother just as careful as they should be on Sunday? Do they ever stay away from Sunday school and send the children when they feel tired and want to rest as they call it? The Lord I guess calls it at ease in Zion and says, "Woe unto all that are at ease in Zion." This is a very careful walk we are taking from earth to heaven and the Word says, strait is the way, and I fear some of us are not willing to walk in this way because of its being so narrow. We think the mercy of the Lord will surely save us, but only the ones that do the will of their father in heaven will be saved. The Lord expects us to walk worthy, but we drift along, so many of us, with no purpose in view, and rest on the mercy of the Lord. We should be thankful we are in the hands of a dear loving heavenly Father and not in the hands of man. Once a wicked king compelled a man to walk through a city and carry a pitcher filled to the brim with water for some crime he had committed; and he was to walk so carefully as not to spill one drop of water for his punishment; but if he did spill the water his head would be cut off.

Now woman's work in the church is what we want to say a little more to what has already been said. We find in Philppians 4: 3, "And I entreat thee also, true yokefellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel, with Clement and with other of my fellow laborers whose names are in the book of life." Now we do not know about these women, whether they had families or not, but we do not see how a woman can do her whole duty with a family and leave her home as much as some do. Seems she would not have as much time as if she did not have a family to train and bring up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Then again, we might notice in the word how women were to adorn and keep themselves the holy women; were to be chaste, keepers at home, coupled with fear, whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair and wearing of gold or of putting on of apparel, but let it be the hidden man of the heart in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price, for after this manner in the old time the holy women also who trusted in God adorned themselves. Then again: I will, therefore, that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting; in like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel with shamefacedness and sobriety, which becometh women professing godliness. I may expose my ignorance at this time more than usual, but anyway, we do have a right to our own opinion, but the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. But we do hear quite a good deal said now about the freedom that we women have, and I hope that we do fully appreciate our blessings, that we are not looked upon as heathen women and we should be very humble and our hearts should be filled with gratitude that we have been so highly respected; but to my opinion we have pushed out too far in the affairs of the world. I fear we are not many Hannahs of old, for seems to me womanhood has got below her standard in many respects. Seems to me the mothers should have been able to bring up sons competent to carry on the political affairs of the world and I am not let to believe that I shall ever feel that I have any business to attend to in the political affairs. Should we women attend to the work we are asigned we would do well. The very idea of any woman going out speaking in the political affairs and lowering herself as some are by smoking is enough to convince me that in place of humility and gratitude for her freedom she is uppish and not in her place at all, but ought to be at home attending to her duties. Where are the Hannahs and Sarahs? Where can we find the holy women and the refined girls of today? What does all this mean? To my mind it means that we have fallen into the hands of the enemy and while we are boasting and are smoking and dancing the world is going down to perdition and we are going down with it. How are we conducting ourselves in dress and in many ways. What are the examples we are setting? Can we afford to dress like the world? The word doesn't teach that we can. Where are we anyway? God said to Adam, Where art thou? and he is saying that to us today. Some one has said that we women would spend hours and days in getting up a bazaar and some kind of a church social and never had any time to pray. If we had prayed as we should there would not have been so many iceberg churches as there are. We would have seen we should adorn ourselves more modestly and not as the world. It is alarming to me to see the condition of the present time, and yet some of us just think we are getting along just fine. Lord pity us, I pray, and may we all see ourselves as thou seest us. We can, I think, do much in the church work, but it must be done in the spirit, not a mere form. Now, I ask the women to all read 1 Peter, third chapter, Titus, second chapter, 1 Timothy, second chapter. Seems to me we will be responsible to the world if we fail to obey the word.

THE INFLUENCE OF JESUS CHRIST.

In all human history and experience have men ever discovered a more uplifting moral force than the companionship of Jesus Christ? Think of the transforming influence that he exerted, in the days of his earthly life, upon the characters of that little band of men and women who companied with him among the hills of Galilee. Business men and tax-gatherers, fishermen and soldiers, women in their homes and women on the streets—all climbed to heights of which they had never dreamed and this simply through the influence of this strange man they had come to love. They simply may not have been able to analyze, perhaps hardly even realize, what had happened to them; all they knew was that he had come into their lives, and that had made all the difference. And, after he had left the earth as a visible presence, this kind of thing went on happening. Indeed, the magic of his presence was even more potent than before. Those who needed him, and longed for him found him entirely available, even though not visible to their earthly eyes. And this discovery was always as sunlight flooding into darkened lives. Here is, indeed, the very heart and core of Christian experience; and from generation to generation it has never failed. Into lives wearied by failure, bruised by pain and sorrow barren of hope, empty of meaning and purpose, he comes, when the door is open, and the coming always turns the scale. "Jesus Christ came into my cell last night," wrote Samuel Rutherford, in prison in Aberdeen, "and every stone of it glowed like a ruby." "Beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness"—these are some of Christ's exchanges. Is there a man or woman among us who does not need this transfiguring torch on [illegible] and circumstance? Is there one of us who can afford to do without the proffered friendship of Jesus Christ?—E. S. Woods, in the Christian Evangelist.

LOVE.

Love is a great thing, yea, a great and thorough good; by itself it makes everything that is heavy, light; and it bears evenly all that is uneven. For it carries a burden which is no burden, and makes everything that is bitter, sweet and savory. Nothing is sweeter than love, nothing more courageous, nothing higher, nothing wider, nothing more pleasant, nothing fuller nor better in heaven and earth; because love is born of God, and cannot rest but in God, above all created things.—Thomas a Kempis.

THE BEAUTY OF KINDNESS.

Did you ever stop to think how beautiful kindness really is? In your walks have you ever met a young woman gently supporting on her arm an old, old man? He is blind. Time has brought the silver to his hair. His steps are slow and feeble. With a cane he picks his way on, all the way guided and directed by the one who is so good to him. At the crossing of a street, she says, "Here is a step up. Careful now! Step up." Or, "Now down! Carefully!" So on they go, chatting all the way, the old man seeing things on every side through the eyes of his companion. And how your heart was stirred by the sight!

Or a young man is watching the steps of a wee brother. Boys do not always have the patience to do that. But see how careful this one guards his brother from everything that would harm him! The world has no sweeter sight than real, true, manly kindness toward one who is weak and needs help on life's way.

On a stagecoach one day, a number of passengers rode many miles together. One man drew into his shell, settled down on the seat and never spoke a single word from one end of the journey to the other. Do you think that man looked beautiful to those who were his companions that day?

A bit of steel struck by a mallet will chip away the hardest granite. Unkindness is the keenest steel in all the world for the chiseling away of beauty in face, life, and character. No matter how lovely the face might be in the beginning, if the one who possesses it gives way often enough to harsh and unkind words, the beauty will surely fade out of her face.

But how kind is God to the one who is always thoughtful of the comfort of those about him. With his own hand he traces lines of beauty over the features of one who is kind.

Do you want to be beautiful? Then be kind. Kindness costs something: it would be worth nothing if it did not.—Exchange.

A SPIRIT-LEVEL TO LIVE BY.

A little boy saw his father using a spirit-level to see if the board he was planing was "true" and straight.

"What's the use of being so careful, papa?" he asked. "It's pretty good, I guess. It looks so."

"Guessing won't do in carpenter work," said his father, "sighting" along the edge of the board, and shaving it the last bit. "You have to be just right. Folks guess at too many things. God doesn't like that way of living."

"Guess there aren't any spirit-levels for living by!" laughed the boy, watching him.

"Yes, there are," said his father earnestly. "You'll find them in the Bible. Try all your actions by that Make them true and straight and no guesswork about them!" -Selected.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

GOALS FOR 1920—

A revival in every church.

A family altar in every home.

A Sunday school in every church.

Every school contributing to the Home.

A church paper in every Methodist Protestant family.

Every cent of every claim paid by November 10.

DID WE GET YOUR NUMBER?

There are people who never see or know when a thing ought to be done until they are told; and cannot be made to realize it then. They know not and seemingly are unwilling to learn.

There are people who see or know that a thing should be done after being told. But they will lend a hand and make an honest effort to do something then.

There are others who see or learn that a thing should be done without being told or shown, but they are never quite ready to do it.

Then there are some who have the faculty for seeing what ought to be done, and they also have the ability and willingness to do it themselves. But they have no desire to enlist others in the work.

There is a small classs of people who see or know what ought to be done and who have the ability to enlist others in the doing of it.

Here are five sorts of folks; to which class do you belong? Classify yourself. It ought to be a profitable employment for the readers of the Herald to sort themselves according to such a classification and if it is not satisfactory, then change it more to their liking.

ARE YOU SURE?

There are those who are sure that the church has failed; that the best of all its members are bad, that its creeds need revision and its theology rewriting.; but they are never so sure of their own personal salvation.

There are those who are quite certain that their pastor is not up to his job, nor the preacher able to "deliver the goods" as a speaker. There never was a doubt expressed upon these subjects when under discussion, but for the life of them, you can't induce them to confess that their hope of heaven is half so well founded.

Yes, there are those who are sure of all the mistakes in the Bible, that all the translations we have have been poorly done; that our theologians were men of bitter prejudice and unbending narrowness—of these things they seem to have no doubt; but of man's need of salvation and of the power of Jesus Christ to save him from all his sins there is great uncertainty.

ARE YOU SURE?

Can you be as sure of your belief as you are of your doubts? Be as sure of men's integrity as you are of their unreliability? Can you trust Christ's power to save as readily and fully as you can your own judgment in ferreting out the sins and follies of men?

Why not try to be sure of your salvation? Sure of the integrity of some at least of the people whom you know? Sure of your obligation to serve, to worship, and to praise, as to criticize, to find flaws in people and to be dissatisfied with things in general?

MOVE ON—

This is the command sometimes given to people who stop on the crowded streets of large cities. "Move on, you are blocking the way." It is time that our campaign for the church papers moves on. It has seemed to halt in certain quarters. Various hindrances have hindered, but the time has come when we ought to put enough vigor into this campaign to finish it up and reach our goals without further delay. It is time to move on, other things are claiming our attention.

MY WAY—YOUR WAY—

How different these two ways often are. My way—the having of it is a great satisfaction to me. Your way—it is a great joy to you to have it. So much satisfaction do many of us get out of having our own way that we never let or would be willing to let others have the joy of having their ways at all.

A church voting its belief about a matter fails to find a majority of the other churches agreeing with it. To have their way is the main thing; so they refuse to abide by what the others propose to do.

What matters it if a majority so decide—to have their own way to this church is of more importance than to comply with a rule that has been passed upon by a majority of the others. And yet it is said of Christ that he sought not to please himself. Can it be a Christian act that always is actuated by a desire to have their own way in matters that pertain even to the church and the highest interests of the kingdom of God?

RANDLEMAN CHARGE, Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, Pastor.

I visited Mt. Lebanon, Level Cross, Bethany and Worthville churches of this charge. No appointment was made for me at New Salem. The Mt. Lebanon service was held on Saturday night; there were not a great number out, but the congregation did very well considering the time. At Level Cross there were no children in the Sunday school because of the diphtheria scare; the congregation was about as large as I found here last year. The new church building at this place was at a standstill. Lack of funds and of workmen were the causes, I was told. What has been done shows a willing mind and a desire to have a good building for that community. A very creditable building has been planned and part of the weather-boarding is on. There are funds in hand for putting the other weather-boarding on and the good women have been busy raising a fund to put the windows in, so we hope that ere long they may have the building in condition to hold services in. There is a place for Level Cross church and the people ought to have a good building to worship in.

Bethany was visited in the afternoon. Congregation was about as when I visited this church two years ago on a Sunday afternoon. There is a Sunday school which runs the year through, I think. Quite a number of young people were present in the services, bespeaking for the opportunities before this church.

I preached at Worthvillle at night. There was a fairly good attendance. They gave good attention to the word preached unto them. Worthville is one of the best little churches in the county. Last year it was the only church that paid every cent of every claim, and they are expecting to do fully as well this year.

Pastor Lowdermilk has been greatly hindered in visiting and putting on his campaigns, but he hopes soon to be able to visit all his people and to finish up his church paper campaign. R. M. Andrews.

A CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank our kind friends for their many words of comfort and deeds of kindness shown us through the sickness of my wife. She is somewhat improved but is not able to take hold of her housework yet. Surely nothing but the love of God in human hearts would prompt them to do so many kind deeds for the sick of their community. We certainly do thank the Lord for the privilege of living among such good people. May the Lord richly bless and reward every one of them according to the deeds done in the body. We are thanking our pastor, Rev. A. M. Hamilton, and family, for their kindness and much interest shown us. May the Lord bless each one of them. And while writing we wish also to thank our former pastor, Rev. W. H. Neese and wife for their kindness to us while on Guilford circuit. May the dear heavenly Father bless them for their kindnesses and give them much success in his service for the Lord.

Now just a few lines about the work. Our Sunday school is doing very well at Mitchell's Grove, but not what it might be. We have a nice little band of children and young people that attend and the faithful few older ones; for which we feel very grateful. Would be glad if more people would become interested in this great work. Our pastor, Rev. A. M Hamilton, preached for us yesterday a very good and helpful sermon. We think Bro. Hamilton is a great man; every day about his Father's business, doing whatsoever his hands find to do for his heavenly Father. We feel blessed and highly favored to have such a man as Bro. Hamilton on Guilforrd circuit. Bro. D. A. Braswell was with us a few weeks ago helping Bro. Hamilton in a few days' meeting. Bro. Braswell did some splendid preaching. We thank God for the life of such a man. Come again, Bro. Braswell.

Best wishes to the Herald and its many readers. J. Lewis Cashatt and Wife.

A Correction.

For some unknown reason, in reporting a marriage of last week, the name Zell Smith appeared when it should have been Zell Brown It must have been my mistake. I apologize to the bride.

A PERSONAL LETTER.

My dear Pastors:

I have a problem to solve and I hardly know how to go about it. I asked three of the preachers' wives at the branch meeting if they could help me out any, but I do not believe I will give their answer. It seems that preachers are somewhat like other husbands, anyway.

The question I asked was how to get preachers to do what you wished them to do. And that is my problem: how best to get the pastor's co-operation in the work that has been given me. I have been made president of the Correspondence Department of foreign missions. The goal is a correspondence auxiliary in every church that cannot organize a local one.

Miss Forrest says the Correspondence Department idea is the greatest thing ever thought of in regard to our mission work.

The letters containing it have already been sent to some of the northern branches, and they are very enthusiastic over it. It ought to make us feel bad if those hustling people up North get it to work before we slow Southerners ever make a move.

The idea may be good, but it will be a failure in bringing in members, unless the pastors give me their support. This is intended for a personal letter and an appeal for help to each one of you.

I am not going to tell you to preach a missionary sermon: you will know what best suits your people. But do your best to get them interested and give all the information you can.

I know we have some who do not like to hear missions or anything else that calls for money preached (guess they are Hard-Shell Baptists at heart); but better some should hear who do not want to, than that one should rise up in judgment and say they would have worked for the Master if they had been shown the way.

When I organized in my own church a few weeks ago, a lady said to me, "I am willing to do all I can, but it is hard to get interested in anything that we know nothing about."

It is a lamentable fact, but I fear a good many of our women are as ignorant of our mission work as the heathen are in regard to the gospel. Therefore, it is necessary to begin our work at our own doors.

But I am sure that day has passed; we will give them the information and an opportunity to work, then if they will not, we will have done our part.

Miss Forrest is intending to come back at General Conference and continue to visit our churches. We were talking about this part of the work, and she said her coming would make no difference; to go ahead and organize in every church that wanted a correspondence auxiliary and she would encourage and strengthen them.

Now this is what I am asking of you: talk it over with your people and decide if a correspondence auxiliary best suits your situation. If it does, secure all the names you can and send to me. If you have only one, send it in, there may be others later. And I (or rather the pastor) want an assistant in each church to collect dues, etc. Will arrange for this later.

I hope and believe that every pastor has at least one "right hand" woman that he can call on in an emergency.

And this to the lady I was talking to at the meeting, who was interested in this department: I intended to see you again, and I fail to remember your name. I do not know who your pastor is, but am sure he will find a helper in you. Am looking for a long list of names from your church.

There are some who would like to join this part of the work who live too far to attend their church. Would be glad for any so situated to send me their names.

Now we have the opportunity of doing a great work in our foreign mission field, but it will take prayers, work and co-operation. I am willing to do what I can, but feel almost helpless. If it succeeds, the next vote of thanks wil go to the pastors of the North Carolina Conference. I am counting on you.

There is only one way to get rid of me, if you are looking for a way of escape. After doing and saying all that you feel is required of you; and you feel that you have "delivered your soul," and cannot get a single woman to join, please write me at once and I will mark said church off my list.

Otherwise, after waiting for you to have time to get around on your charge, I will come to the conclusion that you have missed this article, and will put myself to the trouble of writing to see what is the matter.

I would rather have written a personal letter to each one, but you realize what a task that would be. This is getting long and I expect somebody will be calling me down for using so much space; but so long as Bro. McCulloch keeps quiet I shall not worry.

I wish more of our pastors could have been with us at the branch meeting. I feel sure they would have gone back to their work with a greater desire to help in the work our women are doing. And I do not feel like closing without saying it was the greatest inspiration of my life to meet with those big-hearted, whole-souled Christian workers who are not counting the cost here below. I feel that I have been repaid over and over for trying to get on the "inside" of a missionary society.

Mrs. J. J. Crawford.

Hillsboro, N. C., R. 3.

Vance Circuit.—The second quarterly conference convened at Spring Valley April the 17th. Each church was represented by one or more. New Hope and Spring Valley had the largest representation. Business of conference was transacted in the spirit of brotherly and sistely love, for we had one of our lady stewards and we find this sister a very great help, as she makes the music that makes us all feel good before we enter upon the business of quarterly conference. This sister has not missed a single session of the quarterly conference since elected an official. Don't I wish all the officials on Vance circuit had such a record? There are many officials on this charge that have not been to a quarterly conference since I have been on charge; two and one-half years. We pass official character as good and on we go in same old rut. Brethren, I believe something ought to be done. I do not believe a man has a good official character who never attends a quarterly conference. How it is possible to keep up interest when the very leaders of the local church have none and when elected according to requirements of our church law they think they have perfect right to sit and be elected and then transfer to another without consulting pastor or hold office and never attend to any of the duties of said office.

Well, I started out to tell you we had a good conference; those present were glad they went. Bros. J. H. Blanks of Gillburg and H. G. Ellington of Harris' Chapel are the nominees for delegate to annual conference. Some improvements on parsonage were decided on and a committee of one from each church was appointed to act with parsonage trustees; and last Saturday at 10 o'clock was time set for this committee to meet in joint session at parsonage and consider work to be done. This committee decided that needed improvements would cost about $500. This amount was allotted to the several churches upon basis of pastor's salary. I am very hopeful to see this much needed improvement made at once.

We are receiving much Forward Movement literature and it seems that I may need some additional room to take care of it as I can not give it all away. I cannot find time to read all myself and some are seriously objecting to putting posters in church. As Bro. Reed said, "I am somewhat bothered."

We certainly enjoyed the nice dinner spread by the ladies of Spring Valley; they surely did their part. Spring Valley is always going forward—never backward. I think there will be some improvements made on this church in fall. I think Flat Rock will undertake to improve soon. I want to see Flat Rock raised some seven feet, built under with brick and brick veneered; Sunday school room below, vestibule, etc., made up-to-date. The membership is not large but able. The church is not in keeping with wealth and residential appearance of the community. I have called attention to certain things through the medium of church paper. Hope no one will be offended. It is all in the finest spirit and love. Come on and let's do things.

H. L. Powell, Pastor.

Greensville Circuit.—We held our second quarterly conference Saturday, 17th of April, with a good delegation from all of the churches. Bro. Mannie Chambliss and Bro. Ellis were nominated for delegate to the annual conference.

Bro. Andrews came over and held our conference and visited all of the churches; we were glad to have him with us.

Our Sunday schools are all running nicely now and seem to be taking on new life.

Our people are still very thoughtful of us. Thanks to Bro. Sidney Carpenter for nice ham, and Mrs. Pearson for butter and milk; Mrs. J. M. Right for onions.

Yours in His name, L. S. Helms, Pastor.

—Miss Velma Beam was one of the graduates of Cherryville school and expects to enter the Normal in the fall

—Bro. A. W. Davis and wife, of Walnut Cove, visited Bro. W. W. Hunter's family in Greensboro last week. Bro. Hunter and Bro. Davis married sisters.

REPORT OF THE WOMEN'S CONFERENCE OF THE INTER-CHURCH WORLD MOVEMENT.

(Made at the Branch Meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society by Mrs. Charles F. Finch, of Thoamsville.)

The Women's Conference of the Inter-Church Movement was held in Charlotte, N. C., March 9-10. The pastors' conference of our state was held at the same time.

Mrs. Umborough, of St. Louis, one of the Interchurch Movement speakers presided over all meetings for the ladies. The first day was given over to home problems as revealed to us through the city and rural survey departments of the Inter-church World Movement.

Rev. Edward De Bruner, of New York, presented the needs here in America, and the opportunity awaiting the churches to meet the situation.

Dr Chester D. Snell told us of conditions right here in North Carolina. Dr. Plato Durham pointed out the opportunity awaiting the Christian people to create and maintain a better relationship between the white and negro races.

At night Rev. J. S. Sensker of New York gave a most interesting series of stereopticon slides, picturing the great opportunity for the churches and the great task confronting them in Christianizing the world. He was followed by four returned missionaries who told us of conditione out of their own experiences in the foreign fields.

Dr. James I. Vance and Dr. Chas. H. Pratt, the founders of the Interchurch World Movement, were both present. Dr. Vance told us "What the movement is and what it is not." Asking, "Can the churches do team work?" he said: "When it comes to the big things of Christian faith we are not divided. We have the same Bible. We worship the same Saviour. Members are tránsferred from one denomination to another on a certificate of their standing in the church from which they come. All Christians are made such by the same process. There is not a Baptist way of getting converted, nor a Methodist Protestant way nor a Presbyterian way. There is just the one way Christ described to Nicodemus when He said, 'Ye must be born again.' We all preach that and when we die we do not expect to gò to a denominational paradise. The Baptists do not expect to go to a Baptist Heaven or the Lutherans to a Lutheran Heaven. We preach one Lord, one faith, one baptism. Therefore if any people on earth should find it easy to do team work it would seem to be the Christian churches. It is a part of our creed. Our law is love, our goal is brotherhood, and our favorite marching hymn is, 'We are not divided, all one body we.' "

The conference adjourned Tuesday night. At this meeting the ladies were given an opportunity to ask questions about the movement. These were answered by Dr. Pratt.

On Wednesday a denominational meeting of both ladies and our pastors was held at our Methodist Protestant Church in Charlotte. It was a rare treat to meet with our good people there. At this meeting Dr. Andrews was elected chairman with Rev. N. G. Bethea as secretary. Dr. Dixon, sent down by the board, stated their attitude toward the movement.

After open discussion it was unanimously voted by our pastors present to give this movement their unofficial endorsement. The ladies of the church served a delicious luncheon to all present.

It might be interesting to know that thirty denominations will cooperate with this great movement.

OUTLINE OF DENOMINATIONAL CONVENTION PROGRAM.

Some days ago I wrote to every pastor in the Methodist Protestant Church about the denominational Young People's Convention to be held in High Point, N. C., May 18 to 20. Please do as that lettr suggested.

The first session of the convention will be held Tuesday evening May 18th at 7:30, and you ought to be there for the opening meeting if possible.

Rev. E. D. Stone, of Baltimore, Md., will direct the music and Rev. C. M. Elderdice, of Crisfield, Md., will preside at the organ. We are expecting Rev. J. H. Straughn, Rev. J. W. Hawley, and Mr. Charles Reiner to help with the music. These men together with the local talent will give us singing that will be inspiring.

Dr. J. W. Hawley, of Steubenville, Ohio, will make the leading address on the first evening.

Dr. William Ralph Hall, director of young people's work in the Presbyterian Church, will deliver two addresses on the 19th.

Mrs. H. W. Maier of Columbus, Ohio, will have charge of the children's work, and will make two addresses.

Dr. H. L. Feeman president of Adrian College, will lead the quiet hour services and make one address.

Rev. J. W. Shell of Kansas City and Rev. Lawrence C. Little of Chattanooga, Tenn., will speak on Christian Endeavor work.

Rev. W. E. Grove of Fort Worth, Texas, and Rev. C. R. Green, of Ravenwood, Mo., will discuss the problems of the country church in a most helpful way.

Mrs. H. W. Maier, Rev. Geo. C. Shurtz, Rev. E. D. Stone, Rev. C. E. Forlines, and Rev. J. H. Straughn will all discuss Sunday school work. And Dr. Geo. H. Miller will direct our thoughts to God's call for all-time servants.

Rev. T. E. Woodford will tell us something of the boys and girls of the mountains, and Dr. E. H. Vandyke and Dr. F. C. Klein will bring us tidings from the mission fields.

And as is fitting Dr. Geo. W. Haddaway, president of the Board of Young People's Work from the beginning, will speak the last word.

The program is not complete yet. There may be others added, but this will give you something of what is being planned for those who attend.

Many are planning to be in High Point for this convention. Are you one of the number? If so, then be sure to write Dr. Geo. R. Brown 609 North Main St., High Point, N. C., and tell him that you are coming, and tell him as nearly as possible when you will arrive. Please do not go and ask him to provide you a home without even writing to tell him that you are coming. If a bed for two nights and breakfast on two mornings are not worth a postal card and time to write it, then you ought to be willing to go to a hotel when you ge there.

Looking forward with expectations of a fine convention, and a good attendance, I am

Yours in service for Christ and the children,

A. G. Dixon.

JENNY LIND'S RIVAL.

Years ago, in Sweden, lived a little girl named Jenny Lind. She loved to sing about her work and play, as other children do, never thinking then that she was to be famous when she grew up. When she was still a little girl, however, people who understood music happened to hear her sing, and saw that she was more than an ordinary childish singer. She had lessons from a master called Croelius, who helped her in every way he could, and before she was any more than a little girl she was working very, very hard and singing a great deal. As she grew older, everybody loved to hear her, not only, I think, for her beautiful voice, but because she was a loving, sincere, unselfish girl; and all these things show, you know, in a person's singing.

She was a Christian girl, and when quite young became a member of the church in her native place, and was connected with it all her life. She loved to do good, and many stories are told of the lovely things which she did with the great sums which people paid her for singing. After she had sung all over Europe, and had a great reputation, she had a long engagement in Sweden. When this was filled she offered to give a concert for the benefit of poor Swedish girls. It was a great success, and when she was told what a large sum of money her voice had earned for those girls in whom she was so interested, her eyes filled with tears and she cried out, "It is beautiful that I can sing so."

Perhaps your grandfather or your grandmother may have heard her when she came to the United States on a concert tour. Ask them and see. She married a German gentleman named Goldsmith, and died only a few years ago in England. Her daughter still lives there, and there is a granddaughter who sings so beautifully that people are beginning to wonder if she will be a second Jenny Lind.

She was called "the Swedish nightingale," and during her public life was probably without a rival in the hearts of people who loved music; but somebody tells a pretty little story that shows that she not only knew when she was surpassed, but could acknowledge it too:

"One day she was riding in the country with some friends. A bird of brilliant plumage perched near by as they drove slowly along and trilled out such a complication of sweet notes as astonished her. The coach stopped, and, reaching out, she gave one of her finest roulades. The beautiful creature arched his head on one side and listened deferentially, and then, as if to excel his famous rival, raised his graceful throat and sang a song of ripping melody that made Jenny rapturously clap her hands in ecstasy. Then quickly, as though she was before a critical audience, she gave some Tyrolean mountain strains that set the echoes flying, whereupon the birdie took it up and sang and trilled till Jenny, in happy delight, acknowledged that the pretty woodland warble decidedly outcaroled 'the Swedish nightingale.' WAIT FOR THE MUD TO DRY.

Father Graham, as everybody in the village called him, was one of the old-fashioned gentlemen of whom there are so few left now. He was beloved by every one, and his influence in the little town was great, so good and active was he.

A young man of the village had been badly insulted, and came to Father Graham full of angry indignation, declaring that he was going at once to demand an apology.

"My dear boy," Father Graham said, "take a word of advice from an old man who loves peace. An insult is like mud; it will brush off much better when it is dry. Wait a little till he and you are both cool, and the thing is easily mended. If you go now, it will only be a quarrel."

It is pleasant to be able to add that the young man took his advice, and before the next day was done the insulting person came to beg forgiveness.—Our Young Folks.

THE "PRAYER PIANO."

"It does seem 'most too bad that we can't have any piano when we want one so much. There is Madge Derry, who has a beautiful one, and don't care a fig for it!"

The speaker was the minister's ten-year-old daughter, May, who sighed as she spoke as if to say, "Well, it's very hard, but I guess I can live through it."

"I'll work and earn you one when I am twentyone," quoth Wilfred aged seven.

"Never mind, children, all come here to the den at four o'clock this afternoon and we'll see what can be done about it."

It was Harry who said this, the oldest child of the family, and of course looked up to with mingled love and respect.

He was only sixteen, but the poverty of his parents had forced itself upon him when he was very young, so that he was almost a man in thought. Ever since he could remember, his mother had been obliged to plan and calculate to "make both ends meet."

His father's salary had never been more than $500 a year, and to keep ten children fed and clothed, besides himself and wife, and withal to make a decent appearance, required a goodly supply of brains at the "head of affairs." It was the dream of Harry's life to enjoy a college education, but it seemed likely that he would have to give it up, for there were nine in the family younger than he. Theodore was fourteen, Samuel, twelve, May, ten, then the twins, Miriam and Mildred, aged nine, Wilfred, seven, Grace, five, Annie, four, and Walter, the baby.

May was really talented, could sing like a bird, playing her old airs on an old accordion left there by some traveling musician who had received supper and a night's rest, for the minister's house was considered lawful shelter for all "tramps" and "unfortunates." She often longed for a piano, but said she never expected to have one "any more than she expected to have the moon." When Harry spoke of it in such a quiet way, she was quite taken aback, for he seemed to think it really possible for them to have one.

The "den" was a wigwam built of boughs and twigs, at the end of the garden, and which would afford shelter from rain in case of need. All the children were there (except, of course, Walter) promptly at four o'clock. Harry was the last to appear, and when he did, it was with a sober, serious face rather uncommon to him. He went straight to the matter in hand.

"I've thought this piano matter over, and I've come to the conclusion that if it is right for us to have one, we shall have it. Father said Sunday in his sermon, you know, that if we only had faith, we could do almost anything "in His name." Now we will pray every day for three months for a piano, and if it is God's will, we will have it. Let us begin now," and Harry's voice led in prayer followed by the others in turn. They somehow felt, as they rose from their knees, as though their wish would be granted in God's own best way.

It was the last day of the last month, when directly their union prayer-meeting was over (for they had held them together all the time). Harry asked permission to go to the post-office, about three miles away. His mother hesitated, as it looked like a storm, but, as she saw the anxious look on her son's face, she consented.

He was somewhat amazed on entering the post-office to find a strange looking blue envelope addressed to his father, but was more surprised when the post-master said:

"There's a small sized house down at the station for your father. I guess the folks back East think he's one of the poor, destitute ones, instead of a salaried man, and sent him a cabin to live in. Haw-haw," laughed the man.

Harry went down to look, and here it was boxed up and covered with sacking,—their piano! he knew it was though he had only seen the wrappings. He ran most of the way home, and Mrs. Dean was electrified to see her sober, sedate, eldest son come racing into the yard like a runaway horse, and waving a blue envelope above his head.

"It's come! We've got it!" he shouted to May, who was setting the supper table. He was finally prevailed upon to let his father have the letter which was read.

It seemed that one of Mrs. Dean's cousins in the East had purchased a new piano, and, not knowing what to do with the old one (which was not much worn, only old-style), had thought of her, and sent it to the place where it was so earnestly desired.

The minister and his wife knew nothing of the daily prayer meetings, and Mr. Dean with a solemn face shook his head, saying:

"There are so many round us who are needy, and this luxury—"

"Doesn't eat or drink," cried Samuel.

"And we've all been praying for it for three months," said Billie, in a tearful voice.

"What's that?" asked the astonished minister.

"Why, father, don't you remember the sermon you preached about the faith which should remove mountains, and our faith has just brought us a piano," explained Harry, and the minister said no more.

They prayed in the right spirit, those young hearts, with simple, child-like faith that their prayer would be answered, and it was. Ever after, in the Dean household, the piano went by the name of the "prayer piano."—Nellie Scholes, in The Little Christian.

—Rev. W. W. Lineberry, born in Guilford County, N. C., for years a prominent minister of the Indiana Conference, died recently at the age of 63 years. He leaves a son in the ministry who we hope will succeed to his father's good influence.

THE BOY WITH A BUCKET.

The boy with the bucket of water, who is on the spot immediately the fire breaks out, can often do more good than a whole fire brigade half an hour later. An ounce of strength applied at the right time will stop the moving stone which, if left unchecked for a few moments, would crash through a brick wall.

To rescue a confirmed drunkard requires a mighty effort, but the same end is accomplished when a word of advice or the good example of a comrade helps a tempted boy to resist temptation. It is not a difficult thing to plant pure and sweet ideals in the heart of a child, but it is hard to reclaim a life which has been lived in conformity to quite different ideals.

Never mind if you do not belong to the fire-brigade, to be carried to the scene of disaster on a swift-moving automobile amid the clanging of gongs. Keep your own small bucket full, and your eyes open. For remember, the boy who is on hand with his bucket when the fire begins, may be worth more than the whole fire department an hour later.—Selected.

GOING AFTER FIRE.

"Tell us a story, grandma," pleaded Jennie, "of when you's a little girl."

"Yes, grandma; or when you lived in the woods, and heard the bears howl at night," said Edna. "I wish I could see one—a real live one."

"I never saw but one live one," said grandma, "and that was one morning when I ran over to our neighbors to borrow some fire."

"Borrow fire!" cried the children together.

"Yes," laughed grandma. "You know so long ago they didn't have any matches. There were none made then. If we let our fire go out, we had to borrow some. Mother usually covered up a heap of big knots deep in the ashes over night. On raking them open in the morning, there would be a bed of coals to begin the day.

"But one night late in the fall, the knots did not burn, and there was no fire to get breakfast. I was the oldest—about as big as Edna. Well, mother pinned a wool blanket over my head with a thorn, for we didn't have many pins. Giving me the little iron kettle, she bade me be spry, for the children were hungry.

"Well, I got my kettle full of bright coals, with a blazing knot on top. I ran off through the frost, the wind keeping the coals and knots all ablaze.

"When I got about half-way home, I heard a crackling through the thick bushes. Almost before I had time to stop, a great black bear ambled out into the rough, narrow road. I was so scared that I dropped my kettle flat on the ground and stared at him. And he stared at me, sticking his long nose out toward me sniffing and snuffling.

"But he didn't like the smell of the burning knot, and the next moment he leaped out of the path and went crashing off through the bushes.

"I didn't stop for the coals, but, scooping the knot into the kettle, I fled toward home in a great panic. A little time after that, father and Mr. Noble, our neighbor, caught the bear in a trap, and father had a coat made out of his skin."—Our Little Ones.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR MAY 2, 1920.

How to Show Sympathy. Matt. 25: 34-40.

It is not necessary for me to spend much time in defining sympathy. The most of us know what it is better than we practice what we know. Let each one, in the preparation of this topic take the Bible and read the Scripture carefully and find out just what it says. For we can never afford to content ourselves with what some one else says about the Bible. We must read for ourselves.

Jesus says that in the judgment day the King shall say unto those on his right hand, "Come ye blessed of my Father . . . for I was hungry and ye fed me, thirsty and ye gave me drink, sick and in prison and ye came and ministered unto me." Here they express surprise and ask when and where did we this and Jesus says, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye did it also unto me."

In large measure we may judge a man by his attitude toward:

1. Sick people. The epidemics of influenza which have swept over our country have been a severe test of the religion which some people profess to have. There were a great many people who seemed to be good neighbors while everything was running smoothly but when the epidemic came and their neighbor really needed them there was not much neighborly spirit. After all, the real test of a man is not what he will do under ordinary circumstances but what is his attitude under extraordinary circumstances. For the friend indeed is the friend in need.

2. The poor. The real poor, not the tramp who goes from place to place begging rather than work, but the man who is willing to work but the misfortunes of life have pressed hard upon him and some how he has bowed before them. Sickness or some catastrophe may have swept away the little earnings of a life time and he comes to that point that he is compelled to go to his stronger brother for help to tide him over until he can get on his feet again. What is the question often asked? Sometimes it is this, "What security can you give?" This is a time when a Christian should not inquire about security except the security which is written in heaven. For if our brother ever needed us it is then. And if we fail to help our brother under such circumstances as these all the generous gifts which we could make in a lifetime to institutions which do not so much need our help would be unacceptable in the sight of our Father in heaven.

3. The man who has fallen. Sometimes people get the idea that about the only thing they are to do when the church member makes a mistake is to scatter the news broadcast. But the Scripture says something entirely different from that. It says if a man be overtaken in a fault those who are spiritual should restore the weak one lest they themselves be tempted. If we are haughty toward the man who makes a mistake it is a pretty sure sign that there is something wrong with us. This was not the attitude of Jesus toward the lost. His desire was to help them on their feet again.

Then let us as Christian Endeavorers cultivate the spirit of helpfulness and sympathy and it will be the best advertisement for Christian Endeavor and also for our Christ that we can possibly display.

As the leader of the meeting will most certainly give out the questions asked in the Christian Endeavor World I will not ask any questions here.

Cultivating High Ideals. Col. 3: 1-4.

Daily Readings.

Mon. Ideals of Sympathy. Gal. 6:1-2.
Tues. Of Service. Matt. 4:10.
Wed. Of Purity. Matt. 5:8; 1 Thess. 4:3.
Thurs. Of Sacrifice. 1 John 3:16-18.
Fri. Of Knowledge. Phil. 3:7-14.
Sat. Of Integrity. Ps. 15:1-5.

Ideals are something which must be cultivated. We do not usually possess the highest ideals that are possible without some effort. And the ideal of today may not be our ideal of tomorrow. A certain minister in our church used to say he dated every one of his sermons and often said that the thought expressed was his opinion to that date but that he might change his mind later. Now what did he mean by that? He simply meant that as men's opportunities increase and as he receives more light he may see things differently. As man's vision is broadened his ideal changes. A great many of us today would not be at all satisfied with the things we once thought would make us happy. The little girl's ideal is a beautiful doll and the boy's ideal may be a wagon but when the girl is grown to womanhood and the boy to manhood the toys no longer satisfy.

Our ideals should always call for the best things in:

1. Literature. The world is full of books and there are schools of thought galore. In fact, there is so much from which to choose that we hardly have time to make the choice. There is the cheap literature. There is that which may amuse and hold the imagination but does not edify. This should be avoided. No person can feed on things that are low without thinking low thoughts. Then, too, there is so much good literature in the world that there is no excuse for our not being educated. It is true we cannot all go to college and yet as some one has said the Lincoln way is still open and whosoever is willing to pay the price of home study can be educated. Some of the world's best scholars are those who never had a chance of a college education.

2. Spiritual things. God is not pleased with us until we choose the very best. There are not many of us that are as spiritually minded as we ought to be. There are so many things to detract from our spirituality that sometimes we content ourselves with that which is not the highest. Sometimes we point to some one else and feel that perhaps we are as good as that person, when as a matter of fact, it may be that God expects far more of us because of the greater opportunities which we have had. Let us be like the Apostle Paul, not as though we had already attained, but let us press forward toward the goal. When we get to be as spiritual as we think we will want to be our ideal will have changed so we can keep on growing.

3. Service. Some people say that the word service is being overworked in these days but I do not believe it. For Jesus himself said, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye also did it unto me." Now since Jesus is the great authority surely we can afford to attach a great deal of importance to what he says. As we grow in spiritual power we grow in our ability and our desire to serve and help our fellowman. Some of us would not now be at all satisfied with the service we used to render, but we shall not stop even here, we shall go on to greater things.

As the leader will most surely give out questions printed in Christian Endeavor World to be answered in the meeting, I will not ask the questions here.

J. E. Pritchard.

EVANGELISM.

[This space is devoted to evangelism, and is conducted by the conference committee on evangelism, composed of the following persons: S. W. Taylor, N. G. Bethea, A. B. Schlichter, T. M. Johnson, W. F. Kennett, R. S. Troxler, G. F. Millaway.]

ORGANIZED EVANGELISM IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Next in importance to creating the spirit of evangelism, is to direct and crystallize it. Certain forms of organization are necessary for successfully doing this. "Decision Day" has been used, and will still be used, with good results. But another form of organization that is needed, and which would prove a great factor in crystallizing the spirit of evangelism, is a Training Class. Organize the boys and girls of the Sunday school into a group, or groups, for the specific purpose of giving them training, instruction, as to what is necessary to make them Christians, and something of what it means to become a member of the church. Let the pastor, the superintendent, the teachers, or other capable and consecrated persons, meet these young people regularly and give them religious instruction, pray with them, and encourage them to become Christians.

Such an organization would not be long in justifying itself. The boys and girls will soon become accustomed to the subject of personal religion, and will not shy at it, nor will they become hardened to it. They will be brought to see how perfectly natural and easy it is for them to become Christians; and when they see the Sunday school to which they belong—the pastor, the superintendent, the teachers, the whole Sunday school—taking such earnest and definite interest in them, they will want to be responsive to it; they will want to be Christians.

This does not mean a new class in the Sunday school. Let the boys and girls stay in their regular classes just as they are. The training class will meet immediately after the Sunday school, or just before, or at some other time, best suited to the local situation. This is a detail that can easily be worked out by the local leaders.

Has your school tried this method? If not, by all means organize such a class—a training class, to make Christians out of your boys and girls. When our country was drawn into the world-war, the very first thing we did was to establish training camps to train our boys how to fight. The whole country was astir for this thing. It had to be done; other things could wait. And it was done, and well done. Let us be just as zealous to train our boys and girls to be soldiers in the army of Jesus Christ. And let us not forget that the fight is on now, and that the great recruiting station is the Sunday school. Set up your training camp.

We were pleased to have Mrs. John Dixon come visit us, bringing along Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Sharpe. Our pantry is fuller now as they left some nice canned beans and tomatoes.

Mr. G. O. Coble is still interested in our flower garden. Just received a box of fine gladiolus bulbs from him. What would home be without beautiful flowers?

We hope to have a number of the children with Rev. W. E. Swain at his regular appointments the first Sunday in May.

Forsyth Postal Card, W. F. Kennett, Editor.

The Second Quarterly Conference.

The second quarterly conference for Forsyth charge convened in Mt. Carmel church last Saturday. By 11 o'clock a. m. a very good audience was present. Bro. Martin, who is a candidate for the ministry, occupied the pulpit and gave us a very good talk, which clearly indicated preaching talent undeveloped. Bro. Martin was converted and joined the church last August. The committee on examination decided that we could not at this time grant preacher's license to him. License to exhort was recommended, with the understanding that at the earliest possible date license to preach will be granted. This was entirely satisfactory to Bro. Martin and he will earnestly pursue the course of preparation for preaching.

At about 12:30 p. m. a sumptuous dinner was spread upon the snowy table cloths near the church, and after grace was said we "fell to" and after all had been fed much was still unconsumed.

At 1:30 the conference opened for business. There were present 19 members (officials), three of whom were ladies. The business was dispatched in a business-like manner. Bro. R M Cox and Bro. A. V. Berrier were selected as nominees for delegate to the next Annual Conference.

By unanimous vote the next quarterly conference is to meet with Maple Springs church. At that time we are to take up the question of building a parsonage at Maple Springs. The church has there five acres of land. The city of Winston-Salem is reaching out into and beyond Maple Springs. Nice homes are going up right across the public highway in front of the church. Our holdings there are already valuable and are becoming more so every day.

Reports.

The pastor's report indicated that he was encouraged with the outlook for Forsyth and he emphatically declared that if Forsyth charge does not rapidly forge to the front and soon become one of the very best charges in the North Carolina Conference, that the people will have no one to blame but themselves.

Other Reports.

Reports by Sunday school superintendents indicated that as spring advances the Sunday school work is taking on new life.

Financial Report.

On the day of the meeting of the conference exactly five months of the conference year had passed. On Pastor's salary the report was as follows: Maple Springs, $111; Hickory Ridge, $78.50; Mt. Carmel, $59.77; Union Ridge, $50.05; Oak Grove, $32.10. In the case of Union Grove the assessment for general interests and pastor's salary are collected together. The total amount collected at Mt. Carmel and Union Grove, including amounts collected last Sunday puts, I think, these two churches paid up on all claims for the first five months. For pastor's salary the circuit is so nearly up to date as to show clearly that it could keep up to date with just a little more effort and if such reports are possible for the winter and "flu" months what may be expected with better weather, better health conditions, larger congregations and a little more activity on the part of the stewards.

Next Sunday.

The township Sunday school convention is to meet at Maple Springs next Sunday. The program calls for morning and afternoon exercises. Our brother, C. A. Long, of Maple Springs, is president of the convention. A good day is anticipated.

Mothers' Day.

Next Sunday week (second Sunday in May) Mothers' Day will be observed at Hickory Ridge. The pastor will preach a special sermon on "Mother's Love, Mother's Prayers and Mother's Faith." A committee has been appointed to provide flowers and all whose mothers have passed into the great beyond will wear a white flower; all whose mothers yet remain on this side of life will wear a flower with some color. Let this service be published far and wide and let all the members and friends of Hickory Ridge be present. The service will touch your hearts and do you good.

The Biggest Big Town and the Biggest Little Town.

Tuesday of last week the editor of the Postal Card left the biggest big town in North Carolina—Winston-Salem with 48,395 souls and journeyed to Mebane, which is called the "biggest little town" in North Carolina. Tuesday night was pleasantly spent in the home of Brother and Sister H. C. Nicholson. In this home Methodist Protestant preachers are always welcome and always kindly entertained.

Wednesday at one p. m. my young friend, Kennett McAdams came for me and we spent an hour at Hebron, where his young wife and where a preacher's wife who was always faithful to every responsibility of life sweetly await the resurrection morn. Wednesday night was spent in the home of Brother and Sister J. F. McAdams. Since the going away of Bro. Kennett McAdams' young wife, he and the bright little boy, Charles Kennett, make their home with his father. One daughter, Miss Alma, is with them, and this is indeed a Christian home and a pleasant resting place for any Methodist Protestant preachers. I regret that I could not see more of the kind people of Mebane and of Hebron. Thursday I returned to the "biggest big town."

Smoked Her Pipe.

As I came down Liberty Street and not far from the Methodist Protestant church an aged woman sat upon the front porch and contentedly smoked her clay pipe. Some children played near her, grand children, no doubt. It had been a long time since I had seen a grandmother smoking a clay pipe. It revived memories of "ye olden days."

St. Paul's.—Since our last report death has claimed one member of our Sunday school, Lillie Vandever. Her father being dead, she made her home with her uncle, Bro. E. M. Routh. She made an enviable record, winning a prize for two years for not missing a Sunday. A good example for some of our older people to follow.

The special meeting has been in progress two weeks. It seems to be a united effort. Methodists and Baptists all working together. But in spite of all efforts some say, "Not now." We can't say how many have professed Christ, but thirteen joined the church yesterday.

W. A. Lamb,

THE PARTY.

"Harold, come here quick and let me put on your shoes. Papa wants you."

When mamma spoke from the next room, Harold and Katy were standing on the floor pouting because they did not agree in their playing.

Harold ran to mamma, and Katy ran to the window to see where he was going. He and papa stopped at the fruit store on the corner, and he soon came back with a big apple in his hand.

"I'm going to make up with Katy now if she'll be good," said Harold to himself as he went upstairs. Katy had forgotten her pouts. She wanted a taste of that apple.

"Oh, Harold, give me a bite, please."

"Well, if you'll put your hands stiff behind you an' not touch it, you may have a bite—just one bite."

Katy tucked her doll under her left arm, braced her little feet firmly on the floor, and —well, it was rather a large bite for a little girl—but then she knew she could have but that one.

"Oh, you stingy girl, to take such a big bite out of my apple," said her brother as he walked away to the window to finish his feast alone.

Katy ran to mamma's room and hid her face in her lap. There were tears in her eyes. "What is it, dearie?" asked mamma in cheery tones. When Katy had finished her story, mamma said, "Never mind, my little girl, you feel hurt, but brother feels worse than you do, and we must teach him not to be so selfish, for a selfish boy can never be happy, and don't we want brother to be happy?"

Katy nodded her head for yes, and soon she and mamma were very busy making a new apron for Dolly. Harold heard Katy's merry laugh and wanted to go in and join the fun, but he did not feel right in his heart, so he kicked his heels against the chair and looked out of the window.

By and by mamma and Katy went out and al was still until Katy came running in and with a winning smile said:

"Mr. Gent'lum, will you please come to my party?"

Harold had stayed alone with himself until he was unhappy, and was glad to follow his sister to the playroom. A plate with a slice of bread and a bowl of milk on it was placed on each of their footstools, and Katy had their bibs in her hand. She passed Harold his, put on her own, set her plate on the floor, and sitting down on her stool, placed her bowl on her lap and took a good bite of her bread.

"S'cuse me, Mr. Gent'lum. I didn't wait for manners," said Katy. Harold's bread had fallen on the floor. He had his spoon in his hand, but he had turned his back to stool and company and was winking very fast. The thought of eating choked him, and he felt that he must make it all right between his little sister and himself before he could eat anything. He did not want her to see him cry, so he winked fast and hard to throw the tears out of his eyes. It seemed to him if he tried to speak the words would not come. But Harold was a brave boy with plenty of grit, so he swallowed a big lump in his throat, and turning suddenly with his spoon in his uplifted hand, said:

"Katy, I was awful mean. Will you kiss me?"

Up went the rosy lips for a sisterly kiss. A great burden rolled from Harold's heart, and he made up his mind that the next time he had an apple all his own, he would get mamma to cut it in two pieces, just alike, and Katy should have a whole half.—Unknown.

LUCY'S FIRST EARNINGS.

"I should be glad to have you do like the rest of your Sunday school class, and give 50 cents to missions; but for me to give you the money it utterly out of the question. Dorothy is needing a schoolbook, and Wilbur can't get along another week without shoes. Though you are but a child, you know how closely we are pressed," said Mr. Bennet.

"Yes, I know, papa," sighed Lucy. "I cannot ask you for the money. But I want the 50 cents so much! If I only knew some way of earning it myself!"

"You are too young to expect to earn money," said Mr. Bennet. "You had better be giving your thoughts to your lessons and to your little duties and to trying to help mamma. When you are older you may be able to give many times fifty cents if you are faithful to your tasks now."

"Lucy is always faithful to her duties," spoke up Mrs. Bennet. "No mother or father could ask for a better child."

"Yes, I know," said Mr. Bennet, smilingly. "That is all the more reason why I am sorry I cannot give her the fifty cents she wants."

"She is quite reasonable; and she understands," said Mrs. Bennet, gently.

Then Mr. Bennet went away to his work, and Lucy began her task of clearing away the breakfast table. "If I could only earn the money myself," she sighed again, as she worked. "It would so much more like real giving."

Mrs. Bennet heard; but she did not answer, for she could think of no suggestion that would help the matter in the least.

After the table was cleared and the dishes were washed, Lucy sat down to the piano for a half-hour's practice before school time. When the half hour was finished, there still remained some time before she need start for school.

"Mamma, here is the practice book I borrowed from Miss Brown," she said, "It has come all to pieces, and I am ashamed to take it home. It does not seem right to return a book in a worse condition than it was when it was first borrowed."

"It is not right, either," answered Mrs. Bennet. "Everybody should take special pains to be careful with that which is not their own. Very unpleasant feelings are often caused between friends by carelessness in borrowing. We must do what we can to put the book into the best shape possible before sending it home. The cover was badly damaged, I remember; and the book was far from new."

"You know I can make very pretty book covers, mamma," said Lucy. "Suppose I make one for this? And we can stitch the sheets together."

"That will be well," answered Mrs. Bennet. "I believe you can make it look better than it did when you borrowed it. We will try as soon as you come home from school."

As soon as school was out that afternoon, Lucy hurried home and went to work with the book. First she fastened the loose leaves together with a strong thread. Then she bound a sheet of heavy white paper on for the cover.

"It looks very well, indeed," said Mrs. Bennet.

"I think I shall decorate the back with a vine and letters," said Lucy. "I cannot make it look too well, for Miss Brown was kind to lend it to me."

"Make it as pretty as you can," agreed Mrs. Bennet.

So Lucy drew a vine, and letters to form the name of the book. After she had sketched it first with a pencil, she traced it with ink. Then she was ready to carry the book home.

"What pretty letters you have made," said Miss Brown, noticing the cover, as Lucy put the book in her hand. "You are quite a child to do such nice work."

"I think it is natural for me to draw," answered Lucy, modestly. "My teacher at school says I do very neat work."

"It is remarkable," said Miss Brown, "I am sure, too, you are a very conscientious girl to bring my book home in such good condition. It is not many grown-up people who are so careful."

"Mamma has taught me that I must not use borrowed things as if they were my own," answered Lucy.

"It would be well if everybody could have such teaching," said Miss Brown.

Then Lucy went home. But the next day Miss Brown was waiting for her when she came home from school.

"Lucy," said Miss Brown, as the little girl entered the room where the young lady sat talking to Mrs. Bennet, "would you like to earn a little money?"

"Indeed I would, if I can," cried Lucy.

"I'm sure you can," said Miss Brown. "A lady saw the letters you made on my book cover, and she was delighted with them. She says if you will draw letters like that on some invitation cards she wishes to send out, she will pay you well. She wants every card to be different, you see; and she could not have them printed to her notion. Shall I tell her you will do the work?"

"Oh, I shall be glad to!" cried Lucy.

"Then I will take you to her now, as your mother has said you may go," said Miss Brown. "She will tell you just how she wants them done."

So Lucy went with Miss Brown, and got the cards and instructions. She did the work nicely; and the lady was pleased to give her more than the fifty cents she wanted so much. Afterwards she had more such work to do.

"You see, I am not too young to earn money; and to study my books and help mamma, too."

"It all comes from being a good girl," smiled Mr. Bennet. "I am more proud than you can think to know of your first earnings; and I am still more proud to know that your first fifty cents went into the mission box."—Baptist Boys and Girls.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Littleton Church.—Our Sunday school and congregation are still growing. We had several new scholars last Sunday and we were glad to have them with us. Our superintendent, Mr. Thornton, has recovered and is again with us, for which we are very glad and thankful. Mr. Thornton had a long spell of sekness. May the Lord bless him and his dear family.

Our Ladies' Aid Society has been reorganized and we had a very interesting meeting last Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the home of Mrs. J. E. Glasgow. We now have 12 or 13 members.

Our special meeting will begin the first Sunday in May at 7:30 P. M. Dr. C. L. Whitaker of Mebane N. C., will assist father in this meeting. Pray for us that we may have great success in this meeting. I do hope that all the members as well as other Christians will be much in prayer for the meeting.

I hope there will be many unsaved people brought to Christ and that the church will be greatly revived and this can be done only through the outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

We were very much pleased with both morning and night services last Sunday: the congregations were unusually large and the people very attentive to the word preached. We were delighted to have a good many of the people of other denominations worship with us in both services and to see such a good interest taken in the services. We hope all the denominations will cooperate with us in our special meeting. We extend to all a hearty welcome. Come and let's have a great revival. Have faith in God who saves from sin.

As I haven't much experience in this particular line of work I will close with many good wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Hodie De-golden Loy.

April 21 1920.

SALISBURY.—Spring is here and we are glad to see this beautiful weather. Rev. D. A. Braswell was here Sunday night and preached a good sermon. He spent Friday night with us. We surely did enjoy hearing him talk and pray. We are always glad to have him come.

May God bless all the readers of the Herald.

Edna Bennett.

NEW HOPE. PAGELAND CT.—We have reorganized our Sunday school. We had a large attendance at church on Sunday, the 11th.

My teacher in the senior class is Mr. Joe Baker; assistant, Mr. Clark Montgomery.

For the junior class the teacher is Mrs. T. B. Cook; card class. Miss Rebecca Belk.

The teachers in the card and junior class are to give a prize to every child that does not miss a Sunday.

Rev. J. W. Quick preaches for us twice a month, on first Sunday at 11 o'clock A. M., and every third Sunday afternoon at 3: 30. He has been on the work six years and we hope to keep him six more. He gets better every time he comes.

Our Sunday school has contributed $10.00 for our Children's Home.

Rosa Belk, Reporter.

LIBERTY HILL.—We had a good service Easter considering the bad weather and short time in which we had to train the children. Our collection was $6.00. Our thought went back to that first Easter when Christ burst death's prison bars and came forth a Savior of the world. It was a good day for us to conquer sin in our lives. Our pastor, Rev. C. C. Lindley, filled his appointment 2nd Sunday with a good sermon at which time the Lord's supper was administered. Wonder if those who know not Jesus and cannot come to his table do not feel left out in the cold. Our pastor made a report from the school of Methods at Graham, which he attended. We all surely enjoyed hearing the good things of the school. We then organized a Christian Endeavor Society, as we have a host of young people, a very enthusiastic pastor and some others who are very much interested. We see no reason why the society cannot make good. We hope the people of our church will wake up to their duties, for we are taught that to leave things undone that should be done is as great a sin as to do things we should not do. We are ever glad to hear of good that others do. May we try to do some ourselves.

Reporter.

FRIENDSHIP, FALLSTON CT.—During the winter months our Sunday school and church attendance was greatly reduced on account of disease and unfavorable weather, but the interest is still good and we are now striving to catch up with our work. Last Sunday we had about 110 present for Sunday school. At 11 o'clock we had a large crowd to hear Mr. Hunter preach. Everybody seems to like our pastor. He not only preaches splendid sermons, but has that Christian experience behind it which is always effective..

Second Sunday in this month the Fallston High School commencement sermon was delivered at our church by Dr. Wilson from Lincolnton. It was fine and everybody enjoyed it. We are going to have a memorial service third Sunday in May. We are expecting a good day.

Reporter.

ORANGE CHAPEL, SAXAPAHAW CT.—Sunday made us feel like we were on the go. It was a fine day for us. Pastor Williams preached one of the most inspiring sermons yet. Communion services were observed and a large number were in attendance. We are very glad to say our Sunday school has opened up again with Mr. Floyd Ferguson as superintendent, James Morrow secretary, and as teachers Mr. D. M. Lewis, Mrs. Carl Edwards, Mrs. J. L. Maynard, Mrs. Floyd Ferguson, Miss Mae Edwards. Hoping for a great success in our school. We were very glad to see a number of our members out Sunday who have been sick for quite a while, but regret very much to say the little daughter Myra of Mr. and Mrs. John V. Crawford who has been sick for eleven weeks is very low. We ask the prayers of the Christian people for success in our church work.

Mae Edwards.

GIBSONVILLE.—The Sunday school here is advancing in number and efficiency this spring. We had a number of new scholars last Sunday morning. For the church service at 11 o'clock a good audience assembled in worship. Appropriately the sermon was practical and fitting, setting forth the nature of worship as the spirit of reverence, humility and co-operation. Truthfulness was also emphasized.

At the evening service we enjoyed a varied program. Everybody was asked to quote a verse of appealing Scripture, give a thought or offer some comment on a song. A large number responded freely and brought a rich collection of Sripture and talks. This plan encourages free expression and results in a wide range of Christian ideas.

May we please God in our lives and in church activities that in turn His blessings may be with us all.

CANAAN, DAVIDSON CT.—I suppose the other churches think Canaan is dead, as there has been no report for some time. We have been greatly hindered by influenza and bad weather. But yesterday was a good day for us. Our pastor rendered a very good sermon which was helpful to each of us. I was so glad we had such a good attendance. The congregtion was the largest we have had this year. Our Sunday school is going along nicely under the management of J. S. Harris. Our attendance is very good, but we hope it will grow better. A collection is taken for the Children's Home every second Sunday.

As I am not the reporter I will stop.

M. H. Hunt.

MITCHELL'S GROVE, GUILFORD CT.—We are feeling much revived after having Bro. D. A. Braswell with us in a few days' meeting. We are always made sad when the time comes to tell him good by, but we hope to have him with us again. Also were very much pleased to have Bro. J. H. Moton worship with us through the meeting. We are really thankful Bro. Hamilton invited these good brethren to come and encourage and strengthen us. Bro. Hamilton is trying with all his might to get us all to be saved, and if we are not I am sure he will not be to blame; for he encourages in every way he can to do right, and we trust as he brings us the messages from God that feed our hungry souls that we may minister to him and his family the needs of their bodies and that we may pray without ceasing for them all to be strong in the faith: the word teaches us to pray one for another, and may we have so much of the love of the Lord in our hearts that we may attract the attention of the unsaved. We were also highly favored to have Professor B. ———(?) in the meeting to help in the singing. We feel these are worthy young men and would adivse you to get them to teach singing school at your church. They have just closed their school here and we feel much good has been done.

Martha Parsons.

Burlington.—Some needed repairs have been made on the parsonage, which I feel ought to be mentioned at this time. The parsonage trustees had the plastering in three of the rooms repaired and the walls and ceiling painted. Then the Ladies' Aid refurnished the dining room and parlor with handsome new furniture. Two individual members of the Ladies' Aid will furnish new shades for the down stairs and one member has given a beautiful new drugget for the dining room. I do not mention names because those making the donations do not want publicity. But the pastor and his wife greatly appreciate what has been done for their comfort.

A large congregation greeted the pastor last Sunday morning. There were 282 in Sunday school, and the house practically full at preaching service. Mr. Arment of Goldsboro sang a beautiful solo, and the pastor preached.

The evening service was poorly attended on account of rain. But while the attendance at the Christian Endeavor meeting was small a splendid meeting was held under the leadership of Bro. J. B. Turner. Prof. Davis of the graded school faculty, Mr. W. D. Loy and others have added a great deal to the Christian Endeavor meetings by their helpful talks.

Our people greatly enjoyed hearing the editor while the pastor was in Asheville assisting Bro. Johnson.

We expect our regular services next Sunday with reception of members at the morning service. J. E. Pritchard.

Asheboro News.

Four were received by certificate yesterday. These were Bro. C. L. Amick, register of deeds of Randolph county, his wife and two daughters, Misses Mary and Ruth. They came from Liberty Methodist Protestant church. We welcome them and pray that their coming may be a blessing to them and to our church here and to the kingdom.

Saxapahaw Circuit.—We held our second quarterly meeting at Salem Saturday before the second Sunday. The usual business was transacted. Steps were taken to paint the parsonage in the near future. The nominees elected for delegate to annual conference were Bros. H. G. Paris and R. S. Woody.

T. A. Williams.

Welch Memorial Church.—We are wide-awake, on the job, and never tired of working for the Master.

Last Sunday Bro. Moton preached from Isaiah 35:8. He always preaches well, but he surely preached a wonderful sermon then. Sunday night he preached another good sermon; subject, And I will give you a new heart.

Next Sunday is when our special meeting begins. Bro. L. W. Gerringer, of Asheboro, is to assist Bro. Moton in the meeting. We are praying, hoping, and looking forward for a great revival. Our pastor has been preaching to that end for the last month, trying to get all lined up and those that are interested are ready, but like all churches, we have several that seem to be asleep. We hope to see them greatly revived. We ask all the readers of the Herald to pray for us that we may have a great revival.

Our Sunday school is good. The average is 200 or more, but we want to see it grow to 300.

The sick folks are all well or better at this writing, we are glad to say.

Miss Beulah Moton, who has been teaching at Albemarle, N. C., is home with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Moton, for some time. We are glad to have her presence and help in the Sunday school and church services. Love to the Herald. Reporter.

Clark's Chapel, Buncombe Circuit.—We are greatly encouraged to enroll new members in our Sunday school. There were 35 present at Sunday school yesterday. The usual offering was taken for the Children's Home, which was $4.18.

Our pastor filled his regular appointment. He preached a fine sermon from these words: "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matt. 16:26. He most strikingly emphasized the loss of the soul.

With best wishes, Reporter.

Roberta Sation.—Our Sunday school collection for April the 18th was $6.80. We feel like this is fine, being a country church.

Mr. Sisk, our faithful pastor, preached at his usual hour Sunday morning. The doors of the church were opened and two new members were received; namely, Jack Furr and Ethel Blackwelder. We are glad to have our church grow in membership.

Rev. M. L. Dorton preached a splendid sermon at 7:30. His subject was a very touching one—The Preparation of the Table. Mr. Dorton is a good speaker and he was at his best, and his sermon was highly appreciated by the entire congregation, in which the spirit of the Lord worked mightily and two were converted. Mr. Dorton resigned his position as principal of Roberta school and took his former place at the Jackson Training School. Mr. Sisk took his place till the end of the term. The children were very much attached to Mr. Dorton. He was as good a teacher as he was a preacher. Every one in the school was very sorry to see him go.

On April the 25th Mr. Sisk took his place behind the sacred desk and delivered the most feeling sermon he has since being at Roberta. There were a good many who shouted and tears were shed by all. The second Sunday of May will be Mothers' Day. The cemetery and the lots of the church are being cleaned for the purpose. We will have several good speakers for the occasion. We will have an all-day service and dinner on the ground and every one is cordially invited. Also on the third of May we will have memorial day. But only one service.

Mrs. Sisk is on the sick list, we are sorry to say, but is improving.

Bessie Alexander, Reporter.

Henderson.—We are again sad. Miss Leona Williams, the daughter of Brother and Sister Leslie Williams, one of our splendid, consecrated, and useful young women, is dead. The end of her earthly life came this morning at 3:45 o'clock, after an illness of only a few days. Meningitis was the cause of her death. Her remains will be laid to rest in the burying ground at Dabney. She is survived by her father, mother, four sisters, and three brothers. Our hearts are moved in deep sympathy for them. But it is comforting to know that we do not sorrow as those who have no hope.

S. W. Taylor.

April 27.

Charlotte Tidings.

Our spring revival began April 11 and continued until April 21. Bro. Bethea came on Monday, April 12, and remained to the close of the meeting. Bro. Bethea did splendid preaching from start to finish and his efforts were very much appreciated. Unfortunately, the attendance was not so good as it should have been and this is especially to be said of the non-Christian people. Visible results were not what we had hoped for, but we believe that good was done such as will develop into a fruitful harvest in the future. Miss Bessie Wagner of Chester, S. C., was with us and conducted the music from Wednesday until Tuesday. Her valuable help was very much appreciated.

The attendance at all the services last Sunday was encouraging. One thing that was especially encouraging is the fact that in every service except the evening service there was an increase over the last Sunday in April, 1919. The evening service was just a little off because of unfavorable weather. But even with this the total attendance was better than a year ago. The Sunday school offering was nearly double that of a year ago. To carry this comparison just a little further our records show that the average attendance at the preaching services, the Sunday school and the Sunday school offering are all considerably better April, 1920, than for April, 1919.

Miss Lola Ezzell, recently of Norfolk, Va., but a member of our Graham church, is now located in Charlotte. We welcome her to our church. She has already begun to render valuable service as teacher of our second grade junior boys, who were very much in need of a good teacher. We are sure that what is a loss to the Graham church is a gain to the Charlotte church. George L. Curry, Pastor.

Lebanon Church, Lebanon Circuit.—We were again favored with soul-stirring and edifying messages by our pastor last Sunday The subject for the 11 o'clock service was, The Value of Life. The very fitting subject at this time was most ably presented by Mr. Suits, and while he emphasized the truth and reproved the people for many of the present-day custome, I believe his audience received the Word in a spirit of love. We all know who have open eyes and thinking minds, that the great unrest in the land and idleness abroad, and the numerous gods of pleasure, fashion, gold, intemperance, etc., are not good signs. It is a sad state of affairs; and unless the people turn their hearts from the many gods, as Ruth did of old when she made her wise choice, and serve the true God, the Father Almighty, how sad, indeed, will the end be!

I was glad to see in the Herald of April 15 the column devoted to evangelism. I trust that much will be said and done in that line. We have been neglecting the field of evangelism too much, I believe, to our own sorrow. And verily it is time to be up and doing, to be attending to our own. Eighty per cent. of the Sunday school lost every year to the church! Sad! Sad!

Sunday school attendance at Lebanon last Sunday, 129. A legal vote was cast at the preaching service for a decision on the building of Sunday school rooms. The result was 38 to 4 in favor of building rooms. The trustees were authorized to proceed to plan and build. Now that does sound good! It is time now for every one to push and pull in the same direction. Mrs. J. W. T., Reporter.

Roanoke Circuit.—Our second quarterly conference convened at Enfield Friday, April 23. All churches were represented. It was voted on and carried to paint the parsonage. Bro. S. C. Whitaker and Ralph Rives were the nominees for delegate to conference.

Our special meeting of ten days will convene in Enfield church first Monday in June, with Rev. J. D. Williams as pulpit help. We wish to thank Bro. H. C. Neal for a one-man pounding, a box of nice groceries.

D. R. Williams.

Graham and Haw River Charge.—Since our last report the work has been moving along nicely, even though you do not hear from us through our reporters. I am afraid they will wake up some of these days and flood the press with news.

Haw River church have a better Sunday school than they have had for several months, and have already bought the paint to paint the church, also are making preparation to build concrete steps, which will add much to the appearance of the church. Have a good wide-awake Christian Endeavor society and prayer meeting, the best prayer meeting I know of.

Graham Church.—We have here at present the best Sunday school in ths history of the church; had 175 present last Sunday, and are pecting 200 next Sunday, and if it is a pretty day, we will go over the top. Look for a report.

We were glad to have the School for Religious Workers meet with us. You who came were an inspiration to our church. Come again; you are welcome.

Hurrah for Glen Raven. Like Graham and Haw River, we have the best Sunday school in the history of the church. Listen: Sunday, the 18th, had 101 present; last Sunday had 118 present. We are coming at Glen Raven; watch the report.

We expect to have our church completed and painted in a few weeks.

Took in four good members Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Jessie Vaughn, and Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Walker. all from Friendship Methodist Protestant church. We are glad to have them.

Quarterly Conference.

The second quarterly conference will meet in Graham church Saturday, May the 1st at three p. m. I want every member present; don't neglect this, it is important. Come.

Many thanks to Bro. J. O. Glen for a nice ham, and Bro. R. G. Hornaday for some hens.

Yours for the Master, R. S. Troxler,
Pastor.

Granville.—Yesterday was a good day. The largest congregation of the year at Union Chapel. A good Sunday school. Between Sunday school and the preaching service the preacher-woman did some effective preaching and as a result eighteen names were enrolled for the organizing of a missionary society. The officers will be elected shortly. There is promise of a fine society here. We hope to organize at least one other, perhaps two, at the other churches on the charge.

The service at Mt. Carmel in the afternoon was somewhat broken into by a funeral at one of the near-by churches. Brother C. S. Finch, the superintendent, told me they had a fine Sunday school in the morning.

The more I go about among the churches and in the homes of the membership, the more I am impressed with the splendid possibilities for effective and efficient organization. I want to see them developed into aggressive Christians. I believe we are going to see that come to pass.

Thanks to Miss Elnora Floyd, who went about collecting the same, the parsonage poultry yarrd has had seven hens added to it, from the following ladies of the charge: Mrs. Will Cheatham, T. V. Bobbitt, Harry Wright, John Harris, John Floyd, Will Davis and J. L. Davis. We aren't going into the poultry business, thank you, but we are, at least so far as eggs are concerned, successfully combatting the H. C. of L. These good folks have our sincere thanks.

Mrs. T. V. Bobbitt, who has been confined to her bed for some time, is able to be up again. Mrs. H. W. Greenway was operated on some days ago at the Watts Hospital at Durham. She is recovering nicely. C. W. Bates.

Harmony, Yarborough Circuit.—Sunday was a rather good day for us. Mr. Harrison filled his regular appointment Sunday a. m. at 11 o'clock and Sunday p. m. at 8:30. He preached an interesting sermon, the text being taken from St. John 17:17. There was a good congregation to hear him. Now it is warm weather we hope everybody will attend some church, and will get some good from it. Our quarterly meeting was held Friday p. m. at 3:30 o'clock. Sorry that all the members could not attend it, as the farmers are very busy with their crops, and could not be there.

Our Sunday school is doing just fine. Our attendance is good every Sunday, and we hope it will increase, as it has done in the past few months

Our Christian Endeavor met Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock. The evening topic was, "Christian Principles in Personal and Public Health." Mr. Lee Cowart was leader. We were expecting Mr. Wilson to be with us Sunday p. m. Sorry that he couldn not come over. We had a very good program. Mr. Harrison also made a splendid talk on the topic, which everybody enjoyed very much.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers, Mamie C. Reeves,
Corresponding Secretary.

Mecklenburg Charge.—The second quarterly conference for this charge met at Beulah last Saturday, April 24, at three o'clock. All of the churches were represented. The reports were very good, and the usual business of the second quarterly conference was transacted in a spirit of love. Bro. W. C. Hartis of Zoar and Bro. W. L. Craig of Beulah were elected nominees for delegate to annual conference.

Since our last report we have been remembered in a substantial way by Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Dry, Mrs. E. A. Lemmond, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Stallings, Mr. Jim Owens, Mr. David Owens, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Bownes, Mrs. R. A. Dry, Mrs. J. P. Poer. We appreciate all the kindness these good people have shown to us. May the Lord bless them all.

We held a few days' meeting at Zoar church, beginning on Tuesday, April 15, closing April 20. Bro. Quick did the preaching for the first three days and did it well. All seem to enjoy his preaching.

We had a very good meeting. We had about 12 professions and one joined the church. I believe more will join later. The interest seems to be growing.

Dear friend, we have not got Stallings church rebuilt yet. We have got lots to do before we get to hold services in it. We need your help. We do want to get into it so much! Will the kind friends who have an abundance of this world's goods help us some? And those who have not abundance, will you please also give as the Lord has prospered you? We appreciate all the kindness that the people have shown to us in helping rebuild our church. We have got it right much on the way now. Will you help us to finish it. Thank you for any money that you will send us.

Praying God's blessing to rest on you and to keep you, I remain,

Your brother in Christ, A. Ridge,
Pastor.

Reidsville Christian Endeavor.

Our Christian Endeavor society met last Friday evening with Misses Lola and Effie McCollum.

In the absence of the president the vice president had charge of the meeting.

Several things of importance were discussed, but we decided to defer the matter until we met again, in order for us to devote more thought to it, and, too, some of our official members could not be present. However, we had more present than we have ever had at any business meeting previous to this. We had several visitors. Among them Mr. and Mrs. Roy Turner, who have recently moved here and we are in hopes that they will join our society soon.

During the evening cream and wafers and candy were served, which were enjoyed by all.

Yesterday evening Miss Lola McCollum led our Christian Endeavor meting, held at the church. We had a goodly number present and much interest manifested.

Mr. Norman Dixon, one of our representatives at the School of Methods, gave his report, which was interesting.

Our mebers are taking more interest in our society and we are proud of the fact.

First Church, Concord.—Sunday was a good day with us. The attendance was fine at all services.

Our special meeting, which has been in progress for two weeks, came to a close. Bro. Ashburn did the preaching till Monday night and it was with regret that we saw him leave. A nice purse was given him.

Bro. Shelton ran the meeting on himself until the close Sunday night. We had a good meeting. Sinners were converted and Christians were made to rejoice and praise God aloud.

At the morning service Sunday, eleven new members were received into church. Bro. Shelton preached Sunday night on the "General Judgment." This was a great service, and people were made to realize the awfulness of that solemn time. Just before the sermon Mr. R. B. Benson presented Bro. Shelton with a handsome purse from the church in appreciation of his faithful and untiring efforts that he put forth during the meeting and since being here. Every one is pleased with Bro. Shelton and our work is in splendid condition. Every claim is paid and nearly $80 on hand.

The pledges on the Million Dollar Campaign Fund are nearly all paid and the treasurer hopes soon to send the remaining amount to Dr. Beck.

Bro. Shelton goes to Lexington this week to assist Rev. D. A. Braswell in a meeting.

DICK'S GOOD MORNING.

"I had a curious thing happen to me this morning. As I crossed the street I saw one of my Sabbath school class. 'Good morning, Dick. How are you?'

"He did not hear me, but a poor mulatto boy, dirty and ragged, rose from the curbstone, and made a bow.

"'Mawnin', mistis; I's poo'ly 'nuff dis mawnin'; thank ee for ye kind axin'.'

"He evidently thought I was speaking to him when I said 'Good morning, Dick,' and I did not tell I meant Dick Howell.

"I stopped and chatted with him, and found him, as he seemed to think, without any friends."

That was Mrs. Northern's side of the little story. One of us heard the rest of it from Dick himself.

"I done lost my place, 'cause I was sick; and I was pow'rfully fretted 'gainst my hebbenly Fader 'bout bein' sick, 'bout losin' my place, 'bout most everything. Seemed to me lak nobody cared. Well, here comes along one o' dem high-steppin' ladies, and say out loud and cheerful like: 'Good mornin', Dick.''

"How come she know my name? I dunno. Anyhow, I got up and made my bow, and told her how poo'ly I was, and she just stood dar in de sunshine, talkin' to Dick lak he was de President.

"Cheer up, Dick," says she.

"Den she giv me a card wid her name writ on it.

"'You take dis down to Baker and Northern,' says she, 'an' ax 'em to give you some work today.'

"I took myself down dar in a hurry, an' when I showed dat scrap of white card de gen'lum smiled kin' o' pleasant, and set me to rightin' up his lumber room.

"'I'll haf ter lock dat lady up, Dick,' says he; 'if I don't she'll send me all der city.'

"'Best let her 'lons, master,' says I; 'ef I hain't mistaken de great Master set her doin' dis work; else how she come ter know Dick's name? I want yer to 'splain dat, sir.' "

Dick was right; the "chance" that made the kind voice call out "Good morning, Dick," was one of God's "chances," one of the kind that keeps the sparrow from falling to the ground till God's best time.—Exchange.

IS RELIGION BANKRUPT.

One of the last things I saw before I left the shores of England last September was a newspaper placard bearing only one item—"The Bankruptcy of Religion!" Yes, but the bankruptcy of what religion? There are many things which have gone bankrupt during the last few years. A merely nominal Christianity has gone bankrupt. All these have been pitilessly exposed, and their lockers have been shown to be empty. But Christianity bankrupt! The Christ a bankrupt? Where have His resources ended, and in what dire need has His sacrificial blood been used in vain?

Men and women, I know that in the august and tremendous endowment of our own free will we can defy our God, and we can shut His saving power out of our lives. But if a man refuses to drink of a medicinal spring, have the healing waters failed? Is the spring bankrupt be cause I refuse to draw its treasure? Has my Lord lost His redeming ministry because I encounter Him with a stubborn will? Is Christ bankrupt because I refuse His wealth?

I plead with you to consult those who have played the game. Ask those who live at the spring. Have the waters failed? Ask those who call regularly at the bank. Is it bankrupt? Ask those who have brought their sin to the Lord, Has His blood lost its virtue, and has His holy love lost its glorious crown? Bankruptcy? Why, there are people in this congregation who have been to the bank this morning and they have received the very treasures of grace. They presented their draft and it was gloriously honored.—J. H. Jowett, D.D.

LET IT OUT.

Not the harsh word. Not the prompt and perhaps justifiable censure. Not the sarcasm which bites and stings. These slip out all too easily. Ordinarily they were best kept in. We shall rarely reproach ourselves, in after years, for failing to say cutting things. But the kind word, the praise which "cheers but not inebriates," the encouragement which everybody needs—let it out. If there is any good that you can say, say it eagerly. Where got we the heathenish idea that gracious words are to be saved as a miser saves pennies? Say the very best thing you can think of concerning your friend, or even your enemy. Better far to exaggerate his virtue than his fault. If we must err, let it be on the side of kindness.—George Clarke Peck.

SITTING DOWN WITH ONE'S SOUL.

Siting down, that is, for familiar conversation. A few finely austere beings, even in this superficial day, sit down for self-examination. though the habit is generally decried as morbid and monkish. A few sit down for meditation—a passive state, in which the outer world passes through the inner and perhaps partakes somewhat of its coloring. But to converse, the outer self with the inner—this, we may easily believe, is little more in a day when life is measured by the speed of one's automobile rather than by the length of one's thoughts. Many avoid such conversations through sheer dread of boredom. They are unacquainted with their souls and feel ill at ease in their presence, as many fathers seem to feel in the company of their children. They sorely need the habit of familiar intercourse, of telling each other the news of the day, and inquiring concerning the business and prospects of each. The inner and the outer lives should reach upon each other as a pair of well-matched friends in kindly challenge, in stingless repartee in keen and stimulating argument.

Some people are splendid company for themselves. Cuthbert was in good society on his lonely island; Livingstone grew in masterful greatness alone with his soul in Africa. One cannot imagine Paul bored in his Roman prison or John on Patmos. Bunyan found most agreeable company in Bedford jail, in Mr. Greatheart and Mr. Valiant-for-Truth and the other guises of his own great soul. David Brainerd fighting with death while he sought to teach a few Indians the truth before the end should come, found in the desert wilds such fellowship with his own soul that he seemed to live in a company of angels. Milton, old and blind, in a world which had grown careless of his teaching, had high converse within his own soul and found there a recovered Paradise, so that, dying, he could say: "Still guides the heavenly vision;" "By the grace of God I have kept my soul unsullied."

Some think they are conversing with their souls when they are merely reassuring their appetites. "I will say unto my soul," said the foolish rich man, "Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years." But he was only talking to the overfed, stimulated appetite of his body, while his poor, anemic, starved soul was whimpering for food. Sometimes the conversations long avoided are crowded upon us. Benedict Arnold's last hours, it is said, were like those of a haunted man. The soul he had betrayed with his country was clamoring for a reckoning. When Herod the Great lay dying of a disease which seemed to fasten itself upon body and mind alike, he cried out continually that he heard the voice of Mariamne, the lovely Jewish wife whom he had loved yet sacrificed to his ambition. But it was his own unrecognized voice which he heard—the voice of the soul he had wronged so unspeakably. It was not Banquo's ghost which sat in Macbeth's seat at the banquet; it was his own shamed, defrauded, outraged soul.

Whenever we are called to meet our dishonored inner selves face to face, that will indeed be a day of judgment.—Christian Century.

"LET'S GO IN SMILING."

It is told of one of our officers in the army that during the late war when his men were about to make a charge, he cried out:

"Come on, boys; let's go in smiling!"

He did that because he probably believed that the best in a man responds when he is smiling and that we always do our best when we are cheerful.

Not long ago I heard it said of a girl that she had a "brave voice." It is a quality not often applied to a voice. No voice of this kind ever has a whine in it nor a tearful note. Nothing is more irritating to cheerful, happy, alert people than a voice with a constant suggestion of tears in it. You will notice that owners of voices of this kind never "go in smiling" when they have any tasks to perform. There is as much defeat in tears as there is of victory in smiles.

There is a certain tonic in a smiling face, a certain sign of courage. There is also a certain unselfishness in this kind of cheery courage. I think you will discover that the smiling person is rarely a selfish person. Selfishness and smiles lie far apart. They do not like each other. The brave voice, the brave smile, the serene outlook on life were never needed more than now. The pessimist is everywhere abroad in the land and if you want to discover a person with a low degree of courage and a face that knows little of smiles, look up a pessimist. He never has a brave face and he never "goes in smiling" when he has a task to perform. Whatever the task, "let's go in smiling" when we begin it and it is certain that the smile will make that task more easy of performance.—Selected.

NOTICE.

Mrs. Dixon and I are returning to our home in Baltimore, Md., on Saturday, April 24th, so when this comes to your attention please direct all mail for us to 3919 Carlisle Avenue, Baltimore, Md. We will thank you for this; for it will save time and insure you an earlier answer. Yours in His service.

THE HABIT OF PRAYER.

Again and again throughout the day it is possible for us, by a conscious upward glance, to confirm the habit; until it happens that the soul is always in the posture of prayer—in business, in laughter, in trade, at home, or abroad, always in prayer—and therefore, in every part of the wide and varied battle-ground of life receiving the all-sufficient grace and love of God. And so the Christian saldier is to be "praying always, with all prayer and supplication in the spirit."—J. H. Jowett.

GOD'S LOVE.

We may hate ourselves when we come to realize failings we have not recognized before, and feel that there are probably others which we do not yet see as clearly as other people see them, but this kind of impatience for our perfection is not felt by those who love us, I am sure. It is one's greatest comfort to believe that it is not even felt by God. Just as a mother would not love her child the better for its being turned into a model of perfection at once, but does love it the more dearly every time it tries to be good, so I do hope and believe our Great Father does not wait for us to be good and wise to love us, but loves us, and loves to help us in the very thick of our struggles with folly and sin.—Juliana H. Ewing.

GOD'S WAY—OUR WAY.

You may have wondered why Cain's offering was not just as acceptable to God as Abel's. But one took God's way and the other took his own. Cain took that which God had cursed, and laid it on the altar. Perhaps he said to himself: "I shall certainly not bring a bleeding lamb. I don't like that doctrine at all. Here is the grain and the beautiful fruit which I have raised by my industry, and I'm sure it looks better than blood." And there are a great many Cainites in the church today. They are trying to get into heaven their own way. They bring their own good deeds to God. They prefer what is agreeable to the eye, as Cain did his beautiful corn and fruit; they do not like the doctrine of the blood of the atonement. . . . But be assured that any religion that makes light of the blood is of the devil.—D. L. Moody.

STAYING BEATEN.

Everybody is beaten at some time or other. When Edison was inventing the phonograph, for a time he was beaten. There were certain sounds that instrument refused to repeat. In his efforts to lay the Atlantic cable, Field was beaten again and again. Jay Gould and P. T. Barnum in middle life were defeated men, baffled in their attempts to make money, poor and in debt.

Facts like these help us to realize that being beaten is not a matter of very great importance. Everything depends on whether or not you stay beaten. Edison didn't. He worked day and night for weeks, and made the talking machine a fact. Field didn't. After failures enough to dishearten any but a man of iron, when his name had become a by-word, he laid the trans-atlantic cable, whose service to the cause of humanity can hardly be estimated, though it helps us to realize its value when we remember that in the war of 1812, the battle of New Orleans was fought after the peace treaty was signed, the news not having had time to reach the combatants.

Gould and Barnum did not give up when they failed to make money, even though past their prime. Barnum became a rich man and a prodigious success in his own line. Gould amassed a colossal fortune. Neither one stayed beaten.

Unless your experience is very unusual, you will be beaten time and time again. That is only what is to be expected. The thing which counts for your weal or your woe is something quite different. Are you or are you not, one of the people who stay beaten?—Selected.

IF YOU WERE.

If you were busy being kind,
Before you knew it you would find
You'd soon forget to think 'twas true
That some one was unkind to you.

If you were busy being glad
And cheering people who are sad,
Although your heart might ache a bit,
You'd soon forget to notice it.

If you were busy being good,
And doing just the best you could,
You'd not have time to blame some man
Who's doing just the best he can.

If you were busy being true
To what you know you ought to do,
You'd be so busy you'd forget
The blunders of the folks you've met.

If you were busy being right,
You'd find yourself too busy quite
To criticize your neighbor long
Because he's busy doing wrong.

EDISON AND HIS MOTHER.

I was always a careless boy, says Thomas Edison in his biography, and, with a mother of different mental caliber, I should probably have turned out badly. But her firmness, her sweetness, her goodness, were potent powers to keep me in the right path. I remember I used never to be able to get along at school. I don't know now what it was, but I was always at the foot of the class. I used to feel that the teachers never used to sympathize with me, and that my father thought I was stupid, and at last I almost decided that I must really be a dunce. My mother was always kind, always sympathetic, and she never misunderstood or misjudged me. But I was afrail to tell her all my difficulties at school, for fear she, too, might lose her confidence in me.

One day I overheard the teacher tell the inspector that I was "addled," and it would not be worth while keeping me in school any longer. I was so hurt by this last straw that I burst out crying, and went home and told my mother about it. Then I found out what a good thing a good mother was. She came out as my strong defender. Mother-love was aroused; mother-pride wounded to the quick. She brought me back to the school, and angrily told the teacher that he didn't know what he was talking about. In fact, she was the most enthusiastic champion a boy ever had, and I determined right then that I would be worthy of her, and show her that her confidence was not misplaced. My mother was the making of me. She was so true, so sure of me; and I felt that I had someone to live for, someone I must not disappoint. The memory of her will always be a blessing to me.—Selected.

GOOD CHEER.

The general manager of a large Pittsburgh firm recently sent this letter to their employes:

To promote happiness, efficiency and service to our fellowmen, let us sincerely promise that wherever we are:

We will talk health instead of sickness.

We will talk prosperity instead of failure.

We will carry good news instead of bad news.

We will tell the cheerful tale instead of the sad tale.

We will mention our blessings instead of our burdens.

We will speak of the sunshine of yesterday instead of the clouds of today.

We will encourage instead of criticize.

We will be a friend to every one.

We will help, not hinder.

We will witness for Christ daily, by conduct and conversation.

We will give flowers to our friends while they are living.

We will worship God in our church at least once every Sabbath day, unless providentially hindered.—United Presbyterian.

LOVE IS IMMORTAL.

I believe that love is the secret of the world; it is like the philosopher's stone they used to look for, and almost as hard to find, but when one finds it, it turns everything to gold. Perhaps when the angels left the earth they left us love behind, that by it and through it we may climb up to them again. It is the one thing that lifts us above the brutes. Without love man is a brute, and nothing but a brute; with love he draws near to God. When everything else falls away love will endure, because it cannot die while there is any life, if it is true love, for it is immortal.—Selected.

THE BUSINESS OF LIFE.

The business of life is making character. A man may acquire great wealth, but if in the process his moral nature has become warped and twisted, he fails, He may gain a reputation for some great achievement, but if at the same time he has not achieved a higher manhood, he is to be pitied rather than congratulated. He may enjoy existence to the utmost, drinking his fill of pleasure, but if his sympathies are gradually atrophying, if he is increasingly indifferent to the obligations of helpfulness, he is preparing for the supreme failure. Make no mistake about it. The occupation by which you earn your living is merely incidental. Your business in this world is character-making.—Selected.

Hobbs Chapel.—Bro. Andrews was with us last third Sunday and gave us a fine sermon on The Second Coming which was enjoyed by all. All seemed to be very glad to see his bright face once again.

Collection was taken for the Children's Home after Bro. Andrews' talk on how the money was used, also the training the children received; and we received $3.58.

Bro. Helms was with us yesterday, our usual preaching day; he gave us a fine sermon. but quite a small crowd out to hear him. His sermons get more interesing every time he preaches. May the Lord be with him all the while, and help him to spread the gospel far and near. We are glad to say Hobbs Chapel overpaid her amount pledged to the Million Dollar Drive before the 15th of March, and think that each church ought to have credit for paying their quota before the 15th and not to say the Greensville circuit had not paid.

With best wishes for the Herald and its readers.
Reporter.

Mt. Pleasant, North Davidson Circuit.—Rev. T. F. McCulloch of Greensboro was with us yesterday and preached for us. He is supplying for our pastor, Bro. Cecil, while he is not able to be with us. We were glad to have him with us since our pastor could not be. We trust that Bro. Cecil will soon be well and back on his charge, for we miss him so much.

We had communion yesterday. We were glad to have so many of our people out for Sunday school, and hope they will come and be with us more often. We need their help. We had ninety present, and the collection for Children's Home was $2.63. The collection on budget was a little more than $20.

We were glad to have Mrs. Comstock, who has recently moved into the neighborhood, worship with us for the past two Sundays. Mrs. C. A. Greene is home from the hospital, and getting along nicely.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Beulah, Mecklenburg Circuit.—The "flu" got us for a while but we are coming again. We were glad to have our pastor, Bro. Ridge, with us again yesterday; he preached a soul-stirring sermon. He always has something good to tell us. Our Sunday school is getting along fine. We sent in our collection to Children's Home Sunday. We want to send in a collection every fourth Sunday from this on. Our S. S. is increasing every Sunday. We had five new members Sunday. We have started up our prayer meeting again; everybody is invited to come every Sunday night. We have ordered our organ this week. Hope it will be here in a few weeks. Our next preaching service will be the second Sunday afternoon, and also the second Sunday night. Everybody is invited to attend these services. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

SECOND NOTICE.

Will the North Carolina delegates to the late General Conference who wish the church to pay their expenses please send statement of their expenses to the treasurer of the fund provided? There should be two items: (1) traveling expenses; (2) living expenses.

I am not expecting any statement from any delegate who lives in Greensboro, but I wish to hear from each of the others that I may divide out the fund in hand, which will probably be insufficient to pay all in full.

—The Disciples of Christ, about 25,000 strong in our state, are engaged in a campaign for money for educatioon, church extension, etc. Their goal is $200,000 for Atlanta Christian College, $25,000 for a new church in Raleigh, $25,000 for a children's home in Atlanta, Ga., and $75,000 for a home for the aged in Jacksonville, Fla. The Wilson chamber of commerce has voted to raise an additional $100,000 for Atlanta Christian College when as much as $100,000 has been raised outside of Wilson for the same purpose.

—The conversion of a great gambling house in Shanghai into a hospital is a piece of good news.

—Greensboro negroes went before the board of commissioners and protested against the opening of a theater and moving-picture show which had been licensed. As a result the license was revoked. It was objected to partly on moral grounds. These Greensboro negroes would be a worthy example for many white communities.

—A foolish movement among Chicago negroes in which a white man seems to have been leader led up to the public burning of a United States flag and a fight in which two or three men were killed and others wounded. "Back to Africa" was the slogan of the movement.

—Los Angeles had an earthquake shock Monday morning. Several cracks were made in the walls of the city jail. We wonder if the democratic convention will be influenced in a wholesome way by it.

—Bro. C. S. Tarkington, of Norfolk, Va., writes: "I attend the Methodist Episcopal Church. I often long for a Methodist Protestant church to attend. I do not mean to be sectarian but to my mind I could not be true to my God if I were untrue to my church (democratic) principles. I hate to see our ministers shifting from ours to some other church. They cannot hurt the church—our principles cannot be hurt. They seem to fail to think that their influence lives and even grows after they are under the sod."

THIS YEAR'S SUMMER CONFERENCE.

This institution resumed business at the Children's Home on Monday night of this week and adjourned Wednesday afternoon. This adjournment was a day earlier than was anticipated, but it was found that the speakers announced for Thursday were nearly all absent.

The attendance this year was not quite up to normal, partly on account of sickness and funerals, and partly because of other conferences and conventions coming on this season—the High Point Young People's Convention, the General Conference, the Greensboro Christian Endeavor Convention, etc.

The following ministers were present: Bros. Andrews, Moton, C. L. Whitaker, Johnson, Highfill, Pritchard, Lowdermilk, Hulin, Bowman, D. R. Williams, Morgan, Hamilton, Swain, Brown, Suits, Braswell, Reynolds, McCulloch, Shelton, H. F. Surratt, Ledbetter, Stubbins, Gerringer, Fogleman, R. A. Hunter, Hethcox, Sisk, J. D. Williams, Harrison, York, Forlines.

The addresses were said to be up to the usual standard. Prof. Forlines gave a series of very interesting lectures on the Book of Romans. Papers were read which we expect to print for our readers in future issues of the Herald. We regret that we could not attend all the sessions and hear all the discussions. The welcome and entertainment by the Home folks were all that could be desired notwithstanding the failure of some preachers to notify of the time of their arrival.

The new officers elected are—Rev. J. E. Pritchard, president; Rev. C. L. Whitaker, first vice president; Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk, second vice president; Rev. R. C. Stubbins, secretary; Rev. R. A. Hunter, treasurer.

Rev. R. M. Andrews suggested that there be combined with the Summer Conference a summer school or assembly for our young people to last a week. This was unanimously approved, and the matter is to be presented to the Annual Conference at its next session for consideration and action.

Joseph G. Cannon: Men wiser than I am long ago said that the first blessing of earth is toil; and the second blessing health, which wealth cannot buy. I accept both, and believe that the first contributes much to the second. At eighty-four I can wish no greater blessings to the present and coming generations than those of work and health. They are the two things in this life that make it attractive and contribute to longevity and happiness. The dream of idleness or lack of necessity for labor is an idle dream.

—From Jerome Landfield's account of the Republican National Convention printed in The Weekly Review we copy the following interesting paragraph:

"Friday witnessed the whole series of nominating and seconding speeches, with accompanying demonstrations. These time-wasting demonstrations have grown to be a great nuisance in Conventions and bear unmistakable signs of artificial organization. The one exception to this was the spontaneous outburst from the audience that greeted the nomination of Hoover. He was easily the most popular candidate with the audience of all those brought forward; the only thing he lacked was delegates. The best of the addresses was made by Mrs. Douglas Robinson, Colonel Roosevelt's sister, in seconding the nomination of General Wood. It stood out as a gem amidst a welter of platitudinous and commonplace speeches. The worst address was the speech of Charles S. Wheeler of San Francisco, placing in nomination the name of Hiram W. Johnson. If Johnson at any time had any chance of becoming the Republican candidate, this address effectually killed it. Allusions to the power of the press and the fact that his candidate was divinely chosen brought forth a cry of "Hearst," which was taken up with derisive cheers by the whole audience, while an insinuating allusion to the campaign expenditures of the two leading candidates called forth a chorus of boos from the floor. When Mr. Wheeler sat down, Johnson's candidacy had been punctured beyond repair."

RECONSTRUCTION IN FRANCE.

French Are Working Heroically but Need Our Help and Encouragement.

That there is imperative need for prompt action on the part of American churches in their task of aiding the French churches of the war area, and that the French themselves are accomplishing wonders in their gigantic task of reconstruction, is the message brought back from France by Mr. William Sloane Coffin, who has been surveying the relief and reconstructian work of the Federal Council's Commission on Relations with France and Belgium.

Mr. Coffin presented his report to the meeting of the Comission at the Federal Council Headquarters in the United Charities Building, strongly emphasizing the urgency and value of the work undertaken by the organization.

"I have never seen anybody work as hard and as courageously as the French people are doing," said Mr. Coffin. "I cannot express the admiration I feel for the work being done on the battlefields, especially at Lens and Lille. About 80 per cent. of the farm land over which the battles raged is now under cultivation and will produce grain this year. The French have gone over these fields and taken out the shells and filled in the shell holes and taken away the barbed wire. They have 140 teams of 14 men each, with 10 tractors to each team, that are plowing the fields. This work of plowing is then charged to the peasant, against his credit for war damages 1960 men are doing this at the risk of their lives. Traveling through this territory I could almost imagine I was back at the front, with the shells exploding all about and childen running for cover. One farmer told me he had struck fourteen bodies in his small field. Under this united effort France, in a year's time, will be back on her feet agriculturally.

"Living conditions in these areas are appalling. The Frenchman returns to his home, no matter whether anything is left of it or not. Rheims, which was almost totally destroyed, now has 80,000 people living there. Arras, which was largely destroyed by bombardment, formerly had 28,000 inhabitants; it now has 50,000. Vimy, at the foot of the famous Vimy Ridge, had not a horse left standing. About 1,800 of the former population of 3,000 have returned and are living there. Where do they live? In cellars, with the former first floor for a roof, in cement dugouts and in one and two-room shacks. Three rooms is a luxury. There are often six, eight or even ten persons in a two-room shack. Under such conditions children are born. When there is sickness and disease in the family, the awfulness of the situation can be imagined. How do these people stand it? They must do as the soldiers in the trenches had to do--they must stop thinking or go crazy.

"Laborers from Belgium, Portugal and other neighboring countries have flocked in attracted by the good wages. These men are in much the same circumstances as were the American soldiers- away from home, no place to go after work and apt to come down to a basis of pure materialism unless there is some way to maintain their morale. The church and the Y. M. C. A. must do this. There are still 175 Y. M. C. A. huts being operated by the French army and for civilians in the devastated area. They are known as foyers. The foyer at Rheims has eleven buildings. Some other towns have six or seven, and to see the work they are accomplising is a fine sight. But they must be supplemented by the church. I did not find in France any particular contest between Catholics and Protestants but rather betwen Christianity and atheism. It is pretty hard for men to keep up their ideals and morale under such circumstances. What is needed is leadership of a high quality; I have the highest admiration for the French pastors, particularly those in the north. There are also laymen in charge of the work in some places. These French pastors are working together. There are three committees in Paris led by three of the most representative laymen in France, one the president of the Engineering Society, the second, a leading lawyer and the third, an important railroad man. There is not a better group of business men in charge of any work anywhere. I said to them that it is essential that this work be properly maintained and carried on. After we have given the money and helped build the churches, the leaders are ready to put it up to the people to raise adequate sums for running expenses. They are willing to do their share.

"There is a prevalent opinion here that Americans are not liked in France. I must admit that our President is not held in very high admiration there now—indeed, there is talk of changing the name of the Avenue Wilson to Avenue des Americains. But Americans are not disliked. The French do not understand the attitude of our Senate. There is a sort of revulsion of feeling against everyone who had a hand in the peace. It is not true that Americans are not welcomed or that they are 'stung' by French merchants. They really get more appreciation than they actually deserve.

"I told the French Committee that there was only a limited amount of money to be got from America and we settled on a definite program to be accomplished. The first thing to be done is to reconstruct churches in important towns that have been destroyed. The Protestant church at Rheims was not a good structure. One of the best architects in Paris is drawing plans for the new building and additional land has been purchased to afford an adequate site for both the church and a new parish house. It will require one and a half million francs to build this church. I talked with a wealthy citizen of Rheims and asked whether, if we raised one million francs in America, he would underwrite the remaining half million, to be raised among the citizens of the city, and he has agreed.

"About $20,000 has already been given for St. Quentin, and a similar amount will be required to complete the church. The town was almost entirely destroyed but 40,000 persons are now living there. I was present at the service at which the two Protestant pastors were installed and it was one of the most impressive I have ever witnesed. When the people heard that their pastors had been installed and the church was to go on, the tears streamed down their faces. The church at Cambrai was very badly injured. It could be restored but it is not worth restoring; it is below the level and leaks badly. A new church should be built here. At Arras a building has been purchased for $15,000, near the church, which will serve as parish house. This is essential as there are 20,000 laborers in this city, causing a great need for social service both for these laborers and for their families, who are now beginning to arrive. At Compiegne the church was very badly destroyed and can be rebuilt for $15,000.

"Hargicourt was a little village situated directly on the Hindenburg Line. Of course it was totally destroyed. There are now 300 Protestant families there. When they will come back to their homes under such conditions, they certainly deserve a church.

"The amount of $200,000 allowed in the budget for this work of reconstruction is a minimum. All these churches are needed absolutely at once.

"The children of the war area are a serious problem. The experiences they have been through in the past five years will have a detrimental effect on their characters. With no fathers or elder brothers at hand and for their self preservation they were taught to lie and steal while the Boche were around (this was necessary but unfortunate). Something must be done for these boys for the future of France rests upon them. There is an immense work to be done by Sunday schools and such institutions.

"There are two aspects to the foreign mission problem. First is the matter of the German colonies taken over by the French. In the Kameroun 149 German missionaries have been sent out, since they were suspected of being propagandists for the German government. These are to be replaced by French, of whom there are only 14 available. Even these 14 cannot be sent unless there is money to pay them.

"Then there is the question of the French colonies. Americans must share in the responsibility for bringing thousands of black and yellow men from the French colonies to Europe, where they learned all the vices of civilization. We bring these men up, teach them all that is rotten in civilization, then send them back to spread what they have learned among their people. The black troops were the shock troops. When there was a particularly bad job to be done, as in the Chemin des Dames, the black troops were sent up. We Americans share in the benefit of their sacrifice. America does not begin to realize how many of her sons came back to America because black men died in their stead. It is time we knew this. The least we can do now is to send Christianity by some means down to those people.

"There is also the matter of temporary aid to destitute families. France is doing most of this herself. They have raised 2,000,000 francs and have furnished about 1,000,000 francs worth of clothing and other materials. America has given about 600,000 francs for this work, England about 300,000 and other nations about 100,000. So you see France is really carrying this burden herself. This work is carried on through the Comite d'Entre Aid

"The Belgian church has only asked for about 100,000 francs for reconstruction. Our budget allows $15,000. Dr. Anet told me of one pastor who had to resign because he could not live on his salary. One of the labor unions came to him and said if he would stay on as their secretary he would not need to espouse their cause politically or their doctrines, but that there was need of his moral leadership in that town. Labor is discouraged and needs leadership.

"We have fed France on promises and nothing else. That is why they no longer trust Wilson and America. If we send money now, they will go ahead with the work. During my first stay in France exchange went as high as 16.95. If the conference at Spa is successful from the French point of view, and if the nations of the world agree to finance the situation somewhat, exchange will drop, I believe, as low as 10. We are not likely to see such high exchange again. We are losing money, therefore, by our delay. We should send $500,000 at once, in order that the French may proceed with this program."

THE FATE OF THE DRY PLANK AT CHICAGO.

Clinton N. Howard, prohibition orator of Rochester, N. Y., with credentials from the National Reform Association, The International Reform Bureau, and the World Dry Federation, including the Federal Council of Churches, representing all told more than 20,000,000 constituents, came to the National Republican Convention to secure a platform declaration in support of national prohibition. He filed his credentials with the Committee on Resolutions, was given a hearing in support of the Eighteenth Amendment, and its effective enforcement and presented a suggested plank to the Committee.

The sub-committee composed of 13 members succeeded in inserting a plank which pledged the Republican party to the support of the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors "as shall be interpreted by the Supreme Court." This plank Mr. Howard sought to have amended by striking out "as shall be," but the entire plank was dropped in the Committee of the Whole under the dictation of Senator Reed Smoot, who told Mr. Howard that the dry issue would not be mentioned at all, immediately prior to the final session. This information was confirmed by a later statement from Senator Borah who emerged from the committee-room.

There was no way of getting information to or from the committee as the guard was instructed to prevent any information passing the door. Mr. Howard succeeded in running the blockade by dropping into the lobby of the Auditorium Hotel where the committee was sitting and sending a telegram to a prominent dry member of the committee deputizing him to represent the dry constituency and framing a resolution to offer as a substitute in the event that the sub-committee report was turned down. This substitute resolution was presented upon the defeat of the original report and obtained only three votes in the committee. When this report was brought out to Mr. Howard he induced the dry member of the committee to sign the resolution in the form of a minority report. The member himself would not agree to present it to the Convention. He said he would give his proxy to the dry governor of his state or any other prominent leader who would introduce it and make the fight.

The governor was seen and declined on the ground that it might injure the chances of his candidate before the Convention. Taking a taxi-cab, Mr. Howard rushed to the Convention Hall a mile distant, was passed to the main floor by showing his credentials at the door, and conferred with dry leaders in several state delegations while the majority report was being read. He was unable, however, to prevail upon any delegate to present the minority report, though it in no other respect changed the platform finally adopted. The Prohibition question was eliminated entirely. Mr. Howard still retains the signed minority report covering the dry plank which was as follows:

"The Republican Party, always the Party of the Constitution, obedience to law and the promoter of public order, pledges itself to sustain and uphold the Constitution as amended by the American people in the exercise of their power by the adoption of the 18th Amendment, as construed and upheld by the Supreme Court's decision. We accept the verdict as the fixed policy of the American people and pledge the Party if successful in the election, to a policy of loyalty to law and to enact or continue such legislation as will make effective the 18th Amendment to the Constitution."—National Reform Association.

NEED OF THE TIMES.

Roger W. Babson, the statistician, is a layman, but he preached a sermon recently to the Boston Flour and Grain Club of the Boston Chamber of Commence, which might well have come from any Christian pulpit in the land. Mr. Babson, as reported in Current Affairs, outlined to his businessmen hearers the trend of the country toward luxury and extravagance, the falling off in production, the necessity for saving and economy and safe investment and the dangers of reckless speculation in commodities.

"Right there," he said, "is the danger of the situation. Today the tastes of the people are running to luxuries. They are making, buying and selling the things that will only have a temporary value, which will perish in a short time and which will never be productive in themselves.

"Now what can be done about it. I say that the fundamental basis of business is the tastes and emotions of people. They determine the desires of men and women. It seems to me it is absolutely foolish to talk about reducing the cost of living by emptying the cold storage plants or by hounding the middleman. Desires and tastes determine the future.

"Now what can be done to change the tastes and desires of people? History shows they are changed only in two ways. One is by experience. That means men learn only as they suffer. The other great factor has been the religious factor. It seems to me that the only cure, the only thing which will stave off the crash will be some sort of religious revival which will get men into a different point of view.

"We must have something which will make men substitute faith for fear; production for selfishness; something whereby our minds may be focused upon making things instead of upon a division of things. The great need of the hour is more religion, more emphasis on service, more on making rather than purchasing, more on being rather than on simply 'getting by.'

"Three years ago I spent a day as guest of the President of Argentina. We discussed why South America, with many more resources than North America and settled first is backward compared to North America. 'What do you think?' I asked the president. 'I don't know,' he answered, 'but this is what I think. South America was settled by men from Spain who came in search of gold and with only a vision for gold; but North America was settled by the Pilgrim Fathers who left England with a vision for God and a desire to serve Him.' May we not kick down the ladder by which we have climbed up."

CHARLES LAMB TO YOUNG MEN.

Charles Lamb, one of England's great writers, was a hard drinker. Listen to his sad wail:

"The waters have gone over me. But out of the black depths, could I be heard, I could cry out to all those who have set a foot in the perilous flood. Could the youth to whom the flavor of his first wine is delicious as the opening scenes of life, or the entering upon some newly-discovered paradise, look into my desolation, and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is when a man shall feel himself going down a precipice with open eyes and a passive will—to see his destruction and have no power to stop it, and yet feel it all the way emanating from himself; to see all godliness emptied out of him, and yet not able to forget a time when it was otherwise; to bear about him the piteous spectacle of his own ruin. Could he see my feverish eye—feverish with the last night's drinking and feverishly looking for tonight's repetition of the folly; could he but feel the body of death out of which I cry, hourly with feebler outcry; to be delivered—it were enough to make him dash the sparkling beverage to the earth in all the pride of its mantling temptation."

TO APPRECIATE

Those who make it the habit of their lives to study values and try to know the worth of a person and an act are fine companions of toil and association It is a rare quality of life this act of fully appreciating what others do and say while they are yet with us. A dullard, a slothful person may rise up and join with those who build monuments to the dead, but it requires a quick perception, the ability to esteem properly, to appreciate the value of many kinds of service and of sayings while those who do and say them are yet with us.

There are pastors in our North Carolina Conference rendering services which will call forth unstinted praise when they are laid away, but who are now rarely ever mentioned as of being of service; nor are they told how much such a service is really worth to those who receive it. It is a reflection upon those who receive but who do not respond to these services to allow such arrears of praise because they have never developed the finer sense of appreciation. I mingle with men frequently whose service and influence is worthy of many tokens they never receive, but they do not grumble, nor become discouraged. Their worth grows upon me as I understand them, seeing them labor with scant reward and scanter praise.

Let us find them, and, knowing them appreciate them while they are yet with us. I do not mean to say that all such are ministers, many more laymen and laywomen. The pure gold of life.

WHITAKERS CHARGE, Rev. J. C. Auman, Pastor.

I visited one church, Whitakers, preaching there Sunday morning. The service at Speight's was to have been held in the evening, but a rain coming up kept me from going there. I was indeed sorry to miss this appointment. I had looked forward to this visit for some time, hoping to renew old acquaintances and confer with those who are carrying on the work there. Possibly I may yet be able to make this appointment before the year is out.

There was a very good congregation present at Whitakers for the morning service. This was the regular appointment and was therefore better attended than the services are when held on other dates.

I also attended Sunday school; Pastor Auman had a dozen men in his class and there was quite a bit of interest shown in the lesson.

Our people here have been working since I was there a little more than a year ago. Their debt is being reduced, and I was told that it would possibly be cancelled by the end of the year; this is quite a victory for this little band. Pastor Auman, although in the Seminary at Westmister until May, served this charge faithfully, going down once a month, and kept the work in good working condition. Now that he is present all the time he is busy organizing the young people into bands for service and thereby accomplishing good results. Full of energy and enthusiasm, he goes about his tasks in that way that usually wins out. He seems to be quite popular with all classes of people in the place.

I enjoyed meeting with this kind people again. It was here that I attempted to preach my first sermon—and the more I recall that effort the more my respect for their patience and endurance increases. There is a future for our work in the town of Whitakers. It can never fail there until those who now lead die.

THE HOLLISTER SCHOOL, Rev. N. G. Bethea, Headmaster.

I attended this school, being there from Tuesday evening until the close Wednesday night. To say that the school was a success is to express a foregone conclusion with some of us, but it likewise expresses a fact that some may not know as yet.

The attendance was all that could be desired. The subjects presented were vital to the interest of the church and well taught; those taking them seemed determined to get all that was coming their way. One man gave up his work in the plant there that he might take those subjects and afterward said that he would not have missed them for fifty dollars, I was told.

As some one else will doubtless write up the school, I will not attempt any description of the work done, nor of the results in diplomas given; suffice it to say that it passed beyond the stage of experiment and put the sectional school on the calendar in this part of the state.

I had an appointment at Eden church Friday night, but rain hindered us, and kept the service from being held. I regret this very much indeed. One who travels for a hundred or more miles to hold a service at least feels that it is somewhat important and wants to hold that service, but as we have no league with the rain makers, we have ceased to worry over the times when these refreshing showers come; they were needed down there, I know; so that was well. R. M. Andrews.

HERE LIES CHURCH UNION.

Requiescat in Pace.

I think we may place the tombstone over the corpse; and while there may be some who will weep at the departure of their friend, most of us are glad that the creature has ceased to breathe and has entered upon a long sleep.

For fifteen years or more the Methodist Protestant Church has been engaged in some sort of a union movement; first with the Congregationalists and the United Brethren—who in this case did not appear to be united,—then with the Methodist Episcopal Churches, North and South, in the meanwhile carrying on negotiations with the United Brethren.

At the General Conference held in Baltimore in 1912 the Committee on Church Union stated as a part of their report, which has since been the attitude and policy of the church, that "the fundamental condition of this movement is that the two Episcopal Methodisms must come into agreement before we can go farther than we have gone."

Both the Northern and Southern Methodist Episcopaal Churches continued their commissions on the Unification of Methodism. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in the General Conference at Oklahoma City, two years ago, proposed what they called the "Regional Plan" for union. This was placed before the joint commission, modified somewhat, and submitted to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church recently at its session at Des Moines, Iowa. The General Conference practically ignored the whole matter, and instead of taking steps to set off the negro membership and conferences, as was proposed in the plan of union, elected two negro bishops who, to all intents and purposes, are to have equal rights and authority over all the conferences of the church, white or colored. That action, unless it is repudiated, so far as the Southern church is concerned shuts the door to any further movement toward union. And what is more important to us, it automatically excludes us from any further concern in the subject.

But in the shutting of that door another is opened. We are free now as we have not been in years to do the work of a distinct denomination unhindered by the distractions of not knowing what is before us in the way of union. We are to continue as a denomination separate and distinct, we are to remain the Methodist Protestant Church. The rich heritage of the fathers and the opportunities of the Kingdom are still ours. We have been sifted as wheat, we have been tried in the fire. We are ready now to do a more aggressive work than we have done before. And to do that I think there are some things we must keep in mind.

In the first place, we must believe in ourselves. We have been a bit uncertain in these latter days whether we really had anything worth while, whether we were making a distinct contributioon to the religious life of the world. We were apologetic, inclined to speak of ourselves as a small church and to belittle our powers. I think we may set that all aside. We are bigger than we thought, we can do greater things than we dared hope, we have yet something to give to the denominational life of America and the world. That is shown by the splendid success of the Forward Movement. Those of us who sat in the General Conference at Zanesville, knowing what we had been doing as a church, were dumfounded at the program that was set before us. It was not all realized, but so much of it was realized that we have no reason to be ashamed. If we could have had a larger interest from the pastors and from some of the laymen, it would have been a complete success.

And that statement so often made that we are so nearly like the other Methodisms that there is nothing to keep us apart, is likewise to be set aside. I recognize the trend toward demecracy in Episcopal Methodism; but it is not yet democratic. The bishop may have less power than he once had but he is still a bishop. And as for the layman equal rights is still a fond but vain hope. The Northern Methodist Church recently voted down the memorial to admit them into membership in the Annual Conference. They do not have a vital part in the deliberations of the Southern Church. The equal rights of the ministry and the laity, that foundation stone upon which our church is built, stands firm today. Ours is the representative church in America. If men, ministers or laymen, care for freedom they can find in here as they can find it nowhere else. Except for an occasional long-tail coat, and they are becoming less frequent, no one can distinguish in the counsels of our church the minister from the layman.

Not only are we something, and have both the ability and the resources to do do something; but we must be increasingly active if we are to succeed as a church and take our rightful place in the denominational life of America. It may take new forms of endeavor, but we must set goals and press toward them. We cannot mark time, we must not be content with past achievement. We must go forward. What has been accomplished only enables us to undertake greater things. For the first time in years our boards and institutions are out of debt, a clarion call to enlarge our activities. More missionaries in the foreign field, the planting of churches in increasing number in the home land, more resources for our educational and philanthropic institutions, this is the open door that our Christ has set before us. Let us beware lest someone take our crown.

The General Conference has set the goal, it has sent the challenge down to us: "500,000 a year for the next four years." Instead of a million dollars in four years, it is to be doubled. Can we do it? Most certainly we can. If we will we can do far more. We cannot shirk the call, we cannot evade the responsibility without disaster to ourselves and to the church.

But this is not all. We cannot write progress simply in dollars and cents. There has perhaps been too much insistance that that is the mark of denominational greatness. We must not only be a giving church. We must be a praying church, a seeking church. The great need of this nation is a revival of religion. It was a little band that brought the Pentecost; if we are willing to it, it may be this little church that can bring upon this nation the second baptism of the Holy Ghost. Let us pray for that, while we work for the other.

USELESS WORRY.

What a vast proportion of our lives is spent in anxious and useless forebodings concerning the future—either our own or those of our dear ones. Present joys, present blessings, slip by, and we miss half their sweet flavor, and all for want of faith in Him who provides for the tiniest insect in the sunbeam. Oh, when shall we learn the sweet trust in God that our little children teach us every day by their confiding faith in us? We, who are so mutable; and He, who is so watchful, so pitiful, so loving so, forgiving? Why can not we, slipping our hand into His each day, walk trustingly over that day's appointed path, thorny or flowery, crooked or straight, knowing that evening will bring us sleep, peace and home?—Phillips Brooks.

—"Now we'll play zoo," said Willie, "and I'll be the elephant."

"That will be fine," said Aunt Mabel. "But what shall I be?"

"Oh, you can be the nice lady what feeds the elephant with buns and sugar," explained Willie.—Selected.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Rev F C Klein, Sec.

THE LATEST FROM JAPAN.

Dr. L. Layman, now in charge of Nagoya College, since the return of Rev. E. I. Obee on a well earned furlough, sends the following interesting account of the work at the college, under date of April 20.

‘‘Another year has closed, and a new one begun for this school. The one closed was a good one in every particular. The total registration for the year was 624. Seventy-one graduated at the commencement in March. Of this number 33 were Christians. There were 67 baptisms during the year.

‘‘The writer takes up again the work he was associated with twenty years ago. Great changes have come in that time. In those former days, we never had as many as 100 students. The number now is limited only by the buildings and Government regulations.

‘‘This year—it began in April—450 applied for admittance, but only 176 were received. The enrollment for the new year was 654.

‘‘If we had the buildings and equipment, next year we could have all that the Government will allow this grade of school to enroll, namely 800.

‘‘If our plans carry, and they will, we shall have some special departments soon added, and the enrollment will reach 1200 in a few years.

‘‘The Japanese take their education very seriously. On the day of opening of school, the students and parents were out in full force. This made the number so large that the opening exercises had to be held in sections. The old students were first received by the superintendent, Prof. Kimura, and the teachers. Prof. Kimura gave the usual opening address.

‘‘Then the new students assembled after the older ones had retired from the chapel. To those Prof. Kimura gave a different kind of talk.

‘‘But first he spoke to the parents or the parties who were responsible for placing the boys in school. The superintendent of a Japanese school has a very responsible position. He becomes practically a parent to each student. They, both sides, take the matter very seriously.

‘‘Prof. Kimura told the parents in very plain terms what the school stands for. It was for more than secular education. It was to build character. But more than that, Christian character was the main object of the school. He did not evade any part of the matter, and told the parents that if they had any other understanding, or objected to having the boys under such influence, it was not too late to withdraw.

‘‘After being absent for twenty years from the school, and to return to it under such wonderful changed conditions, to face those 600 eager faces, gives a real thrill of delight and pleasure that one's lot is cast under such rare privileges of service.’’

The following was sent to the Board from the Japan Mission Conference:

‘‘According to the instruction of our Annual Conference, which met in Tokyo on the 23rd of March, 1920, I have the honor to write to you that the Japan Conference did appreciate so much that the Board sent Drs. Klein and Broomfield as its deputation to Japan to inspect the works of the Methodist Protestants in this land, and that they gave us not only special messages, but at the same time very timely encouragements and inspirations. Their stay in Japan, though very short, has done much good, and left to us a sweet and unerased impression of love and sympathy of our Mother Church in America.

‘‘Most sincerely,
(Signed) ‘‘I. Inanuma,
‘‘President Mission Annual Conference.’’
Fred C. Klein.

BOOK ON CHURCH ARCHITECTURE.

The Chairman of the Committee on Church Architecture of the Home Missions Council, J. S. Wise, treasurer of the Home Mission Board of the Reformed Church in the United States, has announced the securing of the Rev. George R. Brauer of the Church Erection Board of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, to prepare a booklet on church plans and architecture, which will be available for all denominations. The need of such a booklet makes this announcement most timely.

DRUG HABIT.

There appears to be a general impression that prohibition has caused an increase in the drug habit. Dr. George H. Simmons, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association, does not think so. Moreover he has just published an editorial in his Journal showing that the restriction of the use of alcohol in Germany during the war was followed by a diminution of the use of harmful drugs. In an interview with Dr. Arthur Dean Bevan, former president of the American Medical Association, he dictated and afterward signed the following statement:

‘‘It is possible that in this transition period a few people cut off from the use of alcohol have resorted to drugs as a substitute, but if this is true it is simply a temporary matter and due to this transition from the free use of alcohol to prohibition and the number of these cases is very small compared to the number that were made drug addicts by the free use of alcohol in the past.’’

NEW THEORY OF MATTER.

What is claimed to be a ‘‘new theory of matter’’ was set forth the other day at the meeting of the National Academy of Sciences, at Washington. It was presented by Mr. Irving Langmuier, who thinks his theory will lead to a better understanding of energy, force, time, space, magnetism and the general properties of matter.

He has found, or thinks he has, a division of matter smaller than the atom or the electron, and names it the ‘‘quantel.’’ It has two parts, one positive, the other negative. The quantel is everywhere present in space; it moves in all directions with the speed of light; it can pass through matter that is seemingly solid, like water through a sieve.

The quantels constitute what has heretofore been called the ether of space; so, if the doctor is correct, it appears that he has found component parts of the ether. The quantels cause all the phenomena of electricity, magnetism, light, energy, mass, and presumably gravitation. Everything is built up of quantels. His theory, Dr. Langmuier thinks, explains many things, including lines of the spectrum.—Current Events.

THE TEEN-AGE PEOPLE AT WORK.

By Rev. M. J. Shroyer.

There is a question which quite naturally comes from the adolescent boy and girl who have been claimed by the church, and that question must be of concern to every worker who has this class of the membership at heart. It is the question asked by the men of all classes who heard John the Baptist as he told them of the coming of the new order. They were concerned about the practical meaning of his message. ‘‘What must we do?’’ is the question of those who look beneath the surface of the Christian life and ask for an interpretation of theory in terms of the believer's response. There is no class of the churches' membership in greater need of a definitely outlined task than its young people. Does it not tax the ingenuity of the minister as he faces the serious problem of directing the activities of his young people? There are three possible attitudes which he may assume toward this responsibility. He may let them drift, offering them no task, trusting in the ‘‘Laissez faire’’ principle that eventually everything will come out right. Or, he may give them the task of attending all regular and mid-week services, four or five on Sunday, and two or three during the week. His injunction is: ‘‘Attend the services faithfully; for this is the whole duty of man.’’ Or he may supplement the regular services of worship with work in the community of a week-day nature. Here is where the minister will show his interpretation of the task of christianity in this generation. For whatever may have been the ideal of the past, just now the essential thing is the injection of Christian principles into society and measuring the every-day conduct of men by Christian standards. Where is there a better opportunity of expressing this phase of Christianity than among these teen-age folk who are asking the question, "What must we do?"

In Kansas, that state of big sunflowers, big wheat crops, and big ideas, there is a movement on foot which promises much for its young people. The University of Kansas has an Extension Division and connected with this, a Department of Child Welfare. This department has for its purpose the combating of evils that touch childhood and adolescence, and the promotion of things that are uplifting to the morals of youth. Under the direction of this department there is "An organization composed of the superintendents and principals of the public schools of Kansas, the purpose being to protect the growing generation against the exploitation of commercialized employment, indulgence, entertainment and amusement." The scope of this organization will be seen in the very suggestive activities which are outlined. It plans to protect the youth of the state against the insidious attack of tobacco manufacturers who would deplete the health and morals of the teen-age boy by fastening upon him the cigarette habit. The organization is opposed to the exploitation of youth through games of chance. Its purpose is also to combat cheap and objectionable motion pictures, the coarse vaudeville, the "snake charmer" type of street carnival, and the cabaret. It seeks to protect the young girl from the underworld traffic and from the lure of the public dance hall. The organization is indeed entering into an important field. Already there has been a hearty response in public schools, among the Boy Scouts, in the Y. M. C. A. and in boys' classes of the Sunday schools.

Here, then, is a suggestive outline for applied Christianity. It is encouraging to see the activity of a State University and of public schools, working for the redemption of youth. Their work has also the hearty endorsement of some twenty or thirty state organizations in Kansas, including the State Federation of Clubs, State Medical Association, State Teachers' Association, and the State Commercial Travelers' Association. And the church is back of the movement, too, through the State Sunday school Association and the State Societies of the Young People of the Church. The church has a right to be concerned about the moral conditions that prevail and menace the life of its youth. The boy of fourteen who is already wasting his life in vain living, and the girl of fifteen who walks the streets at night, neither father nor mother knowing where she is, these are the problems of the church. These are types of young people who are unemployed, from the churches standpoint, and they are just as much of a menace as the unemployed in the industrial field. He is a wise leader of youth who can give them something to do in the realm of applied Christianity.

THE ORIGINAL BOLSHEVIK.

One of the most curious episodes of the French Revolution is the conspiracy of Babeuf. Francois Babeuf—Gracchus Babeuf as he called himself, after the classical fancy of the day—was an earnest revolutionary who held subordinate offices under the Committee of Public Safety. He was an admirer of Robespierre; and, though during the Terror he thought his hero went too far, after the death of Robespierre he had only praise for him. He even got himself put into prison for advocating the overthrow of the Directory and the establishment of a government founded on Robespierre's Declaration of the Rights of Man.

Released from prison, he grew more radical rather than less. He organized a secret society of conspirators, pledged to the overthrow of society. Perfect equality was to be the watchword of the new state. Private property of every sort was to be abolished, for private property is theft. Everything must be swept clean. "Perish all the arts, if necessary, so that real equality is left to us."

Everyone was to be forced to work a specified number of hours every day. All were to be paid alike, not in money but in kind. The man who was more skillful or industrious than his fellows was to be content to be rewarded by the public gratitude. No one might choose his trade or profession, but each should be assigned by the state to the kind of work for which he was needed. Parents were to have no care over their children, who were to be trained from birth in public institutions. It is the logic and the system of communism, now grown more or less familiar, but in those days new, curious, fascinating to visionary minds unsettled by the long ferment of the Revolution.

Babeuf has often been dismissed as a mad man, but, though he was excitable and subject to fits of something like frenzy under the intoxication of his ideas, there is no reason to believe him any more mad than any other devotee of communism. His conspiracy failed of course. It ran counter to every current of public sentiment, which in 1795 had had enough of tumult and revolution, and passionately desired order and tranquility. Babeuf was betrayed by a supposed follower! his secret organization was broken up by the soldiers of the Directory; he himself was executed.

But Babeuvism, the doctrine of communism and of the complete subordination of the individual to the state, persisted. Long confined to academic discussion in small, semi-secret circles of believers, it flamed out again upon the world in the theories of Karl Marx, and in these latter days it has become the corner stone of syndicalism in France and of Bolshevism in Russia. Marx, the philosopher, the writer of books, the tireless assimilator of other men's ideas, gets the credit for inventing much political heresy that he only popularized. Anyone who reads the obscure story of Babeuf as recent investigations have disclosed it will find in his manifestoes the theory of communism, almost exactly as it is proclaimed and in part practiced today in Moscow.—The Youth's Companion.

The cardinals have submitted to the Pope a respectful request that, owing to the increased cost of living, their annual allowances be increased.

Mr. W. G. McAdoo, speaking at Youngstown, Ohio, says that "more religion and less politics" is needed to solve the country's problems. "The fundamental problems facing America are not political or economic but moral and religious, and they demand moral and religious remedies."

EVANGELISM.

EVANGELISM IN THE HOME.

For some time we have had our attention directed to the Sunday school as an evangelizing agent. We trust good will come of this. If we do nothing more than discover our weakness or strength in this particular, we shall have accomplished something worth while. As soon as sufficient answers are received from questionaire, we will publish results.

Let us turn our attention, now, to the home, as an evangelizing agent.

A few years ago, a minister, now prominent in his church, was a student at Columbia University. Associated with him there was another young man from North Carolina. These two young men were rooming together. One evening after supper was over and they had gone to their room for study, the friend of the young minister buried his face in his arm on the table and began sobbing convulsively. Of course an explanation was necessary. Addressing the young minister familiarly his friend said, in reply to his question: "——, I remember that just about this hour my father and mother are having their family devotion around the fireside down in the old home, and I tell you ——, with that scene before me, I can't live a double life, as I am doing here in this city."

If we want to save our children, and make the church mighty, we must have the spirit of evangelism in the home.

—With enough British soldiers in Dublin to control a province, and armored cars and tanks everywhere, three masked men stole the official mail in broad daylight.

—Cardinal Gibbons makes a sharp distinction between Sunday recreation and Sunday amusements promoted for gain. He strongly opposes a bill before the Maryland legislature which would legalize Sunday movies.

To stop the vicious practice of gun-toting, a New York judge sentenced a man named John Clohaey to seven years' imprisonment for carrying a revolver, with 1,000 days extra if he fails to pay a $1,000 fine. Merely having the weapon was a felony in Clohaey's case, because he had served a term in prison for burglary. He is 24 years old.

—A New Orleans detective named Hyver was engaged to capture a suspected robber. When he had caught his man, and turned the flashlight upon him, the detective was horrified to find that it was his own son. With Brutus-like fortitude, disregarding pleadings, the detective took his prisoner to jail.

—In these days when there are a number of devices that in no way mar the looks of the church auditorium, no class should lack at least a curtained partition during the teaching session.

—Eight per cent. of all fires last year were due to electricity. Cheap insulation, amateur wiring, short circuits and arcs caused more fires than the old kerosene lamp.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JULY 4.

Our Duty to Our Country. Isa. 1: 16-20.

(Consecration Meeting.)

It is fitting that we should consider this subject in connection with our consecration service, because we owe a duty as Christians not only to Christ but to our country as well. Jesus says, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's." It is not enough to be religious, we must be patriotic as well. And patriotism does not consist in loud hurrahs nor in hanging out the flag on the Fourth of July nor in voting on election day. These may be evidences of patriotism, but they may be present with patriotism absent. These are some of the qualifications of patriotism:

1. A whole-hearted obedience to law, whether local, state or national. There are probably many unwise laws on our statute books, but it is the duty of the patriotic citizen to obey them until they are repealed or modified. To defy them is to be untrue to our citizenship. It is just this evasion of law that is the seed from which so much of our lawlessness comes. We ought to be examples in our zeal for the law. And whether it is simply a matter of a traffic regulation or of the observance of some fundamental law of the land, we ought to be law abiding.

Failure to comply with the law of the land or of the community is more largely a matter of selfishness than of pure ignorance. And if it is violated from ignorance, it is axiomatic that that does not constitute a valid excuse, Take for instance the laws of the road: speeding and the use of suitable lights, the blowing of horns, and so forth. None of these is difficult, nor do they work any hardship upon those who observe them. Yet a large percentage of accidents in which others are involved are due to speeding, and any one who drives knows the discomfort caused by some glaring headlight. Last summer I drove my car from Greensboro to Asheville and numerous cars approached me or sought to pass from the rear, but I do not remember that more than half a dozen blew their horns. These may be simple things, but they are symptomatic. If we ignore these we will ignore the greater laws if it suits our convenience and we get the chance. So I plead as the first requirement of our duty to our country, a willing compliance with the law.

2. A second thing is an active interest in our political institutions. This is a democracy, which being interpreted—for it needs interpretation—means government by the people. That looks fine on paper, and it makes great campaign stuff, but there's a little bit of sounding brass in it. The fact is, we are less democratic than England in spite of the fact that they have a king and we have a president. The people of this nation want some part in the League of Nations even though they may not be willing to accept it just as it came to us. And what has happened? For months we have been held up to the scorn and derision of the world, while the Senate, divided into rival camps, debated (?) the question along strictly party lines. The world has burned while the Senate fiddled.

Interest in politics ought not to be confined within party lines. It is often said of some strict party adherent that he "would vote for the devil if he were nominated on the party ticket." That in effect is what many a man does when he votes for men whom he knows are unfit or unworthy of election to office. If America is badly governed, the voter has himself to blame. The best citizenship must accept office, they must be willing to vote for the best men for office. That is our Christian duty.

3. And we owe to our country an active participation in every movement that looks to the betterment of social and economic conditions. Social service is an important factor in the life of the nation, and while it may have run to extremes and been substituted for a vital Chistianity on the part of some, I believe every Christian ought to engage in it. And what is social service? It is caring for the sick and the needy, for the homeless child and the aged. It is interested in the hospital, in the children's and old people's homes, in schools and colleges, and in all the things that will help the less fortunate elements of the country to a more equitable share in the good things of life. We may call it community service or welfare work, but whatever its name we ought to give ourselves to it. So long as some fall among thieves on the way to Jericho, or some little one thirsts for a cup of cold water, we shall have to render service that will bind up wounds and allay thirst. It is our duty to make this a better country to live in, and to help make the people who live in it better.

"They tell me thou art rich, my country. Gold
In glittering flood has poured into thy chest.
Thy flocks and herds increase, thy barns are pressed
With harvest, and thy stores can hardly hold
Their merchandise. Unending trains are rolled Along thy network rails of East and West.
Thy factories and forges never rest.
Thou are enriched in all things bought and sold.

"But dost thou prosper? Better news I crave.
O dearest country, is it well with thee
Indeed, and is thy soul in health?
A nobler people, hearts more wisely brave,
And thoughts that lift men up and make them free,
These are prosperity and vital wealth!"

The poet's ideal is your task and mine, the duty we owe our country. C. W. B.

Seminary Notes.

Every Methodist Protestant should be interested in what is taking place on the Seminary hill. Especially at this time when old things are passing away and all things are becoming new.

You who have spent many pleasant and profitable hours in the old Seminary class rooms, may feel a sense of sadness mingled with joy to know that the last stone of the old building has been removed. It reminds us of Christ's prophecy concerning the temple, that not one stone would be left upon another. All were anxious to know what could be found in the old corner stone. Dr. Lewis, the first President of the Seminary, and the man who laid the first corner stone at his own request was invited to be present the afternoon the old corner stone was to be removed. Dr. Elderdice and Professor Shroyer were also on the ground. There was talk among the workmen of finding everything from famous old documents up to silver and gold. As the last bricks were being removed and the mortar scraped from the stone every eye was upon it, but not a hole could be found in it. It bares this simple inscription on the front of the stone, "School of Theology, 1882." The old corner stone has found its new resting place in the new building just to the left of the main entrance.

The appointed time for the laying of the new corner stone was June 16, at 4:15 p. m. A heavy thunder storm prevented the ritual being held in front of the new building. Those remaining until after the storm assembled in Smith's Hall of Western Maryland College. Many prominent personages of the Methodist Protestant Church took part in the ritual, but Dr. Lewis was the only one who made an address. He gave much interesting history of the early days of the Seminary. After the ritual and address, a Bible, names of persons connected with the Seminary, Methodist Protestant literature, etc., were placed in a copper box and put in the corner stone, and sealed.

Some progress is being made on the new building. The walls of the first story are almost completed and some work has been done on the second story. More masons are to begin work Monday, June 21. We hope everything will be completed by time for school to open this fall. E. A. Bingham.

Watch the High Point Baracas Grow.

The Baracas of the First Methodist Protestant Church have inaugurated an extensive membership campaign that bids fair to equal the large class of 1915. Under the efficient leadership of J. W. Hinkle, teacher, and C. C. Robbins, president, and with a nucleus of 40 willing members, we hope soon to take up again our leadership among the Baracas of the State. Keep your eyes on the High Point M. P. Baracas. You will hear more of them.

AMERICAN BEAN HELPED TO WIN THE WAR.

Professor Corbett, a horticulturist by profession, knows more about beans than anyone else in the country. We may accept his statement, therefore, that the bean which grows practically everywhere except at the North Pole, played a large part in helping to bring Germany to terms.

For years beans have formed one of the principal articles of food for the soldiers in our regular army. During the Spanish war they ate great quantities of them, down on the Mexican border they did the same thing, and then in France the story was repeated. It was not only our troops, however, that were fed on beans. British and French soldiers lived on them, and the American product, at that. Now that autocracy has been conquered and democracy rules the world, credit should be given to the bean for the part it played in bringing about such a condition.

The exigencies of the war served to bring into prominence a comparatively obscure type of bean—pintos, dry land grown. They are becoming known. They are gaining a reputation. The war made them, and they are now being grown where none were grown before. Colorado alone had 35,000 acres of pintos in 1918. In 1919 she harvested 175,000 acres, an increase of 500 per cent. New Mexico, long the home of the pinto bean, had 300,000 acres, an increase of about 600 per cent. over last year, while Western Kansas, Nebraska and Wyoming together cultivated some 25,000 acres of what was practically a new crop for these states.

A total of 500,000 acres for six states is rather a remarkable showing in view of the fact that this is a new country and that the beans were raised by inexperienced growers, many of them bankers, school teachers, business men, railroad men. These growers are well satisfied with their efforts, for prices are good, and they have the satisfaction of knowing that they have brought to successful harvest a great food crop, raised under semi-arid conditions, where navies and other varieties of beans will not flourish. What is of equal importance, it means a big addition to the food supplies of the United States, for these beans are not perishable, are easily stored and handled, are very nutritious, and form a highly concentrated and valuable food.

While a staple product of the South West, the pinto bean is practically unknown in the North and East, where the navy bean has been the popular favorite. Yet, according to the Colorado Experiment Station, in food value it is practically identical with the navy, but being more tender in flesh it cooks more easily. Chemical analysis shows that in the total calories or fuel value per pound, the pinto exceeds other beans, having 1695 units, compared to 1625 for the lima and 1605 for the navy. The pinto being rich in protein is an excellent substitute for meat. A comparison of nutritive values of common foods shows one pound of pintos at twelve cents to be equal to two pounds of round steak.

Grown on the great sun-flooded plains of the West, and drawing its moisture and plant food from far below the surface of virgin soil, the pinto obtains a natural flavor unsurpassed by any other bean. To get the best out of it, however, it needs to be thoroughly cooked. It is an especially good baking bean.—Robert H. Moulton.

—The latest census reports for 1920 make New York, with a population of 7,000,000 inhabitants and 8,500,000 if the suburbs are included, indisputably the largest city in the world. New York now surpasses London by nearly a million.

—Tommy had been giving his teacher good deal of trouble. Finally, the subject of nature study was broached to him. To the teacher's joy, he became briskly curious about insects, particularly moths, and said he wanted to get some books about them. One day the teacher saw him sitting at his desk intently studying a book, but with a scowl of hopeless perplexity on his face.

"What's the trouble, Tommy?" asked the teacher.

"I went down to the library," Tommy answered. "and got a book about insects, and I don't understand what it means. I can't make any head or tail to it."

The teacher put on her most sympathetic and helpful expression.

"What's the name of the book?" she said.

In an utterly discouraged tone he replied, "Advice to Young Moth-ers."—The Evening Post, New York.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

There is probably no condition in our national life that is more uncertain and vexing than the present relationship between capital and labor. The urgent need of the hour is a fair and proper adjustment of the respective viewpoints and the harmonious co-operation of these two departments of our industrial life.

Each is indispensable to the other, and both are indispensable to the nation and the world World-wide civilization would topple and fall if capital and labor were to cease to work together. The investors of capital furnish to the laboring class their opportunity for securing a livelihood; and the laboring man supplies to the capitalist his only opportunity to secure sufficient profits to continue and enlarge his business enterprises.

Selfishness and mutual distrust are the causes of the troubles that arise between capital and labor. The prevailing program of capital is to get the largest measure of profits with the least possible outlay for labor. And the prevailing program of labor is to get the highest wages with the least outlay of toil. Capital looks upon labor as a commodity to be secured at the lowest price; and labor looks upon capital as a Shylock trying to wring out of labor large and exorbitant profits.

Both of these viewpoints are wrong. Labor is not a commodity to be dealt with like articles of merchandise. These toilers are men and women and children with God-given rights and privileges that must be respected. The capitalists as a class are not Shylocks, but fairminded men, who want to do the right thing if they can be led to see what that is.

Capital and labor need to get together. It would be well to exchange each other's viewpoints. Let labor regard capital from capital's viewpoint,; and let capital look upon labor from labor's viewpoint. A mutual understanding of the ground that separates them would help immensely in removing existing prejudice and securing a co-operation that would be beneficial to both.

Labor should agree to give capital a square deal, to give a full measure of toil for the pay agreed upon. Capital should agree not only to pay a living wage but also to share its profits with labor. This profit-sharing might take the form of annual dividends, or increased wages, or improvements in the homes and suroundings of the toilers, or better schools and libraries, or a larger measure of social welfare.

Instead of each class organizing to secure and protect their respective rights and interests, (and each has the right to do so), it might be well to have one organization in every separate industry in which each shall have an equal number of representatives. Let such organizations propose measures, settle differences, fix prices, and plan enlargements. Let state and national organizations of equal representation be instituted to which appeals may be made for the final decision of matters that cannot be settled in the lower organizations.

The prophetic sign of the two sticks recorded in the thirty-seventh chapter of Ezekiel deserves a present-day application. The two sticks represented the rival kingdoms of Judah and Israel. Judah was wont to vex Israel, and Israel was accustomed to envy Judah. The two sticks became united in the prophet's hand. This represents that in the restoration of the Jews the kingdoms of Judah and Israel shall be united into one kingdom. Instead of capital and labor being like two sticks and continually fighting each other, they ought to unite for the highest welfare of both. Such union and co-operation are in perfect harmony with the underlying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.—The Word of Life,

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

The School for Religious Workers.

The first Community School of Methods for Religious Workers of the North Carolina Conference was held at Hollister June 15-16. The following persons were in attendance: Rev. R. M. Andrews, president of the Conference and dean of the school; Rev. P. E. Lindley, of Gibsonville, Rev. C. W. Bates of Granville circuit; Miss Annie L. Forrest, our returned missionary; Miss Juanita Hammer of High Point, Misses Lossie Harde and Winnie Burt of Enfield; and the following from the various pastoral charges: Littleton, Rev. D. M. Loy, Misses Lena Morris, Hadie Loy, Mildred Thornton; Spring Church, Rev. J. B. O'Briant, Calvin Massey, Misses Aubrey Crew, Nita Turner, Bessie Jordan; Whitakers, Rev. J. C. Auman, Mrs. J. M. Cutchin, Jr., Misses Emily Spencer Cutchin, Cornelia Bradley, Virginia Dare Braswell; Halifax, Rev. N. G. Bethea, Head Master of the school, George Robert Ivey, Edgar Whitley, Harry Lewis, W. L. Ross, MissesEthel and Helen Harrison, Pauline Bethea, Mary Delphia Warren, Maxine Taylor, Lilla Taylor, Annie Lewis; Arcola Methodist Episcopal church, George D. Hunter, Misses Lula and Agnes Hunter.

Those making the highest grades: W. L. Ross, Hollister, 98; Miss Juanita Hammer, High Point, 97.5; Miss Maxine Taylor, Brinkleyville, 97; Geo. R. Ivey, Enfield, 95. Those who led among the ministers: P. E. Lindley, Gibsonville, 99; J. C. Auman, Whitakers, 98.

Those who came to take the course worked hard and as a result each one made good grades and was awarded a certificate. We were sorry not to have Rev. S. W. Taylor of Henderson with us, but glad to have Rev. P. E. Lindley to take his place. We enjoyed his cornet accompaniments, also the special music furnished each night by different ones. The addresses were of very high order and will mean much to those who had the privilege of hearing them. At the close of the school Wednesday night George Hunter of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a student of the 10th grade, presented Miss Forrest with $5 which he won at school, to be used in buying tracts to be distributed among the heathen boys and girls. A wonderful step this young boy has taken. As a whole we consider this a good school and believe it will mean much to the community. The young people expressed themselves as being very favorably impressed with Hollister and its hospitable people. We enjoyed having them in our midst.

The success of this school was due largely to the untiring efforts of our pastor, Rev. N. G. Bethea. May other communities help to keep this work going.

"My Little Children."

The second Sunday in this month children's day service was held at Hickory Ridge. The small children and boys and girls had a leading part in the exercise. Miss Anna Cox read a very comprehensive short paper on our foreign missionary work in the past and the present. The music was under the direction of Mrs. R. M. Cox. I have seldom heard a better exercise rendered than was this -both the recitations and music being of a superior class.

The Land of the Sky.

My first field of labor in the ministry was around Asheville. For many years I have wished to go back and visit some of the scenes of my early labors and see the friends yet remaining there.

Last Monday I turned my face westward and at 10 o'clock p. m. Bro. J. W. Barrett and his daughter, Miss Effie, met me at the Asheville station. Soon we were in Bro. Barrett's home at 34 Carter street. Bro. Barrett was the delegate to Annual Conference and took me to my first work and stood by me as long as I remained on Buncombe circuit. He is not strong and active as he once was, but his love for the church and his devotion to her interests have increased rather than diminished. He says he tells the members that if they were to turn him out he would join again the next Sunday. Tuesday Bro. Barrett and I spent the day in talking of the past, the present and the future.

Wednesday morning we took the trolley for Weaverville, where we were met by Bro. Spencer, the pastor of Buncombe circuit, and carried by him to the home of Bro. L. F. Eller. Bro. Eller is the youngest son of Rev. J. P. Eller. Aunt Harriet, the widow of Rev. J. P. Eller, lives in the home. She is now in her 86th year, and as the result of a fall goes on crutches; otherwise she is in fine health. She is my Buncombe mother, for it was in this home that I spent the first two years of my ministry. She was a mother to me and Uncle Joe was a father. Bro. L. F. Eller's good wife, his sister Katie and nephew Carl comprise the family. It was a joy to be in this home once more and to be embraced by my Buncombe mother and to press kisses upon her cheeks. She is "bound for the Promised Land." I asked her if she gets there before I do to tell loved ones I am coming. In a short time a most sumptuous dinner was ready--fried chicken, stewed chicken with pastry, butter right from the spring house, mountain honey and fluffy biscuits, milk and other things too numerous to mention.

After some hours of conversation we worshiped together, and "Heaven came down our souls to greet

And glory crowned the mercy seat."

By six o'clock we were back in Asheville and at eight p. m. I had the pleasure of preaching to a good congregation in the Methodist Protestant church. Dr. Johnson, the good pastor, is greatly beloved and all the members sympathize with him on account of the going away of the sweet wife who was ever his faithful helper in the gospel ministry. Thursday morning Bro. Johnson came to see me and for an hour we talked of things heavenly and divine. Then the Good Samaritan, Rev. J. S. Williams, came for me and carried me to his office and he and I talked of the past, of the present, and of things to come. Bro. Williams knows more people and is known by more people in Asheville than any other person in the city. He is constantly on the go in his ministries to the sick, the troubled and the dying. After our heart-to-heart conversation he took me to the W. M. C. A. cafe and fed me lavishly and then carried me back to Bro. Barrett's. There I rested until this morning when Bro. Barrett came with me to the station and at 8:10 a. m. (Friday) I boarded No. 22 and now I am in my room at Winston-Salem. A gentle and refreshing rain is falling without. My trip will long linger as a sweet memory. Everybody was so good to me. The fifth Sunday in August will be observed as centennial day at Clark's Chapel, near Weaverville, and I have promised to preach a sermon in memory of Rev. Joseph Pickens Eller, it being the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. In his day he was a great power for good and I think it probable that he won more souls to Jesus Christ than any man who has ever lived in Buncombe County.

Winston-Salem, N. C., June 18, 1920.

Rockingham Charge.—Our revival came to a close Sunday night with a sermon by Rev. D. A. Highfill on The Bible's Last Invitation "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely." Rev. 22:17. Bro. Highfill showed how the Holy Spirit had for all these years been striving with men that they may come to Christ. How the church in her many ways was inviting us to come. How he who had heard of this wonderful gospel was commanded to give the invitation to come. How he who was athirst may come, and that the way may be so plain that that no one should chance to err therein. God added and said, "Whosoever will let him come and take the water of life freely."

Bro. Highfill's sermons were like a great river, deepens and widens as it rolls on. All being bulwarked with the word of God, and just what good they have brought to Rockingham is not for us to tell.

We are expecting to start a meeting at St. Johns on fourth Sunday.

Our candidates for delegate to the Annual Conference are R. A. Steward of Mt. Gilead and J. W. Jenkins of Rockingham.

Bro. W. F. Collins of Winston was with us a few days last week attending the meeting at Pee Dee. Bro. Collins has been one of our leading men here for a number of years. We are glad to have him with us again.

Ted W. Snead, Bill McDonal, Miss Mary and Myrtle Black spent last Sunday at Jackson Springs visiting friends and relatives. Mr. Snead reports a very pleasant trip.

Bro. S. F. McCormick has moved to Steel's Mill.

James H Trolinger.

Rockingham, N. C., June 17.

Liberty Hill, Anderson Circuit.—Our work is progressing nicely. We have taken several new steps in Sunday school and have good attendance. The all day singing fourth Sunday in May was a great success. We had a number of good singers present. Our leaders have been greatly encouraged. We had preaching service fifth Sunday. Our pastor, Rev. S. C. Lindley, was away fourth Sunday attending General Conference and Young People's Convention. We are very glad to have our pastor attend these meetings and get new inspiration.

Our Christian Endeavor society has on a campaign for new members; we have good meetings for a new society; feel that as we grow older we will grow better in our meeting. We are glad to say that on June 21, Monday night, Mr. Lawrence C. Little will speak for us at 8:00 o'clock. Everybody be sure to come and hear Mr. Little from far and near.

A lot of our people are ill at this writing. May God's richest blessing be with them.

On second Sunday in June Mr. Lindley preached about the rebuilding of the temple. After the sermon the committee on plans for Sunday school rooms presented their plans: they were accepted by the church and we hope in the near future to have better accommodations for teaching our children.

On second Sunday evening our pastor brought us a good sermon on the rivers Jordan; first, the natural river Jordan on the banks of which our Savior stood, the one our soldiers fought on; second, the river of faith we come to early in life when we can see heaven open; third, the river of death. We surely enjoyed these sermons. Remember us in your prayers sometimes.
Reporter.

Mt. Moriah, Cleveland Circuit.—Pastor Stowe filled his appointment the second Sunday in June: he preached a good sermon as he always does. Then the Lord's supper was attended to. We were sorry that Sister Stowe could not be with us, but we hope that she can be with us the next round.

Our Sunday school is still moving on nicely and hope it will still grow every Sunday. I will close with best wishes to all readers.

Yarborough's Chapel Christian Endeavor.

We had our re-election of officers last Sunday week, June 6, getting our same president back, Miss Gladys Wilson; Miss Clara Jackson, vice president; we also got our same recording secretary back, Mr. Richard Tucker; Mrs. Ophelia Bobo, corresponding secretary; Miss Vera Wilson, treasurer. I feel that we have made a mistake by not getting our same corresponding secretary back again. Now we hope by this renewing of officers that we have also been renewed in our hearts and minds. And that we might go forward with our Christian Endeavor work and that each of us will try and render better service for the future than we have in the past. While we feel that the work of the past has meant much to us, we hope that each member will bear this in mind and each of us strive to bring those that seemed to have lost interest in the society back to our meetings again. With best wishes to all Christian Endeavor societies,
Ophelia Bobo, Corresponding Secretary.

Liberty Hill Christian Endeavor Society.

The Christian Endeavor society at this place is progressing nicely, considering the length of time we have been organized. We held our regular meeting Sunday night, which was led by our vice president, Miss Sallie McClimon. The subject for the meeting was one which we must all confess to being guilty of, even the very best ones, "Common Mistakes in Daily Living." There were a number of interesting things said along that line. Our pastor made a splendid talk on Why We Make Mistakes.

We are glad to know that our all-South field secretary, Mr. Lawrence C. Little, will be with us on June 21. We have a large number of young people whom we trust Mr. Little will help us bring into our society. We feel we have too many who want to wait and let some one else do the work. We feel sure Mr. Little will have a message for all. We desire your prayers.
Corresponding Secretary.

Burlington.—Next Sunday, June 27, will be known as "Anniversay Day" at our church, commemorating the founding of the church 28 years ago. Mrs. G. A. B. Holderby of Spencer, the founder of Cedar Cliff church, this county, and a former citizen of this city and friend of this church, will preach the annual sermon at 11 o'clock. It is our desire to have a record-breaking attendance both at Sunday school and preaching service. As the anniversary for the church and Sunday school is combined this year we are asking all former members both of the church and Sunday school to come back for next Sunday.
J. E. Pritchard, Pastor.

Stanly.—We had a good day at Plyler the first Sunday. We had five accessions to our church, four on confession of faith, one by letter. Bro. George Thompson from Porter was with us and gave us one of his earnest exhortations. Every one loves and is glad to hear Uncle George.

And now we are soon to have a new parsonage at Plyler. The cement blocks are ready and are to be placed on the ground this week. Bro. Jonah Harkey is engineering the undertaking and he is going at it with a determination that means success. These Harkeys don't know how to fail, but success is a simple problem to them.

Miss Stella Lefler, one of our best girls, is seriously ill. We hope for her recovery.

Many substantial expressions of appreciation have been shown us since our last report. To give names would make us long, but we are grateful just the same.

And now with the thought of soon being in a new parsonage we are a little vain; but we hope to be able to retain ourselves.
Pastor.

Notice.

Bro. J. F. Minnis will preach at Chestnut Ridge instead of the pastor fourth Sunday afternoon in June at 3:30 p. m.

Children's day exercises at Hebron will be held the fourth Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. In the afternoon there will be an address or addresses.

The children's day at Union Grove will be held the first Sunday morning in July at 11 a. m.

Charlotte Tidings.

On June 6, while the Charlotte pastor was assisting in a revival in Lincolnton Bro. Morris, the Lincolnton pastor, filled the pulpit at Charlotte. Of course it was not the privilege of the Charlotte pastor to hear the sermons Bro. Morris preached, but every report indicated that fine sermons were delivered to the Charlotte congregation. We are always glad to have another pastor visit us but when the people are so well pleased we all the more appreciate the visit. Come again, Bro. Morris.

Bro. E. P. Morris was received as a member of our church on June 13. Bro. Morris comes to us from the Antioch Methodist Protestant church on Mecklenburg charge. We welcome Bro. Morris and believe he will make us a good member.

The second Sunday in June is the regular day for us to observe children's day service. The service rendered on the evening of June 13 was one of the most beautiful ever rendered in this church. There was a good congregation but for reasons we cannot account for the attendance was not quite as good this year as it was at children's day of last year; to be exact there was a difference of 26. The offering this year was $25.24. This was much better than the offering of last year.

On last Sunday morning, June 20, our annual Cradle Roll Service was observed. This was one of the sweetest services it has been our privilege to observe. We do not know just how many of our 48 babies enrolled were present but there were quite a number. One of the beauties of this service was in the fact that babies, though numerous, behaved well. There was hardly a cry. At the close of the service little Guy Jr. Reynolds was baptized. Even though it was a very unfavorable day there was a good attendance and we believe all went home feeling that they had attended a very precious and sweet service. Miss Inez Hinshaw has certainly proved herself to be an efficient and faithful Cradle Roll superintendent. The work is not yet a year old and yet there is an enrollment of 48. Some of these will graduate from this department at our September Promotion Day.

Among our sick are Mrs. McCoy and Mrs. Studabaker. Mrs. McCoy has just returned from the hospital. The children of Bro. R. S. Garmon and perhaps others have been kept in because of whooping cough.

Among our recent visitors are Mr. and Mrs. Hargess, of one of the Mecklenburg churches; Mr. John Garmon and family of near Concord; Mr. and Mrs. S. N. Garmon of Midland and Miss Mary Harwood of Plyler, Stanly charge. Bro. John Jones and wife gave us a very pleasant call at the church one day last week. We were so glad for these good people to come to see us. Let me say again, when you come to Charlotte, come to see us.

In His name,
George L. Curry.

Gibsonville.—Do you think we are entirely off of the map? Not by any means. In fact, we are on the map more than most places. How can that be? Just simply because Gibsonville is in two counties, both Guilford and Alamance. This is not because one county was too small to contain us, you understand, but the line divides the town. Therefore our audience consists of those from Guilford and also Alamance.

So yesterday, regardless of the heavy rains, brought us together for worship and instruction. D. M. Davidson, our Sunday school superintendent, who never fails, was there for work. Teachers and officers are indeed faithful. Only occasionally do we have a vacancy to occur, which then results from sickness, etc. Plans are being made, too, to improve our music. The order has been placed for a lot of new song books already. This of course sounds interesting. By having a thorough choir practice in the new live songs we expect to see more enthusiasm and progress.

For church yesterday, the audience was attentive and appreciative for worship. The number present on such a day indicates that there is no need of discouragement. We feel like a good summer is ahead.

P. E. Lindley.

Macedcnia, Davidson Circuit.—Bro. J. W. Hulin filled his appointment Sunday evening at three o'clock, with an extra good sermon to a very good congregation. Our collection Sunday for the Children's Home was $3.06.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely under the management of our superintendent, Bro. J. H. Sanders. We have school every Sunday at 10:30 a. m. We have about 45 on roll and we are glad that the parents are taking so much interest in the Sunday school.

With best wishes to Herald and its readers,

Esther Hurley, Reporter.

Concord, First Church.—Our Sunday school attendance was off a great deal Sunday, owing to rainy weather; only 141 present.

Bro. Shelton preached on The Church at the morning hour; and at night he preached on Baptism. This had been announced some time before and despite the inclement weather, quite a large congregation was present and listened attentively.

Bro. Shelton chose for his text Matt. 5:17: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfill." He also referred to Ezekiel 36:25-26 and several other places as the law that Christ said he came not to destroy. This was one of the plainest sermons on Baptism we have ever heard, and gave enlightenment to our people, which will be of great help.

At our regular meeting of Christian Endeavor last Friday night, Mrs. V. B. Lowder (who was our delegate to Christian Endeavor Convention at Greensboro) made a splendid report from the convention. We are expecting greater things from our society this year. We had four representatives at the convention from the young people's society and three from our junior society.

Mrs. D. A. McLaurin, Reporter.

Sandy Ridge, Oak Ridge Circuit.—Our Sunday school is progressing nicely; everyone seems very much interested.

Last Sunday, June 13, was our regular preaching Sunday. Rev. A. O. Lindley, our pastor, preached two sermons which were thoroughly enjoyed by all the people of the community. The special meeting will be held at Sandy Ridge beginning the second Sunday in July and Rev. D. A. Braswell will help our pastor: every one is welcome to attend these services.

There are plans being made for a children's day at this place.

We are sorry, but the Christian Endeavor society at this place is not in much progress. There are enough young people around here to have a good Christian Endeavor society, but they are slow about organizing and working in the church. May God help us all to live so that other people's lives may be benefited by ours.

Since our last report was published one of our members, Miss Carrie Idol, was united in marriage to Mr. Shube Clark of Climax, N. C., the ceremony being performed by the pastor. She will be greatly missed in this community. Best wishes to the Herald and its readers.

Elsie Rayle, Reporter.

Mt. Zicn, Pinnacle and Mt. Zion Circuit.—Our pastor, Bro. Lassiter, filled his appointment at Mt. Zion the first Sunday with a good and helpful sermon. Our Sunday school is growing; we feel encouraged to see our school doing as well as it is; hope the people will continue to be interested during the warm weather.

Last Sunday at 11 o'clock we held our children's day service. The children did their parts well; there was a large congregation to hear them. Mr. King D. Brown also gave us a splendid address on foreign missions, which was enjoyed very much.

Our offering was $19.16.

We were glad to have Mr. King Brown and mother, of Wake Forest, N. C., with us in our Sunday school last Sunday. Mr. Brown has been in school at Wake Forest College the past winter. Best wishes to the Herald and all its readers.

Ellie Wall, Reporter.

Graham Church.—Our revival closed Thursday night, June 17. We had a good meeting; several gave their lives to God and also several reconsecrated their lives to Him. Bro. Taylor did some splendid preaching. He could not be with us on Thursday and Bro. Troxler preached a fine sermon, his theme being, Which Way Will You Choose? Eight members were received into the church Sunday morning, three by letter and the others by profession of faith.

We had a good attendance in Sunday school Sunday and the special collection taken to help pay off the debt on our Sunday school rooms amounted to $75.09. We hope soon to have this debt paid off.

On the second Sunday the Christian Endeavor society held its regular meeting and elected new officers, but did not have a meeting the third Sunday because of the union meeting of all societies in Burlington and Graham. The junior Christian Endeavor society held its meeting on both Sundays, with very much interest shown by the juniors.

Reporter.

Roberta Station.—Our faithful reporter is sick at present, so we will try to give the readers of the Herald a few items about the work here. Everything is moving along nicely. The Sunday school is looking forward to the township Sunday school convention, which is to be held at Roberta some time in July and also to the county convention which meets some time in August. Mr. Towell, president of the township convention, was with us Sunday, June 13, and delivered a very helpful address on the Sunday school and asked us if we would like to have the township convention meet in our church. The school voted very strongly in favor of having it here. Our attendance was reduced somewhat yesterday; this reduction was caused by the rainy weather.

On Saturday, June 12, quite a number of the good people came to the parsonage with well-filled baskets and set somewhat of a union birthday dinner. Those for whom it was set are as follows: Bros. J. W. Kiser, G. F. Coble, W. T. and Frank Blackwelder. We were glad to have these good people come to the parsonage to show their love toward each other.

Our Ladies' Aid.

Our Ladies' Aid has been organized since we came on the work and is in its infancy, but it is progressing very nicely. They met with Mrs. Sisk at the parsonage Wednesday evening, June 9. The meeting was full of interest and after the business was transacted refreshments were served and all seemed to enjoy themselves very much. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Z. D. Cochrone Wednesday evening of this week.

New Members.

Since our last report the following new members have been received, namely, Miss May Blackwelder and Miss May Verble, both on profession of faith. May the Lord bless each of you, is our prayer.

Thanks.

Thanks to the following for remembering us in a substantial way since our last report. Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Hudson. Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Cochrone and Mr. and Mrs. Z. D. Cochrone. May the blessings of the Lord be upon you, is our earnest prayer.

J. T. Sisk, Reporter.

Zoar, Mecklenburg Circuit.—Since our last report the work has been progressing very nicely. Our pastor, Rev. A. Ridge, was with us Saturday night, Sunday morning and Sunday night. He certainly preached us three very interesting and helpful sermons, which the congregation seemed to enjoy very much. We certainly hope his sermons helped them all. It seems as though they would, as plain as he preaches to them. The congregation was right large, although the condition of the weather hindered some that would have come. We hope the weather will be more favorable next time, if the Lord is willing.

Our Sunday school is getting along right well now. We hope it will keep improving, for every church needs a good Sunday school. Our collection for Children's Home was $2.90 today.

We have planned for our revival meeting to begin the fourth Sunday in July. We will also have quarterly conference at Zoar on Saturday before the fourth Sunday at 2:00 p. m. Christian friends, pray for us that we may have a glorious meeting, may the church be greatly revived.

We will have two services the fourth Sunday and dinner on the ground. Everyone is invited to come.

We hope to get some new lights for our church before the meeting.

We paid some on pastor's salary Sunday. We hope now soon we may get our pastor paid up, for Zoar would like to be at the head of the honor roll again this year if she can get the place. Much love to Herald and all its readers.

June 20.

Hawkins Chapel, Littleton Circuit.—Bro.

Loy was with us again the second Sunday and delivered another one of his good sermons to a large and attentive congregation. His text was ''Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.'' We as Christians ought to be making every day of our lives better in trying to help some one to the Savior.

On the following Thursday night we were very much delighted to have Miss Annie Forrest with us and glad to hear the many good things that she brought to us. We ask her through the Herald to come again.

Bro. Loy took up a collection Sunday for Bro. Lat to pay his drug bill. The doctor says there is no chance for him to get well: that is sad. My prayer is that he will be ready at any time the Lord calls.

Our Sunday school is getting on fine. We have our same good superintendent that we used to have, Mr. E. B. Pair. He always has some good interesting things to tell us that make life seem more worth while. Our prayer meeting is good: we have prayer meeting twice a month. We have decided to send one of our Sunday school collections each month to the Children's Home.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge.—We hope the readers of the Herald will not weary with us for coming so often, but when we have good news we want others to share it with us. Our pastor reported Sunday before last as a red-letter day for us, but it seems that kind comes often, for last Sunday was another one. We had President Andrews with us in the morning; he gave us a splendid sermon; as we listened, our minds naturally ran back to the time when he gave to us his first work in the ministry, and we felt thankful for him. At night we were delighted to have Miss Forrest with us, and as we listened to her our hearts went out after our sisters in the foreign field. She took an offering amounting to $166 in cash and pledges. After her lecture we organized a woman's foreign misionary society with 12 members; and at our Ladies' Aid meeting yesterday evening two more joined. We will hold these two meetings at the same time. I believe our church will grow faster now we have started missionary work.

I have told what has been and I must say another treat is in store for us Wednesday night at Christian Endeavor meeting when Miss Juanita Hammer will be here and lecture to us on the work of the Christian Endeavor society. We are expecting to do better work along this line after her visit. Some one remarked to me the other day, ''You all certainly have a live church, there's always something doing there.'' I'll tell you, friends, the way to have a live church is to be always doing something, for when we fold our hands peacefully and do nothing but move in the same old ruts, our religion soon becomes stagnated.

Our Sunday school is doing fine now, though there is still room for improvement. With best wishes for the Herald,

Mamie Johnston, Reporter.

Corinth, Littleton Circuit.—Our children's service was held here first of June, after which Bro. Loy gave us a splendid address. Offering for foreign missions, $11. Since then we have had Miss Forrest with us. She organized a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Then we received in cash and pledges $62.80 for the woman's board. We expect to hold our meeting right after Sunday school once a month. Officers: Fannie Barnes, President; Miss Mollie Carter, vice president; Mrs. Bernice Carter, corresponding secretary; Miss Lena Morris, recording secretary; Miss Etta Grary Britt, treasurer; Mrs. B. F. Morris, Record agent; Mrs. M. J. Morris, second vice president. Number of members, 17. Let us be up and doing for the Master.

We have our new organ at last. Much credit is due Mrs. Bernice Carter for having this nice instrument on hand at this date. She worked with untiring efforts.

Some of our people attended the School of Methods at Hollister last week; namely, Miss Lena Morris from Corinth, Bro. Loy, De Golden Loy, and Mildred Thornton of Littleton. They came out with certificates. Why not have one in Littleton? Fannie Barnes.

June 24.

Pee Dee, Rockingham Circuit.—Not having seen any report from our field I thought I would write a few lines. We are still alive and moving forward very slowly. We held our second quarterly conference last Saturday night.

On Sunday morning we started our revival at Pee Dee. Bro. D. A. Highfill of Denton was with us and did all the preaching.

Bro. Highfill has endeared himself to the members of this church. He preached the simple gospel with great power. While the meeting was not as great a success as we were hoping, yet we trust that much good was accomplished. Our great trouble at Pee Dee is getting the members to realize their obligation. It is a solemn thing for a man, or woman either, to stand before the altar and take the solemn vows of the church and then go right home and forget them. I have seen people rise from the mercy seat shouting the praise of God for the wonderful gift of salvation and have heard them say they intended to serve God the rest of their days and then in less than a month they would be back in the world in a worse state than ever.

To lie to men is bad enough, but when it comes to lying to God it is still worse. Peter said unto Ananias, Thou hast not lied unto men but unto God.

Oh, how many church people there are who have stood before the preacher and taken the vow that they would walk with all its members in charity and love but are now at outs with their brother or sister in the church. It is better for a man not to vow than to vow and not pay. J. W. Jenkins, Reporter.

Elmore.

Mrs. Mary E. Elmore departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. T. S. Wray, Reidsville, N. C., on May 30, 1920, age about 76 years. Mrs. Elmore was born in Caswell county but later moved to Rockingham where she grew to womanhood and was married to the late Thomas G. Elmore. To this union two children were born, Elisha Elmore and Mrs. T. S. Wray. Both survive her. Early in life she professed a saving faith in Christ and connected herself with the Midway Methodist Protestaant church. Upon the death of her husband, about 15 years ago, she moved to Reidsville and became one of the charter members of our Reidsville church, which she loved and served until her death.

It was on the Sabbath day and early in the morning that she left us. On Monday afternoon we took her form out to her old home church and placed it beside her husband's to await the resurrection morning. The number of friends that came and the wealth of flowers they brought bore ample testimony to the extent to which she had endeared herself to the people of her church and community. The funeral was conducted by her pastor, assisted by Dr. A. G. Dixon and Dr. W. E. Swain.

She will be missed, but we are persuaded to believe that our loss is her gain. She would have been the last one to insist that she live a perfect life, yet to many her life was a continual benediction. For many months she, because of declining health, had not been permitted to attend church, but her heart was always there. And in her home her pastor always found a hearty welcome. She loved sunshine and she loved flowers and until the last she loved to share them with others. Indeed, to some her very presence was sunshine and her life a fragrant flower. The sunshine of her presence has gone but its shadow lingers with us, the flower has been transplanted but its fragrance endures.

During her sickness she suffered much, but remained patient to the end. As we weep for her we shall not weep as those without hope, and even then why should we weep to excess? for our friend and loved one has but shared the common lot of mankind toward which we all move and as we go may we sing with the poet,

''Build thee more stately mansions, O my soul,
  As the swift seasons roll!
  Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast
  Till thou at length art free,
Leaving thine out-grown shell by life's unresting sea!''

W. J. Underwood.

Bro. W. J. Underwood of Bonlee died June 14. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church in Moore county, but for many years had lived near Hope Methodist Protestant church and served it faithfully. For some years he was superintendent of the Sunday school, and was very helpful in the repair of the building. I never went to Hope church without receiving an invitation to go to his home. The burial was conducted by Rev. Mr. Golden, assisted by Rev. E. G. Lowdermilk and the writer. Paul S. Kennett.

J. R. Siler.

Bro. J. R. Siler of Piney Grove church died June 13 at the age of 76. For over half a century he had been a faithful member ofthe church, much of the time serving as steward. I think I have never known a man more sincerely concerned about his church. Uncle Jack, as he was known to his many friends, will be greatly missed. The burial service was conducted by the pastor and Rev. W. M. Pike.

Grandma Nicholson Is Dead.

Maria Margaret Nicholson, wife of Henry G. Nicholson, was born January 8, 1843, died June 17, 1920. She was in her 88th year when she died. On the 13th day of December, 1866 she was married to H. C Nicholson. To this union were born nine children, four of whom died in infancy. Two girls, Mrs. Thomas Sharp and Mrs. Dr. Pickett, and three boys survive her; also her husband, several years her senior, survives.

Grandma Nicholson and her children have our sympathy in their bereavements

Grandma when a child gave her heart to the Savior and connected herself to Mt. Hermon Methodist Protestant church, where she has remained a consistent and faithful member for 65 years. Sister Nicholson was one of the sweetest spirited Christian ladies I ever knew.

The pastors of Mt. Hermon circuit through these long years have found in this home a most cordial welcome. It was my privilege to visit her several times during her last illness. I always found her cheerful and uncomplaining. Her end was trusting and peaceful.

Her funeral was conducted from Mt. Hermon church by her pastor, the undersigned, assisted by Bro. Burgess, a former pastor, on the 18th of June. Interment was made in the historic cemetery at Mt. Hermon church.

J. H. Bowman.

Mrs. Bessie Sharp Russell.

Mrs. Bessie Sharp Russell, daughter of Bro. Isaac Sharp, departed this life on the 17th of June, 1920, in a local hospital at Burlington, in the prime of young womanhood.

Only a short time ago she was married to Bro. Lawrence Russell. It is sad to think that this union should be so soon broken by the angel of death.

She was converted and joined Belmont Methodist Protestant church, when quite young, where she remained a consistent member until her death. She told Bro. Pritchard, who visited her a few days before her death. that she was faithfully trusting in the Lord

She leaves a young husband, a father and mother, brothers and sisters, to mourn their loss, all of whom have our deepest sympathy.

Her funeral was conducted from Belmont church the 18th of June by her pastor, the undersigned, assisted by Bros. J. A. Burgess and J. E. Pritchard, and her body was buried in the cemetery at Belmont. A large congregation of people attended the funeral.

The floral display was unusually large and beautiful.

May the sustaining grace of the Savior comfort the bereaved ones in their affliction.

Resolutions of Respect.

Mrs. J. A. Kirkman departed this life April 14, 1920, aged 64 years. Mrs. Kirkman became a Christian early in life and joined Moriah church, Tabernacle circuit, where she remained a faithful and active member till she joined the church triumphant, to be reunited with her husband ,whose loss she had mourned for nearly a year. Mrs. Kirkman was a good woman, a kind loving mother, a good neighbor. Loved by all who knew her true Christian character. She enjoyed her church work. The Sunday school miss her presence. She was always present when able with a cheerful greeting for everyone. Ready in every good cause to do her part. She was one who tried to encourage every one in any good work. The church has lost one of its most faithful members, a true Christian. But her influence fill never die in her home and church. She was a member of our Woman's Home Missionary Society and loved to attend our meetings, and was interested in the work. We will miss her presence and helpfulness. Her name still remains as she was made a memorial member Though dead, she will live in the hearts of those who knew her Christian life.

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to Him Who doeth all things well, feeling that while the church and our Woman's Home Missionary Society has sustained a loss it is her eternal gain.

Resolved, That we extend to her sons and other relatives our deepest sympathies

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our society and a copy sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication.

McGowan.

In loving remembrance of my cousin, Charles McGowan.

Death visited our community and took from our midst on Thursday morning, June 3, 1920, Mr. Charles McGowan. He had been sick for a long time, but he stood his sufferings. He leaves a wife and seven children, also a host of friends and relatives to mourn this loss. Our deepest sympathy goes out to the bereaved ones in their trial and troubles. On Friday afternoon his mortal remains were laid to rest in the family graveyard, near his home in the presence of sorrowing friends and relatives. The burial service was conducted by Rev. R. L. Hethcox, his pastor. He will be missed by loving friends at home, in church and community. He was always ready to help. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones. We know not who will be the next to be called, but let us re ready when the summons calls us home.

O Charlie! Thy gentle voice is hushed,
Thy warm, true heart is still
And on thy pale and peaceful face
Is resting death's cold chill.

Human hands tried to save him;
All they did was in vain:
God was the only cure for him,
And took him from this world of pain.

By his dear parents sleeping,
Where the trees and branches wave,
Lies the one we loved so dearly
In his cold and silent grave.

By his devoted cousin,
Essie Davenport.

Jones.

Nellie May Landon Jones was born May 13, 1896, and died May 11, 1920, age 23 years, nine months and 28 days. A few years ago she was united in marriage to Luther Jones. To this union was born one child, Russel. He has not realized what he has lost for he is not old enough.

Nellie was a member of the Disciples Church. Here she remained a loyal member until her health failed. All that knew Nellie knew her as a sincere Christian woman. All through her illness she bore it all very patiently and remarked to her bosom companion she had prayed that she might not be of any trouble to any one. In this her prayer was answered, for she was able to go about the house the day before and ate a hearty supper the evening before she fell asleep in the quiet hours of the night to never awake, no, never to awake again in this world. When her companion who loved her and had cared for her so tenderly inquired how she was in the early part of the morning, no answer came, for she was silent in death. Her soul, we believe, has gone to ever be with Jesus. Her husband started in this direction when he gave his heart to God last week and joined the church Sunday.

She leaves to mourn her loss a companion and one dear little boy who is left without a mother to care for him. May the Lord comfort and sustain the husband and friends who mourn her loss.

Her body was laid away in the cemetery just outside of Whitakers, the writer conducting the services. J. Clyde Auman.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE QUEEN OF AN OLD-FASHIONED GARDEN.

"I hate this old, ugly garden," Rosebud complained to Mother Bush one morning as she opened her eyes and gazed on the flowers around it.

"Why, my child," Mother Bush answered, "I'm surprised to hear you say such things! You're only a tiny bud and should not begin to grumble thus early in life."

"I know I'm young," Rosebud answered, "but why did you choose such an unsightly place for me to grow in? I'm not an old-fashioned flower; I want to grow in some one's front yard, or grace some vase in a beautiful home. I don't want to stay here where I'm not appreciated."

"You've forgotten the gardener, Rosebud, child," Mother Bush answered, "and the dear little cripple boy who comes to visit us every day and praises your beauty."

"Yes, I had forgotten," Rosebud replied, "but still I'd like to leave this old-fashioned garden."

"Good-morning, Rosebud," modest black-eyed Susan exclaimed softly. "Your exquisite perfume awoke me."

"And you awoke me, too," laughed Verbena.

"I think it's delightful to be awakened every morning by such a fragrant odor," interrupted Sunflower.

Rosebud proudly lifted her head a little higher and gazed at her companions in astonishment.

Why, it wasn't so bad, after all, to grow in a garden of old-fashioned flowers, and receive the admiration she did, even though she was grouchy. "Maybe it would be as well to smile and endure the place," mused Rosebud. Then a little wind came through the garden, and Rosebud put on her best smile and swayed to the right and to the left, and all the flowers of the garden began to whisper among themselves of the sudden cheerfulness of their favorite.

Suddenly there were voices in the garden, and Rosebud fluttered her petals, for she recognized the voice of the cripple boy as one of the speakers.

"I want to show you the queen of my garden," the little boy was saying when he reached Rosebud. "Here she is."

Gently the stranger touched the delicate stem upon which Rosebud reposed.

"Oh, you beautiful thing!" the visitor cried in admiring tones, caressing the flower, and turning to her companion she said:

"Of all your flowers, I'd like best to wear this rose. Of course I know it wouldn't last long, but when it fades I could [illegible]."

"To [illegible] my rose [illegible]!" the little boy exclaimed. "The [illegible] of my garden [illegible] the finest [illegible]. I couldn't let you do that, because I've been working for three years to get [illegible], and now it has bloomed I am going to let it grace the garden as long as [illegible], and when it begins to fade I am going to plant it so that it will grow into another bush, and some day in this manner you will see a whole row of beautiful roses growing in my garden."

The speakers moved on, while the old-fashioned flowers gazed on their queen with adoring eyes, for never before had she smiled so sweetly upon them. And as the voices died away in the distance, Rosebud cuddled closer to her mother's side.

"Oh, mother," Rosebud whispered, "I'm so sorry I complained. I didn't know how fortunate I was to be a simple rose in a garden of old-fashioned flowers."

"It's an opportunity, my child," Mother Bush replied.

"I realize it, mother dear," Rosebud answered, "and from now on I will take advantage of the opportunity and try to live up to the beautiful name my companions have given me, and I'm so glad it is I, mother, who bears the name 'the queen of an old-fashioned garden.'"—Alice [illegible] Whetson, in Queen's Gardens.

THE OLD TOAD.

"O Dolly, come here!" cried Don, loudly.

"Where are you, where are you?" called Dolly from the bedroom where mother was just tying a pink ribbon on her hair.

"In the garden," replied Don. "Do hurry and see what I have found!"

"Run along," said mother, as she gave Dolly a gentle little push.

So Dolly hurried away to grandma's flower garden. She could see Don standing very still near the old syringa bush, watching something on the ground.

"What is it, Don?" asked Dolly, as she ran toward him.

"Look there, under that rosebush," answered Don. "See the old toad?"

"Oh, how ugly he is!" whispered Dolly, with a little shiver.

"Yes, isn't he?" agreed Don. "See those big warts all over him. I'm going to make him jump."

"Don't touch him, Don, he might bite."

"Bite—pooh, I'm not afraid. If he bites, I'll kill him," said Don, boastfully.

"What's that? Kill what?" asked grandma, who was working along her hollyhocks.

"This toad," answered Don. "But I shan't hurt him unless he bites me."

"Why, he won't bite you, dear," said grandma, smiling. "If you kill him I'll lose my best garden helper."

"Your helper, grandma!" cried Dolly, in surprise. "What do you mean?"

"Yes, he certainly is my helper," answered grandma. "He helps me keep the garden free from bugs and worms."

"Does he really?" asked Don, as surprised as Dolly.

"Indeed he does," said grandma. "He catches them with his long, slender tongue, which flies out of his mouth as quickly as a dart."

"Oh, I should like to see him do it," said Dolly.

"Perhaps, if you're patient, you may," said grandma, "although I've heard people say that Mr. Toad doesn't often eat when any one is looking at him."

"Let's try and feed him," suggested Don, eagerly.

"Yes, let's," echoed Dolly.

Though the children soon found a fat bug and a tempting worm and offered them to the toad, he paid no attention to the dainty morsels, but sat winking and blinking in the sunlight.

"I do wish he would eat," said Dolly, in a disappointed tone. "I should like to see his long red tongue."

"Perhaps we can play a trick on him," said grandma. "Bring me some currants, Don, and find me a long grass-stem, Dolly."

Placing one of the currants on the grass-stem, grandma told the children to stand quietly beside her, back of the toad. Then very slowly and carefully she lowered the red currant on the tip of the grass-stem before Mr. Toad's eyes. Suddenly there was a quick flash of his tongue and the currant was gone; Dan and Dolly danced about the old toad and clapped their hands gleefully.

"You see how quickly he can catch the bugs and the worms which hurt my flowers," said grandma.

"He is your garden helper—we can see now he is," said Don.

"We'll be good to you, fat toad," said Dolly. "Come, Don, let's tell mother what a fine garden helper grandma has."—Ella Shannon Bowles, in The Christian Register.

HANDS.

Clean—Ready—Kind—Busy.

I will have clean hands, a pure heart and a noble life.

Clean Hands.

Many are the times you have heard the question, "Are your hands clean?" or the command, "Run, now and wash your hands"; or the exclamation: "Why! what looking hands! I should think that you would be ashamed!" It does seem a bother to wash your hands so often, but you know you do not enjoy eating with people or shaking hands with them if yours are well washed and theirs unclean; and it spoils much of the pleasure in reading a book if its pages are marked with the prints of dirty thumbs and fingers. All of us will confess that it is really nicer, after work or after play, to run to the water for a good washing.

Of course every boy and girl will have clean hands as far as soap and water can make them so, but these words have come to mean a great deal more than merely hands free from dirt. They really mean an upright and true character. One that cannot be bought and who is free from all mean and unkind actions. It is the person with clean hands that is honored and respected. Keep strong drink out of your life and it will be easier to have these clean hands.

Another kind of "clean hands" is referred to in that wonderful Twenty-fourth Psalm, "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart." If you would have clean hands and a pure heart you will have nothing to do with wine, beer, cider or anything that contains alcohol, and you will shun the deadly cigarette, for all of these not only soil the hands but injure and stain your heart and life.

Ready Hands.

Who is ready to put their hands to the pledge, and ready to get others to do the same?

Kind Hands.

The people who are loved most in this world are those who are kind and thoughtful for others. Let us try each day to do some kind act that will help some one to a better and grander life.

Busy Hands.

This is a busy world, and if we would be happy we must be busy. Let us have busy hands for work and for play, for helping others and for helping ourselves. It is only idle hands that find temptation.

MARRIED.

Measamer-Dixon.

On last Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Measamer, near Sanford, a quiet wedding was solemnized when their eldest daughter, Miss Lee Measamer, became the bride of Arthur Jesse Dixon, Rev. L. H. Joyner, a Methodist Episcopal minister, and pastor of the bride, officiating, the beautiful ring ceremony being very impressively used. The wedding was a very quiet affair and witnessed by only a few close friends and relatives of the young couple.

Mrs. Dixon is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Measamer and is a young woman of charming personality. She is a devout member of the Methodist Episcopal church near the home of her parents and is greatly interested in all the activities of her church. She will no doubt move her membership to Midway Methodist Protestant church with her husband.

The groom is the second son of L. R. Dixon of near Reidsville and is a young man of sterling worth and Christian character. He has been a devout member of Midway Methodist Protestant church since early childhood and is actively engaged in church work. He is successfully engaged in the mercantile business at Monroeton near Reidsville. Mr. and Mrs. Dixon will reside at Monroeton, the attractive country home of the groom. We wish and predict for the young couple a happy and useful future.

A. C. Dixon.

Chambliss-Phillips.

The home of Mrs. Bernice Phillips on last Wednesday afternoon was the scene of a beautiful but quiet wedding, when her daughter, Miss Lucy Ben Phillips, became the bride of Mr. Lewis Chambliss, the writer officiating.

Immediately after the ceremony they motored to Mr. Chambliss's fathers, where a delicious supper was served, and where the happy couple will make their home.

Mr. Chambliss is a prosperous young farmer of Triplet and his bride the attractive daughter of Mrs. Bernice Phillips, also of Triplet.

Their numerous friends wish for them much joy and hapiness along life's journey.

the big oak with her Mother Goose book. As she lay on her stomach spelling out rhymes. she could hear the sound of hoofs and wheels and horns out in the road. The sound made her sleepy after a while. Her head began to droop.

“Ba, ba, black sheep,” she read dreamily. “Have you any—have you any”— And then she fell fast asleep.

After a while she heard, deep in her dreams, a faint “Ba-aa!” She stirred. “Ba-aa-aaa!” came the cry again, and her eyes flew open.

Right before her, staring straight into her face, stood a shaggy black sheep. Cleone was still so sleepy that somehow he did not seem strange. “Have you any wool?” she said in a drowsy voice.

A chorus of “baas” seemed to answer, and Cleone sat up and rubbed her eyes. “Oh! Oh!” she cried. The yard was full of sheep, black and white, big and little, all bleating softly and running round and round. “My,” said Cleone, “what a funny dream!”

Then something soft touched her hand, and she became wide-awake. Why, it was not a dream at all! The yard was crowded with sheep—real sheep. Cleone scrambled to her feet and stood with her back against the tree, a little scared, but not much. The sheep ran round softly, bleating and jostling one another. They crowded close to Cleone and brushed their wooly sides aginst her.

Just then two men rode into the yard on horseback. They began to shout at the animals and herd them toward the fence.

One of the men called to Cleone. “They won't hurt you!” he said. “But next time keep your front gate shut!” Then Cleone heard him add to the other man, “I believe the whole flock would follow that black youngster over a precipice if he wanted to go.”

Cleone stood in the gate and watched the men and the sheep disappear down the road in a cloud of dust. As she turned to go into the house she heard a soft sound. She listened, and the sound came again. It was a faint “Ba-aaa!” and it seemed to come from a lilac bush not two yards away. Full of curiosity Cleone ran to the bush and parted the branches.

She gave a cry. “Oh, oh!” she said. “It's a lamb, caught in the lilac bush!”

At that moment one of the men came riding back. “We're one sheep short,” he began. Then he saw that Cleone had her arms round the neck of the bleating lamb.

He hesitated. “That fellow's a little lame,” he said, “and it's hard for him to keep up with the rest. Do you want him?”

“Oh, yes, sir! Thank you, sir!” Cleone said joyfully. The man rode away laughing.

When Bess and Ted came home Cleone flew down the walk to meet them. Her eyes were shining. “You're invited to my surprise party,” she said. “It's in the back yard.”—Ida M. Kier, in The Youth's Companion.

LIGHT HOUSE MAGGIE.

Down in Newkirk Bay, on the coast of the Atlantic, lives a little girl eleven years old whose entire life has been spent out at sea. Her name is Maggie Wood, and her home is the big stone light-house one sees when at Mariner's Harbor, Staten Island, or sailing down the bay.

The girl lives away from all other children; her chief pastime is in watching the boats pass, and in hearing the sounds which come across the waves. On clear days in summer, standing out on the stone pier of the light-house, she can hear the children of the picnic excursions sing as théy go down the bay. In winter she wraps up warmly and stands as far out as the rough winds will allow and waves her apron to the sailors on the boat, who wave a reply back. Sometimes they blow their steam whistles for her, and sometimes, for they know how she loves music, they shout sea songs or blow upon a flute or fife or a horn. Every day Maggie's aunt and uncle, with whom she lives, see that she has her regular lessons; she has real school books, which her uncle brings home on his rare visits to the city. She is not at all an unlearned child, and her favorite work is to sketch the old stone light-house.

As soon as school hours are over Maggie puts on her cloak, draws its little hood up over her head, and hurries out to play upon the pier. She has 160 feet of stone platform as a playground. She races around the light-house half a dozen times as fast as she can go. Then she rolls over and over with Towser, her sea dog, and throws sticks in the water for him to swim out and get.

Towser is a brown water-spaniel, and he has the record of saving just as many lives as Maggie numbers years to her life, so that the little sea girl has a real hero for a companion and playmate.

Frequently Maggie's uncle takes her out in the life-boat and lets her fish and play in the water. Sometimes an exciting event occurs. Maggie takes a hand in a “great rescue.” A bird, sick, or wounded, will hover over the water or fall into the waves, and then Maggie and her uncle row over to where it is fluttering and pick up the poor little thing and carry it to land as tenderly as if it were a human being. When the bird gets well it is let go again: and that is another exciting event.

One summer day Maggie had a great adventure. She had gone out on the pier to set free a sea gull which had had a broken wing. It had been shot at by some sportsmen and left to die on the waves. Maggie had carried it into the light-house and taken care of it [illegible] strong. Then as the gull seemed unhappy she resolved to let it go. She freed it just as a flight of gulls swept past. In a minute it had gone disappearing with the others. But only for a minute could the bird keep on its proud course; then it flew more slowly; gradually it sank to the surface of the waves. Quick as thought, Maggie untied the boat, and drawing long, sweeping strokes, she pulled out all alone to the spot where the bird lay in the water, and brought him back again to the light-house. Now he has become a family pet, and never flies very far away.

The hero, Towser, is an excellent bird dog. But he has an odd trait. If Maggie's uncle shoots ducks or other birds good for food, Towser swims out and brings them in, taking care that they do not get away from him, and he is not always very gentle with them either. But let Maggie say, “Towser, there is a poor sick bird out there. Get him, Towser. Careful. Careful.” He will swim out and bring the wounded bird as gently to the shore as if he were the mother bird herself. He draws his lips over his teeth until they are soft as silk.

There are days when Maggie cannot see beyond the lighthouse. All day long she hears only the “Toll!” “Toll!” “Toll!” of the warning bell. She feels as if she were away off on another sphere. As she herself expressed it: “As if an Arabian Night's story had come into my life, and carried me in a roc's egg to another planet.”

In summer, when city people come over to the light-house, she is very happy, and when she “expects company” she helps to polish the light-house lamp until it shines, and even takes a hand in scouring the stone pier into perfect neatness. She has a store of sea-grass and curious shells and queer dried fish for visitors, and, far from pitying her, many of them envy Maggie such a peaceful, romantic home.—Unknown.

THE WIDER WORLD.

There is something thrilling in hearing the pecking of a chick inside the shell. The chicken has been very comfortable inside the compact little home, but now he wants more room. He has feet and wings and he wishes to use them. And so he picks away and breaks the brittle roof that covers him and crawls out, almost exhausted, in the big world, the real world, the world of sunshine and fresh air. If he did not break through the eggshell world, it would become his prison and finally his coffin.

There are some young folks who might learn a lesson from this chick. They are living cramped and narrow lives and they are perpectly satisfied. The call of the big world does not interest them. They know they have powers they are not using, but they cannot see that this matters. And so they live a little fractional life, and have no way of knowing how much they have missed. For the life to which they have limited themselves becomes their prison and their grave.

Listen to the call of the world outside you. Realize that you have powers that you are not using. Hammer away till that which hinders and confines you gives way and you step out into the wider world that promises freedom and growth.—Selected.

TIME, PATIENCE, AND HARD WORK.

The proverb that says, “With time and patience the mulberry leaf becomes satin,” would be sadly misleading if it were assumed that time and patience did it all. The mulberry leaf left to time and patience, would shrivel on the bough, fall to earth in the auumn, and fertilize some young grass blade next spring. But when work joins forces with the above mentioned pair, everything is difference. The silk worm does its part; men do theirs. Through a succession of complicated processes the mulberry leaf passes, and becomes satin.

Do not look for time to change things. Do not expect that patient waiting is going to revolutionize what is disagreeable in your life. Time and patience are important, indeed, but only as they are associated with effort, wise, earnest, unceasing. For now abide time, patience and hard work, these three, and the greatest of these is hard work.—Selected.

THE UPWARD TRAIL.

Up the Alpine passes
  Wends the trail along.
Ever moving forward
  With a gladsome song;
Onward! is the watchword—
  How the echo rings—
Over hills and mountains,
  Borne on airy wings!
Up above the lowlands
  Onward ever bound,
For a wider vision
  From the higher ground:
Higher yet and higher,
  Over rocks and rills,
Where the dawning kindles
  First upon the hills.
So through flowery passes
  Up from morning land—
From the lanes of childhood
  To horizons grand!
Daily climbing higher,
  Past the rocks and turns—
Far ahead of yesterday
  Every camp-fire burns!
Eager youths and maidens!
  Forward with a cheer.
Up the winding passes
  Of the coming year
Bear the banner onward!
  Courage! [illegible] fail
To camp upon the summit
  By the upward trail!

UNDIVIDED ATTENTION.

When you give your attention, give it wholly. The girl who listens but lets her eyes roam, or looks and listens, but allows herself to think of something else at the same time, is giving only a divided and imperfect attention. Attend with eyes and ears and thoughts. If you give your attention, give it wholly.—Selected.

IN GOOD COMPANY.

If you are born poor you are in good company. Kitto, the eminent Biblical scholar, was a poorhouse boy. Henry M. Stanley was a waif. More great men have come from poor homes than from the mansions of the rich. Poverty seems an excellent training school for preferment. Do not feel aggrieved over plain fare and patched clothes. You are in good company.

If you have to start work early without the advantages the schools can give you, you are in good company. Lincoln had about six months' schooling in his life. Edison was selling papers at an age when luckier boys were profiting by a teacher's instructions. Andrew Carnegie was only a little fellow when he went to work, that his small earnings might swell the meager family income. The ambitious boy can find a way to make up for the lack of school advantages. Tens of thousands of them have done it, and none of them patented their system.

If you work with your hands, do not think that this fact shuts any doors against you. Elihu Burritt, master of fifty languages, was a blacksmith. St. Paul earned his living by making tents. James Whitcomb Riley began his career as a sign painter. The acquaintances of Jesus seeing his wonderful works, said one to another, "Is not this the carpenter?" If you work honestly, you are in good company. —Selected.

THE MOST VALUABLE HALF HOUR.

A busy business man who has attained success and fortune was asked to state, if he could, what part of the day was the most valuable to him in its effect upon his business

"I can do that easily," he answered at once. "The most valuable portion of each and every day to me is the half-hour I first use when I rise in the morning."

"Of course you get up early?"

"Never later than six-thirty, and more often at six," said the business man proudly.

"And that first half hour: You use it in exercise."

"Exercise—yes, but not physical," smiled the business man. "That comes afterward. First of all is what I call exercise of the heart, mind and soul. Thirty minutes of uninterrupted personal devotion, of earnest prayer, of getting in harmony and in tune with God 'my Big Pardner,' puts me in prime condition for the day's work."

Whether we are "big business men," or only common workers in lowly places, we might well follow the plan of this successful captain of industry by "keeping the morning watch." A half-hour, when we first get up in the morning, used regularly in personal devotion, in prayer, in "getting in harmony and in tune with 'God, our Big Pardner,' will surely make us stronger, better prepared for the day's duties. God is, indeed, our "Big Pardner" and we should take him into our confidence, considering early in the day the things we wish to do before the day's work ends. If we do this we will most certainly do that which is just and honest and right. We will do the best we are capable of doing. And such a practice, daily followed, must certainly lead us onward to success.—Selected.

THOU LOVEST ME?

Child of My love, lean hard!
And let Me feel the pressure of thy care;
I know thy burden, for I fashioned it—
Poised it in My hand and made its weight
Precisely that which I saw best for thee.
And when I placed it on thy shrinking form
I said, "I shall be near, and while thou leanest
On Me, this burden shall be Mine, not thine."
So shall I keep within My circling arms
The child of My own love; here lay it down
Nor fear to weary Him who made, upholds,
And guides the universe.

Yet closer come;
Thou art not near enough, Thy care, thyself,
Lay both on Me, that I may feel My child
Reposing on My heart.
Thou lovest Me?
I doubt it not; then loving Me, lean hard.

A BIT OF WISDOM.

"Grasp the nettle with both hands,
And it shall not sting."
Take this bit of wisdom, dear,
Into everything.
If the lesson's long and hard,
At it with your might!
Do not let it conquer you
While you've strength to fight.

Foolish people stand and fret,
Wonder what to do,
Bear their troubles twenty times—
Such a silly crew!
Get the trial over, dear;
Never frown and pout:
With a brave and steady look
Put the foe to rout.

DO NOT GIVE UP.

Many people—it may not be an exaggeration to say most people—are handicapped. Sometimes is is a physical weakness, a heart that gives out under a strain, lungs that need to be babied, nerves that cannot be depended on. Sometimes the handicap is a little constitutional twist, a hasty temper, an unreasonable sensitiveness, an abnormal lack of self-confidence. The handicap may be in a father of intemperate habits, or a brother who has brought disgrace on the family name. It may be in an uninspiring environment.

Do not give up because you are handicapped. So are other people. Lincoln was handicapped by his lack of educational advantages in his youth. Stevenson was handicapped by a frail body. Livingstone was handicapped by poverty. Prescott blind, Beethoven deaf, Pope, hunch-backed. Henry M Stanley, a homeless waif. Handicaps are not a rare affliction. They are part of the human lot. Accept your handicap without surprise and without discouragement and make up your mind you are going to succeed in spite of it.—Selected.

THE MAN WITH A SMILE.

It isn't the fellow who has a smile
Because of the smile of others,
But the fellow who counts is the fellow who smiles
In spite of his scowling brothers:
Or whether they smile or whether they don't,
If he's true to his own soul's light
He will keep on smiling through thick and thin:
He will smile for the sake of the right.

The old song says if you smile for them
They will have a smile for you:
But the man who smiles if they smile or not
Is the man who will put things through—
The man who smiles because it's his heart
That brings to his face the glow
Of the peace and the power of doing his part,
Is the great world's daily show.

To do things just to gain in return
Some gift or some grace of life
Is only a halfway style to win
In the toil and struggle and strife.
For the best old grace is the grace of joy
In doing and serving along
With a smile that is sweet as the smile of a boy
Till your smile makes labor a song.

SOWING AND REAPING.

"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7). In the natural world a man expects to reap if he sows; he expects to reap the same kind of seed; he expects to reap more than he sows; and ignorance of the kind of seed makes no difference in the reaping. The man who sows his "wild oats" will find that the same is true in his experience.—D. L. Moody.

TEACHING AND PREACHING.

Teaching and preaching, sowing and reaping, the evangelical and the evangelistic, constitute the two-fold function of the Christian ministry; the basis for which is found in the two-fold function of truth—to enlighten and to quicken—and the two-fold capacity of the human spirit, a capacity for knowledge through perception, thought and reason, and a capacity for religion through choice, faith and experience.

As a teacher, the minister of the gospel presents to the understanding truth as knowledge of what men ought to be and ought to do. As a preacher, he presents to the heart, the conscience and the will truth as a divine message, awakening responsibility and demanding immediate compliance with its obligations. Teaching, therefore, promotes intelligence and capacity, or size, and lays broad and sufficient foundation for Christian service. Preaching promotes piety, insists upon quality or character, and through experience prepares a man for effective co-operation with God in every good work. The method of teaching is more or less general while that of preaching is decidedly personal. In Matthew the great commission reads, "Go . . . teach all nations,"—the race viewed collectively; in Mark it says, "Go . . . preach the gospel to every creature,"—to men as individuals. The apostolic teacher has a message for the nation, the State, the municipality, the corporation, the community. The apostolic preacher has a message only for the individual. Salvation is personal, always personal. Too much emphasis can scarcely be placed upon the importance of every minister's discharging both these functions of his high calling. Jesus Christ is both the light and the life of the world. "In him was life and the life was the light of men." He was both teacher and preacher. He "went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom." And the command to teach and to preach was given to the Christian ministry of every age.

And then the vital connection between teaching and preaching makes them simply two phases of one great work. Knowledge is an indispensable prerequisite of faith, character and service. Knowledge of the gospel must precede the performance of its conditions or the receiving of its blessings. Sowing antedates reaping and is just as essential.—From The Word of Life.

THE REVIVAL AS IT IS MISCONDUCTED.

There is a matter which has been revolving in my mind for fifteen years and it is clamoring so loudly for expression that after much consideration I have decided to write to you about it.

We have just survived our annual revival at our church. The visiting minister was the best preacher I have ever heard. He would choose a text, preach a sermon full of God's love and tenderness and gentleness. Then, in well chosen words he would invite the unsaved to accept Christ as their personal Savior: if any one hearing him had any remote idea of ever doing so his eloquence and his message would surely have moved them. So far, so good.

But, frequently there would be no one who felt that they must obey the call, so the pastor would then take charge and exhort and urge and almost command them to come forward. Still no response? Then he must call on the Christians to come forward and renew their vows. (It seems to me that it is far better for a Christian to renew his faith in prayer to God than by gripping the pastor's hand.)

I was reminded of an incident in my own life: having sown some seed and watered them carefully I left them to sprout in their own good time. Not so my little son; he must scratch around in the soil every day to see if there were signs of life, and finally when they did sprout he pulled them up to see what sort of roots they had. That was just the way it was. Mr. ——— preached a wonderful sermon of the preciousness of Jesus (1 Peter 2:7) and I felt at its close, "Oh, if I just could slip away, now, and think and pray in quiet and solitude." But no such good fortune. After much urging and insistence the pastor must have lost his temper a little bit, for he pronounced such a scathing denunciation upon us that I am afraid we almost forgot our eagerness to love Christ more and to give him our hearts. I greatly fear that he pulled many of the seeds out of fertile ground and did not plant them again.

This method of conducting revivals is keeping people away who would otherwise be eager and go and hear messages that would perhaps change the entire course of their lives. I used to wonder why any one anxious to save souls for Christ could be so unwise. I have decided that it comes from too much eagerness to reap the harvest. It seems that they are not willing to sow the seed and trust God—they must dig them up at once to see if they are going to grow.

May God grant us more faith and more patience! Jerusha Jones.

HOME MISSIONARY TOUR.

Letter 6. Arkansas and Alabama.

In my last letter I was enroute from the Fort Smith-Oklahoma to the Arkansas Conference. I had the experience which often comes to travelers in the Southwest. I missed my connection at Texarkana and did not arrive at Emerson until noon of the opening day. This was a disappointment because I could only spend one day at that place. However, in the short afternoon I was permitted to address the conference in reference to the work of the Board of Home Missions and other general work of the church. I had an opportunity of renewing my acquaintance with the members of the conference and of completing some plans which had been under way. The elections were held as usual on the afternoon of the first day, Tuesday, November 9. Rev. J. A. Harp was re-elected as president and Mr. J. H. Hearn was re-elected as secretary. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. J. M. Stephenson, one of the "tried and true" men of the conference. Your Board of Home Missions is supplementing the salary of Rev. J. A. Wade as pastor at Magnolia and will expect him to give full-time service at this strategic center, making it a full station. This is the county seat of Columbia county and we have twenty-eight churches in the county. We should have one of the strongest churches in the county-seat and we are taking hold of this enterprise with the expectation of making it so. This is the only church we are assisting in the conference, but we have other interests in the conference and are greatly interested in its success. Reference to this conference would not be complete without mention of Rev. W. F. Wingfield, who has been a member for 51 years and Rev. J. L. Nabors, who has been a member of the conference for 52 years. Both are well preserved and are happy in the work. We have a fine body of men here but too many of them are being compelled to supplement their salaries by engaging in some secular pursuit. The conference will make more rapid progress when these men can give all their time to the work of the ministry.

Your secretary was compelled to leave Emerson before the night session on the first day in order that he might keep his engagement at the Alabama Conference. The connection at Memphis was made with time to spare. The train to Birmingham was delayed by engine trouble and arrived an hour late, but a delayed train on the connecting line made [illegible] this delay unimportant.

The Alabama Conference was held at a country church near Snowdoun, a station on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad not far from Montgomery. The attendance was good and the weather fine. This is our largest conference south of North Carolina and has a fine body of ministers and laymen. The work here is largely rural, and as reported for the Arkansas Conference nearly all the pastors are compelled to supplement their salaries by some form of secular employment. If this was [illegible] the [illegible] but the people are abundantly able to support the ministers and allow them to give full time service to the church. Another improvement which should be made, too, is a plan to give each church more frequent preaching service. The larger number of our churches in this state have only one Sunday per month. In some places services are held Saturday night, Sunday morning and night. In others only one service is held. If it rains or there is a funeral somewhere calling for the service of the pastor, even this service is not held. One pastor reported that he had "been rained out or funeraled out at one place for five months." The more progressive men of the conference are seeing the need of correcting these matters and it is safe to predict that changes will be made for the better.

On Sunday morning November 14, three men were ordained to the ministry: Rev. T. W. Eddins, Rev. J. B. Renean, and Rev. E. R. Kelley. Several promising young men were received into conference membership and the most of those received will attend one of our schools. Ten years ago Rev. T. C. Cassaday was assigned to Birmingham without a thing except faith in himself and his proposition, and a promise of a fair support. We now have a church and parsonage property worth $30,000, with a debt of $4,000, a congregation of more than three hundred members paying a salary of $1800. Bro. Cassaday was returned to Birmingham for the eleventh year. The elections resulted in the re-election of Rev. T. C. Cassaday as president, Mr. Ira Champion as secretary, and Rev. J. S. Eddins as conference treasurer.

Your secretary spent Sunday, the 14th, in Montgomery, the capital city, with Rev. J. S. Eddins and his congregation. The Bibb Street church is one of the historic churches of the denomination. The present building was erected in 1842 and remodeled in 1876. At the present time a new church is not only desirable but is almost an immediate necessity. The membership is growing slowly and we hope to put this church into its former leading position in the city. Your Board of Home Missions will give some assistance looking toward this end. The president and secretary of the conference accompanied the president of the General Conference and your writer to the session of the Alabama Colored Conference, which was held in a nearby church. This is a small organization, which needs encouragement in its work. Charles H. Beck.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Rev F C Klein, Sec.

The city of Kalgan is destined to become one of the great commercial centers of China. Its location at the northern edge of the country bordering Mongolia, and the starting place for the large caravans that convey tea and other commodities to Siberia, with the railroad being projected far to the north, give it decided advantages.

A vast territory in Mongolia is to be developed and already the tide of immigration sweeps beyond Kalgan, and the demand for products and [illegible] will increase. Thank God for his recovery. Our colleges have been sick, narrowly escaping death. It is the sickness that comes of the struggle. If we do not contribute more money for the support of our colleges [illegible] will go on, but not forever. I have read of the great [illegible] Brown's [illegible] to plant a college in Uniontown, Pa. The [illegible] failed [illegible] the church went right on as usual, as [illegible] no calamity had occurred.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN THE HOME.

[illegible] the home [illegible] the Christian religion is [illegible]

[illegible] the better for the child.

The Sunday school should [illegible] every possible aid to the home so that the child shall receive that Christian nurture which is essential to his religious life and growth.

Suggestions to Leaders.

1. Make much of this month for establishing the family altar in the homes of your community and distribute good literature on the subject of the religion of home life. Build up the Christmas spirit. Utilize the fact that people spend more time in the home this month than at any other time in the year.

2. Confer with the pastor and urge him to preach a series of sermons on such topics as:

December 5—The Home an Indispensable Factor in American Life.

December 12—No True Home Life Without Religion.

December 19—Service the Watchword of the Christian. Christian Giving. Near East Relief.

December 26—The Coming of the Christ-child.

3. Arrange with the superintendent of your Home Department for renewed emphasis and effort in the work of this indispensable department of the Sunday school.

4. Hold a "Social" or other meeting of parents and teachers under the auspices of your "Parent-Teacher Asociation," or if you do not have such an association, make this an opportunity to form such an organization.

5. Urge at this meeting, also in the Sunday school and church services, the fundamental necessity of Bible reading and Bible study in the home and the family altar.

6. In conference with the officers of the Parent-Teacher Association, arrange for a series of monthly meetings of parents and teachers, at which there shall be presented by the best experts obtainable the various phases of child life and needs as these should receive attention in religious education in the home. These experts in the successive meetings may well deal with such problems as:

"Training Right Habits and Ideals in the Life of the Child."

"What Bible Stories Does the Child Like [illegible] Why?"

"Building the Child's Own Library; Books and the Love of Books."

"Building into the Home Life Activities Learned in the Sunday School."

These and other equally simple topics, while [illegible] will, if properly treated, [illegible] great help to parents in the homes, [illegible] link between the parent and the Sunday school teacher which will [illegible] helpful to the child.

7. Counsel the teachers in the Sunday school to urge parents and what is more [illegible] to provide by advance assignments [illegible] study of the Bible [illegible] preparation for the lesson in the [illegible]. This point deserves the most [illegible] consideration on the part of the superintendents and teachers in the Sunday school. It has been demontrated [illegible] Sunday school [illegible] and [illegible] provided.

[illegible] call a meeting of the parents who have children and young people [illegible] school; make this meeting [illegible] spirit and let the pastor and the superintendent place before the parents the plan for evangelistic efforts in the Sunday school and urge them to co-operate especially through the months of January, February, and March, culminating in an ingathering of converts as followers of Jesus Christ and as members of His church.

9. Avoid "starting things" one month only to drop them the next month for something new. Link up in every way possible the points of emphasis of the preceding month,—the Bible in national life and Christian citizenship. Show constant appreciation of and the need for Teacher-Training work in the local school and in the community training school.

EMPEROR WILLIAM'S MOTTOES.

The German emperor has a number of mottoes before him as he works. Here are some of them:

"Be strong in pain.

"To work for anything that is unattainable is worthless.

"Be content with the day as it is; look for the good in everything.

"Rejoice in nature and in people and take them as they are.

"For a thousand bitter hours console yourself with one that is beautiful.

"He who is mistrusting, wrongs others and harms himself. It is our duty to believe every one to be good as long as we have not the proof to the contrary.

"The world is so large and we ourselves so small that everything cannot revolve around us. If something damages us, hurts us, who can tell if that is not necessary to the welfare of creation."—Selected.

REWARD OF VIRTUE.

A Scottish farmer one day called to a farmhand, "Here, Tam, gang roon and gie the coos a caggage each, but min' ye, gie the biggest ta the coo that gies the maist milk."

The boy departed to do his bidding and on his return the farmer asked if he had done as he was told.

"Aye, maister," replied the lad, "I gied 'em a cabbage each, and hung the biggest e'en on the pump-handdle."—The Watchman-Examiner.

WITH THE HEART.

An employer, pointing to two men, working side by side in his shop, said to me: "Though I pay them the same wages, one of them is worth twice as much to me as the other because he puts his heart into everything that he does. He is interested. He is anxious always to do his very best. His neighbor, on the contrary, thinks only of his wages. He will shirk whenever he can do so and not be found out. I cannot trust him. I have to watch him closely, or he will send out work that is imperfect and will injure the reputation of the shop."

"Well, what does the man whom you commend gain by putting heart into it if you pay the same wages?'

"Nothing at present, except the satisfaction one feels in trying to do his duty. But I shall need a new foreman one of these days, and he will get the place. The man who does his best will be rewarded in due time."—Herald and Presbyter.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 5.

Progressive Livnig. 2 Peter 1: 1-8.

(Consecrtaion meeting. Do not forget to have your verse of Scripture ready when your name is called. Select, if you can, a verse that it appropriate for the subject.)

Daily Readings.

M. Progress in grace. 2 Peter 3: 10-18.
T. In knowledge. Col. 2: 19.
W. Progress in service. Matt. 24: 42-51.
T. Progress in wisdom. Luke 2: 43-52.
F. Progress in spiritual strength. 2 Cor. 4: 11-18.
S. Progress in generosity. 2 Cor. 8: 1-12.

In all life there is either progress or retrogression. There is scarcely such a thing as standing still. Life is either going forward or backward. When life ceases to develop the process of decay sets in. We have not the time to illustrate this now, but we can see it illustrated all about us both in plant and in animal life.

The Christian life is no exception to the rule. The Christian life ought to be a process of growth. It is possible for it to be a process of retrogression. 2 Peter 3: 18 says, "But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Our Scripture lesson for today also sets forth the same truth (2 Peter 1: 5-8). The Christian life is a process of both subtraction and of addition. To Timothy Paul said, "Flee these things (perverse disputings, hurtful lusts, love of money," etc. 1 Tim. 6: 5-10); and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness" (1 Tim. 6: 11, 12). Leave off, subtract, the evil habits and practices from your life and add to your "faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge self-control; to self-control patience; to patience godliness," etc. So you can readily see that the Christian life is to be one not only of subtraction but of addition. Not only are Christians to "cease to do evil," but they are to "learn to do well"; and in learning to do well there will be progress, growth.

How Progress or Growth May Be Assured.

All life needs cultivation or exercise in order that it may grow and develop. Spiritual life is not an exception. The writer to Hebrews exhorts us to "press on unto perfection," or full growth, as the American version has it. But to press on requires effort; and in putting forth the effort we get the exercise that is needed to insure growth.

It is too true that many professed Christians are no bigger Christians now than when they were converted; and some perhaps are not so large as they were then. As some one has expressed it, they are like a wasp, bigger at birth than at any other time. But there is something wrong with the Christian life that has not grown. The means of grace have been neglected or the individual has failed to exercise himself in spiritual things.

Some Esentials of Growth.

I want to mention a few things that are essential to progress in the Christian life. First, prayer. You can not be any sort of Christian if you do not pray. The more you pray the better Christian you will be and the greater will be your progress in the life of grace. A second essential is Bible reading. The Bible is food for the spiritual life. No life grows without nourishment. Attendance upon the regular services of the church I put down as another essential to progress. The church, with all her services, is a great means of grace, and those who fail to avail themselves of the privilege of church attendance are robbing themselves of a life-giving exercise. Look about you and see if the strong Christian men and women of your community are not regular attendants at the house of the Lord. Then, in the fourth place, if we want to make the greatest progress in Christian living we must get out and do some active work for the Master. Here is where the Society of Christian Endeavor is doing its great work. It gives the young folks an opportunity to practice their religion. And I shall not be uneasy for fear the young person will backslide who conscientiously reads his Bible, prays and is active in Christian Endeavor work. It is when we cease to be active that we cease to make progress.

Remember, young people, in all this there is no real progress out of Christ. Jesus said, "Without me ye can do nothing." He also said, "Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch can not bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; so neither can ye, except ye abide in me."

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Suffering Christ.

Text: Mark 8: 31 and Heb. 2: 10 and Isa. 53: 5.

The mystery of human suffering on earth has perplexed, confused, and disturbed many. It has even unsettled the faith of some in the goodness and care of God.

I call your attention to the following facts which will throw some light on this difficult and ever-present problem:

1. All suffering has its first cause in sin and imperfections in human nature—either our own sins or the sins of others. Sin is the transgression of law, and all have transgressed some law either natural or moral. In a race free from sin and imperfection pain and sorrow and death would be unthinkable. Suffering is a necessary part of the present state of sin and imperfection.

2. All sufferng on earth is intended for our own good or the good of others. "A burnt child dreads the fire." We learn our most important lessons from experience, and suffering gives experience which we are not likely to forget.

3. Physical sins bring physical suffering, financial sins bring financial suffering, and political sins bring political suffering All the world has suffered because of the sins of a few men who started the world war. No surprise that the sin of Adam in Eden tainted and corrupted and degraded the entire race.

4. Then, too, there can be no real progress apart from pain and struggle, hard labor and suffering. All upward progress has been marked by blood and tears. The path of progress is the path of pain and toil and self-denial and blood.

5. Mothers suffer for the sins of their children: and children suffer because of the sins of their parents. Nations are made to suffer for the sins of their rulers: and the present generation suffers for the sins of past generations. We are all linked together. The sins of one bring hurt to all.

6. All this has been said to throw light on the sufferings of Christ by whose stripes we are healed. The great mystery is how the innocent may suffer,—how innocent children are made to suffer on account of the sins of their parents; and how the sinless Christ suffered for us. As a matter of fact the innocent often suffer far more than evil-doers in this life.

1. Christ was sinless. All He suffered and endured was on account of our sins.

2. He came to redeem us from all our sins; and without the shedding of blood, suffering and death, there could be no redemption. He could only become our perfect Redeemer by suffering and death.

3. He suffered with and for us. Our redemption and salvation could only be accomplished by His death. He gave His life for us. Life is the most precious thing in all the universe: It takes life to redeem life.

4. The highest test of nobility and love is how much we are willing to suffer for others. Christ loved us and suffered death for us while we were His enemies. Only light can banish darkness, and only life can destroy death. Christ gave His life to deliver us from the death of sin.

> "There is a fountain filed with blood,
> Drawn from Emanuel's veins:
> And sinners, plunged beneath that flood,
> Lose all their guilty stains."

What did He suffer for us?

I. Poverty. He made all things He owned all things. But for our sakes He became poor —so poor that He had not where to lay His head. He surrendered all for us.

II. Ingratitude. He came unto His own, and His own received Him not. He was not appreciated. And such is the world to this day, that men and women who do the best work are not appreciated. The people saw no beauty in Him that they should desire Him. On one occasion He cleansed ten lepers, and but one returned to give Him thanks. Even His own disciples were slow to appreciate Him.

III. Loneliness. Just think of it, the holy Christ in an unholy world—the sinless Christ in a world reeking and rotting in its revolting filth. How could Christ feel at home in a world like this? Would He feel at home in this church? Would He feel at home in your heart? He had to tread the awful winepress of human redemption alone. In Gethsemane His disciples slept while He prayed in soul-rending agony, and met the prince of hell without sympathy or companionship from His own chosen disciples. Only John was with Him at the cross.

IV. Temptation. He was sorely tempted all the way of life. Tempted by the devil,—tempted by the scribes and Pharisees and rulers of the Jews; and even by His own disciples was He tempted. He endured temptations for our sake, and He overcame, that we might have victory.

V. Misunderstood. The best people misunderstood His teaching and His mission. They thought He came to deliver them from the Roman yoke instead of the yoke of ignorance and ritualism and sin. And this false hope lingered even in the thought of the twelve until after the resurrection. Both His friends and enemies seemed incapable of understanding His divine mission of redemptton from sin, and the establishment of the kingdom of God in human hearts and human society on earth.

VI. Death. And His life of sufferings was crowned by His atoning death on the cross.—the shameful death on the cross at the hands of a lawless mob. And this atoning death was for His enemies. Jesus died that His enemies might be saved. He had taught the disciples, that we should love our enemies; and now He so loved His enemies to die for them Only God could do that. Only Divine love can go that far. "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." And this reconciliation was accomplished by the suffering of Him who was sinless.

VII. For us. All this life of suffering was for us. He is our hope and our salvation. He paid the debt by investing His own sinless life. What have we suffered for Him? "If any man love not" this suffering Christ, he is under the deadly curse of sin.—From The Word of Life.

WHAT THE BIRDS AND SQUIRRELS FOUND OUT.

"This bitter cold weather is very hard on the birds and little animals in the grove," said Papa Vance one cold night last winter. "We have had snow on the ground for a long time, and they will starve unless a thaw comes."

"Why, papa, I thought the squirrels always laid away plenty of nuts," said Dorothy. "Mamma said they carried them away to hollow trees."

"But you remember, my dear, the snow came before they had a chance to get plenty of food," said papa. "When we have an open winter, which means the ground is bare, the squirrels can dig under fallen leaves in winter and find food. The birds eat weed seeds and all sorts of things they find, but when snow is deep they often go hungry."

"Let's feed them tomorrow, Dorothy," said Fred. "I'll scatter a lot of crumbs so they can have a feast."

"Won't the crumbs be lost in the snow?" asked wise little Dorothy.

"I am afraid they will, but the birds are too timid to come to the house where the ground is bare."

"We'll sweep a nice bare place under the trees," said Dorothy. "I don't want the birdies to starve."

So early the next morning the children took two old brooms and hurried to the grove. It was hard work, and they were soon panting, but the thought of the hungry birds kept them at the task, even though their arms ached, and presently a nice, big table was all ready.

"Now for the wheat and crumbs," said Fred, hurrying back to the house. "Breakfast will be served a little late this morning, but we can do better tomorrow."

Fred and Dorothy crept behind some big trees, and presently a bird flew down on the table. Another and another came until there were crowds of hungry boarders, as Dorothy called them, eating their breakfasts. It must have tasted very good, for they chattered and seemed to have a fine time with the crumbs and wheat.

After that it was great fun to watch the table when the meals were served. Rabbits, birds, squirrels and even a stray cat came to enjoy the crumbs when the weather was very cold, and it took a great deal of food to keep the tiny bodies from freezing.

"I don't like it that the birds are all afraid of us," said Dorothy. "They all fly away whenever we come near."

"They will learn to trust you in time," said papa. "They are timid little creatures, and want to be sure you are their friends."

In a short time it was hard to get the tablecloth off without a lot of boarders camping on the table, as the children said when they had to brush off a fall of snow. The little things found out that the children never would harm them, so all winter they flocked to their meals when they saw Fred and Dorothy coming. The children are planning to open their boarding house under the trees again this winter, and I wish there were hundreds of such kind little people all over the land during the bitter cold weather.—Hilda Richmond, in American Primary Teacher.

SHIRKING RESPONSIBILITY.

A great many of dislike to take responsibility which does not belong to us. We think we might make a mistake, and bring censure on ourselves. And so we are often onlookers when we should be actors. We let things go wrong when we could have made them go right. On such occasions we draw comfort from the reflection, "Well, it wasn't my business." Wasn't it, indeed? Our business is something more than earning our salary, more than doing as we are told. It is doing the thing that ought to be done, providing we are able to do it.

Shirking responsibility is not at easy as it seems. We may satisfy the public that a thing does not concern us. We may tell ourselves that it is none of our business, but there is One to whom we cannot offer such an excuse. God holds us responsible not for what we are paid to do, not for what we are told to do, but for all we are able to do. With him there is no shirking of responsibility.—Selected.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Fair Grove, Haw River Circuit.—The conference year closed at Fair Grove with all claims paid. The election of officers for both church and Sunday school resulted in a re-election of old officers with a few exceptions, some of which were the election of Mr. J. W. Fogleman as superintendent and Dr. Johnson, teacher of adult class. The Sunday school treasurer gave the following collections for different purposes: Children's Home, [illegible]; special collection for Children's Home, [illegible]; literature, $20; Christmas tree and exercises, $32.26; Armenians, [illegible]; Rally Day, [illegible]; Young People's Union, $2; Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, [illegible]. Total, [illegible]. We had a very good Sunday schol last year. There is room for improvement still. Come, let us make a better record for this year. Bad roads and distance should not be a hindrance when we are working for Christ.

Fairview, S. C.—The Fairview Christian Endeavor society held their fifth social meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. R. White on Saturday evening, November 20, 1920. This meeting was one that will probably be long remembered on account of our pastor, Rev. C. H. Lindley, being with us for the last time. Mr. Lindley has done much for us. After organizing our society he has taken an active part in all meetings he could and has been with us in almost all socials. Mr. Lindley is a young man, he is interested in the work of all young people. His presence will be greatly missed. We wish him a great success in his future work.

The program was carried out somewhat as usual. The boys secured partners by drawing the name of a girl from a hat. Three [illegible] contests were given, one especially, a duck cut-out contest; a prize was [illegible] for cutting the best duck. Prizes were [illegible] in the other contests also.

After the contests were over, a mix-up game was played, after which every one went into the dining room, where the table was [illegible] full of delicious eatings.

There were several visitors present. We are always glad to have them with us.

The Reporter.

Harris Chapel, Vance Circuit.—We have not reported in some time; however, [illegible] reports, which seem to me to be all that is necessary, under the circumstances. This is the last of the conference year. While we have failed in many respects, the church has not been altogether idle.

Rev. H. L. Powell has been with us for three years. He has done good preaching and we have enjoyed having him for our pastor. He seems to think that it is best that he should not come back to us. May God's richest blessings go with him and his family wherever he goes. I would be glad to know that we could get another pastor who will serve us as faithfully as Mr. Powell has. I am very sorry that he will not have a satisfactory report from this church, all claims not having been paid [illegible]. The fault is not altogether in the [illegible] members who never pay anything, and others who do not pay half of their assessment. The church is assessed according to its membership, and it would be easy to pay all claims if each member would pay his proportionate part; but I think I will not be mistaken in saying that at least one-third of the members will not pay. This is the case every year, and no help for it.

We have a very good Sunday school with Mrs. [illegible] as superintendent. [illegible] of the older people are taking more interest in it, and yet there is room for improvement. [illegible] who could attend who do not.

We are planning to have some kind of entertainment Christmas [illegible].

Pastor Bethea (that's what we hope to call him) worked hard for the success of the day in every way, but the weather man failed to co-operate with him. Reporter.

Bethesda, Halifax Circuit.—Fourth Sunday night is one of our regular appointments at this place, and while we are not exactly entitled to preaching service during conference, Brother Bethea had announced that he would make provision for it; so we had hoped to have with us one or more of the preachers from Enfield. Bad weather prevented, however, and we were disappointed.

A good many of our people attended the services at Hollister today and enjoyed the sermon by Dr. Benson, talks by Miss Hammer and Bro. Gerringer, and an interesting and inspiring address by Bro. Dixon. We would like to say more but must not encroach on the privileges of the Hollister reporter.

Conference being near us this year, a good many of our people had the privilege of attending. We are hoping for the return of Bro. Bethea, who has done a good work on this charge.

The year's work here closed last second Sunday, with a good sermon by the pastor from the text, "There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God." He pointed out that this means, not only eternal rest, but a rest here and now; for, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." He went on to say that this rest is not a "state of idleness," but a peace attained only by the "giving of self, service, and substance." M. H. S., Reporter.

Pleasant Hill.—Today winds up conference in Enfield, and we are hoping and expecting our former pastor, Bro. O'Briant, to be returned to us; but if Bro. Andrews sees fit to make a change we know that we can never get a pastor who will come any nearer pleasing every one than he has during the past year.

At Bro. O'Briant's last appointment here, which was the third Sunday night, he gave us a fine sermon, as usual. The church book was revised and church officers elected: Bro. J. W. McGee, class leader; Mr. J. M. Dunham, John Hart and Milton Crew, trustees; John Hart and Mrs. W. L. Alston, stewards; Mrs. J. W. McGee Sunday school superintendent.

Among those who visited conference from this place, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Vassar, Mrs. T. R. Vassar, Mr. J. W. Massie, Calvin Massie, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. McGee, Mrs. J. M. Dunham, Mary Daniel, Mr. John Hart, Miss An[illegible] Crew, Mr. M. L. Crew, Mr. J. W. Crew and Mrs. W. L. Alston.

It was indeed a pleasure for me to have the opportunity of attending the conference this year and to see our former pastors and old friends, and also to meet a number whose names were so familiar to us by reading their letters in our paper. In future we can picture their faces as we read their letters. I for one have received impressions which will never be forgotten, of brotherly love and Christian fellowship.

We were glad to have two of our former pastors, Rev. W. F. Ashburn, and Bro. T. T. McCulloch, pay us a visit while in Enfield. They spent the night with Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Vassar. Mrs. W. L. Alston, Reporter.

A MEMORY SYSTEM.

Forget each kindness that you do
As soon as you have done it;
Forget the praise that falls to you
The moment you have won it;
Forget the slander that you hear
Before you can repeat it;
Forget each slight, each spite, each sneer,
Whenever you may meet it.

Remember every kindness done
To you, whate'er its measure;
Remember praise by others won
And pass it on with pleasure;
Remember every promise made
And keep it to the letter;
Remember those who lend you aid
And be a grateful debtor.

Remember all the happiness
That comes your way in living;
Forget each worry and distress;
Be hopeful and forgiving.
Remember good, remember truth,
Remember heaven's above you.
And you will find, through age and youth,
True joys and hearts to love you.

THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF FAITH.

Faith has done many things in this world besides the bringing down of the walls of Jericho. Men sometimes laugh at faith as though it were a feeble thing, when, in fact, it is one of the great forces of the world.

If we were to use Scriptural language with regard to all the things that faith has accomplished, we might speak as follows: By faith Columbus crossed the ocean, not knowing whither he went. By faith Cyrus Field planned and perfected the Atlantic cable, while all men laughed at him and called him visionary. By faith our forefathers crossed the deep, seeking a country where they could freely worship their God. By faith Edison toiled on, seeking new discoveries in his science, not sure of the issue of his efforts. All these wrought with faith, and so worked wonders. The fact is that without faith the world would come to a standstill.

This same faith applied to spiritual things has done wonders for the world. Faith in the word and promises of God has led to the establishment of missionary work all over the world. Faith leads men and women to go far from home and friends to preach the truth to those in darkest Africa. Faith leads the city missionary to go to the plague-spots in darkest New York or London, and to believe that he can bring light and purity there. And God rewards this faith, so that the modern miracles are not so much those of the healing of the bodies of men as of their spirits. If ever this old and sinful world is to be made over, so that it shall be full of righteousness, it will be only when men act more by faith and less by sight, and dare and do great things for God and their fellow-men.—A. F. Schauffler.

A REMARKABLE COLLECTOR.

A boy in Portland, Me., many years ago, was deeply interested in collections, and after taking up several things, minerals, stamps, and the like, he settled down to make a collection of shells.

At seventeen he had developed such keenness of observation as to discover a new species of shell, and presented a paper before the Boston Society of Natural History on his discovery. In a few months he again discovered a new species that had been classified as the young of a known species. A great English naturalist visiting this country, was taken to visit this boy and see his collection of shells. He was so interested that on his return to Boston, he spoke of the collection to Professor Agassiz, who invited the collector to Harvard as a special student.

That boy is known to the world as Professor Morse. He went to Japan as professor of Zoology in the University of Tokio, and while in Japan began studying the beautiful pottery of that ancient empire, until he had become an authority, and was made Judge at the Chicago [illegible]. Professor Morse attributes his knowledge of Japanese pottery to the habits of close inspection acquired in his boyhood when making his collection of shells.—Outlook.

THE BENEFITS OF THANKSGIVING.

To give thanks is well-pleasing to God. "He that offereth praise glorifieth me." The divine sense of appreciation is infinitely keen. The delight of God in thanksgiving for mercies given is fully as great as His pleasure in bestowing other blessings. But the benefits that the thanksgiver receive from his giving of praise are rich and abundant. It pays well to give thanks to God.

The exercise of thanksgiving cultivates and accentuates a sense of unworthiness. With every contemplation of God's unfailing goodness we are impressed that we do not deserve even the least of His mercies. We are led to contrast our sinfulness and shortcomings with the unceasing lovingkindness of the heavenly Father. And the more we think upon this contrast the more are we impressed with our unworthiness of the least of all the mercy and faithfulness of God. A deep sense of unworthiness is most becoming to a child of God. It is from such a sense of lowliness that the graces of Christian character are developed. We become more and more Christlike as we realize how deeply unworthy we are. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

And the giving of thanks is a wonderful aid in the development of faith. Grateful acknowledgement of God's goodness gives us a deeper insight into His character. We come to know Him better as we thankfully meditate upon His mercies. And the more intimate this knowledge of God becomes, the stronger will be our faith in Him. The countles lovingkindnesses of the Most High reveal him as Friend, Lover, and Father; and it becomes easy to trust Him when this near relationship is so abundantly verified.

And again the giving to God the praise that is due Him is a large stimulant to Christian service. The grateful heart wants to do something in return for God's goodness. And the deeper and more constant the sense of gratitude the stronger will be this holy desire to serve the true and living God. There is nothing too good or too great to attempt for God on the part of those who are filled with praise and thanksgiving. To such all service becomes a thankoffering. In every gift of sacrifice, in every effort to advance the interests of the kingdom there goes up the sweet incense of thanksgiving to God. And the entire life becomes transformed into a holy sacrament unto the Lord. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

The exercise of thanksgiving will also lighten the burdens of life. These burdens are often many and heavy, but they become less burdensome as the mind dwells gratefully upon the unfailing mercies of God. Indeed we often forget our sorrows in contemplation of the good things that the gracious Father has showered upon us. By such contemplation we discover how little are the tribulations of life compared with the abundant mercies of God, how little we have to endure compared with how much we may enjoy, and how deserving we are of the one and how undeserving we are of the other.

Thanksgiving furthermore helps to a wiser use of the blessings of God. The truly thankful man is not going to prostitute his blessings to the service of sin. He will not even use them to further any unworthy aims of self. He will share these blessings with others. He will consider them as God-given assets with which to promote the kingdom of God. The grateful soul is a safe trustee of the things of Christ. He dispenses liberally to the poor, the widow, and the orphan. He is also generous in support of enterprises of the church of Jesus Christ. "Freely ye have received, freely give."

And lastly the giving of thanks prepares the thanks-giver to receive still larger blessings. Nothing enlarges the capacity of the soul like the giving of generous praise to God. The heart is constantly expanding under the abiding sense of gratitude. "Be ye also enlarged," exhorts the apostle. And the giving unto God the glory due unto His name is one of the surest methods of producing this enlargement. Thereby room is provided for still greater benefits. And God has declared His willingness to abundantly bless the thankful person: "Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase, and God, even our own God, shall bless us."

"Rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in everything give thanks."—From The Word of Life.

Asheboro Christian Endeavor.

The senior Christian Endeavor society of the Methodist Protestant church held its regular business and social meeting at the Methodist Protestant church in Asheboro last Thursday night week. There was a very interesting meeting, several being present, but not as many as there would have been, owing to the fact that it had been put off twice before, on account of Sheriff Hayworth's death and then on account of rainy weather.

The Christian Endeavor society of Asheboro is progressing the best possible, for the fact that the officers and the social committee of the society are doing so much for its interest The society will next January celebrate its first anniversary. The church was all decorated with autumn leaves, flowers and scenes of different kinds. The socitey had its regular business meeting, collection for the Near East orphan the society has pledged to keep up. a few remarks by our pastor, president and other officers. The election of officers came next. Mr. Lacy S. Lewis was re-elected as president by a majority vote, Miss Ethel Cox vice president, Miss Josephine Smith recording secretary, Miss Lollie Jones corresponding secretary, and Miss Nan Lewis reporter. After the election of officers a wedding took place, in which the new officers were wedded into the different offices they are to hold. This was officiated by Rev. L. W. Gerringer, our pastor, and president of our young people's work. The officers were given an oath by the pastor that they would strive to do what they could do while they held the different offices, the answer being, "I will."

After the wedding ceremony was over a play was given by the girls of the society, "Mrs. Jenkins' Brilliant Idea." Not a moment during the play was the audience in silence. It was a play that applies to some of the older people. After the play the society repeated the Mizpah benediction and were adjourned. Every one left satisfied that this was one of the best meetings and socials that the society has held. And every one being satisfied with the new officers that were elected and installed.

When our society was organized we began with only 17 members, then lately our president, Mr. Lacy Lewis, put on a membership drive, and now we have a membership of 112, taking in Miss Anna Richardson as an active member last Sunday night. Besides the Near East orphan the society has pledged to keep up they are giving $50 this year to the mission work. As this is our first year of work, I think the society has done well, and we hope to do better next year.

Our next social will be Thursday before Christmas, at Misses Mae and Clara Presnell's home, on oSuth Fayetteville street. Then on the night of December 31 the society is to celebrate its first anniversary at church. The society invites all Methodist Protestant church members to attend this, and as it is a celebration, we are also to watch the old year go out and the new year to come in. A program will start at seven-thirty that night: after the program the boys of the society are to make coffee, while all the girls, and ladies of the Methodist Protestant church are expected to fix up a basket for this occasion. Those members of the society and members of the church that will be there and expect that they can meet with the society for its celebration are requested by the president, Mr. Lacy Lewis, to let Miss Cleta Hatch or Miss Mae Presnell know if they will fix up a box for the occasioon, and for how many. We, the society, agree to entertain you while you are there, that is until the new year comes, then the feast, chicken, turkey, or whatever it may be, will be all yours.

This is the program for the night:

The completion of the first year's work of the Christian Endeavor society is at hand. It seems to be an appropriate time to review the past, to see whether the foundations of this organization are strong or weak, and whether we undersand God's purpose in bringing it into and in sending it throughout the town of Asheboro, and the county. It is also a good time to look forward to see how we may improve, and what new duties await us.

Rockingham.—The stationing committee saw fit to assign me to this charge and the company that I have been working for said they "could not rent us a house, but would give us $250 on a parsonage." We have determined to build a parsonage just as soon as we possibly can. This is a very weak charge, but we believe that if they can build a parsonoage it will greatly strengthen us. If any pastor or layman who reads these lines feels moved to donate to this worthy cause it will be greatly appreciated by the entire charge. We are intending to try to build a new church at Hannah Pickett cotton mill.

Any one wishing to help us may send their gifts to J. W. Jenkins, Rockingham, N. C., and their names with the amount will be published in the Herald.

Brethren, pray for this charge, that we may have a successful year's work.

J. W. Jenkins, Pastor.

THE DISAPPEARING LIQUOR SUPPLY.

When the Eighteenth Amendment went into effect on January 16, 1920, it was estimated that there was a total amount of 69,200,000 gallons of distilled spirits in bonded warehouses. Of this, 62,000,000 gallons was whiskey. On September 30, 1920, the warehouse stocks amounted to 44,500,643 gallons, and it is estimated that at the present time this stock has been reduced to 40,000,000 gallons.

No liquor has been removed legally for beverage purposes, and the shrinkage, which amounts to approximately 30,000,000 gallons, must therefore be credited to withdrawals for other than beverage purposes and to leakage.

The leakage represents liquor withdrawn on forged permits and liquor stolen. It is the fountainhead of the rivulets of booze that have trickled out through most of the larger cities. It represents a considerable quantity of liquor. Just how much is not made clear in the report, but certain it is that 30,000,000 gallons of liquor has not been utilized for legitimate purposes within the last nine months.

The situation presents a strong argument for the proposition that the government take over the liquor stocks, concentrate them in a few warehouses where they can be properly guarded, and dispose of these stocks as necessity requires, turning the proceeds over to their owners.

It also suggests the necessity of more strict regulations governing the issuing of permits. Several months ago it was discovered that the pernicious practice of indiscriminate issuance of wholesalers' permits was the cause of much of the bootlegging that was being conducted in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and elsewhere.

Nobody expected the Prohibition law to work perfectly from the start. It was realized that experience would suggest many needful changes in order to make the law more effective, and it certainly appears that this rapidly dwindling bonded liquor supply points to these needed changes in the law controlling the bonded liquor supply.

THE NECESSITIES OF LIFE.

One of the sidelights on character is a knowledge of the things people consider necessary. To many, luxuries and necessities are synonymous. A woman recently quoted in the press declared in court that she could not live on less than twenty thousand dollars a year.

Some people think of fine clothes as necessities. Some think it is necessary to buy a box of expensive candy two or three times a week, and to eat ice cream every night in the summer season. There are others who regard education as a necessity, and go shabby and work early and late in order to secure it. There are homes where no servant is kept, where the table fare is very simple, but the living room contains the best books and magazines, for to the inmates, good books and magazines are necessities.

What are the necessities of life from your standpoint? To dress better than your neighbor, to attend expensive entertainments, or to develop yourself symmetrically, and do something to help others? It is worth your while to find an answer to this question, for your definition of necessities helps to define you.—Selected.

BRING YOUR GIFTS TO GOD.

What is your gift? The gift of music? Very well. Christ wants that music of yours. I know music is often used as an incitement to sin, but He can use it as a help to righteousness. John Wesley used to pick up all the popular tunes of his day—tunes often associated with ribald words—and employed them in his services set to hymns in praise of God. "Why should the devil have all the good music?" he used to say. If music is your gift, bring it. Christ can use it. "I sing," Jenny Lind used to say, "for God."

What is your gift? Humor? Very well. Bring it—Christ can make use of it. Christ wants your merriment and lightheartedness. There is room for laughter in religion. "Rejoice always." I think of a man like Peter Mackenzie bubbling over with humor, putting that humor at the service of God and laughing men out of sin to righteousness.

What is your gift? Business skill? Very well. Bring it. Christ can make use of it. You can use that business skill of yours for Him. You can put it at His service in the shop where you labor. You can come and use it in the management and direction of the affairs of His church. There is no gift which Christ casts out as waste. There is no single energy which He demolishes and destroys. He wants the whole man—with every ounce of power he possesses. Christ does not annihilate. He converts. The stones and timber once used for some Ramah of sin He can use for some Geba and Mizpah of righteousness.—J. D. Jones.

God made both tears and laughter, and both for kind purposes; for as larghter enable mirth and surprise to breathe freely, so tears enable sorrow to vent itself patiently. Tears hinder sorrow from becoming despair and madness.—Leigh Hunt.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. A. G. Hough.

"Howe'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis only noble to be good;
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

A feeling of sadness pervaded our Sabbath school when on Sunday morning, November 14, Dr. Brown announced that our much loved librarian, Mr. Hough, was very ill, and an operation was necessary. Then early the following morning, November 15, the news came as a grievous shock that he had fallen asleep in Jesus.

Mr. Albert Burney Hough was born in Davidson county, near Fair Grove church, January 15, 1843. When just a boy he was converted, and joined the Methodist Episcopal church at Fair Grove. In 1875 he was happily married to Miss Mary Steeloff of Davidson county, who was a true helpmeet and walked by his side in tenderness and devotion for 45 faithful years. To this union five children were born, four daughters and a son. One of the daughters, Mrs. Woollen, and the son preceded him to the better world.

About 28 years ago he joined the Methodist Protestant church at Gray's Chapel, Randolph county, where he was then making his home. In 1900 he and family removed to High Point, when his membership was transferred to North Main street church, of which he remained a loyal and consistent member until death. For the past 18 years he was the faithful and capable librarian of the Sunday school. He loved all children and young people, and took an active interest in everything that pertained to their welfare and uplift. Himself a great lover of books, he devoted much time and careful attention to the library, and was always eager and happy to help the children make good selections. He was anxious to increase the library, and from time to time added new books, which he selected most carefully. He was always anxious to buy only good, wholesome literature for the young people He seemed to realize fully the great impress made on the minds and character of the young by the books which they read.

No more punctual and faithful attendant upon the services of the church was to be found in the congregation than Mr. Hough, although his home was a mile distant from the church. Through fair weather and foul, through winter's storm and summer's blazing heat, he was always in his place. He is survived by the devoted wife of his youth, Mrs. A. G. Hough, three daughters, Misses Ada, Clara, and Mamie Hough, and three grandchildren, Frances, George and May Woollen, who made their home with him. To these he bequeathes the priceless legacy of an honorable name and a Christian character "without fear and without reproach." Gentle and unassuming in manner, of a kindly nature, he had drawn to him a large circle of friends who loved him warmly, and who now mourn his passing.

Funeral services were held at the home on Willowbrook street on Wednesday, November 17, by his pastor, Dr. Geo. R. Brown, and interment was made in Oakwood cemetery, High Point. Many beautiful floral offerings attested in some degree to the love and esteem in which he was held. To the sorrowing widow and daughters the deepest sympathy of the entire congregation is extended. Truly a good man and a prince in Israel has fallen.

Mrs. R. T. Pickens.

"LORD, GIVE US SOULS FOR OUR HIRE!"

This prayer expresses the great desire of the true preacher of the Gospel. If preaching were carried on just to pass the time, just to fill the appointments, just to "raise the assessments," just to earn the salary, how dreary and tasteless would the task be! But when the preacher realizes that preaching is a mighty means apopinted by God to bring deliverance to souls that are captive, to bring salvation to souls that are lost, this realization infuses into his spirit the fire of a holy enthusiasm. What grand results are possible! Eternal life secured, eternal death avoided! No other occupation can hold out results so inspiring. The physician may hope to save life and may be stimulated to endure cold and hunger and weariness to achieve this result, but what is saving life in comparison with saving souls!

The lawyer may hope to save his client from prison or unjust penalty and may be urged on by his sense of justice, but what is saving a man from the penitentiary in comparison with saving a soul from hell?

The business man may be inspired with the hope of gain. He may hope to rival Rockefeller or Carnegie in his acquisitions. But what shall it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose himself?

The gains for which the preacher labors are incomparable souls saved! Let this thought inspire every preacher to do his best.

—Sad news came to us yesterday morning, telling of the death of Albert Sharpe, of Moriah church. He was a most likable young man, a good farmer, and a leading member of his church. His father and mother, Bro. John C. Sharpe and wife, his brothers and sisters, have our sympathy.

—Rev. W. W. Davidson suffered a stroke of paralysis Saturday and is now in St. Leo's Hospital. His sisters. Mrs. Rev. T. J. Ogburn and Mrs. J. B. Ogburn, have been at his bedside.

—In the general exchange of pulpits by Greensboro ministers last Sunday, Bro. Bates preached for the Walker Avenue Presbyterians, Bro. Raleigh Hunter for the Moravians, and the Quaker pastor, Prof. Francis Anscoe, of Guilford College, for our people in Grace. West End was served by Rev. Mr. Hedgin of the Presbyterian Church. It was a good scheme, we believe, in several respects.

—The every-member canvass was made for Grace Church last Sunday P. M. The stewards went about it in a determined business way and acomplished it, failing only to see a few individuals.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION—A GREAT MORAL TRIUMPH.

The prohibition amendment has been adopted by more than the required number of states, and a year hence our country will be free from legalized distilleries and saloons. What a long fight it has been! It began sixty-eight years ago in Maine A woman whose husband was being debauched by a bar-keeper appealed to Neal Dow to intercede with the liquor man and ask him not to sell her husband drink. The bar-keeper replied in an insolent manner, said there was no law to prevent and he would sell to whom he pleased. Neal Dow determined that there should be a law to prevent, and went to work to that end. He succeeded in having his own state adopt prohibition. From that beginning the movement spread. But how slowly! We remember when a young man attending a meeting of prohibitionists in a Michigan city. There were only a few old men present. It was generally so in those days. It was regarded as a forlorn hope. But those old men had faith and could pray mightily if they could not work much. They persevered. The good women of the country, led by Frances E. Willard and others, rallied to the cause, and awakened the sleeping sentiment of the nation. Scientific temperance instruction in the schools followed, and a generation has come on the stage that is awake to the deadly peril and destructiveness of the drink traffic.

Praise God for the great victory. It is greater than the victory in France over the German arms.

HAS THE LIKE EVER HAPPENED BEFORE?

Hats off, everybody! The unusual has happened. Less than two months after the adjournment of Conference one of our charges has paid both budgets in full. A check for $81, received from the pastor last week, pays these assessments in full. By reading between the lines it was not difficult to see that this pastor was not a little proud of what his charge had done. You can't guess the pastor nor the charge, so I must tell you—Rev. W. F. Kennett and St. Paul. Bro. Kennett and his people have, I am sure, the hearty congratulations of every other charge in the conference, and it is to be hoped that this splendid example may be stimulating to the rest of us. We shall look for other good things from St. Paul all along through the year.

The total received to date from all claims is $214.38. This amount is distributed as follows: A. C. B., $93.86; G. C. B., $112.27; O. P. H., $4.00; Journal, $4.25. We owe our president to date $239.47.

Eight charges have made payments. Tabernacle led off Dec. 3. The other charges are Reidsville, Asheville, Granville, Cabarrus, Alamance, Lexington Mission, and St. Paul.

THE HOW.

We do not know how to write about that which we have not been able to do. Bro. Kennett was asked once to preach on the subject of raising boys. He said he would but for one thing: he had a boy of his own. I would gladly tell my brethren how to put our church paper into every Methodist Protestant home on their work, but for one thing: I have a circuit of my own. I will admit that I have had some success along this line and I do not mind telling how I have done.

In my visiting, I find out if my people take our church paper. If they do not I try to tell them of our church paper and how I think they would enjoy reading it. Sometimes I speak of a former pastor's work and how they can keep in touch with him and his work. Also, the Children's Home and other interesting work of our church. The main thing is to get people to want the paper and you have their subscription. I find it much better to work my people myself. Dr. Broadus in his work on preaching, in closing said: "The only way to preach is to preach." And after all is said of soliciting subscriptions to our church, I find about the only way to get them is to go after them.

THE Y. M. C. A. AND THE CHURCH.

One of the many booklets dealing with matters of practical religious faith that has been distributed by the Y. M. C. A. workers among the soldiers in the various camps and overseas is "The Value of the Church" by Dr. W. W. Moore. Some extrasts from that booklet will give the readers at home an idea of Y. M. C. A. teaching concerning the Church:

"It has brought into existence in our day certain great agencies, which are alleviating on a vast scale the loneliness and tedium of camp-life, and the fatigue and suffering of our soldiers and sailors, its two most conspicuous by-products in this present war being the Young Men's Christian Association and the Red Cross Society. The keystone of the very name of the one is the word Christian. The vry emblem of the other is the blood-red Christian cross.

"The chief value of the church to the community lies in the fact that she is treating not merely outward symptoms, but the seat of the disease. Her main function is the meeting of spiritual need—the deepest and most universal of all needs, the need of the knowledge of God and of the way of deliverance from sin: the need of pardon and peace as to the past; and the need of power and progress for the future.

"To the church the world is more indebted than to any other agency for the freedom and civilization to which it has already attained. Upon the church more than upon any other agency we must depend for the maintenance of the ideals which will win the war. To the church more than to all other forces, we must look for that reconstruction of human society which will follow the war, and which, please God, will secure to the world a righteous and permanent peace. In other words, the church is essential to sound civil and social life as well as to spiritual life and growth. Her supreme work is to make the human heart right, and in just the measure in which the human heart is right, will wars and outrages and injustices disappear from the earth.

"May there be no slackers or traitors or defamers of the church of the living God among us, but may we unitedly and heartily support her work not only during the war but throughout the future, remembering that so long as men and women have sins to be forgiven, and passions to conquer, and temptations to resist, and sorrows to meet, and death to face, the church will incomparably be the most important of all agencies in the world—not merely as an economic factor, but as a religious factor—as the exponent of the saving gospel of Christ, 'in whom alone is found the truth that satisfies the intellect, the power that regenerates the life, and the hope that illumines the future.' "

RETROSPECTION AND INTROSPECTION.

Standing on the threshold of the New Year may it not be well for each one of us to glance back over the past twelve months, that we may note wherein we have failed to measure up to what we resolved should be our standard of Christian living?

Let us take an honest look into our own hearts. We started out a year ago to make our lives just a little better. Have we succeeded, have we been better men and women, better Christians?

Have we been generous in our judgment of the acts of others? Have we tried the past year to make the world a little better? Have we held out a helping hand to our brother?

Are we not, many of us, inclined to think, if we only had plenty of money, or talent, or strength, or time, we would do such a lot of good in the world? forgeting we all have precious gifts we may confer; if we will. Love, sympathy, kind words, a little encouragement, a smile, a cheerful good-morning salutation, a hearty handgrasp. Have we been generous in this kind of giving.

Many poor souls have reached that point where one word of cheer, one sign that any one had a kind thought for them, would have saved them from death, or worse than death.

Then let us all be generous with these gifts. We need have no fear of depleting our hoard, for the more we give of love, kindness and sympathy, the greater we shall find our store of these treasures.—Ex.

MODERN CHRISTIANITY.

Modern Chistianity is rapidly recovering the social impuse of its earliest days. It is glowing once again with the old fire. * * * The Church is convinced that a Christianity which does not go about "doing good" is not the Christianity of Christ. A religion which ignores the healing of the body is not the religion of Him who "took our infirmities, and bore our diseases." A religion which ignores child labor and child mortality is not the religion of Him who took the children in His arms. A religion which has nothing to say about vice and crime in the modern city can not claim kinship with the power that speaks out in the great apostolic letters to Corinth and Rome and Ephesus. A faith that merely hopes the will of God will be done in heaven as it is not on earth, is not the faith of the Lord's Prayer.—W. H. P. Faunce.

THE LITTLE LAD WITH THE LOAVES.

Some years ago a mother in New England was helping her Missionary Society to pack a box to send to the missionaries in India. Her son, aged four years, was deeply interested in the work. He asked all manner of questions, and when satisfied that he knew the contents were to help those who had fewer blessings than himself, he insisted on putting in an offering all his own. He asked that something should be bought that would tell the poor heathen about Jesus.

As he had only one penny of his own, his mother purchased for him a little leaflet entitled, "Come to Jesus." His name was written on it with the little prayer: May the one who gets this soon learn to love Jesus.

The box was sent off with many prayers that God would bless the contents to the saving of souls in India.

When it reached that far-off land, the missionaries distributed the many Scripture cards, booklets, etc., among the natives. In the distribution, the child's leaflet was overlooked, but found its way into a safe place in a bureau drawer of a lady missionary. For some months the leaflet was hidden from human eyes, but God was watching over it, for He had a special work for it to do, later on. He was going to answer the little boy's prayer in a strange and wonderful way, in His own good time.

In the mission employ was a Hindu priest. He taught the missionaries the language of the Hindus. As he was a devoted worshiper of idols, he would not even listen to the story of the gospel. After some time he decided to go back to his mountain home, many long weary miles away. When he said "good-by" to the lady missionary who had laid away the little boy's penny leaflet, she wanted to give him something to carry home with him that would tell of Jesus and His love. She knew he would not accept a Bible, although he could read English well—and in searching for something, God led her to find—the leaflet, "Come to Jesus." When she gave it to the priest he took it without looking at it, and carried it away with him. For years the missionaries knew not what had become of the priest or what he had done with the leaflet. But God knew and His Spirit led the priest on his lonely journey home to read the writing on the leaflet. The child's prayer so touched him that he was then eager to read further. From that time he was greatly troubled about his sins. He soon gave up his idols and became a devoted missionary to his own people. Fifteen years after, American missionaries visited his mountain village and there found the converted Hindu priest with a congregation of fifteen hundred people, who had learned to love Jesus as their Saviour, through the influence and teaching of that one leaflet. What instrument did God use in the saving of those fifteen hundred souls which Jesus died to save?
—Helping Hand.

A HERO OF FOURTEEN YEARS.

Perhaps the most dramatic and heroic act of this world war was the noble self-sacrifice of a mere child of fourteen years. An Alsatian Boy Scout whose father had been killed in Alsace offered his services to the colonel of a regiment near Altkirch. Knowing every path, mountain trail, and road, he was accepted.

During many weeks he rendered valuable services, bringing information enabling French progress and capture of prisoners. One day the colonel asked him to make a longer and more perilous quest than usual. Our young hero started, full of zeal and hope, and was allowed to take his dog Fidele. Having to sleep out for two nights, he knew his dog would not betray him.

All went well for a long while, though the journey was full of perils. Suddenly two burly Prussians barred his path, and he was taken before the enemy officers in charge of the nearest post.

Asked his name, "Karl Webler," he replied. "Where do you live?" "With my mother at Altkirch." "Your father?" "Killed." "You bear a German name and speak German. Why are you helping the enemy?" "I am Alsatian and love France, my motherland." "Stupid young fool," said the officer, do you know your fate—a spy?" "Yes, sir." "Do you love your mother?" "With all my heart." "Very well. You love your mother, and you would like to live. I will let you go and give you one hundred francs if you tell me how many regiments and how many batteries are defending Altkirch." "No, sir, I cannever to betray my country." "Idiot!" The officer then said: "I will give you five minutes. Accept my generous offer, or you die." The fateful minutes finished. "Well?" "Sir, I cannot and will not betray my country."

A few minutes afterwards the little hero and his faithful dog were dead. The story was related by a prisonerr who witnessed the scene.

The widowed mother, now childless, broken-hearted, but proud, points to visitors the two medals sent her by the French government—"La Medaille Militaire" and "La Croix de Guerre."—Edward Fox Sainsbury, in Our Dumb Animals.

"KNOCKING THE CHURCH."

By J. S, Chadwick.

The church has its critics today as in all the years past. Every organization that is doing a work worth while in the world will draw the fire of the critics, and be it said to the credit of the Church that it has been under fire through all its history.

Whatever may have been the attitude of a Y. M. C. A. secretary here and there, the overwhelming majority of the "Y" workers in the American Army have been loyal to the Church and the things for which the Church stands. The men who shape the policies of the Association and direct its work have sought at all times to hold the organization loyal to the teachings and the example of Jesus Christ, and hence in the largest sense loyal to the Church of Christ. "Association Men," official organ of the Young Men's Christian Association, carries in its January number the following editorial message to the "knockers" of the Church:

"The professional regulator of the universe now has his job along with the muck-raking profiteer in pilloring the Church as both inefficient and incompetent to meet the moral needs of the returning army. All this can be done without cost and sacrifice and from a cushioned chair. A man does not do this kind of mud-slinging on his knees or in the fighter's ranks. While it would be folly to claim the Church as perfect, it is faithless for the man to do it who will not lift with all his powers in its brotherhood. The power of a Church cannot be increased by lecturing it, by slamming it, nor by doing anything at it. Moody knew what he was saying when he remarked, "Give me three consecrated men in my church and I will have a continual revival." Let every man of us begin with himself by getting right with God upon his knees, by getting right with his brother, by getting right before the church, by humbly finding a place where he can serve. Let him organize or lead a men's Bible class that will be the heart of the church for young men, for our soldiers returning. If your church lacks friendship, lacks heart, lacks Bible teachers, lacks purpose, lacks money, lacks Sunday school of prayer meeting, lacks anything —that is the job to tackle. Before criticising let him try his hand at constructing. To a critic of a new church building who was pointing out a crack in the steeple, a trustee who had given thousands said, "Yes, there is a crack there—just about big enough for your subscription to fill." Surely any man who has got brains enough to fairly criticise the Church has ability enough to organize a go-to-church, -Sunday-school, -Bible class, -prayer meeting campaign as suggested by us last month."

HE HAS FAST HOLD.

There is a simple child's story which always seems to me to convey a profound and too often forgotten truth. It is the tale of the boy who, with his father, was climbing some steep and dangerous place and to whom a voice from below suddenly called up: "Have you fast hold of your father?" "No," was the immediate answer: "but he has fast hold on me." That is the first, the main thing—not the sense of our keeping hold of God (if it were all, how weak, how ready to fall we should be), but rather the sense that our Heavenly Father has hold of us and that because He is greater than all, no one is able to pluck us out of His hand.

"And so I go on, not knowing.
  I would not, if I might.
I would rather walk in the dark with God
  Than walk alone in the light.
I would rather walk with God by faith
  Than walk alone by sight."

—George Milligan.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

SEVEN GOALS FOR 1919.

A revival in every church.

A family altar in every home.

A Sunday school in every church.

Every school contributing to the Home.

A Church paper in every M. P. family.

Every cent of every claim paid by Nov. 12th.

FAMILY WORSHIP.

Too much emphasis can hardly be put upon family worship, the "family altar," or as we sometimes call it, "family prayers". The decadence of this form of worship is generally recognized; but not all who admit its importance and benefit to the lives of those who engage in it make it the rule of their home life to have "prayers" daily in their home.

We have set for one of the goals of this year, the institution of family prayers in the homes of our members. Several of our ministers have been requested to write a short article on this subject, and I hope these will be forthcoming. For as we sometimes speak of a "crying need," I want to say that the "crying need" of our time is for habitual religion. The man or person whose religion has become habitual has certainly crossed the greatest danger line of life. Where the habit of daily prayer, daily Bible study, daily effort to win some one for Christ, are well formed in a life that life is so buttressed against the assaults of the evil one that it is not in much danger of committing sins such as are so common to us. And indeed no one has truly become religious until that one has made religion a habit. When prayer has become habitual, it has gripped the life, when giving has become habitual with us it has arisen to its highest power in us. For that reason spasmodic giving, spasmodic praying, spasmodic church attendance, spasmodic personal work amount to but little. Rarely benefit those who do these things or those for whom they are done. Constancy, persistency, repetitious acts are the influential acts in our lives.

Bible reading and prayer performed daily in the home build up those who engage in them in the faith, and strengthen as well as instruct, those who only are present at and on such occasions. But the true family worship is that in which every member of the family present takes some active part.

IS THERE A FAMILY ALTAR IN YOUR HOME?

THE MILLION DOLLAR CAMPAIGN.

The Forward Movement commission is working on the plan for launching this campaign and will doubtless need no boosting from me, but I want to say this, that while we shall soon put on our canvass to raise $250,000 for our college this fact will not keep all of us from doing our full share in this million-dollar campaign. This money is to go to our Boards and institutions, they could certainly use wisely this much money did they have it. Begin to lay aside a definite part of your income for this cause.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, Rev. W. F. Kennett, Pastor.

I held the first quarterly conference of this church last Wednesday night. There was a good attendance at the conference and the business was transacted in a manner indicating a keen interest in the work of the church. The pastor reported that already twelve members had been received into the church since conference and that the church had gone OVER THE TOP in raising the conference claims. All conference claims were reported fully paid and would be forwarded at once to Treas. Taylor. This is the first church in the conference to do this thing and it speaks well for these people.

St. Paul has not had an uneventful history since her organization, but we believe she is now entering upon a period of splendid prosperity. Only let the people be prayerful, diligent in the Master's work, generous in their gifts and soon St. Paul will support a pastor with great ease.

FIRST CHURCH, WINSTON, Rev. J. D. Williams, Pastor.

I visited this church last Sunday. It is a pleasure to visit these people. They are making a great effort now to pay off the indebtedness on the church this year; we believe they will do this, and we know that they will then enter happily into even greater things for the Master.

Brother Williams is popular with the people; having spent a great number of years here, he has the affairs of the church well in hand and is doubtless now doing his best work in the pastorate.

He reports having reached the goal for new subscribers to the Herald, but was not going to stop there, expected to work for more. That is the way to do it. Just put a great big plus on that list, it will do both subscriber and Herald good. The attendance at both services was better than last year when I was here, but the Sunday school has not yet recovered from the closing order of last fall and may not for some time yet. Winston church more than paid the amount promised for an acre of land for the new farm for the Home.

FORSYTH CHARGE, Rev. C. H. Whitaker, Pastor.

I held the first quarterly conference of this charge at Winston. For sometime this has been the custom of these brethren; it seems to be more convenient for many of them. I was here a year ago. This was a better conference than then. The pastor's salary had been increased by the fourth quarterly conference, being made $800; this was apportioned to the different churches, the every-member canvass and the budget system were adopted, and other tokens of increased interest which did my heart good and certainly must have delighted the pastor. This charge is yet to be developed to its full strength. The churches have been on large charges until recently and could not receive much of the pastor's thought or time, but now we believe there is an opportunity for growth and enlargement here which will reveal a surprising amount of latent strength. I hope that later in the year I shall have the opportunity to visit all the churches on this charge.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH IN N. C.

Dear Fellow Workers:

Last week we made a brief declaration of our faith on the subject of the college and a greater Methodist Protestant Church. Now we want to get right down to business and ask for your hearty cooperation. We want you because you are ours—and we are one.

The Central College Committee is ready to begin the work. We expect to do our utmost to carry out what we were chosen by our brethren to do. But we cannot build the college ourselves. Are you going to help us? Can we count on your prayers, your co-operation and your financial support? "It is up to you," beloved.

Let us understand each other. This committee has nothing whatever to do with choosing the site. We were chosen to find funds, not a place to build the college. But we do not think it wise to accept pledges conditioned upon our building on any particular site. Do not make any such pledges, leave the matter with the Board of Education; at the right time they will take the necessary action.

The goal set is $250,000.—And we shall need every cent of that amount. Where is so large a sum to come from? From you. Our people must raise this amount from among themselves. It will call for sacrifice, for self-denial on the part of many; but it is not an impossible sum; we can raise it if we will. HAVE YOU WILLED to do it?

Our Plan Now Is

1. To get every member of our church and all the friends of our church in N. C. to enlist in this campaign, paying one dollar for adults, fifty cents for children. This is the membership fee. It will go into the college fund. But it is not your pledge or gift to the college enterprise; that is to come later.

2. To BOOST, BOOST, BOOST. Talk up the enterprise. Talk it to your home folks, talk it to your church folks, talk it to your neighbors. Build up a morale, an esprit de corp that will gladly attack and accomplish this task.

3. PRAY, PRAY, PRAY. It is a subject for prayer. The education of your children is a matter serious enough for your sincere prayer. To educate them in that religious atmosphere created and maintained by your own college is a privilege and boon every parent in our church should seek with all the heart. And none, therefore, can afford to neglect to pray earnestly for the success of this campaign.

Your committee believes that the time has come for action. It must be concerted action, whole-hearted action, continuous action, courageous action, sacrificial action. The work is important enough to engage the finest talent in our church, it is hard enough to call for the most heroic efforts of our most loyal members, it is varied enough to engage the services of the smallest talent, and it can be benefited by the gifts no larger than the widow's mite. Therefore, let none refuse to serve, to give, to pray, lest by that failure others shall lose the reward of their service.

GET BUSY.

We have been looking for a report from the treasurer of the Guild for a long time. Am sure the treasurer is also disappointed in not having anything to report. If your pastors have not given out the Constitution and By-laws of the Guild, please ask for them and go at once to soliciting membership dues for 1919. All Methodist Protestants are eligible to membership. As has been said before, this is just a systematic way of caring for our district parsonage. It should be deemed a privilege to help care for our President's home.

The House Committee are in need of funds to repair the kitchen. It is in a deplorable condition. Get busy, women, and send our treasurer money so that this much needed repair can be made. We women want to keep the President's parsonage in first-class repair and can do it. So get busy. Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, High Point, N. C., is treasurer.

Harris Glascock, M. D.,
Pres. N. C. Conf. Guild.

Guilford Ct.—Sunday was a good day for us. We found a congregation at Hickory Grove very attentive at 11 A. M. We feel sure that somebody was praying while the preacher was trying to preach.

We believe that Hickory Grove church will go forward and perhaps will be one of the first to get on the honor roll in 1919. It was our pleasure to stop with Bro. A. L. Jones for dinner. Sister Jones gave us a fine dinner and a hearty welcome which we enjoyed very much; wish we could have stayed longer, but we had to drive about 5 miles to reach Mitchell's Grove at 3 P. M. So we had to be going.

We found a good-sized congregation assembled at this church. And again we think somebody was praying while the [illegible]

There is no doubt in my mind but what Guilford Ct. will go over the top with all claims. God bless the work and lead us on to greater usefulness in His vineyard.

Just another word before we close. We have been visited by the pounders again. This time from Mitchell's Grove church. Another gallon of fine molasses and about two bushels of potatoes, some corn and milk and butter and beans. We have more to thank the good people of Guilford Ct. for than we can find words of expression. May our Heavenly Father reward them with just the blessings that help them the most to be better and do more for Christ.

A. M. Hamilton.

Matthews Chapel, Greensville Ct.—As it has been quite a while since I have tried to report, will do so now.

Bro. Morgan was with us Sunday for the first time since Conference, as our church has been closed on account of flu. Quite a number of our neighborhood people have had it, and it has also passed through our family, but we are glad to say all are up again.

We are glad to have our same pastor back; everybody seems to be well pleased with him.

Miss Modie Bowen has accepted a position at South Hill, Va. She will be greatly missed in our S. S. and church. She has been teacher of the intermediate class and organist at Matthews for several years.

Mr. Henry Taylor, one of our S. S. boys, who has been in the army for several months, has returned home. We are glad of his return. We are also glad to know that Hobart Baird, another of our S. S. boys, who has been in France for several months, has returned to the state again.

Hope to commence S. S. again soon, so as to have something to report. And will try to report more often, as Bro. Morgan likes to see reports from his churches real often.

May this be the best year for us all, both spiritually and physically.

Lottie Edwards, Rep.

Jan 24, 1919.

Fallston.—That pounding from some of the churches on this charge came Saturday afternoon, Jan. 19.

We were not surprised at the pounding at all, but we were surprised at the quantity, quality and the number of people who took part in it.

Mrs. Edwards was the first to see the army approaching, some walking, others on wagons, and buggies, in all about seventy-five people. Whatever might have at once became allies and [illegible] gether.

We soon found out that they were not our enemies but our friends. They were only coming to pay a much appreciated visit to their pastor and family.

The names of these kind people we are unable to give but we do remember that among those who came, and those who sent their gifts, were Wrights and many of their kinfolks, Willises, Gantts, Lackeys, Sains, Normans, Martins, Canipes, Yanceys, Peelers, Hoyts and Hays; the others we do not remember. The pounding consisted of dried fruit, both peaches and apples, canned fruit—apples, peaches and cherries; beans, both dried and canned; potatoes, corn, sugar, rice, meat, syrup, flour, butter, pickles, pumpkins, chickens, both hens and roosters. Other things were given us, "up the country," I shall not take the space to mention.

We regret that we are unable to give the names of all who took part in the pounding but our Father who knows each one will reward for the deed.

The people are kind to us and often give us things such as are needed in every home. While we cannot return these many kindnesses in the same way, yet we can show our appreciation by returning to each one the very best possible service.

Chas. J. Edwards and Family.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

NANNIE'S STILL HOUR.

Nannie Buckley, age eight, repeatedly expressed her desire to earn money for the Red Cross work, or else do something directly for it.

Her aunt, whose favorite she was, at length said to her, "Nannie, if you will sit still without speaking for an hour, I will give you a dollar for the Red Cross."

"Oh, auntie, auntie, will you? Oh, will you, just for sitting still one hour? Why, that's easy," and the child's eyes sparkled with pleasure.

Auntie assured her that she meant what she said.

"Then when may I commence," cried Nannie.

"You may begin now, if you wish," was the reply. "It is now 2 o'clock, and you may sit still till 3."

Down sat the little deluded girl, deluded because she felt that she was going to earn her money very easily. She pursed up her sweet little rosy lips as a sign of silence, and the hour began slowly by. [illegible] her little neighbor called and wanted her to come out to play. Mrs. Buckley told the child her young daughter was engaged, and she ran away, and auntie's little employe sighed as she heard the retreating footsteps.

The clock ticked off fifteen minutes of the hour, and oh, what a long fifteen minutes it proved to be. And now Nannie's favorite friend came to spend the afternoon, and with her she brought her real Paris doll. "Now," thought the mother, "Nannie will yield," and she looked admiringly at the little sitter.

The child pointed to the clock and shook her head resolutely. Mrs. Buckley understood and explained matters to the little guest, and the latter said, "I can wait; I wish I could earn money so easily."

"Easily," thought Nannie, "she does not know how hard it is."

The visitor went out to play in the yard till the hour should expire.

Next came in Mr. Buckley, who proposed to take the two girls to town with him in the automobile, if they could come at once.

Nannie sighed again, but shook her head hard.

The mother again explained, and the father went away, exclaiming, "Why, little girl, that's fine, yes, fine."

Now came teasing brother Rob, with a plate of ice cream he offered to Nannie if she would say she wanted it. The little Red Cross worker held out her hand for the plate, but refused to speak.

"Only ten minutes more to it," thought Nannie, "and then this long, long hour will be over." But just at this moment the baby of the family, two years old, came dragging a tiny cart into the room where the long session was being held; and in some way he fell against the table leg, which brought his sister to her feet. The hurt was not serious and the little one was soon quieted, but poor Nannie burst into sobs when she realized that she had broken into the hour.

Auntie, however, when she heard all, took her in her arms and said she had done nobly and that she should have her dollar.—Anna D. Walker.

A LOYAL LITTLE FRENCHMAN.

Louis Rambault was a boy who lived in a small village in France. His father was the only baker for miles around. Louis had often helped his father make the soft, powdery flour into crisp, brown loaves of bread. He had long wished that he, too, might be a baker like his father. [illegible] day news came that Louis' father must lay aside his baker's apron and put on the uniform of a soldier. He must go with the other able-bodied men of France to drive the Germans from the land. Before joining his regiment, he baked ovenful after ovenful of bread. He knew the women and children and old men would have none unless he made it for them, for in France all the people buy their bread at the bakeries. They do not make it in their homes. So he worked without rest or sleep until at last it came time for him to leave. After his father had gone, Louis waited on the people who came to buy bread. At the end of the first week only a few loaves remained.

"Mother," said Louis, "I can make the bread now that papa has gone."

"No, Louis," his mother replied, "it is impossible. You are not strong enough."

"Anyway, let me try," begged little Louis. Finally his mother consented, and helped him the best she could. To the surprise of all his first baking was a success. The people of the village and of the country flocked in to buy his bread. Some of them came to see Louis at his work. Often they found him in the hot room, stripped to the waist, kneading the dough, or nimbly taking the crisp loaves from the oven on his long-handled shovel.

Often his back ached and his arms were tired. But he never complained. He felt that he must do his part to help France. Once when a neighboring town had no bread, this brave little boy did the work of two men until someone was found to replace the baker who had been called to the front.

During a recent battle, when hundreds of refugees streamed through the village, Louis worked day and night in order that the hungry people might be fed. When the battle was over and the refugees returned, they saw the great general return little Louis' salute with a smile, as he passed through the village.—Selected.

When the Young Women's Christian Association secretary goes to Russia for work, it is with the understanding that she will remain there three years without coming back. It takes some heroism to do that, though a busy world has not stopped long enough to give it recognition.

The Sunday school is very glad to welcome Mr. Cheek and family from Saxapahaw; hope they will like us as well as we like them.

We have just about completed our Sunday school rooms, thanks to our pastor, who worked so hard. Guess we will get the furnace in next week.

Harmony, Yarborough Ct.—Our Sunday school has been called in for several Sundays. But we are so glad to get together again, and hope we won't be called in any more.

Our pastor. Rev. O. B. Williams, preached a splendid sermon to a very large congregation Sunday night.

Mrs. Cleo Hughes, wife of Mr. A. K. Hughes, died at her home Jan. 9th with flu followed by pneumonia. She was laid to rest at Harmony cemetery on Friday at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Hughes was a faithful member of the Methodist Protestant Church. She will be greatly missed, not only by her husband and little children, but will be greatly missed at her church. Besides her husband and four small children she leaves father, mother, three sisters and one brother, who now is in France We extend our heart-felt sympathy to each of her loved ones and especially to her husband and children.

St. Paul's—Our Record,

Twelve members added to the church. Our assessment for Annual and Gen. Conference Budget forwarded to Rev. S. W. Taylor, Treas.

The campaign for M. P. Herald not completed but we went "over the top" last Sunday. The pastor will not press the matter further; but will be glad to take other names.

A nice carpet placed on the Baraca room at a cost of nearly $50.00. The Sunday school and prayer meeting well attended. Congregations fairly good. Pastor's salary paid up to date and a little over. This is our record for the first two months.

We are praying for a great revival at St. Paul's. Won't you join us in this prayer and let us include all churches everywhere?

Monday morning, Jan. 27th, 1919.

Vance Ct—Dear Brethren: President Andrews will visit this charge Feb. 8, 9, 10. He and the pastor wish to see the church officials, members, and our friends, yes, everybody, at the churches as follows. Now don't have cold feet. If it's a mule, start early—it is is an auto start in time. Bro Andrews will preach to quarterly conference and all who will attend at 11 o'clock on Saturday before second Sunday, Flat Rock is the place,—dinner on the ground. After dinner business of quarterly conference. Saturday night at 8 o'clock he will preach at Spring Valley; second Sunday morning, at 11 o'clock, Harris Chapel. Gillburg at 8 o'clock P. M ; Monday A, M., 11 o'clock, New Hope. We are expecting Bro. Andrews to bring us some good things; let's give him a full house at each appointment Brethren: Do your best—bring out the whole family and your neighbors. If all the officials from each church will attend, we'll give you a golden star.

I hope the readers of the dear old Herald will pardon me for appearing in the Herald columns so often. This kind people do so many nice things to their pastor that I just can't help but tell you about them. Last Friday evening, Bro. Frank Ellington, wife, Mr. and Mrs. H. G Ellington, Miss Louise Ellington, and Miss May Wilson, representing about twenty-five or thirty of the members and friends of Harris Chapel, drove up in Bro. Frank's auto, bringing the pastor a fine shoat about three months old; a fine $12 buggy robe; $4 in money to buy a pair of gloves; several bags of oranges and apples. Today we were made warm and comfortable with this handsome robe as we drove out to Gillburg. We found a very good congregation of attentive listeners and the pastor enjoyed preaching to them again after being held by flu for more than four months. I went home with Bro. Sol Satterwhite to dinner; visited the Misses Satterwhite—had a pleasant evening. When I reached home and went to take my grip from rear of buggy I found a nice bucket of lard. Ididn't know it till now, no one had said a word. I accuse Sister Sol Satterwhite of this. I know I didn't steal it. We are profoundly grateful for all these nice things. We hope and pray that God will use us in some way to lead you in the way of life.

Come again, dear friends; we love to have you visit us even when you don't come with good things for us. We just love to see you anyway. May God abundantly reward thee and bless us that we may be a blessing. Truly. your pastor,

H. L. Powell.

Burlington.—On the job again! after an absence of over six months from the good old Tar Heel state, the writer is very thankful for the opportunity of resuming his former position as reporter for the Burlington church. Like thousands of others who sacrificed the pleasures and privileges of home and the home church, I am glad indeed to be back with loved ones and enjoy the blessings obtained by attending and trying to labor for the Master in the church dear to my heart.

Last Sunday was a beautiful and pleasant day, and the attendance at Sunday school and church services was very good. There were 146 in Sunday school. It was the first real Sunday school that the writer has attended in over six months.

At the morning church service our pastor delivered a most inspiring and helpful sermon, the theme of which was, "The New Earth." The text was taken from Rev. 21:1. In the evening service the subject of the sermon was. "Exaltation of the Humble," the text being James 4:10.

The Junior C. E. society met at 4:00 Sunday afternoon, and the Senior society held their regular meeting at 6:30 P. M. The attendance at the Senior meeting was splendid, and several members made short talks on the topic, "Books that have helped me," Three new members were received into the society.

Mrs. W. C Durham, who suffered a severe attack of influenza which later developed into pneumonia, was called to her heavenly home on Monday morning of this week. In the death of Mrs. Durham the family is bereaved of a devoted mother, the neighborhood a good woman and the church a loyal member. Obituary in her memory will be written by her pastor

The attendance at our regular midweek prayer meeting services has increased during the past two weeks. which is very encouraging to our pastor.

Our pastor, Bro. Pritchard, is an exceptionally good preacher. pastor and citizen. He not only believes in ministering to the spiritual needs of his congregation and church, but believes in helping his fellowmen under all circumstances and conditions of life. About two weeks ago he communicated with the War Department asking for the release of one of his members, Bro J. E. Brown, in order that he might return home and help care for his bereaved sisters and wife. This week he sent a cablegram direct to General Pershing asking the release of Bro. Brown Perhaps there is no other man in the North Carolina Conference who has communicated directly with Gen. Persking in behalf of a brother. We sincerely hope that the efforts to have Bro. Brown released will be successful, as he is a valuable member of our church.

Next Sunday we will have the regular monthly communion service at 11:00 A. M. Also the reception of new members at this service. At the evening church service the Senior C. E. society will observe the 37th anniversary of the founding of the Christian Endeavor movement. Appropriate exercises consisting of special music and addresses by C. E. members will be the program. We hope to have a large attendance at all the services.

Best wishes to the readers of the Herald. C. B. Way, Reporter.

New Hope, Why Not Ct.—Many changes have taken place since our last report.

We were glad when we learned that the armistice had been signed, for we had been praying for peace all the while, but we had not been praying for a change of pastors. We get the unexpected sometimes.

It was with reluctance that we gave up Mr. Ashburn, but nevertheless we will not grumble. Our present pastor preached for us yesterday, the fourth Sunday. He made a favorable impression. We believe he is a man of God in deed and truth. Everyone present enjoyed his sermon. We realized that his sermons will be manna to the soul. May there be much rejoicing this conference year in the presence of angels because the lost have been found and the dead are alive.

May we begin this year aright by giving ourselves fully into thy hands. We cannot carry out our good resolves unless we do this. Mrs. S. N. Allen.

Seagrove, N. C.

Mt. Pleasant, North Davidson.—We have been very quiet at Mt. Pleasant for some time owing to the flu. Our S. S. has been suspended since conference and now we have decided to stay in until spring and hope to start up with new life and energy. Some may think this is a sign of decay, but we feel that it will be better to wait until the flu has blown over, than to be demoralized and hindered all winter. Bro. Cecil came to his appointment the 4th Sunday in December, but had no hearers to preach to; it rained nearly all day. So you see we are a little late getting started. However, Bro. Cecil filled his appointment yesterday; when I say filled I mean every word. His sermon was of high order and a spiritual uplift.

While we have had but one service since conference our finances are in fine shape. Every claim met to date and we are going to try to maintain this standard, for I know our pastor will do his part and feel sure that the membership will co-operate with him.

Bro. Cecil is no stranger to us, having grown up with several of the people in this community; therefore we had learned to love him before he came to preach to us.

I want to say a word in regard to our former pastor, Bro. Reed, who served us so faithfully last year. He will always have a warm place in our hearts and we know that the Stanly people will learn to love him and co-operate with him.

Will say that the Boundary Committee we believe did the wise thing when they divided the Yadkin College Circuit and formed the North Davidson, for I hear some good reports from Bro. Braswell on the Lexington Mission and believe it was the best solution of problems before them.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers. J. R. Stone, Reporter.

The Alabama Hills.

Broadway, N. C., Jan. 27, 1919.

Dear Editor: I am writing from the Alabama Hills in Harnett Co. to thank the one that was so thoughtful and kind to have the Methodist Protestant Herald sent to me. They could not have sent anything for the same money that would have pleased me better. It comes as a friend visiting as I am so far away from any one up on the Alabama hills which I am told received their name from some soldiers escaping from Alabama and camping on these hills. From one of the hills I am told with the aid of a telescope we can see the state house in Raleigh and on a clear day with the natural eye one can see smoke rising from smoke stacks at Dunn, N. C. We live only twenty-five or thirty yards from the road that was cut out by Lord Cornwallis and his men. Our nearest church is Barbacue, a new church built just across the road from the old one founded and worshiped in by Flora McDonald.

A Herald reader. Mrs N. D. Reece.

Thomasville.—It has been sometime since a report has appeared from this charge, but we are still going ahead just as if we had a pastor with us every Sunday.

Our Sunday school is moving along fine, under the leadership of our newly elected superintendent, Mr. C. F. Finch, who has the reputation of making things move when he takes hold.

We had an interesting school this morning with a good enrollment present.

Our line-up for the year is as follows: Supt., C. F. Finch; Asst. Supt., D. R. Connell; teachers — Baracas, J. W. Boyles; Jr. Baracas, Mrs. C. F. Finch; Philatheas, Miss Kathleen Hall; Jr. Philatheas, Miss Grace Harris; teen-age boys, Miss Williams; Busy Bees, Miss Pearl Perry, Asst.; intermediates, Mrs. E. M. Westmoreland; Wee Girls, Mrs. T. G. Perry; Sec., Miss Myrtle Perry; Asst. Sec and Treas., Geo. H. White.

The above staff, well organized, means a live Sunday school.

Our pastor, Bro. Abernethy, will be on his job next Sunday, and we hope to have a good-sized audience to welcome him in his new field of labor.

The stewards are getting busy with their lists preparatory for a meeting which will convene in the Philathea room of the church on Wednesday evening, the 29th, on which the year's work will have begun.

It is rather an unusual time to begin organizing church work, but such seems to be our luck this year. We hope to succeed just the same. Another negligence just like this would almost disorganize us. Yet by a little perseverance on the part of the membership we hope to recover the lost ground, ere the year is gone. We trust that Conference will not neglect us another year. The Stationing Committee of our Annual Conference knew our needs almost as well as the people of the Thomasville Charge, because most of the trio have been here.

This is not written for any reflection on the part of the Stationing Committee, but is just a reminder that if the Methodist Protestant church of Thomasville expects to thrive, it must be so protected under the hovering wing of the Annual Conference.

Yours for a year of service.

D. R. Connell.

Orange Ct.—Influenza has again visited the immediate communities of Chestnut Ridge and Efland churches. It has, associated with pneumonia, claimed four persons in and near Efland. Some few new cases of influenza have been reported, yet all seem to be convalescing now. We are certainly glad to report, if conditions continue to grow favorable, we can resume our church services beginning with the month of February.

Owing to the epidemic during the month just closing, we were hindered with our first quarterly conference for this charge. It is hoped now that we can hold it on Saturday before the third Sunday in February at Efland church. Will those who are interested please note the time?

The pastor has preached but twice since

Christmas; however, he has been busy visiting, and he may call in interest of the spread of literature—especially our church papers. H. Fred Surratt.

Yadkin College. We are glad that our church is open so we can have preaching and S. S. again. We have so much to be thankful for. Have only had a few cases of influenza and no deaths. One of our members, Mrs. Herman Chaver, who lives at Reeds, is very sick; we hope and pray that she and her two little children may soon be well. All have the influenza.

Brother Braswell preaches for us the first Sunday at three, and at eleven the third Sunday. Those who thought they were perfecting one circuit by culling off what they considered the dead heads did us a good deed in more ways than one. It should be remembered that there are only five heads of families in the place that belong to our church, and three of those are widows. Our young men and women are nearly all away, some in France and different cities. We now have fourteen members at home, and while some members in one of our sister churches can pay one hundred dollars down on their assessment, it means something for us to raise $125; but we are going to do it, for we have almost half of it paid.

We wish to thank all who had anything to do with sending Bro. Braswell to us. He is simply wonderful, is the least we can say. A man of God that has time to go into the homes of the rich and the poor, read and pray for each one at home and far away. Oh! for the time to come when all pastors may be filled with the Spirit of God. One of our most intelligent men, an M. E., says he has heard eminent divines in different cities, but never heard better sermons than those Bro. Braswell has preached here this year. Others say they never heard anything to equal his communion sermon last third Sunday. All who can, come and hear him.

Charlotte Tidings.

Misses Ollie, Inez, Lillie and Nora Hinshaw have been visiting relatives near Worthville for the past two weeks. Misses Inez and Lillie have returned to Charlotte but Miss Ollie became a victim of flu and she and Miss Nora have not yet returned, but they are expected this week. We have missesd these four sisters very much during their absence; they are among our very best workers. Miss Ollie is our reporter and her being away accounts for there not being a report from Charlotte last week.

We are glad to note that Bro. Jno. Muse who has been quite sick is now rapidly improving and in a short time he is expected to again be among the actives of the work of the church.

Mrs. Henry Muse and Mrs. Pfifer are now on the sick list. We missed them very much from the church services and it is hoped they will soon be with us again.

Mrs. W. R. Lowdermilk has recently moved to Charlotte and we were indeed glad to have her, Miss Jessie Tagg, and Master William in the congregation on Sunday morning.

A series of prayer meetings has been on for a number of weeks which have been very interesting. These meetings have been conducted by laymen representing the various departments of the church work.

Some weeks ago our class leader began a Win-One campaign. Cards to be used are being circulated among the people and each one is urged to try to win at least one for the Master.

Last Sunday morning was Enlistment Day service. Each person in the congregation was given a card which indicated the various things for which each one was urged to enlist. The cards when filled out and signed are to be handed in to the pastor.

On last Monday afternoon the pastor received a message from Bro. C. O. Garmon stating that he would probably be at the parsonage on that evening to consider some very important matters pertaining to church work. The pastor was at home looking for Bro. Garmon. Bro. Garmon made good his promise to be at the parsonage and more, for when he came he was found to be leading a company consisting of a large portion of the congregation and each one was well loaded with good eats and other donations. This was only another way by which the good Charlotte people showed their goodness and their thoughtfulness of the welfare of the pastor and his family. After the people unloaded the good things they brought we all gathered in the reception hall and parlor and spent the evening in a very delightful manner, conversing happily, singing beautiful songs and lifting our voices and hearts to the Heavenly Father in earnest prayer asking for his divine blessings. When the company had dispersed the pastor and family at once proceeded to the dining-room to further investigate the quantities of good things which had been unloaded upon us. There we found good eats of almost every description besides other articles of usefulness. We found, too, that many persons who could not be present had not forgotten to send their donations. We do not know how many persons were present or how many articles or varieties were presented, but we do know that there was enough left in our dining room to furnish supplies for many days to come and enough good done to make happy thoughts for all time to come. May the good Lord richly bless these good people who were so thoughtful and so generous. It is impossible for any pastor to repay them but we believe there is a record being kept of all these good deeds and that each one will be greatly rewarded by the one who is keeping the record.

Again asking God's richest blessings upon Charlotte, I am,

Their pastor. Geo. L. Curry.

Stanly.—Had it again, though not so severe, perhaps, as the first case, but I believe the effect was about as severe—no, no, not the flu, but another pounding, and I assure you that we enjoyed it the more because it came from Bro. Moton's flock. The promoters in this pleasing remembrance were Mrs. Wade Lowder, Mrs. James Gantt, and Mrs. Charley Sell. I guess it's force of habit. They did this way when we were their pastor three years ago. And, too, Mrs. S. P. Dry, in a quiet, good-natured way, is continually contributing to our comfort. Thank you, good folks, we enjoy it.

Porter is becoming somewhat troublesome. Mr. Editor: up to now, you have been sending one Herald to this church. Now, if it won't be too much trouble, send seven, and maybe you will be required to do more later. W. D. Reed.

[The editor likes this kind of trouble.]

Zoar, Mecklenburg Ct.—After waiting so long I will try to write a few lines. Cannot tell how things are coming on at Zoar because I am at the S. I. I. in school. I attend the Methodist church near Hoskins in Charlotte. Rev. Mr. Forbes certainly does deliver interesting sermons. I delight very much in hearing him. He spoke to a large congregation tonight. The church was almost full. We had a nice little singing at the auditorium this afternoon. We girls have prayer meetings every Thursday night, which are very interesting. Rev. J. A. Baldwin lectures on the Bible about three mornings each week. We are now studying the gospel of St. John. Bonnie and myself like our school work fine and hope to be very successful. With best wishes to the Herald and its many readers. Reporter.

The Best Things in Christian Endeavor.

Titus 2: 11-14; 3: 8.

Christian Endeavor Day.

Thirty-seven years ought to be a long enough time to determine whether any organization has merit and whether it is worthy of our loyal support. By the test of time and by the test of accomplishment the Christian Endeavor movement abundantly justifies itself. Indeed, it was never stronger than it is to-day. It isn't old enough yet to have entered its second childhood, but it does appear to have renewed its youth. And it is good to know that in this renewed enthusiasm the South, where for so long Christian Endeavor has made no progress, is taking the lead.

What are the best things in Christian Endeavor? Out of all the many good things that Christian Endeavor has brought us it is difficult to select a few and call them best. But there are certain things that stand out in the movement that may be emphasized.

1. The Pledge. I think there must have been something of inspiration in the forming of the Christian Endeavor pledge. It is a great document. Its very first sentence sets a foundation for our lives, an ideal for accomplishment. "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him that I will strive to do whatever he would like to have me do." That in itself is a great program. And we need a program. But added to that are standards which make for largest possible spiritual life. Daily prayer. Daily Bible reading. Support of the church. Church attendance. Participation in testimony and service. These are the stones of a great arch which is capped by the keystone of a great slogan: "For Christ and the Church."

Each one of these standards has in turn been the inspiration for great movements within and without the organization. I refer particularly to the "Comrades of the Quiet Hour;" "The Tenth Legion;" "The Life Work Recruits."

2. The Missionary Impulse. It will not be denied, indeed the leaders in missionary effort have so testified, that the enthusiasm for missions has been largely the result of Christian Endeavor training. The great missionary leaders, like Speer, Mott and Zwemer, were members of the Christian Endeavor Society. The Student Volunteer Movement is a direct outcome of Christian Endeavor missionary activity, and so of the Layman's Missionary Movement. And the larger part of the missionaries on the foreign field are or were members of Christian Endeavor. It has turned many a young person's eyes toward the fields afar, who otherwise would not have seen the vision.

Not only has the personnel of the mission fields been recruited largely from Christian Endeavor. The gifts to missions have also been increased through the missionary emphasis that Christian Endeavor has given. The men of means have not forgotten their early training.

3. Temperance Sentiment. It may be claiming too much to say that the recent victories for prohibition, culminating in the ratification of the amendment to the Federal Constitution, have been due in great part to the Christian Endeavor movement; but there isn't any question but that Endeavorers, singly and collectively, have been exceedingly active in the temperance propaganda. At the Atlantic City Convention, while it was yet a dream and before any movement had been organized to bring about its accomplishment, the Christian Endeavorers sent out the slogan: "A Saloonless Nation by 1920." That did more to crystallize sentiment than anything else in the history of the prohibition movement. Christian Endeavor stands for the clean life, personally, civically, nationally.

4. Denominational Loyalty. Christian Endeavor teaches one to love his own church. A pastor can have no more loyal members than those who belong to the Christian Endeavor Society.

5. Interdenominational Fellowship. Christian Endeavor has shown the world what it never saw before: loyalty to one's own church with a broad sympathy and a hearty co-operation with those of other churches. Long before there was any concerted action among the denominations, the great Christian Endeavor conventions with the local unions and the county and state organizations, were getting the young people of the churches together for fellowship, inspiration, and service.

6. Christian Training. Some one is authority for the statement that seventy five per cent. of those engaged in distinctively Christian work got their start in a young people's society, either Christian Endeavor or a similar organization. It is, as no other organization of the church, the training school of the church. It is my firm conviction that if we want our church to develop, if we desire to raise up trained leaders for the church, there is no better way, I dare to say no other way, than through the Christian Endeavor society.

I would not close this discussion without a word of personal testimony: If I am anything to the Conference and to the Church today, it is in large part due to the training I received in the Christian Endeavor society in my old home church in New York. I came into it when I most needed something of the sort to steady me and to give my life direction. I was converted in a Christian Endeavor prayer meeting; the pledge helped me overcome the temptations of three years of life among the coal miners and lumbermen in West Virginia; the society, by its sympathy and financial aid, saw me through eight years of college training; and the impulse to enter the ministry was the result of a little talk with a member of the society. That is my valuation of Christian Endeavor.

MARRIED.

Gillam-Hunter.

Sunday, Jan. 19, at 4:00 o'clock P. M. Sgt. Eugene F. Gillam and Miss Neva Hunter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hunter, Greensboro, N. C., were united in matrimony at the Grace M. P. parsonage, Rev. C. W. Bates officiating. The occasion was only witnessed by a few friends.

Sgt. Gillam is of Hannibal, Mo. He has been in service at Camp Green, Charlotte, N. C., since March, 1918.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Gillam left on No. 35 for their future home in Des Moines, Iowa.

The many friends of the happy couple wish them a very long and prosperous wedded life.

On the evening of Jan. 22, 1919, at the home of the bride, Mr. Arthur B. Pritchett and Miss Mamie Lambeth were united in marriage by the undersigned. Quite a number of invited guests were present, and after the ceremony all were invited in to supper. It was a real sensible and satisfying supper. No iced cheese boxes made to look like cakes, for the real article was there in abundance.

THE OLD NEGRO'S SOLILOQUY.

De Lawd, He had a job for me,
But I had so much to do
I tole 'im to get somebody else,
Or wait till I get fru.
I dunno how de Lawd come out,
He seemed to get along,
But I felt kinder sneaky like,
Cause I knowed I'd done him wrong.
One day I need de Lawd myself,
And need 'im right away;
He neber answered me a word,
But deep down in my 'cusin' heart
I thought I heard 'im say:
"Nigger, I'se got so much ter do,
You'd better get somebody else,
Or wait till I get fru."
Now when de Lawd He hab a job,
I never tries to shirk;
I quits whate'er I hab ter do
An' does de good Lawd's work.
My own affairs can run along,
Or wait till I get fru,
Fer nobody else can do de job
De Lawd's laid out fer you.

A GRAIN OF SAND.

"Mother, mother, there's something in my eye. Please take it out quick."

"Why, what is it?"

"I do not know. It's an awful thing. The wind blew it in my eye a minute ago."

The mother examined the afflicted eye carefully, but could not find anything except tears. "I don't see anything in it, dearie."

"But it's there, mother. Please get it out. It makes me feel so uncomfortable."

"Well, Flossy, I think we had better go to Dr. Wright and see what he can do."

"Ah!" said the doctor. And in an instant he held his instrument toward her. "Here it is."

"Where?" asked the mother. "I don't see anything."

"I don't either," said Flossy; "but my eye does not hurt any longer."

"It's just a tiny speck of sand," replied the doctor, "too small to see unless you know where to look for it."

Some days afterwards Flossy was fidgeting about the room where her mother was sewing. It was rainy weather out of doors, and Flossy was in a bad humor; nothing pleased her.

"Please don't Flossy," said her mother over again. "You make me very uncomfortable. If you do not stop worrying, you must go away by yourself."

Flossy sat down by the window, pouting. In a little while her face brightened, and she came to her mother and put a little soft kiss on her cheek. I'm like the grain of sand, mother. Don't you think so?" she said.

"What do you mean?"

"I'm not very big, but I make people uncomfortable when my temper gets in the wrong way. I love you truly, and I would not hurt you, as that sand did me, for anything. The sand could not help itself, but I can and I will right away."—Our Boys and Girls.

—The Wesleyan Christian Advocate of Atlanta announces that "Miss Mary Custis Lee, daughter of Gen. Robert E. Lee, who died some days ago, bequeathed to relatives and institutions in Virginia the sum of $157,000. She requested in her will that her body be cremated. She was the last surviving child of the illustrious Confederate general."

—Mrs. Commuter had lain awake with a headache till one o'clock. Then in the balance of the night she had responded to several calls for a drink, a doll, and all the other nocturnal infantile orders. At five in the morning, as she was just beginning to round out the first continuous hour of slumber, the little six-year-old girl called softly from her crib:

"Mother."

No answer. Again, a little louder: "Mother."

Mother said nothing. Again the child's voice, this time mezzo-forte:

"Mother."

"Well, what is it?"

"Mother, isn't it too bad that one of Harry McCole's polliwogs died."—The New York Times.

The Christian Advocate of Nashville, in its issue of Dec. 27, says:

"Seven preachers were returned at the recent session of the Virginia Conference to their charges for the fifth year. So far as we are informed, this is the largest number in any one Conference to be returned for the fifth year."

—"Yes," said Simpkins, "I want to do my bit, of course, so I thought I'd raise some potatoes."

"Well, I thought I would do that," said Smith, "but when I looked up the way to do it I found that potatoes have to be planted in hills, and our yard is perfectly flat."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Never before in the world's history have all the forms of life been shaken into such plasticity. To win a material victory will not suffice; or even the moral one of which Viviani spoke, through some political organization of the dominant alliance. The victory must rise into the spiritual realm, and it can only do so, as it is definitely conjoined with the principles that Jesus proclaimed for His kingdom. For this end, the Church, true and spiritual, is alone sufficient.—A. B. Moss.

—It has been well said that no man ever sank under the burden of today. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is more than a man can bear. Never load yourselves so, my friends. If you find yourselves so loaded, at least remember this: It is your own doing, not God's. He begs you to leave the future to Him, and mind the present.—G. MacDonald.

My heart has often gone out to aged people who, after lives of industry, find themselves in their latter years condemned to idleness because there is nothing for them to do. It is thoroughly mistaken kindness to take all work out of their hands. Beautiful as it may be in poetry for grandfather and grandmother to sit with folded hands in the gloaming awaiting the summons home, these same old people would generally be tenfold happier if they had some regular duties, not too strenuous in character, to engage their minds and occupy their energies. Those who come down to the boundary of years in fullest content, a joy to themselves and a comfort to their loved ones, are those whose work slackens but does not cease, until the end. They fulfill the description of the Psalmist, "They shall still bring forth fruit in old age."

There are tasks in every household that the aged, when in fair health, may perform effectively, and they should be allowed and encouraged to perform them. It is cruel to allow them to sit in the chimney corner in moody discontent with themselves and their surroundings, when [illegible] and the days filled with interest and the nights with refreshing sleep. To the light tasks, such as to mend the stockings, to arrange flowers for the table, may not [illegible]

A pastor writes to inquire whether the goals here named are for all the church papers or just for the Herald. The action of Conference recorded in the Journal left the editor in some doubt as to its intention. As no other committee was named to apportion the proposed 1,000 new subscriptions, he decided to set the goals so as to aggregate 1,000, leaving to pastors and people the apportionment among our three church papers. The president in one of his letters indicated his understanding that 1,000 were to be sought for the Herald, and the committee appointed to plan the campaign planned with that number in view, though they also indicated another goal for the Methodist Protestant. However, we will count new yearly subscriptions for either the Methodist Protestant or the Methodist Recorder if pastors will report them to us. We assume what was intended by Conference was an earnest, general effort to extend the circulation of our church papers, with no discrimination against any, but with a desire that our people may be made better church members by becoming more intelligent as to church affairs.

From Bro. Bowman.

Your committee appointed to plan for one thousand new subscribers to our church paper is glad to note the work that is being done by a number of our pastors and charges.

We note the following facts from the new subscriptions already sent in (last week's paper). First, that two pastors have reached the goal; one of these more than reached it.

Second, that thirty-seven pastors have sent in new subscriptions ranging in numbers from one to twelve. These thirty-seven pastors have sent in a total of one hundred and thirty-eight subscriptions.

Third, thirty pastors have not sent in any subscriptions.

We wonder why these thirty pastors have not as yet reported any subscriptions? Is it because the pastors have not been in the field? or is it because the people will not subscribe when they are appealed to? As a non-subscriber is not likely to read this we will tack the blame on him. For there is no danger of his kicking.

Let me say, Bro. Pastor, be sure that the non-subscriber has been thoroughly canvassed before you blame him. We expect, however, before this appears in print the thirty will be materially lessened.

I feel sure no pastor or circuit is willing to see a blank after his charge, or even anything less than the entire goal. Let us notice with interest the circuits as they get on the honor roll. They will be spelled with CAPITAL LETTERS. And let us also notice which will be the last circuit with a blank after it. Bro. Pastors, it is going to be one of you. Each circuit is expected to make a special and persistent effort to get every official of the church to subscribe for the paper. As soon as any pastor succeeds to do this, he is expected to report to the editor and I ask him to designate that charge by a star.

No pastor is supposed to stop when the goal is reached, but to continue his canvass until the final goal is reached, the church paper in every Methodist Protestant family. Let us all get busy and note from week to week and see what can be done by united and persistent effort.

J. H. Bowman, One of Committee.

I am very glad to report that Dr Holmes has placed Alamance Ct. on the Honor Roll. Who next? I am sure there are others coming across very soon. I understand from our chairman, Bro. Milliken, that he expects to call a meeting of the Board of Directors in something like three weeks hence. I am sure he will give you notice through the Herald and I believe all pledges in by that time will go on the Honor Roll. However, you will hear from him through the Herald.

I am very anxious to pay off the last note and stop interest. I want to thank every one for making it possible to clear our fine property of debt. Let me hear from you at once.

Reidsville News.

The influenza has again died down somewhat so that we are able to have services both at Reidsville and at Bethany. There is an average amount of interest at least at each church. Reidsville is beginning to wake up as to the need of Sunday school rooms. A committee has been appointed to investigate and make recommendations to our next monthly business meeting. Our Sunday school has long since outgrown our room.

The first quarterly conference was held Jan. 29th in the Reidsville church. The pastor was sick in bed at the time, but Bro. J. F. Dixon held the conference for me. I hear that there was a good attendance from both churches, and a good conference. I am delighted to see the official members taking interest in the business of the church. It means progress for the church and the kingdom.

In my last report I reported ten dollars from the Sunday school for the Armenian and Syrian relief fund. Since then one member of the Reidsville church handed me a check for fifty dollars for the same purpose. I am not allowed to tell who that member was. You may guess if you wish to.

We are sorry to report the illness of Sister Thomas Taylor, one of our Reidsville members, and trust that she may soon be well again. Bro. J. A. Dixon's family has had influenza for several days. His youngest boy, Rogers, now has pneumonia, but is not seriously ill, we hope. Mrs. Kernodle and Mrs. Mary Hopkins, both of whom have been unwell recently were able to attend church Sunday. Mrs. A. P. Sands and family who have been sick for a few days are also better now.

Sunday, Jan. 19th, we received into membership at the Reidsville church Mrs. Sam Roberts, who was formerly a member of Sandy Cross church. Last Sunday Mr. W. D. Burton and her son Horace were received by certificate from Grace M. E. church, Newport News, Va. We give all of these a cordial elcome and pray the blessings of heaven and of the church upon them. Yours in service,

L. W. Gerringer, Pastor.

Reidsville, N. C., Jan. 27, 1919.

North Davidson Ct—A good day Sunday at Mt Pleasant and Canaan, fair attendance. Spent Sat night with J. R. Stone. Made some visits Sunday A. M. Met my appointment at 11 A. M. Arrived at Canaan in time for Sunday school. Preaching at 3 P. M. Spent Sun. night with the Father Berrier in Canaan community. Elected church officers at Canaan and local reporters at both churches, and the members and pastor will expect monthly reports from these reporters. Both of these churches use the budget system and have paid up to date. Canaan has overpaid.

Thanks to the following for edibles: W. D Payne, G. A. Berrier and wife. I have heard of just a few people who criticize pastors for reporting through the paper the article given them, but I see no impropriety in reporting these kindnesses shown us by the good people we serve. Should the donors object I think it would be our duty to respect their wishes in the matter. So I have decided in my mind to continue to report all the kindness in this line shown me by my people regardless of what Mr. or Mrs. "Peter Slewfoot" may think or say. So let our people come on with the good things they want to share with their pastor and I am sure it will be appreciated by any pastor we have and believe our president would appreciate a ham or chicken put in his "John Henry" occasionally. Being the president he fails to receive these gifts like pastors, or at least I did.

C. A. Cecil.

Notice

To the six churches on North Davidson Ct.:

As instructed by the first quarterly conference, I have apportioned the pastor's salary and general interests of the circuit to the various churches as follows:

Mt Pleasant	244.48
Friendship	222.40
Canaan	123.93

Total	$1655.00

Of the above amount the pastor's salary is $1200.00 and the Annual and Gen. Conference Budgets and interest on the deferred payments of president's parsonage is $455.00.

A. H. Evans,
Circuit Financier.

Canaan, No. Davidson Ct It has been quite a little while since we have had anything to appear in the Herald from our church, though that is no proof that we're asleep. Yesterday was a good day for us. Bro. Cecil filled his appointment; as this was his first day service at our place, he had quite a lot to attend to, though this did not hinder his giving his message strongly to us. He tried to impress upon our minds the thought that "Ye have not passed this way heretofore." Our church work has been hindered on account of flu and now that it seems to be decreasing our S. S. has gotten back to nearly normal again. We are giving one Sunday collection to the Children's Home.

A collection was taken yesterday for the European sufferers. Quite a good amount was given, also $30.50 on Budget. We are much pleased with having Bro. Cecil as our pastor. We feel that with such a leader our church will have a good year. We are praying for the best year our church has ever known.

Much success to the Herald and its many readers.

Mrs. Bert Weavil, Rep.

Concord—In the report from Concord last week the S. S. attendance was reported as 116. This was a mistake (don't know whether it was mine or the printer's) as our attendance was 216. The attendance was off some last Sunday, only 150 present.

We are getting along fine with the finances at our church. Everything was reported paid in full to date last Sunday.

The attendance at our Wednesday night Bible readings is very good and Bro. Lowdermilk is making the meetings interesting. Mr Roland Haupt, who has been in service for the past five months, stationed at Camp Franklin, Md., has received an honorable discharge and returned home. We are very glad to have him back with us again.

Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk, who has been at her mother's since their accident, is better and is expected home this week.

Lexington Mission.—Sunday was a good day for us at Lexington. We had two good services, one at 11 A. M., another at 7 P. M. The Lord was with us in both services. Our congregations are increasing. They have more than doubled at Lexington, and the interest is growing at each church. I truly thank all my people for their kindness to me. They have freely given me the use of their automobiles and other conveyances to help me to get [illegible] the work. The outlook at each church is good. The people of Lexington seem to be glad that we are desiring to build a good church there and they say they will help us build. We have been looking at some lots, seem to be good locations. I want us to redeem Yadkin College and make it Junior College. Brethren pray for us.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Littleton Charge.—I was sent to this charge by the Annual Conference and was a little late in getting here, owing to the fact that my daughter was taken sick while we were in Greensboro, en route to this charge. She had a real bad spell of asthma which lasted for four days. Therefore we had to stop off in Burlington with her, so that we could get a doctor at once and give her the proper attention. And we are glad to inform our many friends, at this time she is able to be out again. During the meantime we decided to spend a few days through Christmas with home folks, which we did. After which, I left there for my new field of work at Littleton. I arrived here on the 29th of Dec. and through the kindness of Mr. A. M. Newsom, of the M. E. Church, I was taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Glasgow, where I was very kindly received, and well cared for until my household goods came on Monday, Dec. 30th.

Bro. A. E. Carter came for me about 10:30 A. M. and just as soon as we could get the car placed and opened we had my household goods moved to the parsonage. However, we did not get through with this work until late Mnday evening, after which we drove seven miles out in the country to Bro. A. E. Carter's home where I had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Carter's family, and spent the night. When we arrived Mrs. Carter had a good, nice, well-prepared supper for us, and you believe me, I was well prepared for the supper too, because we did not take time that day to eat dinner. I blame Bro. Carter for this, but I made up for lost time, and got even with him that night at the supper table. Thank you, Sister Carter, for the nice dinner prepared and placed in my buggy.

My family arrived here on Tuesday, Dec. 31st, and were met at the depot by Bro. W. N. Thornton, of this town, and taken to his home, where we were invited to take supper. There we had the pleasure of meeting Sister W. N. Thornton, and the two children, Helen and Mildred.

After a brief conversation with the family, the call came for supper, and when we entered the dining room we found the table well spread with a general variety of nice, good, wholesome, and delicious food, which was well prepared, and of course we were prepared for it, after a day's hard work in the parsonage, and my family had just gotten in from Burlington. Shortly after we had all partaken of this great feast and certainly did enjoy it, we asked to be excused which was granted on certain conditions, and a promise that we would call again. We then went to the parsonage where Mrs. Loy and the two children were given a perfect welcome and an introduction to their new home, in the beautiful little town of Littleton.

Well, you are anxious to know how we are liking our new charge. I can't tell you now, because we haven't been here long enough to spend our judgment fully in this matter.

We haven't been out very much on account of the "flu" and it seems to be more prevalent now than it was last fall. I was informed yesterday that the graded school committee have closed our school here until next September. We have right much work here to be done right away.

So far as we have been in the homes of the people here, we have been very kindly received by them.

A good many of our people here have been sick, but we are glad to note that most of them are out again, and we are hoping for the others a speedy recovery.

Many thanks to Bro. G. L. Barnes's family for fresh butter-milk and sausage and to Bro Wilson of Weavers Chapel for a lot of nice sweet potatoes. Thank you, Sister. W. N. Thornton, for the waiter full of nice cake and ketchup yesterday at noon. We fully appreciate all these tokens of love. May the blessings of Almighty God rest upon each of you, is our prayer. And God grant that we may be a blessing to this charge. Brethren, pray for us.

With kindest regards and warmest affection for each of you, I am,

Very truly yours, D. M. Loy,
Pastor.

Littleton, N. C., Jan. 20, 1919.

Albemarle.—Perhaps the readers of the Herald would like to know what has become of us, as there has been no report from this charge since Conference. Well, our work is moving along very nicely.

We entered upon the work the first Sunday in Dec. and have been on the job ever since. Our people received us back on the work with open arms, and in a substantial way still show their appreciation of our being among them. It has been our privilege in the past to serve many who were loyal Methodist Protestants; but it has never been ours to serve a people who as a whole were more loyal and co-operative than the people of Albemarle. On the second Sunday in Dec. the officers of the church were installed. On Friday night, before the first Sunday in Jan. our first quarterly conference convened. Because of the weather and "flu" conditions, there were but few of the officials out; but those present seemed to be deeply interested in the work, and ready to take hold of any suggestion from the pastor regarding the best plans for the work during the year.

It is always encouraging to a pastor when his people are willing to be led. The board of stewards met per the Church law, and made out their plans to cover all the assessments, and using the card plan, and going to each individual member, they found in the ready response of the membership more than enough to pay all claims.

They have agreed to pay weekly or monthly. We want to say just here, the only way to succeed is to have a plan, and then work it. Any pastor or church that does not have a definite plan is like a ship without a rudder; if it steers clear of the rock or sand, it will be a happenso.

Our Sunday school with J. E. Gantt superintendent, who is known as a live wire, and his teaching force, is doing splendid work. Last Sunday was a record-breaker; the attendance was much better than it has been since Conference, and even better than it was a year ago. At the close of the school, Bro. Gantt presented the parsonage indebtedness, and in less than thirty minutes he raised in pledges and cash $555.00 and this since Conference with what had been collected before amounts to $585.00. We are planning a canvass of the town, and therefore hoping to be able to pay off the entire debt this year.

We have had some to join the church since Conference, of whom we are proud. We are praying for a successful year on all our charges throughout the District, and especially upon our beloved president, that he may have the strength to do the work that his office demands.

J. H. Moton.

Graham.—106 in Sunday school last Sunday, not quite so many as we had Sunday week, which was 145. Graham is just about rid of the flu, but the people have not got quite over their scare yet. We have graded our Sunday school and find we like the graded lessons very much. Miss Marcia Goley is Supt. of the graded department.

ship congregation and are deservedly popular among a large circle of friends who wish them much joy as, hand in hand, they journey along life's pathway.

May the richest blessings of our Heavenly Father rest upon them and psosper them in every good word and work.

W. E. Swain.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. R. B. Sink died Jan. 5.

We feel very sad over the death of one of our dear Christian Sisters, Lissie Sink of Shiloh church. Her death came as a shock to us.—she was sick only a few days. It is sad to part with her; but still sadder to her dear husband and five small children; but we feel our loss is Lissie's gain, for she was true to her church, and showed her light. She was at church and Sunday school as regularly as a woman with a family could be. She was one of our leaders in the singing, and she will be greatly missed, and I know her family will miss her at the family altar. I have heard her pray in her class at Sunday school, and I once taught a class that had her little girls in it, and I saw through them that she was trying to lead them to Christ, and I hope and pray that those little children will be as true Christians as their dear mother was.

She leaves to mourn her loss a husband, five children, an aged father and mother, and five brothers and two sisters. "The Lord gave and the Lord taketh away, blessed be his holy name." Dear ones, don't weep: God knows best. Let us all strive to meet where there will be na more parting.

Written by one who loved "Lissie".

In Loving Memory.

On Thursday morning, Nov. 21, 1918, the sweet spirit of Lucy Hardin went softly home to heaven. She was the daughter of C. V. and Sibba J. Hardin, born Aug. 4, 1875. She was converted early in life and joined Tabernacle M. P. church and was an active member until death. In her day and sabbath school as teacher she always met her pupils with a smile and words of encouragement. Her words fitly spoken were like apples of gold in pictures of silver. Truly it can be said of her, a great one in Israel has fallen. We pray her mantle may fall on the Lord's anointed. T. M. Johnson, who was her pastor for five years, said as he preached her funeral that he was never in her presence without going away feeling encouraged to be a better man. A few days before she passed away she called her loved ones around her bed and gave to each a parting message, exclaiming, "Everything looks so beautiful"; sent a message of love to the church encouraging them to work, for the night was coming when no man can work. His going was as beautiful as her living. Her desire was to go at the rising of the sun and her desire was granted: just as the sun rose in all its splendor her happy spirit took its flight to be forever with the Lord and hear the blessed "Well done." The floral designs were beautiful, one wreath bearing these words, "From the little ones who loved her so."

She dearly loved the little children,
Took them in her arms of love,
Telling them the love of Jesus
And of heaven, their home above.
And we pray the Lord to keep them
In the straight and narrow way
That will lead to life eternal
To the realms of endless day.

From one who loved her.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to take the soul of one of our members, Fannie Coltrane, from this world of sorrow and carry it to a home of bliss, therefore, be it

Resolved, First, That we, the members of St. Paul Philathea class, extend to the family of Fannie Coltrane our heartfelt sympathy in their sorrow. We realize that they have suffered a real bereavement, but feel that one of God's great heroes has only passed over into the heaven of rest.

Second, That no words are needed, therefore, to explain why we consider it a cherished privilege to bear testimony to the beautiful life and character of our beloved member. She will greatly be missed at home and in our class.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the grief-stricken family and a copy be sent to the M. P. Herald for publication. Signed, Class.

Ogburn Dodson.

On the 23d of Dec. death entered the home of Mr. T. F. Dodson and took away away his beloved son Ogburn. He leaves a father, step-mother, three brothers, one sister, and other relatives and friends to mourn their loss. This good Christian brother was in the twenty-third year of age and professed religion in his youth and joined at Chestnut Ridge church and remained there until death. On Christmas day he was laid to rest in Chestnut Ridge cemetery to await the resurrection morn.

"Weep not that his toils are over,
Weep not that his race is run.
God grant that we may rest as calmly
When our work like his is done.
But we know your thoughts linger oft
Where the evening shadow lies,
O'er dear Ogburn who sleeps
To wake in paradise."

A Friend.

BEING SORRY.

"I make it a rule of my life never to apologize. I don't go around saying 'I'm sorry'—I simply don't repeat the offense."

On the surface such a philosophy seems all sufficient. Not to repeat the offense—surely a more effective form of repentance than any mere verbal expression of contrition. And yet after all, isn't it a bit grudging? You owe it to yourself to put up the bars against the future—do you owe nothing to the one who has suffered by your negligence in the past? More things are wrought by a simple apology than you may dream of—forgiveness and patience and sometimes even friendship and love.—Selected.

"Truly we are living in great days; great in upheaval and overturning, for literally old things are passing away and all things are becoming new; great in adventure and constructive achievement; great in sacrifice and suffering, for see the 11,000,000 and more war-filled graves and the many other millions of the mutilated and the maimed, and the countless sorrow-stricken and anxious homes; great in the discovery and releasing of men's latent capacities for heroism and unselfish devotion; great in the challenges summoning men to enter with wide plans and God-touched spirits into new and better days."

A THANK-OFFERING.

Father, let me to you bring
Loving thanks for everything;
For the songs of birds and bees,
For the bright leaves on the trees,
For the merry, babbling brook
Laughing past my cozy nook;
For the sun which shines so bright,
And the stars which gleam at night;
For the power to see and learn,
For the blossom and the fern,
For the landscape green and fair,
For the soft, sweet summer air;
For my friends so kind and good,
For my daily wholesome food,
For the kind deeds I can do
Loving all that's good and true;
For the tender care you've given,
For the precious hope of heaven,
Father, let me to you bring
Loving thanks for everything.

High Point— Dr Brown handed to each member of the congregation yesterday morning a copy of the Elementary Principles of the Methodist Protestant Church, reprinted from the Discipline. Dr. Brown also gave each member a copy of the following seven simple rules, which if followed, will be of incalculable benefit to each individual, the pastor, and the church.

HOW TO HELP THE CHURCH

1. Attend both of the Sabbath Day services, if possible.
2. To give each Sabbath, proportionately. as the Lord prospereth me.
3. To remember the mid week prayer service, and whenever possible attend and take a part in the service.
4. To notify the pastor of cases of. sickness, new residents or of anything that may increase his usefulness.
5. To visit and invite all I can to regularly attend my church, yet always careful not to improperly invite members of any other local church
6. To be faithful to the church and all the members. Ever willing to do anything possible for the welfare of the church.
7. To accept the doctrines of my church and be cheerfully governed by its rules.

The entire congregation sympathizes deeply with our esteemed member, Mrs. C. L. Gray in the loss of her father, Mr. P. G. Jackson, a well known resident of Groometown, whose death occurred last Saturday afternoon. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Groome, and the following children: Mrs. J. A. Brewer, Pleasant Garden; Mrs Berta Bergman, Groometown: Mrs. C. L. Gray, Mrs. T. M. Stanton, and Dr W. L. Jackson of High Point.

MAYING OUR CALLING AND ELECTION SURE.

In 2 Peter 1:10, 11, we read, ''Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: For so an entrance shall be administered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.''

After one has made his laborious way through a maze of Calvinistic speculation as to the elect and reprobate, and been tormented with fears lest he is himself a wretched reprobate, doomed from all eternity to a career of sin and misery for all etenity, and after he has in his inmost soul cursed God for the great wrong done in crating creatures foreordained to eternal sorrow, how refeshing it is to come upon these words of the Apostle Peter!

Clearly Simon Peter had no such thought as John Calvin had as to the eternal decree fixing all character and destiny from before the foundation of the world. From the language of Peter we infer that he had in mind that saying of Jesus, ''Many are called, but few are chosen'' (elected). We see that Peter regarded the election not as a thing already pre-determined, but as a thing to be determined by our own conduct. It is in our power to make our election sure or our rejection sure. ''If ye do these things, ye shall never fall.'' ''If ye do these things,'' ''an entrance shall be administered unto you abundantly.''

Our destiny therefore, according to Peter, hinges upon our own conduct, and not upon the ancient decrees of God made before we came into existence.

We can honor and love Peter's God. For Calvin's God we can have only feelings of terror and hate. We fear His hell, but we don't want to go to His heaven.

But Peter's teaching, while it relieves our minds of a great horror, does not leave us without a great responsibility. ''If ye do these things.'' If we fail to ''do these things,'' then our hope fails, the door will close against us, we will have failed in life.

How carefully should we read and study the list of things we are to do to make our election sure. Having learned what they are, how earnestly and constantly should we devote ourselves to the doing of them. We find the list in the few verses that prcede those I have quoted from the first chapter of 2 Peter. First, there is the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue (v. 3). Then there is the partaking of the divine nature, through the exceeding great and precious promises, and escaping the corruption that is in the world through lust. (One of these great and precious promises is the promise of the Holy Spirit whose work in us makes us partakers of the divine nature and helps us to overcome the lusts of the flesh and the allurements of the world.) Then verses 5, 6, and 7 lay out a program for daily living the life of the spirit: ''Giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge:

''And to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness;

''And to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity (love).''

What a reasonable ground does Peter base our salvation on! Our election is conditioned on our fitness to be elected. And Peter gives no countenance to the error that we can of ourselves make ourselves fit. It is only by availing ourselves of the heavenly helps offered us that we can become fit. But if we do avail ourselves of these honestly and earnestly and persistently, then we cannot fail!

I thank you, Peter, for making the matter so plain and clear. The mists and fogs that Calvin and others have invested the subject with shall trouble me no more. I see the solid truth through the clouds they have spread before our eyes

MRS. J. J. WELCH.

In the funeral of Mrs. J. J. Welch, which was attended by many, taxing the capacity of the church, two fitting addresses were made: one by Rev. A. G. Dixon and one by Rev. Geo. R. Brown. Bro. Whitaker, another former pastor, read a Scripture lesson, and Pres. Andrews offered prayer. Quite a number of ministers of different denominations attended.

Mrs. Welch had modestly requested that no eulogies be sounded regarding her work in life, which she felt in her last days had been very small. But Bro. Dixon could not refrain from speaking of her love of doing good, her spirit of service, and Bro. Brown testified similarly. Mrs. Welch combined with an uncommon business sagacity a rare disposition to benevolence. A kindly smile dwelt upon her countenance, and children instinctively turned to her as to a mother. She might be called the mother of the Children's Home, such was her interest in its planting and nourishing. She suffered anxiety while the Home was in debt, and lay awake thinking about it. She rejoiced when it was freed from debt and one of her latest gifts was one thousand dollars to help build a boys' dormitory,

She was one of the pillars of our High Point church. She gave her means, she gave her presence, she gave her interest, she gave her prayers. This church will miss her presence, but her spirit will abide, inspiring and encouaging others to continue in their devotion to the cause that engaged her heart.

—Bro. Alexander, pastor of Cabarrus, reports important progess this week: a Sunday school started in new territory, a lot bought for a church there, and the building to be begun in August.

—Liberty lost one of its best church members in the death of Mrs. R. E. Patterson. She was a lady of refinement, kindly considerate of the feelings of those about her, and an earnest worker in the church. It was a pleasure to visit her home. Bro. Patterson has lost the companion of his life, but will be sustained in the hope of meeting her ''beyond the river.''

Dear Bro. McCulloch:

Please list me for a hundred dollar pledge to the North Carolina Methodist Protestant College Fund, same to be paid in annual payments of twenty-five dollars each. I wish I could make it several times that amount, but for one of my circumstances, just entering upon his life work, I feel that that is about his limit. I am heartily in favor of the college proposition, and pray God's blessing upon its successful conclusion. I am,

THE CHURCH'S PART IN RECONSTRUCTION AS SEEN BY A LAYMAN.

(Extracts from an address by J. F Swain delivered in our Asheville church March 30.)

Mr. Swain first made it clear that his discussion has in mind the Protestant church of all denominations, not the Catholic church.

He further stated that his discussion was with reference to the over-seas men, as they because of a different xperience belong to a different class from those who were in the camps only.

Not the Same Man.

The man who comes back to us is not the same man who went from us. As he left home he was a citizen of the township from which he went. In camp he was a citizen of North Carolina. At the port of embarkation he was a citizen of the South. On arrival in Europe he was a citizen of the United States. Going over the top with soldiers of other countries he was a citizen of the world. As such, a citizen of the great world, he comes back to us and we must deal with him as such.

A Peril.

The processes of war had a mellowing effect on his nature. Face to face with death men prayed who had never prayed before. On returning home many of them are ripe for church membership, but what church? In France these men saw Catholicism in its most attractive form. They were brought under its influence and may be under its spell. This not from choice but as a natural consequence. These facts, this influence, with the possible result that many of these over-seas men may have a decided inclination toward the Roman Catholic church constitutes a peril. It behooves all Protestant denominations to look well to this matter and to do it propmtly.

The Remedy.

The matter and the manner of meeting the situation is quite important. It should be done not by compromising any principle of right, not by representing our religion as being any easier than it is. There should be a close union in spirit and a united effort of all Protestant churches, a making clear our view of religious truth and practice, an extending of the scope of usefulness and helpfulness to men. Help men in a physical and material way as well as spiritual. A deepening of the spirituality of church members, thus making religious services a greater drawing power. Let it appear that our religion is a thing of joy, something worth while, that one may well afford to pay the price.

BIRD-SCARER, LABORER, MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT.

Who was Joseph Arch? Well, for one thing, he was a bird-scarer, earning eight cents a day; for another thing, he was an agricultural laborer; for another thing, he was a sort of rural preacher; for another thing, he talked to his mates about some sort of organization; effected the organization; entered the British Parliament; wrote several chapters of English history and one of the most important parts of the labor movement, of which he may rightly be termed a founder; for the last thing, he has just died in his ninety-third year.

He had retired 18 years ago from public life, and his work has been written, and in respectful terms too, into the history books. You will find the name of Joseph Arch in the indices. You will find also that from the bird-scarer and laborer, standing under his chestnut tree in the Midlands, flows that swelling stream of liberal reform which the labor movement has directed toward the betterment of mankind.

He was born at Barford, a village near Warwick, on November 10, 1826, when Victoria, later Queen, was only 11 years old. As a tiny child his experiences were bitter. He has described them in his "Reminiscences," published in 1898, and edited by his friend and benefactor in latter years, the Countess of Warwick.

His father had refused to sign a petition in favor of the notorious Corn Laws, and incurred the enmity of the local land owners. Joseph Arch wrote of this:

"It was in 1835, the winter of the repeal of the Corn Laws. I was about nine years old. I well remember eating barley bread, and seeing the tears in my poor mother's eyes as she cut slices off a loaf: for even barley loaves were all too scarce, and especially with us just then. Because my father had refused to sign for 'a small loaf and a dear one,' he could not get any work whatever for eighteen weeks. He tried hard to get a job, but it was useless; he was a marked man, and we should have starved if my mother had not kept us all by her laundry work.

"It was a terrible winter. No one who has not gone through it, or has not witnessed something similar, can realize how terrible it was. The scenes I witnessed then made an indelible impression on my mind. I have often told the Tories, 'You caused the iron to enter my soul very young, and you will never draw it out. It will remain there till I die.' That barley bread got into my vitals."

It was just at this time, at nine years old, that he was earning his eight cents a day as a bird-scarer. He had managed to get a bit of schooling, and learned to read and to write. He was a typical farm-laborer's son, and the one stable thing the poverty-ridden family possessed was a little free-hold cottage, purchased for $150 by Arch's grandfather.

From bird-scarer he graduated to plowboy at ten years, and later he rose to teamster. When he was 20 years old, his wage was $2.25 a week.

He was a man with ambition, and one can picture the crude, slightly-tutored farm-hand, grubbing his food from day to day, and pondering, as he pursued his dismal toil, on the whys and wherefores of human happiness, and the inequalities of existence.

On $2.25 a week and his ambition he married, and when his family had increased by two children, his ambition spurred him to become a "specialist". In other words he became a "jobbing" laborer. He did gravel-digging, draining, wood-cutting, and hedge-cutting, and worked very long hours, mostly on piece-work; so he became one of the skilled "upper men" of rural labor.

In view of his own indomitable perseverance and ambition, his own analysis of his wife makes curious and cold reading. In his "Reminiscences" he wrote:

"She was a good, clean wife, and a good mother; she looked after my father well; she was always attending to her home and family; but she was no companion to me in my aspirations. My father noticed this, and often used to say, 'Joe, she is hardly a companion for you.' She had not any idea of rising in the world; she wished to stop in the place where it had pleased the Lord to call her."

The aspirations to which he refers included "book-knowledge," and Joseph Arch was reading diligently. His work often took him a long way from home, across all the Midland counties, and into Wales. It was in this way he acquired his extensive knowlege of the details of agricultural conditions. On these trips he stinted himself of food, and would sleep under hedges and haystacks, poring over his book while light lasted, and sending the money saved home to his wife and children.

On one of these journeys he became aroused by some statement of a speaker at a village meeting, and getting to his feet, made his first halting speech. What he said carried conviction with it, and his reception was such that he became a well-known country-side speaker and acquired further practice as a Methodist local preacher.

What was it that Arch said, which proved so interesting to that first little rural audience? Well, it was something about "combination," as the possible way for relief from those terrible conditions under which the Midland farm laborers suffered in 1870.

His preparation had not been in vain, even though it had taken forty-six years of his life to reach this point. On the night of February 7, 1872, Joseph Arch was at home doing some carpentering job for the cottage. Three men sauntered up and asked him to leave his work to talk with them. They represented themselves as the spokesmen for a body of laborers who felt the time had come to form one of these "combinations" Arch had spoken about, and they asked him to come and address them at Wellesbourne that evening.

"We settled," wrote Arch, in his autobiography, "that I should address the meeting under the old chestnut tree, and I expected to find some thirty or forty of the principal men there. What, then, was my surprise to see, not a few tens, but many hundreds of laborers assembled; there were nearly two thousand of them. The

I like the advice that was in last week's paper—talk up the minister. A good many people try to talk the minister down. I think it is unwise, unfair, and wicked. I think if we served God as we should we would serve our pastors better and not think they can live on wind any more than we can. With best wishes to the editor,

SHILOH, RANDOLPH CIRCUIT—

We had the pleasure of hearing Bro. Ashburn again Sunday. He preached a very inspiring sermon. Sunday school attendance was very good. The offering was donated to the Children's Home. Our Sunday school has recently raised $25.60 for the suffering Armenians.

James M. Brown has returned from service overseas. He was here to worship with us Sunday. The church and Sunday school are glad to welcome him back.

The Baraca-Philathea class will hold a meeting next Sunday immediately after Sunday school. Two of our efficient members, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Pickett, have moved away. They will be missed by their church.

Mrs. E. M. Hinshaw died at the home of her son, J. D. Hinshaw, Thursday morning, April 3. She was in her seventy-sixth year. She leaves six children and other relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. W. F. Ashburn and interment was at the Shiloh cemetery.

BETHESDA, HALIFAX CIRCUIT—

Yesterday was our regular preaching Sunday, and in spite of the absence of Pastor Bethea, we had a very good service. Mr. Renshaw from Hollister came over and filled Bro. Bethea's appointment. We are proud to have laymen on our charge that can do such things. We were glad to have Mr. Renshaw, wife and a number of others from Hollister with us, and I feel that I voice the sentiments of the congregation, when I say, we thoroughly enjoyed his talk on "Isaiah's Vision of the Lord's Glory." Come again, good friends.

Bro. Bethea is now in Mississippi in the interest of the Million Dollar Campaign. We are praying for his success in the work and a safe return to his friends and loved ones at home.

There has been an increase in our Sunday school, but we are still hoping for a greater interest.

Our Ladies' Aid Society meets at the parsonage tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock; at this meeting we are hoping to plan some way or means in which to make money for some improvements at church and parsonage. Pray for us that we may be successful in our work.

Reporter.

LAUREL HILL, FALLSTON CIRCUIT—

We are glad to see so many attending Sunday school who have not been for a while.

Pastor Edwards filled his appointment at this church Saturday and gave us a good sermon. He could not be with us Sunday, as he had a revival meeting going on at Lawndale. Bro. J. D. Morris filled his appointment here Sunday. We were all glad to have Bro. Morris back again with us: he preached a good sermon. There was a good crowd out to sear him.

Sunday was our day of offering for Children's Home. Our collection was $5.30. May God's blessings be with us and may we do more for him.

WELCH MEMORIAL CHURCH—

Our special meeting began the fifth Sunday in March. Rev. S. W. Taylor of Henderson, N. C., came on Monday night following the fifth Sunday and remained two weeks, closing last Sunday night.

We had been hoping and praying for a good meeting and Bro. Taylor came to us filled with God's power. He preached and worked earnestly for the salvation of the unsaved.

We had a good meeting. More than fifty found peace and the church was greatly revived. Eighteen were received into the church last Sunday morning with more to join later. Also received one member by letter. There was good attendance all through the meeting at night, and very good attendance in the afternoon service

We were glad to have the presence of Dr. Brown and Rev. C. A. Cecil a number of times during the meeting. Rev. Edward Suits came down one night.

Also was glad to have our president, Rev. R. M.Andrews, Rev. C. W. Bates, and Bro. H. A. Garrett to worship with us one afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett. with several of the girls, came over last Sunday night to hear Bro. Taylor's last sermon as the meeting closed Sunday night. Glad to have all and hope each one will come again.

Bro. Taylor has a warm place in the hearts of the Welch Memorial people and will be welcome anytime he can make it convenient to pass our way.

Our Sunday school is increasing; had 256 last Sunday. But still we are not satisfied: we want still more.

We are pained to know of Aunt Lizzie Welch's death. She was a good woman, and one many of us learned to love several years ago.

She has been a great friend to our church. She and her husband gave the lot on which our church stands and were always glad to give of their means and advice when called upon. Hence its name, Welch Memorial.

Both are now gone to rest, but their memory will still live. The relatives have our sympathy.

We are planning for Easter exercises. Mrs. Hunter has charge of practicing the children. We know it will be good considering the time to prepare the program.

UNION GROVE, N. DAVIDSON CT.—

Yesterday was a good day for us: the beautiful weather brought a very large crowd out to Sunday school and preaching. Our faithful pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil, was with us and preached a good sermon. Mr. Cecil is universally popular with both old and young and his monthly visits are awaited with interest. He is a grand, good man and we hope that we may be be permitted to sit at his feet, as it were, and listen to his good sound teaching for many years to come. We are very sorry to report the illness of Mrs. C. W. Berrier. She has been sick several weeks with pneumonia. Let us pray for an early recovery. Also Mrs. D. T. Berrier has been indisposed for a few days: hope she will soon be well again. Our Sunday school is doing nicely under the leadership of Mr. V. A. Berrier. Collection for the Children's Home was $2.70. We were glad to have worship with us yesterday people from neighboring churches. Come again: you are always welcome. Our special meeting will begin the second Sunday in July. Rev. D. A. Braswell will be the pulpit help. Let us pray for a revival.

Our faithful Sunday school scholar, Mr. D. T. Berrier, has treated himself and family with a nice new Ford car.

GREENSVILLE CIRCUIT—

We filled our appointment at Ebenezer and Hobbs Chapel yesterday; the people seem to be taking more interest in the general affairs of our church on Greensville charge, I am glad to say.

We hope to have a large delegation at our young people's conference. If we get our young people interested in our church we have gained a great victory for it; and I am sure every one that attends will be inspired to do more for our church. We were glad when they said w will have our young people's conference at Henderson this year, because it gives us people a better chance down east to attend.

Let me give a few names and articles we have appreciated since we last wrote. Mr. T. E. Pearson, two bushels of cotton seed. Mr. A. W. Moore, one bushel of sweet potatoes. Mr. L. M. Norwood, one-half bushel of peanuts. J. S. Branscomb, a horse to drive when the roads are bad. We have received hams, shoulders and all parts of a hog; but Mrs. L. R. Pearson gave us a whole hog, or it will be when it gets grown, it is a pig now. Yours for Christ,

J. M. Morgan.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

WHY BOB WAS TARDY.

Miss Rudd's pupils were very seldom tardy. At the end of every month she took a picture of all those who had not been absent or tardy, and at the end of the term she was going to give the pictures to all who had perfect records.

When Bob was promoted to Miss Rudd's room, he decided that he was going to be in every picture.

The last week of the term had come, and Bob had never been absent or tardy. On Monday morning, as Miss Rudd went to school, she passed her boys playing ball two squares from school. She called to them. “Don't be late.” They yelled:—“We won't.”

Fifteen minutes later the first bell rang, and the boys started for school. But they stopped at the corner, for there stood a little boy crying dismally.

“Ise lost! I can't find my house!” he sobbed.

“Who is he? Where does he live?”

“I know him,” said Bob as he turned the little fellow round and pointed down the street. “You go down this street Jack, and you'll find your home.”

But Jack hung to Bob's hand, still sobbing: “Ise lost! You take me home!”

“You'll be late if you do,” said another boy.

“The second bell is 'most ready to ring now,” he added.

Bob tried to pull away, but Jack clung to him.

“I'll take him part of the way,” answered Bob, picking up Jack and trying to run. But Bob was only eight, and Jack was a fat little boy; so Bob could not run very fast. They had gone two or three blocks when the second bell rang.

Bob hastily dropped Jack and ran for the school. He saw the last line disappear and the teacher close and lock the side door, so he had to go around to the big front door.

“It's his own fault, Miss Rudd,” one of the boys was saying as Bob walked into the room. “We told him to leave the little kid alone.”

Bob said nothing, for he was trying to keep back the tears; and Miss Rudd did not ask any questions.

On Friday Miss Rudd did a queer thing. Just before it was time to read the names of those who were to be in the picture she told a story. It sounded familiar, for it was about a teacher who took pictures of her scholars who were not tardy and a boy named Charles. Once when the boys were running to school they found a little bird that had fallen out of its nest, and Charless climbed the tree to put it back; but it made him late to school. As Miss Rudd told of the poor frightened little bird and how kind Charles was to her the pupils smiled their satisfaction. Miss Rudd said that some one who saw Charles climb the tree told his teacher, and she excused him and let him be in the picture.

Then Miss Rudd read the names of her pupils who had not been tardy, but she did not read Bob's name.

“Say, Miss Rudd,” said one of the boys, “I think little boys are worth more than little birds.”

“I do too,” said Miss Rudd, smiling.

“Let Bob be in the picture,” said two of the other boys.

“He was tardy, you know.”

“But you could 'scuse him 'cause the little kid was lost.”

“All who want to excuse Bob, hold up their hands.”

Every hand went up.

And that is why Bob had his picture taken, even though he had been tardy.—Margaret Denny Dixon.

A CHEERFUL GIVER.

Pass the box around the class, Charles, said the teacher. Charles took the offering box and passed it to each one. Penny after penny was dropped into the slit at the top of the box and rang happily against the pennies that were already in the box. Every little while the box would pass a boy or girl who shook their heads. They had no pennies to drop into the box.

Jimmy was one of these. After Sunday school he sat in church with mother. He meant to stay awake, but sitting so quietly with mother's arm about him made it very easy to sleep. It was in his dreams that a strange thing happened. A penny sat up on two spindle legs like the pictures of the Brownies.

“I am the penny that Susie forgot last Sunday,” whispered the queer little fellow. “I did want to help in God's work, but Susie forgot me and Monday she took me to the store for some candy.”

When he had finished another took his place. “I am the penny that Johnny Jones forgot. I thought he would keep me until today, but yesterday he used me to buy a string for his top and I wonder if I can ever help in God's work.” The penny tumbled off and made Jimmy jump, so he waked up. He went straight home from church and put his penny away for next Sunday, and with it went five that he was saving to buy some marbles. Jimmy's giving pleased God. “God loves a cheerful giver.”—Selected.

WHY BILLY WAS A FAVORITE.

One day Billy was a stranger; at the end of a week he was as much at home as any boy on the street. “We are glad he came,” Teddy Farr said, “we like him.”

All the other boys said pretty much the same thing.

“Why is this Billy such a favorite?” Mr. Farr asked Mrs. Farr.

“I don't know yet,” said Mrs. Farr. “I'm watching to find out.”

When three more weeks had passed the thought she knew.

A group of boys were out in front of her gate one afternoon, and she heard one of them say, “Pshaw! What can we play? I wish the snow hadn't all gone into mud.”

“We had just finished our fort,” said another, “and were ready to begin, but it washed down in the night.”

“Anyway, we had fun making it,” said Billy. “Let's not waste the whole afternoon. Let's start and play something that doesn't need snow.”

When Mrs. Farr looked again they were sailing ships down the gutter and discovered the Mississippi with great excitement.

Another time Teddy had to go on an errand, and asked the others to keep him company.

“Oh, we can't!” objected somebody, “we've got it all planned to walk out in the other direction and see the place where the fire was last night.”

“Why wouldn't it do,” said Billy, “to go with Teddy first? We needn't come all the way back, need we? There ought to be some short cuts, I should think.”

Well, when they had put their heads together they remembered that there were.

Then there was a day when Joe Hall lost his arithmetic. Joe and Billy were the best in the school in arithmetic. Joe hated to miss any of his lessons.

“Never mind,” said Billy. “My book will do for both until yours turns up. We are pretty quick at it, you know. We can manage.”

On one afternoon when they were having a game of ball in the schoolyard, Billy broke a cellar window. After a crash there was a pause of dismay.

“We must have kept getting nearer to the house without noticing it,” said Billy.

“How would it do,” said Joe, “to be quiet until we are asked about it?” Maybe Mr. Nevin will think that other boys did it. They broke one.”

“It wouldn't do at all,” said Billy, quickly. “It wouldn't be fair.”

He told Mr. Nevin and paid for the pane; and after that he was short of money for some time, for Billy was poor.

After the three weeks, Mrs. Farr said to Mr. Farr:

“I think I know why the boys like Billy.”

“Why?”

“Because he has a delightful habit of getting the best for himself and his friends out of what he has at hand. He makes things 'do' except the things that won't do at all. I like Billy myself.”—The Child's Hour.

PEGGY'S MYSTERIOUS PICTURE.

Little Peggy did not want to learn to read. She said she would much rather play with her dolls or go out in the fields to look for spring flowers. But her mother said it was time she went to school, and that if she worked hard, she would be

SOME PERSONAL QUESTIONS. PICK OUT YOURS.

1. Are you spending as much money for religion as for amusement?

2. Have you read your Bible this morning as much as the newspaper?

3. Do you have family worship or something to correspond to it?

4. Would your wife be surprised if you should kiss her when you leave the house tomorrow, or are you getting too old or too sanitary to kiss your wife? (Two questions.)

5. Did the last book you read have anything in it worth telling anybody?

6. Would you be willing to tell everybody here this morning where you were last night?

7. If you belong to the church, are you doing all you can for it as you promised you would when you joined it?

8. How long is it since you tried to get any one to be a Christian?

9. Would you be willing to tell this congregation how much money you made last week, and what you are going to do with it?

10. When was the last time you said a prayer in public or in private? Or don't you believe in prayer?

11. Are people always glad to meet you because you are so cheerful and helpful?

12. Who is the first person to whom you would go if you had committed a great sin?

13. Do you have any friends to whom you feel perfectly free to go for a loan of money?

14. Are you perfectly certain where you are going when you die?—Dr. Charles M. Sheldon.

Morality is the vestibule of religion.—Chapin.

PRAYER IMPORTANT.

The importance of prayer is never overestimated. No church can succeed without definite, direct, persistent prayer. Nothing can be accomplished if prayer is regarded as a non-essential. Those who covenanted to pray for the great revival that swept over Korea, prayed an hour or more each day for nearly four months before it came. The results fully justified the time spent in prayer. There is no better way to meet a crisis in the life of the Church. The faith that overcomes the world gladly accepts such a challenge and triumphs through prayer, then God is "bearing witness, both in signs and wonders and by gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to His will." When the Church is in the throes of agonizing prayer, then God comes into His opportunity to do great and mighty things. If the prayer-life of the Church is healthy, vigorous and courageous, the presence of supernatural wisdom and power will always be in evidence. Jesus said, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age. Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." That means efficiency, for he is vested with all authority or power in heaven and on earth. Under such conditions no necessity can arise that cannot be fully met by prayer. Again Jesus is saying:—"If two of you shall agree as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."—Unidentified.

A LONELY AMERICAN.

When the Americans first went to the front in France their wounded were sent to French hospitals. The men were desperately lonely, and after a time American nurses, visitors and aids, were assigned to French hospitals which contained American men. One day in a certain hospital one of these aids, a bright, sunny girl, was working in a ward. And as she moved here and there, busy at her tasks, she sang softly under her breath the following cheerful ditty:

"Where do we go from here boys?
Oh, where do we go from here?"

"I don't want you to go anywhere from here," came an abrupt voice from a bed behind her. Turning she beheld a wounded American, a pale newcomer, regarding her from inflamed, blood hot eyes.

"Well," she replied laughing, "I don't intend to go anywhere this minute. What is the matter with your eyes? Gassed?"

"Nothing," he replied, laconically. "I have not slept for 72 hours. I've been lying here watching you for an hour, and trying to make up my mind which I wanted to do most—go to sleep, or go on looking at you. And I decided I'd rather go on looking at you. I don't know," he added, wistfully, "whether you consider that a compliment or not? I haven't seen an American girl for five months. And so I figured it would rest my eyes more to look at you than it would to go to sleep."—Scottish American.

Shiloh takes regular offerings but this from class No. 2 was special. Bro. T. L. C. Sink is the popular teacher and he asked each man to bring one dollar and each boy a quarter and because of that effort we have the splendid contribution. Really, don't you think it all looks good?

From Concord, Saxapahaw, come the following: Robert Woody, one bushel sweet potatoes; T. H. Moore, half bushel seed corn and the Ladies' Aid, one quilt. We thank them. Penny brothers, who always have our needs at heart, donate a drum and cornet.

A visit to our hog lot will convince you that Bro. J. H. Redding, Asheboro, N. C., is a breeder of fine Berkshire hogs. He shipped us last week one of his four-months-old pigs, all charges prepaid. It is entitled to registration and it is unnecessary to say we prize it very highly. He made us a visit first.

Sunday Miss Bowman gave eight more Bibles to children who have become able to read them. Rev. Mr. Townsend of the M. E. Church made the presentation. Miss Bowman has given 46 Bibles which have cost her about $100.

Death has again visited our board of trustees. This morning our hearts are sad because of the death of Mrs. J. J. Welch (better known as Aunt Lizzie). She was devoted to the Home and for a long time after it was opened she called every day to know what we were doing and kept informed almost as well as those present what was happening. She rejoiced whenever there was a marked increase in interest. She said she lay awake at nights trying to plan to get the Home free from debt. She was happy when the last note was paid. At once she gave her check for $1,000 to start a fund for a boys' building. She said, "I am pleased with the progress of the Home. It has been a blessing to our church."

She was kind, thoughtful, and her judgment was good and you need not fear failure if it was followed.

Her life was a life of service and many are the preachers and churches that have received help from her, saying nothing of the people of her community.

Tuesday at 3 p. m. her funeral will be conducted, after which her mortal remains will be laid quietly away.

H. A. Garrett.

THE DAY'S NEEDS.

Each day I pray, God give me strength anew
To do the task I do not wish to do,
To yield obedience, not asking why,
To love and own the truth and scorn the lie,
To look a cold world bravely in the face,
To cheer for those that pass me in the race,
To bear my burdens gaily, unafraid,
To lend a hand to those that need my aid,
To measure what I am by what I give—
God give me strength that I may rightly live!

BACK TO SCHOOL.

I guess every fellow has a spell of thinking that going to school is a waste of time. I know I had two or three spells, but I always managed to recover. One thing that helped me was a statement made one day by the hired man who worked on dad's farm. I had said something about school being a waste of time. The hired man looked me straight in the eye and said: "When I was just a little bit older than you, I was offered a job at a dollar a day. I quit school and went to work. That was twenty years ago—and I'm a dollar-a-day man yet."

Not very many boys will make a foolish move if they get the straight dope on a proposition, and if any of you are really figuring on quitting school, here's a little test I would advise you to try. Make a list of a dozen men in your neighborhood who you know have gone at least through high school. Then ask each one of these men this question: "Are you sorry you went through school?" When you have finished with this list make another of a dozen men who you know have never gone to school at all or who dropped out before they finished the eighth grade. Then ask each one of these men this question: "Are you glad you didn't get an education?" Keep track of the answers you get and then do a little serious thinking.—The Cave Scout, in Boy's Life.

A PEACEMAKER.

A story has been told of a little girl who said to her mother one evening, "I was a peacemaker today."

"How was that?" asked her mother.

"I knew something that I didn't tell," was the unexpected reply.

Do we not all of us have frequent opportunities to make peace in this way? Perhaps we have thought of the work of the peacemakers as the stopping of quarrels rather than their prevention, but comparatively few of us will have occasion actively to separate those who are quarreling and induce them to be friends, and how much better that they should not quarrel at all!

Let no one think that the negative virtue of a discreet silence is an easy matter. The bit of gossip that would fill an awkward pause in the conversation is on the tip of the tongue—the secret weighs heavily on our minds, and it would be a relief to talk is over with someone—but is it going to make trouble for anybody?

Is it possible that the words that we speak could be misunderstood and distorted and repeated where they would rankle? "Blessed the the peacemakers," even those peacemakers who work only by refraining from doing harm with their tongues.

And what is this blessing that the peace-makers receive? "They shall be called sons of God."—Ex.

An element in the character of the worker is surrender to the person of God. Not only must we appreciate God and submit to his will passively and actively, but we must surrender ourselves to himself. Very intimate is the relation into which God finally brings his chosen. It is not only that of master and servant or teacher and disciple, but it is also that of bridegroom and bride, where the very self is in the closest and holiest of ties, so that they become one. Now this blessed end is never reached if the thought is ever centered on the outward world or things done in the present state of human society. But if "work" as such is found to be hollow and unsatisfying, so that the soul cries out for God, it may do its work in leading the worker into personal union with God himself.—Dr. F. L. Campbell.

SHOWING APPRECIATION.

Showing appreciation is an art. Many people do not appreciate as they should, or else they do not know how to show their appreciation. For so many it seems to require an effort to show appreciation. They are awkward about it; they get embarrassed and embarrass those from whom they have received. "Thank you," well said, carries with it a healing balm, puts a sweet fragrance in the atmosphere, makes friends, draws business, and reacts in a wholesome way upon the one who knows how to say "Thank you," and says it.

But there are other ways of showing appreciation. Kind words and helpful deeds —how they do sweeten life! And they do not have to be in return to those who have helped us. One of the kindest men I ever knew said he was kind to folks because of the kindness that was shown to his father, about which he knew only from a written message left by his father. This gentleman said he got a gerat deal of happiness out of being kind to everybody, and that he hoped in that way to reciprocate, at least in part, for the kindness that others had shown to his father.

To show appreciation so that it will be appreciated one must feel it. The selfish, self-seeking person does not feel it. The proud and haughty do not feel it. Only those who are humble in heart, meek and lowly in spirit really feel the appreciation needed to make one happy and to make others happy through showing it. There are few things about which parents need to be more careful in the training of their children. Felt and properly shown, appreciation is the result of training. But the one who has not had while young the training he was entitled to needs not despair. At no period in life are people too old to begin the cultivation of feeling appreciative, if they will only realize how much they are in debt to others every day of their lives and practice showing their appreciation. And may I say that nothing pays better.—Selected.

CHILDREN'S SAYINGS.

Said a little boy who stood at the door of the spinster: "Would you kindly let me get my arrow, madam? It has fallen in your garden."

"Certainly, my little man; but do you know exactly where it fell?"

"Yes—in—the side of your cat."—Youth's Companion.

ONE THING NEEDFUL.

Martha was cumbered about much serving. For the love of her Lord she was preparing a sumptuous meal. She was bent on feeding Him with the best to be obtained. Mary was feeding her soul from the lips of Jesus. And Mary received the praise, and Martha the rebuke, from their mutual Master. Martha was losing spiritual sweetness in overburdensome care, Mary was sitting for the portrait of Jesus upon her soul. And Jesus, the spiritual Artist, was drawing His image there.

Has the entire church turned to Martha? It looks that way. Great financial drives are on. Millions are the goals to be reached. The press, the pulpit, and the prayer meeting hour are being used to the limit to advance the money campaign. But who has suggested a drive for lost souls? While the shekels are piling up, souls by the million are slipping into hell. The recent war, with its unspeakable horrors, is a fearful revelation that this is still a lost world. This revelation is a challenge to the church.

Giving is necessary in order to save the Church from the crushing weight of its own material prosperity. The modern Church would speedily die of worldliness if it didn't give largely. None of the goals are too high. The financial obligation of the Church is far beyond the higher goals.

But the modern Church has reversed the apostolic order. The apostles made a prayer drive for pentecostal outpouring. As a result souls were saved by the thousand. And Pentecost produced a full treasury. And the financial offerings were entirely spontaneous. No high pressure methods were used. Seven deacons were appointed, not to collect alms, but to distribute them from an overflowing treasury. The modern Church says, "Give in order to save the world." The world cannot be saved that way.

The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation. It is not the gospel of learning, nor the gospel of morality, nor the gospel of social uplift, but the Gospel of a crucified and risen Redeemer that alone can save a sinning world. Let there be less display of culture in the pulpit. Let there be fewer dissertations on ethics. Let there be less adulation of rich and influential members. Let there be less criticism of revealed truth. Let there be more exposure of the hypocrisy of professing Christians. Let there be more denunciation of the sins of polite society. Let there be an urgent call to repentance. Let the cross of Christ be held up as the only relief for a sin-sick world. Let the good tidings of salvation become the burden of the ministry. "Preach the word."

The one thing needful is another prayer drive for another Pentecost on the part of world-wide Christendom. A league of churches ought to be formed in order to make such a drive unanimous and effective. Prayer is the key to the solution of all problems of sin, salvation, and destiny. Serving tables is the lowest form of Christian service. The apostles gave prayer precedence to preaching. Prayer is preeminently the indispensable privilege and duty of all believers. And now abideth giving, preaching, and prayer: but the greatest of these is prayer.—The Word of Life.

"WOULD I KNOW?"

If the Master should knock at my cottage door
And ask for a place to stay,
Would I know His voice and bid Him come in,
Or would I send Him away?
I am busy—so busy—with this world's care
That oft I forget to pray.

If the Master should sleep on my bed of straw
Or eat of my simple fare,
Would I know my guest as the risen Lord?
Would He take me unaware?
Would I be so blind that I could not see
The light of His presence rare?

Suppose I should turn as I traveled on
And find Him by my side,
Would I know Him and lift my voice in song?
Would the day be glorified?
Or would I think Him an idler there,
And mayhap stop to chide?

O Father! I pray Thee let me but live
So if He should come today,
Be the journey long, or the burden great,
Or rugged and steep the way,
I would know His face, in my humble place,
And joyfully bid Him stay.

—May S. Hilburn, in St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"I JES' LOVE TO P'INT HIM OUT."

Why should a man be required to love Christ? Is it not enough to admire Him as the chiefest among ten thousand? Is it not enough to imitate Him as the ideal man?

A traveler who was being rowed across the Mississippi by an old negro, was surprised to see the boatman drop his oars suddenly and spring to his feet in great excitement, shouting, "Look! Look! Dere is de Captain!"

On a sloop coming down the river stood a man leaning against the mast. This was "the captain," at whom the old negro was frantically waving his hat.

The traveler said presently, "Who is this man? And what has he ever done for you?" The answer was, "He's de man dat saved me. I fel into de water an' he jumped in an' flung his arms around me and saved me!" Then he added, "I'd jes' like to slave for him all my life; only my rheumatism's so bad I ain't no good. He runs by here once a month, an' I watch for him; an' I love to p'int him out. Ain't he de kindest-lookin' man you ever saw? I jes' love to p'int him out."

In view of such a natural demonstration of gratitude as this, one is led to wonder how it is that any man who trusts in Christ for salvation should ever fail to love Him.—Rev. David James Burrell, D. D.

C. E. TOPIC OR APRIL 27.

By Rev. J. E. Pritchard.

Christianity and the Toilers of America.

Matthew 9: 35-38.

M. April 21. Man a worker. Gen. 2:15; 3:19.
T. April. 22. Honest toil. Acts 18:1-8.
W. April 23. Our duty to work. 2 Thess. 3:6-16.
T. April 24. Grinding oppression. Isa. 3:13-15.
F. April 25. The just judge. Mal. 3:1-6.
S. April 26. Jesus helper of the poor. John 6:1-13.

In discussing the toilers of America we are talking about ourselves, for every man or woman in America with reasonable health ought to be a toiler. In this day we are so apt to try to divide people into different classes and say that those who work at one occupation are toilers and those who work at something else are aristocrats, but I do not feel that any such distinctions ought to be made. For the person who works in an office, a mill or a king's palace is a toiler. And the men of one occupation deserve just as much credit and recognition as the other provided the work is for the good of humanity. No work is degrading unless degraded by the man who works.

But while the above is true there are some general principles which might be applied to all work.

1. Every man deserves a reasonable wage for the work he does. A few years ago I heard a man speak and in the course of his remarks he made this statement: "What the Americn people want is a just and reasonable wage so that they can build their own libraries and endow their own institutions out of their own earnings rather than have some wealthy man do it for them out of their own earnings."

2. Every man who works has a right to comfortable surroundings. That is, he ought to have a decent place in which to live. The practice of some great corporations in compelling their help to live in crowded districts and tenement houses while the management lives in a palace is outrageous.

3. It is the business of the church to see to it that the best moral and spiritual conditions possible surround those who work for wages. If people will not come some distance to the church then the next thing to do is to take the church to them. After all the pure gospel of Christ is the best panacea for the ills of the workingman that can be had. When it is practiced the capitalist will not oppress the wage earner and the wage earner will not make unreasonable demands upon the capitalist.

Let the young people remember that when they are helping the church to do its duty they are helping the toilers to a better life.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONVENTION—FINAL NOTICE.

About the time the next issue of the Herald is reaching our homes we expect to be assembling in Henderson for the Young People's Convention, Friday afternoon, April 25. It is of the utmost importance that delegates be appointed and their names sent to Miss Janie Harris, Henderson, N. C. The purpose of this convention is to inspire our young people and give them a larger vision of the possibilities of the work in which we are engaged. Marion Lawrance says he was superintendent of a Sunday school eight years before he ever had a real vision of the Sunday school and that came to him when a man give him a twenty-dollar bill and sent him to a convention.

Delegates will please bear in mind that the two trains going from Greensboro to Durham, at which place they change for Henderson, leave Greensboro at 8:25 a. m. and 4:15 p. m. Trains leaving Durham are at about 11 a. m. and 6:15 p. m. The evening train does not arrive at Henderson until about 8:30 p. m. so it is desired that delegates go on morning train. Also it is advisable to change from Southern to Seaboard road at Durham. Those coming from points between Charlotte and Greensboro can come to Greensboro on train 44 Friday morning. Those coming from Winston and points in that section of the state can leave Winston at 6:30 a. m. Friday morning and connect in Greensboro If you buy ticket at Southern railway office ask agent to sell you one permitting you to take Seaboard train from Durham to Henderson and if he cannot do that then buy to Durham and then in Durham buy to Henderson over Seaboard road.

Now let us come from the mountains and the seashore and have the most inspiring and enthusiastic convention we have ever had. then go back home and help to put over the Million Dollar Drive, the biggest thing our denomination has ever undertaken.

Pres. Young People's Union.
Burlington, N. C., April 14.

A REQUEST.

A reader of this paper, having been in great religious trouble, requests your prayers for God's presence and help.

ATTENTION!

I wish to ask that each church notify me as early as possible, as to the number of delegates we may expect, for the Young Peoples' Convention, which convenes April 25th at Henderson, N. C.

HIGH POINT—

The entire congregation as well as a large circle of relatives and friends. were saddened by the announcement Sunday morning that Mrs. J. J. Welch, affectionately known as "Aunt Lizzie," had fallen on sleep in the early hours of the morning. Although her condition was known to be critical, the news came as a distinct shock. The end was sudden and quite peaceful.

Wherever there is a Methodist Protestant church in North Carolina, there Mrs. Welch and her late husband were known and loved. She was one of the founders and most loyal supporters of the church in High Point, and to her more than any other individual the church owes its existence in this city. Born at Spring Hill, four miles distant, in 1844, as Miss Lizzie Pickett, she was reared in the church, and moving to High Point 35 years ago, she passed her entire life of nearly 75 year in this community. She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. J. W. Harriss, and two grandchildren, Mrs. Comer Covington and Master Welch Harriss; besides the following brothers and sisters: Messrs. W. P., F. M., and R. L. Pickett, Mrs. T. T. Ferree, and Miss Lou Pickett, all of High Point. Another brother, Mr. J. R. Pickett, died a few months ago. It is a remarkable fact that the family circle of seven brothers and sisters was unbroken until last January. Her husband, Mr. J. J. Welch, who was a leading business man of High Point for nearly 40 years, passed away five years ago.

The Children's Home, the pastor and his family, in fact, every worthy enterprise of the church, has lost one of its very best friends. The entire community is in deep gloom. Rev. A G. Dixon, of Baltimore, will arrive in time to assist her pastor, Dr Geo. R. Brown, in the last sad rites, which will be conducted in the First church Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock.

MT. PLEASANT, UWHARRIE CT.—

Our Sunday school is taking on new life, although we have lost our Moses. Bro. J. W. Welborn has been our leader for a long time; he has sold out and left us. Bro. Welborn was a faithful superintendent; he was always on hand He would curry us pretty heavy for using the filthy weed. Some would kick and switch, but he would only bear the harder. R. W. Thayer is our superintendent for this year.

We have an average attendance of 40. Our pastor, Bro. Neese, could not be with us on the fourth Sunday on account of his wife's sickness; hope she is well. Our greatest difficulty in our Sunday school work is to get parents to come and help train their children. I believe the greatest hindrance to the progress of the church is worldly-mindedness. The deceitfulness of riches, pride of life, has choked out all the good seed. The Lord said, He that is friend to the world is at enmity with God. G. F. Cashatt.

CABARRUS CIRCUIT—

The "flu" is about all gone in our congregation and our Sunday schools and congregations are picking up. We had the largest congregations on last appointments we have had for some time; had 109 in Sunday school at Fairview, and 104 at Loves Grove. President Andrews was with us at Loves Grove on last Saturday evening and gave us a very fine sermon which was enjoyed—very much by the congregation. We also had the pleasure of having Bro. Reynolds with us.

We were sorry to have to preach the funerals of two little children at Fairview last Sunday a week ago. One was the little infant of Bro. Dan Furr, and one of Mr. Finks, which was about three month old. We sympathize very much with these good people in their affliction.

We organized a Sunday school about five miles above Fairview with fifty members. It is in a place where it is needed very much: no churches near there, but we are going to build a church there. We have already bought a lot and are going to begin building in August. We are looking forward to a good work being done there We are going to have an Easter-egg hunt for the children at Fairview Saturday evening. Bro. Willian Whitley lost his wife on last Saturday week; she was buried at Love's Grove Sunday. Mrs. Whitley was a good woman, and will be missed very much in our community. She leaves a husband and several children to mourn her loss.

Our second quarterly conference will be held at Fairview church Saturday evening before the first Sunday in May.

J. F. Alexander, Pastor.

HAW RIVER CHURCH—

Pastor Troxler last Sunday gave us two good sermons. Our Wednesday evening prayer meeting is doing fine. We have an average of from 50 to 75. We are studying the book of Job. Our pastor is with us each service unless kept away, and gives us some good talks on this book of Job People, do not miss these good prayer meetings.

Our Sunday school is getting along nicely: had 107 present Sunday. The Sunday school is planning a general good time Easter Monday: going to give the little children an egg hunt and an automobile ride over to Burlington and back, and have ice cream and cake for the rest of the school. D. I. Garner, Reporter.

UWHARRIE CIRCUIT—

Our second quarterly conference will be held at Mt. Zion church on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in April, at one p. m. There will be service at 11 o'clock, then dinner, conference following. The majority of the live officials are sure to be there. Prove your life by your presence.

We met the Jerusalem people yesterday at 11 a. m. There are some fine folks here, easy to preach to. They are coming right on with their dues. Bro. Hammet Hedrick was elected reporter. We met with the Cid people after noon. The congregation here is small, but there are a number who are faithful and true.

The following have remembered us during Mrs. Neese's illness: Mrs. Lee Delk, kraut, corn, berries, loaves and crackers; Mrs Lina Surratt, butter; Mrs. Frank Delk, milk, three cans berries, onions and cake; Mrs. J. R. Galimore, milk, meat, butter; Mrs. C. H. Hill, milk and butter: Mrs. Mary Hill, sweet potatoes; Mrs. Ada Garner, berries; Mrs. R. C. Hoover, milk and eggs; Mrs. J. A. Morgan, eggs, bread and kraut; J. A. Morgan and David Hoover each hauled load wood; Kinley Hill, fish; Mrs. Moser Morgan, Mr. A. W. Prevost, ham, butter and eggs; Grandma Hedrick, four cans fruit.

The following are not our members: but they remember us just the same: Mrs. Roba Garner, Mrs. Jimmie Ragan, Rev. A. Ridge, Mrs. C. L. and Miss Sallie Amick, and Mrs. W. A. Amick, Mr. and Mrs. C. Grimes.

We value highly the spirit which has shown itself in so many concrete expressions of interest and love.

Mrs. Neese is still unable to do any work, so the burden of housekeeping rests upon the writer.

Mrs. Lee Delk, who has been right sick, is improving.

McKinley Hill united with Piney Grove church last appointment. He is a valuable addition to our church.

William H. Neese.

—We had a call from Bro. O. B. Williams this week. He is visiting relatives and will soon depart for his new field in Seattle, Washington. He goes to take charge of a new church in new territory with four thousand people to be served by this and one other church. He is aware that he is facing great responsibilities, calling for his very best. We wish him success.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

PHILADELPHIA, GREENSVILLE CIRCUIT—

Bro. Morgan was with us again Sunday, and delivered a good sermon as usual. He will also preach for us again the third Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, sun time, and will continue on through the year to do so.

We reorganizced Sunday school again last Sunday, and we hope to have a better Sunday school in the year 1919 than we have ever had in the past years. I feel if the older people would take more interest in Sunday school than they do we could have a better Sunday school, and may God help them to do so this year. The hour for school will be 3:30 in the afternoon. Please don't forget the hour. Come one, come all, and let's have a good Sunday school.

LITTLETON CHARGE—

The second quarterly conference will convene in Vaughan church on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in April, with President Andrews presiding. Bro. Andrews will preach for us at 11 a. m., quarterly conference in the afternoon. I hope that each official member will feel the tremendous responsibility that rests upon him and be present to discharge his or her duty. Come, brethren, one and all, and we will have a good conference, and a good year for the Littleton charge.

The Lord has already worked wonders among us this year, and He will continue to work among us if we will let Him. Our special meeting will begin in the Littleton church the first Sunday in May at 8 o'clock p.m. with Rev. N. G. Bethea for pulpit help. Brethren, pray for us that we may have a glorious revival here in this church, because it certainly is needed.

However, it is not needed in this particular church any worse than in some of the other churches here in the town, and the other churches on this charge. The interests of this charge need to be intensified, and I believe that we are now in a position to intensify the same.

We are now about to get all the churches on the charge lined up. We have a mighty good people here to serve. Some of the good people at each church on this charge have remembered us in a material way since we came here.

But my! my! Look out in the next few paragraphs for a "double header." And here she is: Littleton-Corinth pounding, from April the third to April the sixth, inclusive.

On April the third Sister Nannie Pepper of Hawkin's Chapel came to the parsonage and brought us a nice fat hen, a middling of meat, and some canned tomatoes.

Bro. W. N. Thornton and family came on April 4 and represented the membership of Littleton church. He had his auto well loaded with good things.

Bro. G. L. Barnes came on April fifth and represented his church, Corinth. He brought a hundred and fifty pounds of flour.

I met my appointment at Corinth April the sixth at 11 a. m. and to my surprise, when I started to leave the church I found my buggy packed full of good things.

I came on to Bro. G. L. Barnes's home and there found another load which I had to leave there, and it was brought to the parsonage later on by Sister Fannie Barnes and Sister Nannie Pepper.

It would be very gratifying to the pastor and his family to see every one of your names come out in the church paper, but as this would require a great deal of space, therefore I believe that it will suffice for me to make a condensed report of what Littleton and Corinth churches have done. We took an inventory of our pounding this morning, and found the following in our possession: Three hundred pounds of flour, fifty pounds of sugar, fifteen pounds of coffee, twenty-three cans of fruit, and one can of nice peach preserves, nine boxes of Quaker oats, five cans of Karo syrup, five boxes of celluloid starch, six cakes of toilet soap, one box of lye soap, one box of macaroni, ten pounds of salt, one can of baking powder, fifteen fine hens, and one brood of young chickens, two young chickens large enough to fry now, and they will make a preacher and his family a very good mess, three hams and one middling of meat, and a live pig to make more, fifty pounds of corn meal, Irish and sweet potatoes, cabbage and onions, one box of fresh eggs, a can of salmon, three nice dresses (one each for my wife, daughter, and baby, three spools of thread, one pair of silk hose and a pair of bed-room slippers, six handkerchiefs, four hand towels, one sack of California peaches, one sack of peas and a sack of beans, and then some cash to back it all up. We also wish to thank Bro. Will Fishel of Vaughan church for a nice fresh ham.

Brethren and sisters, we feel very grateful for these tokens of love, and we can only hope to repay you by service. Words wholly fail us to express our appreciation for the many comforts you have brought to our home. May the Lord bless each of you, is our prayer.

Hoping all goes well with you and yours, I am, very truly yours,

D. M. Loy.

Littleton, N. C., April 8, 1919.

CONCORD—

Our Sunday school attendance first Sunday was 205. Our collection amounted to $21.40, which goes to the Children's Home.

We had splendid congregations both morning and night. At the morning service the Lord's Supper was observed, and our pastor preached a very appropriate sermon from the text, "I am the Bread of Life." Quite a large number partook of the elements.

At night his subject was, "Seeking God," and all seemed to enjoy this service also. We were deligted to have worship with us Sunday Privates Silas L. Furr, Charles E. Nash and Marshal D. Blackwelder, who have been with the American Expeditionary Forces in France for the past eleven months. These boys have all received discharges and are at home to stay.

We now have our new heating plant installed, and the people seem much pleased with it.

Our special meeting will begin the second Sunday in May with Rev. J. D. Williams of Winston to assist. We are hoping for a great meeting.

Bro. Lowdermilk is at Lawndale this week helping Bro. Edwards in a meeting

Mrs. Robert Furr gave a dinner Saturday in honor of her son, Private Silas L. Furr, who returned from Camp Jackson last Thursday evening. Between 35 and 40 guests were invited, among them being Messrs. Charles E. Nash, Andrew Measamer, Roland Haupt, Ross Plyler, and Carl Honyecutt, all of whom except one have been overseas fighting for almost eleven months.

The children of Mrs. R. O. Atwell gave her a surprise dinner on April 5th, it being her 67th birthday. Between 75 and 80 people were present to enjoy the occasion.

The Philathea class gave their beloved teacher, Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk, a birthday surprise last Tuesday, April the first. Rev. and Mrs. Lowdermilk had been invited to take supper with one of the members of the class and during their absence from the parsonage between 35 and 40 Philatheas made their way to the parsonage (previous arrangements having been made with Mr. Lowdermilk in regard to getting into the house unawares to Mrs. Lowdermilk). After the party had finished setting the dining-room in order by beautifully decorating the table and loading it to the breaking point with good ting room to await the arrival of their teacher.

When Rev. and Mrs. Lowdermilk returned the class was singing, "Blest be the tie that binds", and as Mrs. Lowdermilk came in she was greeted by every one with good wishes and happy returns of the day.

All were then ushered into the dining room, and after a short prayer by the pastor, the president of the class, Mrs. D. A. McLaurin, presented their efficient teacher with a beautiful Philathea pin set with pearls of the Philathea national colors. Mrs. Lowdermilk accepted the gift with joy and expressed her love and appreciation to the class for so well chosen a present.

Every one was then served with delicious refreshments which all enjoyed very much, and Mrs. Lowdermilk declared after being so delightfully entertained that it is not so bad to be an "April fool" after all.

CLARKS CHAPEL, BUNCOMBE CT.—

We are still having a good attendance in our Sunday school. And we hope more interest will be taken in the future.

The singing convention which was held at our church the fifth Sunday in March was well attended by people from all parts of this county. Several classes took part in the singing, including some male quartettes. A picnic dinner was served on the grounds, and the day was enjoyed immensely by the large congregation present. One of the visitors whom we delighted to have was our old pastor, Rev. T. E. Martin, and at 8:30 Sunday night he preached an interesting and helpful sermon at our church, which was enjoyed by all present.

We held our weekly prayer meeting at our church last Thursday night, and had a very good attendance, as it was the first we had held in some time; but hope to have a better attendance in the future.

Margaret Kennedy, Reporter.

FRIENDSHIP, N. DAVIDSON CT.—

Our pastor the first Sunday in April preached a splendid sermon on "Self Denial." $6.95 on budget. We have organized Sunday school in full. W. M. Byerly, superintendent; Otis Phillips, assistant; Clarence Shoaf, secretary; Miss Ethel Walser, organist. We hope to have a good Sunday school. $2.50 for the Children's Home. We were very glad to have Bro. Cecil in Sunday school with us; he has a warm place in the hearts of all. Glad Mrs Byerly is able to be back with us again. We are sorry to lose in our church service and S. S. Mr. Culport Lenear and family; they have moved away.

REIDSVILLE MISSIONARY SOCIETIES—

At the last regular meeting of our missionary societies the following officers were installed in the W. H. M S. for the year 1919: President. Mrs. J. R. McCollum; recording secretary, Mrs. D. L Carrol; corresponding secretary, Mrs. W. E. McCollum; treasurer, Mrs. A. P. Sands.

Our societies are small in number, but we are trying to do our share in this great work. At this meeting the W. F. M. S raised $30.50 for the India relief fund besides adding $10.75 to our bond fund. It is hpoed that we continue to move forward toward greater things.

Mrs. W. E. McCollum, Reporter.

REIDSVILLE—

April 6 was a memorable day in the Reidsville M. P. church, for it was then that eight little girls and boys joined our church and enlisted as soldiers of the cross. They were Janie Sands, Louise Thompson, Nannie Pegram, Sadie Pegram Frances Wray, Frances Turner, Virgil Pegram, and James Pritchett. All of these parents' hearts were made glad, I'm sure, but Mr. and Mrs. Pegram's hearts were made thrice glad, for three of theirs were among the number. On the Monday night previous little Ross Dixon joined, it being his desire to join on his ninth birthday. He is a manly little fellow and a joy to his parents.

We were so glad to have Rev. Mr. Bethea with us during our revival, and those who heard hhis sermons feel that his is the true religion and have been greatly benefited. In his sorrows as well as his joys our prayers will be with him and his work. His daughter, Pauline, spent the week-end with him while he was here. It was so kind of her to play for us while she was here and we missed her when she left. It is hoped that she will use this talent for the Lord and His work.

Our sympathy goes out to Mrs. A. P Sands and her brothers in the recent loss of their mother. Cousin Jennie was a good woman and has gone to her reward.

The members of the Forward Movement class are glad that their teacher, Mr. J. H. Allen, is improving and hope that he will be able to meet his class again next Sunday.

Our Sunday school is moving forward, too. Our collection for the Children's Home in March was $11.28. Our aim now is to have an attendance of 100 at Sunday school and if each member tries this can easily be accomplished.

Mrs. M. A. Jones and Mr. J. W. Dixon were elected delegates to the Young People's Convention while Miss Kate Hammer and Mr. J. R. Gunn were elected alternates. Our pastor, Mr. Gerringer, is planning to take them through the country, so a fine trip is in store for them and we are expecting a fine report, as well, in their return.

Mrs. W. E. McCollum, Reporter.

BURLINGTON—

Last Sunday there was an increase in the Sunday school attendance of twenty-five over the previous Sunday. Three hundred and fifteen persons were present, 76 of this number being the attendance of the Baraca class. Our goal for this year has been 300, and now that we have attained it, we have set as our goal 400. We expect to reach this number by the last of May. The Baraca class is working for 100, and Bro. "Jim" Workman, the enthusiastic and earnest president, says that number will be reached.

There was a fairly good attendance at the morning church service, and Brother Pritchard delivered a most splendid and inspiring sermon, using as a theme, "The New Day." In his discourse he spoke of several things that are very vital in this new day, namely: (1) new patriotism; (2) new diplomacy; (3) new democracy; (4) new educational spirit; (5) new capital and labor conditions; (6) new social life. One peculiar feature (and a very unique one) of his sermon was that he announced his text at the close rather than at the beginning of the discourse.

The Christian Endeavor societies held their regular meeting Sunday afternoon, the juniors meeting at 4 o'clock and the seniors at 7:15. The senior society has organized a personal workers' class for the study of methods in evangelistic work. The first meeting of the class was held on Sunday evening at 6:45.

There was a slight increase in the size of the congregation at the Sunday evening church service. The choir rendered special music, and a good sermon was delivered by our pastor.

Miss Evie Lamb and Ferry Lee Gibbs were elected as delegates to the young people's convention. Bro. Pritchard and the writer will attend the convention as officers of the Union, so we will have a large representation.

Miss Lois Albright, a student at the State Normal College, spent Saturday and Sunday with her people here. We were glad to have her at church.

In his sermon last Sunday morning our pastor spoke of a problem which is confronting some of our Sunday school teachers in the primary department. He said that a teacher had sought advice from him as to what might be done in combating the influence of the moving picture shows on our children. This teacher said she found it very difficult to teach these children the lesson because their minds were filled with the scenes of the moving pictures which they saw during the week. Brother Pritchard said he could not give the desired advice, and further stated that he was glad to know that one layman in our church had been moved to write and have published in our city papers an article condemning these moving pictures. The writer of the article said the pictures he had seen were degrading, bordering on indecency, and the young people seeing them would not dare discuss them while on the way home or would not talk of them with their parents. We believe there is going to be a reformation brought about in the public amusements of our town.

Next Sunday we will have Sunday school at 9:30, and at 11 the pastor will preach a special Easter sermon. In the evening at 8 the children of the Sunday school will give their Easter program and exercises. We hope to have a large attendance at all these services.

C. B. Way, Rporter.

ORANGE—

Sunday schools have been organized at Chestnut Ridge and Efland within the last month. New life has been taken on and we trust that since favorable conditions have come again much interest will be shown. We are anxious for every one who attends Sunday school to bring others and thus supplement our interest by having larger attendance. Although the Sunday schools at these churches have not been running long, yet each has decided to give Easter services on next Sunday. Program of Board of Home Missions will be used. The children are being trained by Mrs. T. P. Cheek and Miss Teressa Sykes for Chestnut Ridge, and Miss Lettie Thompson and Miss Liner for Efland.

Attendance at church services has greatly increased for the past month. We hope that more interest will be manifested. The first Sunday in April Mrs. Geneva Riley united with our church at Union Grove. She joins with her husband, and we welcome her into Christian fellowship.

The second quarterly conference for Orange charge will be held with Union Grove church on Saturday before the first Sunday in May at 2:30. Will the official members be present?

President Andrews expects to be with us the second Sunday in May. This is the plan of appointments: Union Grove at 11, legal time. Chestnut Ridge at 3 P. M., Efland at night. Come hear the message Bro. Andrews will give you.

H. Freo Surratt.

OAK RIDGE—

We had good attendance at Sandy Ridge on Sunday last. The Sunday school has taken on new life recently. We trust it shall continue to grow.

The first Sunday in May has been chosen as the time to dedicate the Methodist Protestant church at Oak Ridge. Bro. L. W. Gerringer, who worked so faithfully in building the church, is expected to preach the dedicatory sermon for us. We look forward to this service with interest.

It is expected that Pine Grove, Ai, and Kernersville, will hold Easter services on next Sunday.

Our hearts are made glad by the return of Bro. Walter Linville, last week, who has been in service in France.

A. O. Lindley.

ST. PAUL—

We hope the readers of the Herald will not get weary with our reports so often, but we must tell you some things that are too good to keep; 169 at Sunday school yesterday and two good sermons by our pastor. At the evening service six converts. Surely the Lord sent Bro. Kennett here to preach the gospel. If we co-operate with him great things are possible.

Our second quarterly conference will meet next Wednesday evening at eight o'clock: we are expecting Bro. Andrews with us.

The Sunday school will give an Easter service next Sunday at eight o'clock p. m. Bro. Kennett expects to open the doors of the church next Sunday morning for the reception of new members. Pray for us.

W. A. Lamb.

April 14, 1919.

STANLY CIRCUIT—

Our second quarterly conference will be held at Porter on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in April

The Sunday school at Porter has revived and the interest shown is encouraging. Bro. Charles Marbry is superintendent and he is manifesting an interest that forestalls success. Our services here are enjoying increased attendance. We have taken a breathing spell in reporting the continued flow of expressions of appreciation shown us. The new recruits are: Miss Nonie Plyler (another one of Bro. Moton's flock), a nice lot of canned fruit; Mrs. Charley Marbery, of Porter, one of the nicest lots of dried fruit we ever saw, and a ham that would sharpen the appetite of the most fastidious. In this gift we noticed an expression of joy seldom realized. In truth, it is blessed to give as well as to receive.

Others who have been giving are still giving, but we will not give names now, since we are too charitable to ask for space.

Now, Brother Pastor, do not fret because these things have overtaken me. If I could I would have your people give you something to talk about.

Bro. J. H. Snotherly, a champion of the Children's Home, was called to Guilford last Sunday. We will expect to hear of greater things on Guilford after Bro. Snotherly injects into them some of his pep of enthusiasm.

W. D. Reed.

BETHESDA, N. DAVIDSON CT.—

Our Sunday school is getting better; 100 in attendance Sunday. We will have an Easter service next Sunday at three o'clock, and a collection for home missions. Pastor Cecil preaches at Shiloh at eleven and will be with us at three. Sunday school at two p. m. instead of nine a. m. (fast time). Our pastor was with us today and preached at eleven. Collection good. Miss Mamie Leonard and C. M. Yokley were elected delegates to the Young People's Convention at Henderson.

Prayer services every second Sunday night and fourth Sunday after Sunday school: attendance good. Bro. R. L. Grubb led the services last night. Mrs. C. M. Yokley will lead next services. Let everybody come. Our singing school is doing good. Most all of the little folks are coming out and good many old people, Bro. D. S. Leonard being included last Friday, although it was very rainy. We are glad to have such men as Bro. Leonard with us everywhere.

On the fourth Sunday in this month the family, neighbors and friends of Mr. John Everhart will give him a birthday dinner to celebrate his 96th birthday; everybody is invited. Mr. Everhart seems to be in good health; hope he may see many more birthdays and continue to enjoy good health.

Mrs. Ed Wagner still continues in feeble health: hope she may soon be well. Shiloh writer was telling about their people getting a good number of automobiles and I think the fever is getting up here.

C. M. Yokley, Reporter.

CHARLOTTE—

Bro. R. S Garmon, our faithful superintendent, who has been absent from Sunday school for several weeks on account of sickness, was with us again last Sunday. We were very glad to have him with us again.

The third Million Dollar Campaign program was carried out in the Sunday school. Bro. Curry preached a splendid sermon on tithing.

Passion Week services will be held each evening during the week. A special Easter service will be held on next Sunday evening.

Misses Daisy and Carrie Garmon, who have been a way for some time on account of influenza in their home, have returned to Charlotte. We have missed them during their absence and are glad to have them with us again.

We were also glad to have with us again Mrs. Broom, another one of our most faithful members, who has been sick.

We were very glad to have President Andrews with us again on Sunday evening. He delivered a splendid sermon.

Mrs. A. F. Love, Reporter.

ApAril 14, 1919.

FRIENDSHIP, HAW RIVER CT.—

On the first Sunday evening President Andrews preached a splendid sermon. We certainly enjoyed having him with us and we always look forward to his coming.

Last Sunday we held our township Sunday school convention at this church. In the morning Rev. Mr. Hardcastle of Elon College was with us. And in the afternoon Rev. C. W. Bates, Greensboro, and Mr. Kellenberger, also of Greensboro, were with us. Splendid addresses were delivered by each of these men. We certainly enjoyed having them with us. A large crowd was present.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. We hope to have a better Sunday school this year than ever before.

Blanche Weatherly.

BETHEL, ALAMANCE CIRCUIT—

The W. F. M. S. met at the church fourth Sunday p. m. in March, it being mostly a business meeting. Officers were elected as follows: President, Mrs. Lon McPherson; vice president, Mrs. J. M. Foust; treasurer, Mrs. W. A. Foust; recording secretary, Mrs. J. D. Foust; assistant recording secretary, Miss Maie Lambe; Record agent, Miss Jewel Stafford; corresponding secretary, Mrs. R. W. Lindley. We are expecting to hold our thankoffering meeting fourth Sunday in April, one service beginning at eleven old time. Our society has invited Mr. Arthur Payne and wife, returned missionaries from Cuba, to speak for us that day. They gladly accepted the invitation and we are expecting both of them to talk to us. Everybody invited. Come: we think you will bear something good.

Mrs. R. W. Lindley,
Corresponding Secretary.

PHILADELPHIA, GREENSVILLE CT.—

Yesterday was a beautiful day; we were expecting to have Sunday school, but we were called to pay the last respect to Mr. I. B. Williams. So we are expecting to meet again next Sunday at 3 o'clock. Let us all come out and stand up for Jesus, especially those that have children. Let us try earnestly to save the young people from wandering off into sin. I ask the prayers of Bro. Morgan and all of God's children for all that are on the wrong road.

news that I was going to speak that night had been spread about, and so the men had come in from all the villages round about within a radius of ten miles. Not a circular had been sent out nor a handbill printed, but from cottage to cottage, and from farn to farm, the word had been passed on; and here were the laborers gathered together in their hundreds. . * * By this time the night had fallen pitch dark; but the men got beanpoles and hung lanterns in them, and we could see well enough. It was an extraordinary sight, and I shall never forget it, not to my dying day. I mounted an old pig-stool, and in the flickering light of the lanterns I saw the earnest upturned faces of these poor brothers of mine—faces gaunt with hunger and pinched with want—all looking toward me and ready to listen to the words that would fall from my lips. These white slaves of England stood there with the darkness all about them, like the Children of Israel waiting for some one to lead them out of the land of Egypt."

The immediate result of Arch's tireless activity was an outpouring of money in support of the movement, from all parts of England, and in the short space of three three months, the meeting under the chestnut tree had swept the laborers of England into a National Agricultural Union, with Arch as president. This was in May, 1872, and for five years the organization was very successful. Emigration was introduced reluctantly as a weapon by Arch when he discovered that farmers, faced with the definite emigration of laborers and the depopulation of their villages, quickly became yielding and reasonable to approach. A visit by Joseph Arch to Canada in the following year firmly established the emigration weapon, and a general rise in farm laborers' wages throughout the country resulted.

The decline of the Union is traced to several causes. This very weapon of emigration often took out of the country strong leaders of the movement, who would have been the backbone of the organization; many of the men, having achieved the raise in wages, withdrew from the organization; an ensuing agricultural depression assisted the decline; and it had never been able to get on a self-supporting basis.

Joseph Arch, however, turned eagerly to politics. He lauched the allotment movement — the same kitchen garden scheme which proved the savior from starvation of half the homes in England during the recent war. The Allotments Act was passed in 1882.

In 1885 he was elected to the House of Commons, to lose his seat two years later. In 1892, his sixty-sixth year, he regained his seat for Northwest Norfolk, which he represented for eight years, until his retirement in 1900. The organization's work was done, and so was his. At 74 he passed from the public stage, a poor man, with practically nothing to his hand except the little cottage at Barford. His work began to be history; friends and even foes of reform, found words of praise for the splendid old figure whose work had been done so fearlessly, so honestly, a figure of solid probity and religious enthusiasm.

His little cottage was near the estate of the Countess of the Warwick, and the Warwicks for generations had been the employers, off and on, of Arch's family. The Countess visited the old man, discovered his condition, and made it her business to secure for him the competence for his declining years he had so well deserved. The little cottage, bought by his grandfather for $150, became The Cottage, and the mecca of thousands anxious to see and have a word with the hero of so memorable a movement.

Later the Countess of Warwick edited his "Reminiscences" for him, a clear and graphic story of his life, simply told. These words of his own, terminating the record of his struggles, may well be quoted as a fitting conclusion: "To the future of the agricultural laborer I look forward with confidence. I know—none better— that all is not glittering gold in his lot: but the bettering of that lot, the brightening of that lot, rests with himself. When I began he had nothing. Now he has the political telephone of the vote, his Board Schools, his county councils, his parish councils. I say, then, here are the means of betterment and progress lying ready to his hand, if he will but use them with discretion and manly, independent judgment. 'The land for the people is the goal the laborers are working for. What I want to see is, when a laborer has no work to do for others he has something to do for himself. He can attend to his allotment and grew fruit, vegetables, and keep a pig for himself and his family, so that when the winter comes round he will have, like the busy ant, a good store laid up to keep them all going till the spring comes round."

A very practical idealism this, and one which, largely through the war, Joseph Arch lived to see, as he wished, practically realized.—The Dearborn Independent.

IF?

If it is good and wise to conserve food in time of war that others may be fed, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to eliminate waste in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to have prohibition in time of war, why not in peace?

If the liquor business wastes foodstuff, decreases individual efficiency and corrupts life in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to serve and sacrifice for high spiritual ideals in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to clean up vice conditions surrounding our youth in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to spend millions to surround our boys with the best influence and environment in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to pray and read the Bible in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to look after the social welfare of the homes of our boys in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to expose, condemn and punish profiteers in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to regulate prices in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to brand the slacker in time of war, why not in peace?

If it is good and wise to serve the world in time of war, why not in peace?

A VOICE FROM HEAVEN.

I shine in the light of God,
His likeness stamps my brow;
Through the valley of death my feet have trod,
And I reign in glory now.
No breaking heart is here,
No keen or thrilling pain,
No wasted cheek where the frequent tear
Hath rolled and left its stain.

I have found the joy of heaven;
I am one of the angel band,
To my head a crown is given,
And a harp is in my hand:
I have learned the song they sing
Whom Jesus hath made free,
And the glorious walls on high still ring
With my new born melody.

Do I forget? Oh, no!
For memory's golden chain
Still binds my heart to the hearts below,
Till they meet and touch again.
Each link is strong, is strong and bright,
And love's elastic flame
Flows freely down, like a river of light,
To this world from which I came.

Do you mourn when another star
Shines out from the glittering sky?
Do you weep when the voice of war
And the rage of the conflict die?
Then why should your tears roll down
And your heart be sorely riven,
For another gem in the Saviour's crown,
And another soul in heaven?

MARRIED

Grizzard-Floyd.

Sunday, April 13, three o'clock p. m., at Lebanon church, Mr. Romie P. Grizzard and Miss Nellie Floyd were united in marriage. It was the hour for preaching service and quite a large congregation witnessed the ceremony. After service the happy couple drove to their future home near Seaboard, N. C. These young people have a wide circle of friends and received many congratulations. The writer officiated. J. B. O'Briant.

THE PRAYER CYCLE—

This little booklet issued by the central campaign committee of the Million dollar Campaign is well designed to give the League of Intercessors a reminder of the needs of our church. Truly, if our people would remember daily the great needs of our denomination and pray earnestly that these be supplied, there would be no need to put on a long and expensive campaign in order to secure any reasonable amount of money to enlarge the scope of our operations.

Prayer is much needed in these days. We need to pray because of the help it brings to our own lives

We must pray is we are to keep saved. This restless, faithless, disposition found in many churches can be removed by daily prayer. We are in danger of being overwhelmed by the material things of this world anyway, but to try to deal daily with the unspirituaal forces around us without much prayer will surely undo us.

We also need to pray because of the help it brings to others. More is wrought by prayer than the world knows of. If the Methodist Protestant Church could become a league of intercessors to the last member in it, there is nothing we would need that would not be ours—the million dollars would be secured, the twenty-five per cent. in membership would be more than obtained. Why is it, brother, sister, that you are slow to join the League of Intercessors?

"Pray without ceasing, and in everything give thanks."

A BIGGER AND A BETTER CHURCH. did you say? We have met many who have expressed such a desire. To want a thing and to secure it are two different things. The world is full of people who want, who crave riches, but there are only comparatively a few who are rich. There are millions who desire knowledge, "want" an education, but many of these never get knowledge, never know what it is to be educated.

The reason is not far to seek, they did not desire riches, knowledge, enough to pay the price, of securing them. Now, those of us who have been wanting a bigger, a better Methodist Protestant Church, there is presented to us an opportunity to help to make it both bigger and better: what are you doing about it?

Some are refusing to co-operate in the Million Dollar Campaign because the amount is large and the goal is high; the very thing we have wanted, or desired. Now, come along and let's obtain them both; we can, if we will. Our people are fully able to raise every dollar of our apportionment and not hurt themselves. Will you help? Become a TITHER and give the tenth unto the Lord. Become a personal worker and win some one to Christ. That is the way this bigger and better Methadist Protestant Church is to come. Not by hoping, desiring, longing for, but by bringing it to pass as co-laborers with the Lord.

LOVE'S GROVE CHURCH, CABARRUS CHARGE, Rev. J. F. Alexander, Pastor.

I visited this church on Saturday afternoon and found a large congregation out, for a week attendance. This church, with Fairview, now constitutes Cabarrus charge. It may or may not be the best arrangement as to the grouping of these churches, but the people are working nicely and I heard no objection to the plan from any member of the church.

This church raised its quota of the price of an acre of the farm for the Home and seems to be alive and active, except they are not paying the pastor up regularly. It works a twofold hardship not to pay the pastor promptly. It makes it hard upon him to be denied his salary monthly and it makes it harder for the church to pay up at the end of the year. It is both unwise and unjust. WHY DO IT? The lack of leadership sometimes; the lack of interest among some.

MIDLAND CHARGE, Rev Geo. L. Reynolds Pastor.

This charge consists of Mill Grove church at Midland, and Pine Bluff appointment five miles away. I visited Pine Bluff on Saturday night. They hold their services in a school house in a community where there is no church in a radius of possibly five miles. Bro. Alexander preached for them there and since religious services were begun to be held there a great change has gone over the community, I was told. It is another evidence of the influence of the church of Jesus Christ upon an ungodly community. It is the leaven of righteousness which transforms the community. It ought to hearten the people of God for greater effort to see these evidences of divine approval upon the labors of his own Mill Grove is one of the older churches in the comunity. It still holds the camp meeting, the wooden tents stand around the church as the evidence of their desire to live back in the days of yore. There are but few of these camp meetings held now in our state, and doubtless they would do better by discarding the tents and conduct their revival services as do the other churches. The frame of a ten-room parsonage is the evidence Bro. Reynolds now has that he may have a good home near to the church. If the building shall be finished in keeping with the size and the needs of a pastor's family, it will be ample for any pastor this charge will ever have. We congratulate Pastor Reynolds upon this splendid start he has made towards a home for himself and his successors here.

Bro. Reynolds is principal of the Midland high school and is working hard to keep both duties fully discharged. It is really impossible for one man to do two men's work as well as two men can do that work. Bro. Reynolds realizes this full well, but under the circumstances we feel it may be the best thing to do.

FIRST CHURCH, CHARLOTTE, Rev. Geo. L. Curry, Pastor.

This little band of workers deserves great praise for the splendid work they are doing. The labors of pastor and people have been great and are bearing good results. The church is really succeeding better than I expected it to succeed, knowing the conditions it would have to labor under. It was handicapped by a debt big enough to smother the life out of a church of less enthusiasm; was begun with a small membership in a city of large churches and of great wealth. But in the face of all these things, the church has grown in membership and service and now it looks like soon our people there will be in a shape to work under normal conditions.

Pastor Curry and wife are held in high esteem by the entire membership. He is full of energy and of plans, and he is spending this energy wisely in organizing his membership for larger service, while his companion is organist and is building up a choir. The raising of a thousand dollars by this little band of workers and their friends has given them greater faith and more courage for greater endeavors. The church needs a parsonage badly. Houses are hard to secure in Charlotte and are expensive to rent when found. The church has secured, by a small payment, a lot adjoining it upon which I hope at no distant day they shall be able to erect a comfortable house for the pastor. It would be money wisely expended.

able to read lots and lots of nice stories, without waiting until mother had time to read them to her.

So Peggy went to school, but she was sulky about it. The other little girls and boys set to work eagerly to learn the letters of the alphabet, but Peggy just looked out the window and pouted and frowned.

‘‘What is the matter, little girl?’’ asked the teacher.

‘‘I don’t want to learn my letters. I don’t want to learn to read. I want to go hofe and play with my dolls,’’ said Peggy.

The teacher said nothing, but when Peggy came to school the next morning she found a picture lying on her desk. It was the picture of a little girl.

‘‘That is a present for you,’’ said the teacher.

‘‘But who is the little girl?’’ asked Peggy.

‘‘Look at the back of the picture,’’ the teacher answered, ‘‘and you will find her name.’’

So Peggy turned the picture over, and there was a lot of printing on the back of it. But to her it looked only like a lot of funny little black marks, for she had not learned her letters.

‘‘I am not going to tell you the little girl’s name,’’ said the teacher, ‘‘but if you will work hard and learn your letters, you will be able to find out for yourself.’’

Peggy started out bravely with the other children, but before it was time to go home she was tired of working.

‘‘I can’t learn them,’’ she said. ‘‘There are too many.’’

The teacher laughed. ‘‘Why, there are only twenty-six of them,’’ she said. ‘‘If the little girl in the picture could hear you say that, she would laugh at you. See how hard she is working.’’

‘‘She’s not working. She’s just having fun painting pictures,’’ said Peggy scornfully.

‘‘Oh, no, she isn’t,’’ said the teacher.

‘‘What is she doing?’’ asked Peggy.

‘‘I am not going to tell you,’’ said the teacher, ‘‘but if you learn your twenty-six letters, and learn to make words with them, you can find out for yourself.’’

Every morning Peggy found the picture on her desk. When she grew discouraged over the number of letters she must learn, one look at the picture was enough to make her go to work again. For had not the teacher said that the little girl would laugh at her if she couldn’t learn twenty-six letters? And what was the little girl doing, if she wasn’t painting pictures?

At last all the letters were learned, and Peggy began to put them together in words. One morning the teacher said to her, ‘‘Now I think you can find out about that little girl who has been sitting on your desk so long.’’

Peggy flew to her desk and snatched up the picture. She turned it over and began to read slowly.

‘‘My name is Su Sing.’’ (‘‘What a funny name!’’ thought Peggy.) ‘‘I live in China,’’ she read on. ‘‘Many people in China think that little girls should not go to school.’’ (‘‘That’s just what I think,’’ said Peggy to herself.) ‘‘But I wanted to go,’’ the story continued, ‘‘because I want to know as much as my brother knows. He goes to school and learns many things. So I told my father and my mother that I must go to school, and at last they sent me.

‘‘I am learning to read, but it will take me a long time. Chinese letters are not like your letters. They are like little pictures, each with a story of its own, which I must learn by heart. In this picture I am learning to write some of them. I do not use a pen or a pencil, but a brush, such as you use for painting pictures. I do not write across the page in lines, as you do, but down the page in columns. It takes seventeen strokes of the brush to make some of these letters, so I cannot do it very quickly.

‘‘My teacher tells me that you have only twenty-six letters to learn before you can begin to read and write. Before I can become a well-educated girl and read Chinese books, I must learn by heart about five thousand Chinese characters. But I shall not give up until I have learned them, for I want to be as wise as my brother.’’

When Peggy had finished reading, she looked up and saw the teacher smiling at her.

‘‘Oh!’’ cried the little girl, ‘‘I am so glad that I learned to read! Su Sing surely would have laughed at me, if I couldn’t have learned twenty-six letters!’’—Marjorie R. Peck, in Zion’s Herald.

THE FOOL BARN-BUILDER.

No fool ever knows that he is a fool. The man who built his house upon the sand did not know he was a fool until the floods came and the house fell. The man who spent his time in building larger barns and who neglected his soul did not think himself a fool. On the contrary he counted himself a prudent and successful man. He prided himself on his prudence and sagacity. He was making good. So his neighbors all thought and he thought so himself. The capacity for self-deception is immeasurable. One ought to think twice before he affirms with positiveness that he is not a fool.

The folly of the man in the parable comes out in his answer to the question: What shall I do? He proprounds the question to himself, and forthwith proceeds to answer it. His answer gives us a look into his soul. He says: ‘‘I will look after myself. I will take care of Number One. I will get ready to take things easy. I will convert life into a banquet. I will have a good time. I will confine my pleasures to the senses. I will eat and drink and be merry.’’ This did not strike him as a silly answer. Why should it? Had not many of his neighbors said the same thing? Had not the world come to expect this sort of answer to such a question? Thousands of men continue to give the same answer and they do not count themselves fools, either. They are among the very shrewdest and brightest men of the time. But God does not see as man sees. To God this barn-builder was a fool.—Charles E. Jefferson, D. D.

‘‘WASTED.’’

Lieut. Gen. Sir Robert Baden-Powell, addressing a central meeting of Boy Scouts at Guildhall, London, told of the heroic death of a French Boy Scout described in a letter found on the body of a dead German. General Baden-Powell read the letter, which follows:

‘‘A traitor has been shot, a little French lad belonging to one of these gymnastic societies which wear the tri-color button. The poor little fellow in his infatuation wanted to be a hero. A German column was passing along a wooded defile, and the boy was caught and asked whether the French were about. He refused to give information. Fifty yards further on fire was opened from the cover of the wood. The boy was asked in French if he had known that the enemy was in the forest, and he did not deny it. He went with firm step to a telegraph post and stood up against it, with a green vineyard behind him, and received the volley of the firing party with a proud smile on his face. Infatuated boy! It was a pity to see such wasted courage.’’

Wasted? O blind of heart, you wrote it wasted,
The loyalty, the courage and the pride;
Nay, you, who could but pity and deride
That pearl of boyhood, smiling as he tasted
The sacrament of death; you, who had hasted
By steep descent from where the stars abide
The heavy darkness; you, who had denied
The gleam of God in your own clay, are wasted.
Will not all lovers of the fair and true
Forever see that little figure stand
Erect against the post, to die for France?
Her leafing April vineyard better knew
The beauty of that deed than your dull hand,
Wondering at honor, counting faith mischance.

BIRTHDAY DINNER.

April 10 the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Magee, Pleasant Hill, N. C., was the scene of a most enjoyable occasion. It was Bro. Magee’s sixtieth birthday, and he had invited many of his friends to enjoy the day with him. He and Mrs. Magee had prepared a nice dinner for the occasion and a table was built in the yard on which this dinneer was placed and all were invited to the feast of good things to eat which ran from barbecued pig on down and it was all good. After dinner ice-cream and pineapple sherbet were served. We all enjoyed the day so much and wished for Bro. Magee many more birthdays.

Mrs. R. E. Patterson.

In the early morning hours of April 8 Mrs. R. E. Patterson went to be with God. For fifteen months she had been in feeble health, gadually growing weaker until the end. Before her marriage Mrs. Patterson was Miss Mary Fleming of Granville county. Nearly fifty years ago she was united in marriage to R. E. Patterson, with whom she had lived happily ever since. Five children were born to them, two of whom departed early, three survive: C. Z. Patterson, R. E. Patterson, Jr., and Mrs. T. A. Moffitt.

Mrs. Patterson was of great usefulness in church, being especially concerned with the teaching of small children in the Sunday school. During the past twenty-five years of her life she taught the primary class in the Liberty Methodist Protestant Sunday school, and prior to that time had done similar work at other places. Her influence has been very great in moulding the lives of those who came under her care. But her religious work was not confined to the Sunday school. In all departments of the church her effort was of value. She will be very greatly missed.

May God comfort the husband and children in their sorrow. P. S. Kennett.

CONFIDING IN THE TELEPHONE.

A new use for the trouble department of a telephone office has been discovered. The Southwestern Telephone News reports it in these words: The family had not had their telephone very long, and everybody took a deep and abiding interest in it. On the outside of the directory they had noticed the words, "Trouble, call No. 4217."

It had been a hard morning, and every thing had gone wrong. Finally the lady of the house, in desperation, turned to her trusty telephone and called 4217.

"This is the trouble department," answered the operator sweetly.

"Is this where you report your troubles?" asked the lady.

"Yes, ma'am."

"Well, I only want to report that our cat got drowned in the cistern this morning; the baby is cutting a new tooth; the cook left without warning; we are out of sugar and starch; the stovepipe fell down; the milkman left only a pint instead of a quart today; the bread won't rise; my oldest child is coming down with the measles; the plumbing in the cellar leaks; we have only coal to last through tomorrow; the paint gave out when I got only half over the dining room floor; the mainspring of the clock is broken; my three sisters-in-law are coming to visit tomorrow; the man has not called for the garbage for two weeks; our dog has the mange, and the looking-glass fell off the wall a while ago and broke to pieces. That's all today, but if anything happens later, I'll call you up and tell you about it."—The Youth's Companion.

HARRIS CHAPEL, VANCE CIRCUIT—We have not reported from this church in some time, there has been so little to report. However, we have had good preaching all along. Bro. Powell was with us last Sunday, which was our regular preaching day, and delivered a very fine sermon. He made a strong appeal to the parents of the Sunday school children. I hope that each one of us formed a new resolution, in regard to Sunday school work. We have been slow opening up our Sunday school. We intended beginning the first Sunday in April, the first of the second quarter; but the literature did not get here in time, so we have not had any Sunday school yet. However, I hope to see a good attendance next Sunday, and every Sunday from now on. Our special meeting embraces the second week in July. I trust that we may have such a revival that our church may take on new life. I hope the whole church will pray for the success of our meeting.

Our stewards got busy Sunday and raised a good collection for the pastor, The church also paid off an old debt on the parsonage, that had been standing for several years. Reporter.

INTER-CHURCH MOVEMENT PROJECTED.

As the allied nations overcame Germany through their alliance, so it is conceived the churches of Christendom might overcome the common enemy, and a great alliance of the denominations is being formed to prosecute missionary, evangelistic and educational work. Already more than twenty denominations are involved in it and it is hoped that all Protestant churches in this country will lend their support to the movement. Dr. S. Earl Taylor is the leading spirit in this new movement, we believe, but there are co-operating with him the leaders in the Laymen's Missionary Movement, Sunday school work, the Federal Council of Churches, etc.

A great conference in the interest of this movement was held in the present month in Cleveland, Ohio. If nothing interferes with the working out of plans, we may expect to see this movement in progress some time next year.

One of the most interesting and rousing speakers of the Cleveland conference was Mr. Raymond Robins. We will give our readers some extracts from his speech.

FROM RAYMOND ROBINS.

I went around the world with Fred Smith in the men and religion forward movement sometime ago and I got down in Australia and I was more eager in going to Australia than any land I have ever visited because I had read a good deal about it, the men that had come out of Australia. The economic progress has been very rapid and very wonderful and if our country had as good standardization when I lie down to die in the economic life as I found in Australia seven years ago, I will be content. There was no child labor in Australia: no child worked under fourteen years of age in any kind of occupation. No sweated women in Australia. Five women worked together in any shop, mill or factory and there is a minimum wage fixed by law to protect the future mothers. Eight hours a day is the legal day fixed by statute in Australia. Public ownership of public utilities, railroads owned by the common wealth and the states, cities own all the public utilities, trams and telephones and telegraphs and water works and so on. Labor party in command of government. Three great industrial states, Queensland, Victoria, New South Wales, with a Labor Premier and Labor Parliament. And the commonwealth of Australia has as its Premier the Chief Officer of the whole continent a coal miner, a man of my profession, Fisher by name.

Now surely everything will be lovely, everything will be happy. We have solved the problems of society. Well, let's see if we have.

I found more drunkenness in the streets of Sidney than I find in the streets of Chicago and God knows we have plenty: men and women in the "pubs," as they call them the public houses, the saloons, their name for the saloons, standing there with their feet on the rail in the noon hour drinking strong drink and talking things you wouldn't expect to hear outside of a bawdy house: the whole people learning the uneconomic mind, that get-something for nothing attitude toward life, a parasitic purpose. What do I mean by that? The gambler's conscience. We have our gamblers at the top, our broadcloth gamblers. Then we have our froth gamblers at the bottom, petty gamblers. But, there is running right straight through the social system long lines of men and women and boys and girls lined up in queues on the street that went around a corner waiting for the chance to bet a bit of their week's wages in the government-controlled and government encouraged lotteries against a capital prize. You can't beat it for breeding the uneconomic mind and making thieves of your clerks.

The lowest birthrate of any Anglo-Saxon land and the highest illegitimate birth rate of which we have any record and only seven million people in a very rich continent as large as the United States! Now, why? I asked myself that question. I wanted to know. I like to know if I can what I am dealing with. I had been invited to speak at the national eight hour day celebration in Melbourne by cable before I went South. When I got to Melbourne a committee waited on me and formally withdrew the invitation. I said: "What high crimes and misdemeanors have I committed since I left my country?" "O," they said, "not any, but we didn't know you were going to come here with the preachers. You are working with the preachers and we don't have anything to do with that bunch." Yes. Now what did that mean? This is what it meant: Twenty years before the industrial struggle had come to a crisis in Australia and the church on the whole was poorly manned. O, there were glorious exceptions, but as a whole people who weren't good enough for Britain were sent to Australia on the theory that anybody was good enough as they were supposed to be; many of them good for nothing. And, in the hour of struggle they sighted the easiest way and the easiest way is always with the front pews. In any struggle that is the easiest way.

And the labor premier of a great commonwealth said to me: "Robins, you can't speak because you are under religious auspices. When we were fighting for a decent wage, and a chance to live, for our homes and our families, the preachers lined up with the labor skinners. We had to fight alone. We fought alone except that the saloon keepers and the gamblers helped us and we worked our way into the state house and we are in government house now," as they call it down there, "and we are taking care of the saloonkeepers and the gamblers and we are telling the preachers to go to ——." Pretty rough stuff, wasn't it?

Well, I was troubled by it but I thought if God could hear him say it, maybe you could afford to hear me say it. I wasn't worried so much about the blasphemy of it (and I was worried over that); what I was worried about was the actual expression in the life of the people of the loss of self-control and other serving motives that lie behind an active definite Christianity functioning in the social life of the people.

Now, friends, extra leisure is a good thing for labor up to a reasonable point. Better wages are a good thing up to a certain point. But extra leisure and extra money unless supported by extra self-control and with a social serving purpose to use the extra resource and leisure, may be a curse instead of a blessing, and we had just as well be honest with ourselves.

Now I am going to stop on the labor hour and wage side of life, but I am going to do my uttermost and ask you to do your uttermost to put through that self-control, that others serving purpose which comes out of Christianity more surely than any other force loose on this human world.

Then I left Australia: and I am in Germany. No, I am not one of those wise men that foresaw the war. I didn't see it at all. Ought to have seen it but didn't. But I saw some other things. I went into Germany and found a land organized, a land in a sense disciplined, a land, in a sense, that was conscious that this is an economic age and that

H. J. HEINZ DEAD—THE GREAT SURPRISE.

By Dr. D. S. Stephens.

It hardly seems right. Yesterday I followed the body of my old friend, Mr. Henry John Heinz, to its final resting place.

About nine months ago I was at the brink of my own grave, apparently. One doctor whom I consulted told me that he thought I did not have over a week of life before me unless conditions materially changed.

While in this state I received a telegram from Mr. Heinz. After expressing sympathy, he closed by saying, "Keep your face toward the sunlight." It thrilled me through and through. I had become reconciled to the event that I had supposed must surely come. But this telegram, and letters of encouragement and hope from others awakened in me anew the desire to live. Then began a fight for life, and I won. No, God won!

Last Wednesday I received a telegram from Pittsburgh that Mr. Heinz was dead. Many years ago there was made a sort of understanding between us to the effect that, whichever of us passed over first, the other would try to be present at the final ceremonies.

I met Mr. Heinz first in June, 1869. A half century of intimate acquaintance would have been reached in about two or three weeks if he had lived to that time.

His career as it has unfolded has been to me like a story out of the "Arabian Nights." One of the greatest business organizations on earth has sprung up at the movement of his wand.

And what was the magic wand that has created this marvel? I think I have the secret. I can best disclose it by relating an incident.

Shortly after he was married, the Methodist Episcopal Church in Sharpsburg, Pa., of which he was a member, wanted to erect a new building. The congregation was composed of poor people. Mr. Heinz then was a poor young man struggling to get a start in life. The church authorities said that at least five persons of the church should give two hundred dollars each to warrant going on with the work. Four persons were found who accepted the obligation. Then came a halt.

Mr. Heinz was doing some hard thinking. He concluded that he ought to be one of the five, although he had no idea how he could then pay that amount. His old mother told him she feared he had overreached himself.

"Well, mother," said he, "it seemed to me that God pointed that way. If I was right God will find the way to meet my obligation."

The evening of the next day a building and loan association of which he was a member held its monthly meeting. It was their custom each month to draw lots to determine who should have the privilege of using the accumulated funds as a loan. When the lots were drawn, Mr. Heinz's name was drawn out first. He had no enterprise on hand where he needed to use a loan. He arose and said so, but the words were not out of his mouth until he felt a hand on his shoulder and some one said, "Heinz, I will give you two hundred and fifty dollars if you will let me have your place." This was allowable, according to the rules of the organization.

Although it was then late at night, he went to his mother's house and waked her up to tell her that Providence had provided the money to pay his subscription, with a surplus left over.

This confirmed his conviction early in life that the right policy is to follow duty, even if you cannot always foresee the outcome. It is a sort of divine daring that prompts one to do his part, trusting that God will co-operate if the individual himself is right.

Mr. Heinz carried this spirit into the transaction of his business. Moral law and spiritual law with him were as real and certain as natural law.

One more incident: On one occasion, forty or more years ago, when I was with Mr. Heinz, he was trying to outline for himself a course of procedure for some business measure, the details of which I have forgotten. Ordinarily he was quick to decide questions of business policy, but for once he seemed nonplussed and troubled to come to a decision. He said to me, "I don't know what is best to do. I must talk with God about it."

At the time, I confess, I almost wished he had not said it. It was so unusual that it seemed strange. But I did not then know Mr. Heinz well enough to realize that he was simply giving me a glimpse into his real life.

The next time I met him the question had been all settled, and he was pushing ahead his plans with his usual vigor. He aimed to be, and in truth was, a co-worker with God.

His great business was built up in this spirit. And in my belief his phenomenal success was the outcome of industry spiritualized and made tributary to moral purpose.

A great leader among men has departed. Only occasionally do the generations furnish the world with a man who devotes his great energies to the upbuilding of God's kingdom as well as to advancing his personal interests.—The Methodist Recorder.

THE CAMERA PRIZE.

Three boys were standing before the heavy glass window of Kingman & Hall's large horticultural store. In the forefront, on a small orange mat, rested a splendidly finished camera.

"My, but it's a—beauty!" exclaimed Chester Armstrong, stepping a trifle nearer to get a better view of the object of interest within. "Just see how swell it's made."

"Who do you suppose will get it?" and Ralph Ames, too, pressed a little more closely against the large glass window.

"Sure I don't know." Floyd Longden, who had been absorbed in reading the card that leaned at the right of the camera, turned to Ralph Ames. "But one thing, I do know, and that is—I'd like it."

"Going to try for it?"

"Sure I am. I can't get it if I don't—that's a cinch."

"I'd enter it, if it weren't for Jack Lewis," announced Chester Armstrong, half-heartedly. "He's got such a start to begin with, he'll likely win with one hand down."

"I don't see how," interposed Floyd, thoughtfully.

"Don't? I do. Isn't Mrs. Freeland Wagoner Jack Lewis' aunt?"

"Yes."

"Well, hasn't she the largest lawn in Fairview, and aren't her flower beds in summer—from early spring on—one of the town's attractions? Now, put two and two together. She'll buy quantities of bulbs, as she always does, and doesn't it stand to reason—if he asks her—that Mrs. Wagoner will order them through Jack? He's got the thing cinched at the start."

"Well, one can't tell till he tries," and Floyd finished reading the conditions on which Kingman & Hall were to give away the Acme camera.

"To the boy under sixteen," announced the printed card inside the window, "residing in Fairview, through whose agency—by direct solicitation or influence—the largest sum from bulb and seed sales is registered by Kingman & Hall, the firm will present this $25 camera. The contest will close at 4 o'clock, on Saturday, three weeks from today."

"It's worth one bouncing big try," concluded Floyd Longden, as he turned away from Kingman & Hall's window.

That evening Floyd made out what he called his "hope list" of at least 20 mothers, whom he had confidence he would be able to take orders from, either for flower seeds or bulbs.

"I don't believe Jack Lewis has a more promising list, even if he does have the name of Mrs. Wagoner on his," Floyd assured himself, confidently. "He may want to win as badly as I do, but it wouldn't mean so much to him to get the camera—as it would to me. Jack has anything he really wants, any how."

Perhaps no contest ever held in Fairview created quite the interest that was taken in the Kingman & Hall camera prize. The chief reason—undoubtedly—being the fact that so many boys in the town were earnestly working for it.

From the start, the name of Jack Lewis headed the list. At no time, during the first week, had Floyd Longden been above fourth place. The second week he fell to fifth; but at the beginning of the third and last week of the contest, he moved up above Lawrence Kilgore and Emerson Tilly, with only two contestants ahead of him, Ellis Randall and Jack Lewis, who still stood first.

No one worked harder than did Floyd Longden, or under greater difficulties. None of the other boys had papers to carry after school, and only Carl Jackson had an office to sweep out mornings; Floyd had two. Also, during the last days of the contest, Floyd had to spend two evenings in the electric power house, substituting for his brother, who had been sent by the company for whom he worked to inspect a branch line at Clifton.

"I guess I'm—out of—it," decided Floyd, soberly, Friday afternoon, as he left the office of Judge Thornton, whose name was one of those on his list. "Jerry Donan's got in ahead of me here, and Mrs. Whitsel has given her order to Lawrence Kilgore. But I've got one—day—more," determinedly.

Several of the boys had called on Mrs. Wagoner, and among them Jack Lewis, who was so heavy and broken and faulty, the actual shoring and props so numerous that the overhead expense would have ruled it out in America. We wouldn't have mined it. I turned to a German engineer and said: "Do you manage to mine coal like that?" "Yes," he said, "Mr. Robins, you folks in America waste more coal than we have got to mine." And it was pretty nearly true.

I found the German organization actually educating its youth for production in a modern world and not living back two generations and simply teaching the three R's.

I spoke to students in Halle and Heidelburg and Berlin and Freiburg. In Freiburg in talking to those students in common with all the other places where I talked with them, as long as I talked politics, sociology, political economy and these other nice names, they were on their toes. When I began talking religion and Christ, as I do whenever I talk long anywhere, they were just as tired and bored as some of the people you talk to sometimes. (Laughter.)

Yes. Finally in this old university of Freiburg an understanding youth turns to me with a sort of disgust in his fine, intelligent face, because it was intelligent, although utterly devoid of spirituality, and said: "Why do you talk that kind of stuff to us intelligent Germans? Don't you know that educated Germans know that Christianity is a survival doctrine? That its doctrines of mercy and peace and goodwill are the necessary survival doctrines of a people suffering under the iron heel of Roman oppression? And that it has got nothing to do with the courageous forth right Teuton mind? If you want to talk to German students and educated people about the ideals of the future, then you go to Deckmole (?) and see Herman Deckmole's (?) Germanicus with his drawn sword, Germanicus who met the Roman legions and turned them back in the German forests and as he said saved our Teuton culture from the pollution of the Latin institutions. That is the ideal of the German youth. We are going to increase our army and increase our navy and go on with our organization and discipline and power round the world." Then he touched the scars on his cheek that he won in his duels as an evidence that he had the kind of forth right will to power which was the thing worth while.

Men and women of America, it was that thing that led those Germans out upon national suicide in the worst cause of human history. It was twenty years of teaching of Treitzchke and Nietzche and the superman and ideas of that sort, dovetailing in together that made possible the rape of Belgium and the sinking of the Lusitania and the vindication once again in this human world of the words of the Gallilean, that those who take the sword shall perish by the sword.

Now, will you get it? German men and women were eating and drinking seven years ago. They were meeting in their universities and their state gatherings and their homes. There was power and education and discipline. What was it Campbell White said this morning: that he was glad that that idea that you could save the world by education, and save the world by science and save the world by organization, had been forever destroyed in this war. He was meaning Germany, I believe.

It was in Germany that the whole thing had been idealized and that science and education and discipline and organization had driven Christ out of human hearts, and it finally turned loose a splendid people raving wolves on the world, and that is history.

Then, as if I hadn't seen it enough, as if that wasn't yet enough for my education, I am in Russia, and I see a people where a state by centuries of oppression, a class state and a class church has betrayed the Gallilean until men absolutely trust the hard, bald, materialistic formulation of Marxian socialism more than they do the gospel of Jesus Christ and they were religious minded people, too. But, the organized institution of the church had so betrayed that gospel that it had lost all power and dominion in the lives of the vast mass of the people.

Let's get this if we can. Are the Russians atheists? Why, they are mystics, extremely religious. Tolstoy and the Duke of Boyers and the whole story, ancient and modern, of Russia is that of a semi-mystic folk. I am walking under the most holy gate into the Kremlin, through the Kremlin wall, and a Red Guard with a bayonet gun is walking by my side, and he takes off his cap and I am surprised and interested: he passes by an icon, and he stoops and kisses it, and crosses himself. I say to him, "Do you believe in God?" "Da" (which is "yes"). "Do you believe in Christ?" "Da." "Do you believe in the church?" "Net. Net." (No.) Why? The church has been the spy system of the autocracy two hundred years, and when you want to know why that institution, with seventy-two million alleged communicants, with flaming croses and golden domes all over Russia, in experience of eleven months, in the hour of supreme national strain never exerted an atom of influence or restraint upon the masses of Russia, you have got the answer in that Red Guard's words.

It had furnished Gregorian chants and beautiful music and vestments for seven per cent of the privileged aristocracy and had been the spy system of that group against the working man and the peasants for two hundred years, and in the hour of a nation's need it didn't exercise even sufficient influence to be the object of contempt of the Red Guard. They treated it as if it was nothing.

Now, listen to this: There are men in this room who know that I care more about religion than I care about any other thing. I have divided my time for nearly twenty years into thirds. I don't believe you will ever save the world unless you move out on life with a comprehensive drive. We are political, and you've got to work through your government at spots. The government can do some things that nothing else can do. We are an economic people. You've got to work with the economic system. And then, we are a religious people, and you've got to work with the Christian conscience.

Now, I believe the Christian conscience, if you are going to find what is most important, is the most important thing in the world, but it has got to take and take all of life to be useful and effective. Homes are only valuable when they are on the job so far as the rest of the world is concerned. You may be very religious, and if you are 'holy' and somewhere it doesn't matter a whole lot to the rest of the world.

Active morality, morality that will go out in the streets, morality that will fit in the world's work, that is the morality that is worth something in these days, our times, and [illegible].

We are pretty well done with the creeds. We are pretty well done with the separation and 'other-than-this' business about God. We want the people to move with us toward righteousness and [illegible] and truth.

And I have given a third of my time to labor problems, and a third of my time to politics and a third of my time to religion as near as I know how. I haven't made a dollar in eighteen years, and never expect to make another dollar as long as I live, and I deserve no credit for it.

I was over in Russia and I was working with Kerensky's government. I worked three months with Kerensky's government. I knew Kerensky and every member of his cabinet, worked with them in the [illegible] situation, worked daily with them [illegible] to organize a program that might have stabilized his government if it had been [illegible]. Then I worked six months with Lenine and Trotsky in the Soviet power. I met with Lenine and Trotsky three times a week for six months; and in all that season [illegible] the church in Russia never exercised an atom of influence that I could find in the situation.

I left Petrograd and went to Moscow, where the Great Synod was in session—two hundred years since such a great meeting had taken place, and the Metropolitan of Moscow and the Metropolitan of Petrograd and the Procurator of the Holy Synod and the whole business ended; and I talked with the Metropolitan Tikhon of Moscow, head of the church in Russia, and they were debating on the rituals and debating on the vestments of the [illegible], and debating on the [illegible] while Russia was burning. In all that time I never found anybody in the church who thought that it could be of [illegible] use, and I never heard [illegible] could have any use.

Now, do you see what we are facing? If we had dealt with the state as the state was in Russia, [illegible] the church as the church was in Russia, [illegible] against the State and the Church [illegible] of the people was found in Russia.

Let your church become a betrayed church, let it become a class church [illegible] upon the lives of men. [illegible] to the [illegible] of Christ [illegible] is a class church [illegible] social [illegible].

DOES THIS ROAD LEAD TO HEAVEN?

In traveling we often meet with persons of different nationalities and languages; we also meet with incidents of various characters, some sorrowful, and others joyful and instructive. One of the latter character I witnessed recently while traveling upon the cars. The train was going west and the time was evening. At a station a little girl about eight years old came aboard, carrying a budget under her arm. She came into the car and deliberately took a seat. She then commenced an eager scrutiny of faces, but all were strange to her. She appeared weary, and placing her budget for a pillow she prepared to try and secure a little sleep. Soon the conductor came along collecting tickets and fares. Observing him, she asked if she might lie there. The gentlemanly conductor replied that she might, and then kindly asked for her ticket. She informed him that she had none, when the following conversation ensued: Said the conductor:

"Where are you going?"

"I am going to heaven," she answered.

"Who pays your fare?" he asked again.

She then said: "Mister, does this railroad lead to Heaven, and does Jesus travel on it?"

"I think not," he answered. "Why did you think so?"

"Why, sir, before ma died she used to sing to me of a heavenly railroad, and you looked so nice and kind that I thought this was the road my ma used to sing of Jesus on the heavenly railroad, and that he paid the fare for everybody, and that the train stopped at every station to take people on board; but my ma don't sing to me any more. Nobody sings to me now, and I thought I'd take the cars and go to ma. Mister, do you sing to your little girl about the railroad that goes to heaven? You have a little girl, haven't you?"

He replied, weeping: "No, my little dear; I have no little girl now. I had one once, but she died some time ago and went to Heaven."

"Did she go over this railroad, and are you going to see her now?" she asked.

By this time every person in the coach was upon their feet, and most of them were weeping. An attempt to describe what I witnessed is almost futile. Some said: "God bless the little girl." Hearing some person say that she was an angel, the little girl earnestly replied: "Yes, my ma used to say that I would be an angel some time." Addressing herself once more to the conductor, she asked him:

"Do you love Jesus? I do; and if you love him, he will let you ride to Heaven on his railroad. I am going there, and I wish you would go with me. I know Jesus will let me into Heaven when I get there, and he will let you in, too; and everybody that will ride on his railroad. Yes, all these people. Wouldn't you like to see Heaven and Jesus, and your little girl?"

These words, so pathetically and innocently uttered, brought a great gush of tears from all eyes, but most profusely from those of the conductor. Some who were traveling on the heavenly railroad shouted aloud for joy. She now asked the conductor:

"Mister, may I lie here until we get to Heaven?"

"Yes, dear, yes," he answered.

"Will you wake me up then, so that I may see my ma and your little girl and Jesus?" she asked: 'for I do so much want to see them all."

The answer came in broad accents, but in words very tenderly spoken:

"Yes, dear angel, yes, God bless you!"

"Amen!" was sobbed by more than a score of voices.

Turning her eyes again upon the conductor, she interrogated him again:

"What shall I tell your little girl when I see her? Shall I tell her that I saw her pa on Jesus' railroad? Shall I?"

This brought a fresh flood of tears from all present, and the conductor knelt by her side, and embracing her wept the reply he could not utter. At this juncture the brakeman called out: "H——y." The conductor rose and requested him to attend to his (the conductor's) duty at the station, for he was engaged. That was a precious place. I thank God that I was a witness to this scene, but I was sorry that at this point I was obliged to leave the train.

We learn from this incident that out of the mouths of even babes God hath ordained strength, and that we ought to be willing to represent the cause of our blessed Jesus even in a railroad coach.

May the Lord bless us in bringing sinners to Jesus Christ.——Sent in by Mrs. Y. M. B., Halifax.

WE WANT NO MILITARY CASTE.

Those who look below the surface, see in the provision of the peace treaty reducing the German army to 100,000 men a first step toward world disarmament. We shall never have peace until civilization gives up its practice of going about armed. A large standing army, ready to be used at a moment's notice, is a constant menace. Gun-carrying individuals endanger the safety of their fellowmen. This is equally true of gun-carrying nations.

It is a fact, of course, that the peace treaty does not provide for the immediate disarmament of the nations. The disarmament of Germany, however, is without doubt the beginning, for Germany has stood before the world as the embodiment of militarism.

Everything should be done on the part of right-thinking men and women in this country to foster world disarmament. We should set our faces like flint against any movement which looks to a large military establishment. Universal military training as a step in that direction should be opposed by all who would make it impossible for the world again to be plunged into a welter of blood such as that through which we have been passing.

The evils of any military system, even under the best conditions, were strikingly brought out at St. Louis in connection with the initial meeting of the American Legion. Publicly, men announced that they were set on destroying military caste in this country as represented in the Regular Army. On the other hand, reports have found their way into the daily press of the enmity that exists between the Regular Army and the old National Guard. Making due allowance for the personal equation, and for the strenuous conditions under which men live in days of war, the fact remains that the military establishment, even in a democracy, is fraught with danger.

We want no military caste in America. All the benefits which accrue from universal military training in the development of democracy through the mingling of the various racial units and classes, and in the upbuilding of the bodies of young men through drill, may be secured in some other way.

The war, with all its horror and its destruction of precious lives and treasure, was the fruit of militarism. The peace treaty, in limiting Germany's military establishment, has struck the death-blow of the system. World disarmament must follow, and to it America must make its contribution by remaining true to its traditions. We want no large standing army and no universal military training.—Zion's Herald.

LIFT UP THE LATCH.

'Twas dark, and I with inward fear
Stood like a culprit weeping, near
The house in which my Saviour dwelt,
Such pangs my soul had never felt.
A voice addressed me from within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

I thought I was unfit to be
A guest of such an one as He.
I needed garments new and fair
Before I dared to enter there.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

But in my deepest heart I knew
That I had sinned, and basely too.
I trifled with His blood and tears
And slighted Him for months and years.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

But I would rather not comply
Until my life to mend I try.
I need a better heart before
I could be welcomed at the door.
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

"Not now," I said, " 'twill do again,
When I am free from all my pain,
No sighing ones are wanted there
Where songs of gladness fill the air."
But still the voice was heard within,
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

With all my sin and guilt oppressed,
With heart of stone within my breast,
Say, would you, Saviour, honored be,
With such a worthless guest as me?"
"Yes," said the voice that spake within.
"Lift up the latch and enter in."

"That young man stayed very late again, Edith."

"Yes, papa; I was showing him my picture post-cards."

"Well, the next time he wants to stay late, you show him some of my electric light bills."—Boston Transcript.

"Here, hold my horse a minute, will you?"

"Sir! I'm a Member of Congress!"

"Never mind. You look honest. I'll take a chance."

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

That ye . . . may be able to comprehend . . . the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge (Eph. 3: 17-19).

How broad is His love? Oh, as broad as man's trespass,
As wide as the need of the world can be;
And yet to the need of one soul it can narrow;
He came to the world and He came to me.

How long is His love? Without end or beginning,
Eternal as Christ and His life it must be;
For, to everlasting as from everlasting
He loveth the world and He loveth me.

How deep is His love? Oh, as deep as man's sinning,
As low as that uttermost vileness can be;
In the fathomless gulf of the Father's forsaking
He died for the world and He died for me.

How high is His love? It is high as the heavens,
As high as the throne of Glory must be;
And yet from that height He hath stooped to redeem us—
He so loved the world and He so loved me.

How great is His love? Oh, it passeth all knowledge,
No man's comprehension its measure can be;
It filleth the world, yet each heart may contain it—
He so loves the world and He so loves me.

—Annie Johnson Flint, in Presbyterian Standard.

DON'T HURRY.

The ancients affirmed that Minerva, the goddess of wisdom, sprang full-armed from the forehead of Jove. Not so came Jesus to His mighty work. Behold Him wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger! He grows "in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and men." For twelve long years He is "subject unto His parents." He carries the water pitcher to the village well. In the rabbinical school He learns His alphabet and memorizes the acrostic psalms.

Meanwhile the world lies in sin and sorrow. While men are dying without a helper, the Boy of Nazareth calmly awaits His hour, with the shadow of the cross over Him. He knows Himself and He knows His mission: and His omniscience holds Him true to the path marked out for Him.

Is there no lesson here for young people who are preparing for life! "He that believeth shall not make haste." I know of a boy who, fifty years ago, presented himself for admission at college, and was informed that he must take two additional years of preliminary study: and when he cried impatiently, "I can't wait," the answer was: "If you go cross-lots to meet the business of life, you will always regret it." That was wise counsel. Waiting is not loss. Haste makes waste. The rider who cannot pause long enough to tighten the buckle of his surcingle may be unhorsed in battle. He who believes in God and in himself will go deliberately to meet the responsibilities awaiting him.

I remember that after the Chicago fire, when the vaults of banks and business houses were still red-hot, there were some who, in their anxiety to know whether they were solvent or not, pried open their vaults too soon. There was a puff of flame and their wealth vanished into thin air! This is a parable of life. Take time to look before you leap. Fabius is a better soldier than Harry Hotspur. The maxim, "Get rich quick," has landed many a young Napoleon of finance behind the bars of a prison. It is harder to walk than to run: but the tortoise outspeeds the hare before the going down of the sun.—Rev. David James Burrell. D. D, in The Presbyterian.

FORGET.

By Rebecca B. Liner.

Forget, forget, the errors made,
The tasks left long undone:
Strive, strive, to reach the heights sublime
Ere beams life's setting sun.
Forget defeat, but hear, I pray,
The words that Tennyson brings:
"Men may rise on stepping stones
Of their dead selves to higher things."

Forget the things which tend to lure
Pure minds from ideals high;
Forget, forget, the day is short,
Forget, the angels cry;
Away with low and petty things—
Forget them, let them die,
The things of worth which strengthen us
Are found in realms on high.

Look out across the towering hills
And see the beauty there:
The earth's charms fade before the sight;
With it, they can't compare.
The heights, the heights, majestic heights
Shine out thro' balmy skies—
How can man linger here in sin
When they beckon him to rise?

Forget not thoughts which gently stir,
Faint hearts to beat more true—
Forget not, ah, forget not, friends,
Life's noble work to do.
Remember that to do ours best,
To fill up life's brief span—
We'll work with heart and mind to be,
A friend to God and man.

LETTER FROM REV. CHAS. HEININGER.

Kalgan, China, April 8, 1919.

Dear Friends at the High Point Home:

That was fine of you to empty your purses on Christmas for these Chinese who do not know about Christmas. It made me happy and I told the Chinese about your gifts as I went on the long trip to the outstations soon after I received your letter. I want them to understand that the church in China was being established by the sacrifices of people now and that they too must sacrifice for the cause of Christ.

There have been some very encouraging things in our work. Already this year we have baptized 67 people and have received into the church on profession of faith more than in any one year since mission work has been established in Kalgan save just last year. There are many calls coming to us to open up new preaching places to furnish their own chapels and to help in the support of the work. More places are ready to do that than we are able to send preachers to. In some places the people have met with severe persecutions and some have fallen away. A number have gone to the Catholics as they will do things to protect their people that we will not do. But yet everywhere we are having good opportunities for the work and I expect to see great good accomplished.

However, our work is not only remarkable for the numbers that we are getting hold of. We are getting some fine young fellows, too. Among the students of the government schools we have a nice lot of boys. A week ago last Sunday I was in Peking and had a meeting with these boys who have graduated from the schools here and gone to the higher schools there. I told the boys of the difficulties we had to meet here in Kalgan, of how many there were turning to the church and of how Mr. Soderbom was leaving to enter business and what a load it left on me. I asked them all to pray for me and they did. There were ten of us there together and four of the boys led in prayer. Three of them were the only Christians in their families. One of them had been born a Mohammedan and even yet he dare not publicly confess Christ in his home city for fear of the persecution that will come upon his family. Another has been wanting to go into the ministry. He would be happy to come here and work with me but his father is dependent upon him and will not hear to his taking a position with as low a salary as the church pays. He has spent—the father says—a lot of money to educate him and now he must go to work. The third one is being helped by two uncles to get an education, but he is afraid that they may want him to leave the Christian school where he is now and go to a government school. So these boys have their problems, but they are a fine lot of fellows.

Some of the boys who were in our schools here and are now in Peking are doing very good work and it gives us pleasure to hear of it. I trust that all of you will do as well when you get out and even better, for you have better advantages there. We pray for you and want you to pray for us. May the Lord bless you and keep you and bring you out to these needy lands some day ere long. For China will need the help of all of you who can come.

With best wishes to all of you.

Yours truly, Chas. H. Heininger.

HOME RELIGION.

We have known people who had every other kind of religion but home religion. They were good at looking after other people's children, but failed in caring for their own. They were capable in business, helpful in the church, ornamental in society, but failures in the home and the real reason seemed to be that it required a good deal more grace to be Christian at home than it did to be Christian elsewhere. And yet Christianity was meant to make home happy, and so happy that for all time to come it would remain the earthly type of the heaven which lies beyond the veil.—Christian Guardian.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

By Rev. L. W. Gerringer.

Conditions Necessary for World-Peace.

Daily Readings.

Mon., June 2. First condition, righteousness. Isaiah 9: 6, 7.
Tues., June 3. Second, social justice. Mic. 3: 1-12.
Wed., June 4. Third, good will. Luke 2: 14.
Thurs., June 5. Fourth, treaty keeping. Josh. 9: 1-27.

Sat., June 7. Sixth, the reign of Christ. Rev. 21: 1-8.
Sun., June 8. Topic. Mic. 1-15.

The world desires peace as it has never desired it before. We have seen anew and with emphasized force the awfulness of war. We want peace. How shall we obtain it? I think that we cannot force the world to have peace. At least that will not be the most desirable peace. That kind of peace will not be so stable as that which the world is looking for. Our daily readings lay down as conditions as world-peace righteousness, social justice, good will, treaty keeping, vital religion, the reign of Christ. Now the main question is, How are we to get these conditions fulfilled?

The first condition, righteousness. How are we to have righteousness? Only by surrendering our lives to God. Try as hard as he may, no man can live absolutely righteous without God's sustaining grace. So in order to have righteousness, we must win men and women to God through Jesus Christ.

The second condition, social justice. Man in his natural, unconverted condition, is inclined to deal unjustly when the opportunity affords to take advantage of his fellows. Only with God in men's lives will men learn to deal justly with men.

The third condition, good will. Good will is possible only when he who came to bring peace and good will among men reigns in the hearts and lives of the people. With Jesus Christ in the life of those in authority there will be good will between the nations. We may force people to lay down arms and submit to terms, but the ill will will be there smoldering and burning, and after a while will burst forth to destroy. The way to make friends of the Germans and to insure a permanent peace with them is to start propaganda for Christ among them and win them to Him.

The fourth condition, treaty keeping. Man without God in his life will not keep his word under strong pressure, when he thinks there is a material gain for himself or for his nation. It is easy enough to argue that the other party was first to violate the agreement. But Him who was the TRUTH in men's lives and they will keep their word with individuals and with nations.

The fifth condition, vital religion. Vital religion will do it, will preserve the peace of the world. Vital religion is the kind that Jesus lived. It includes all these other things, righteousness, social justice, good will, and treaty keeping. For a long time people have been keeping up a form of religion without much evidence of life about it. It had lost its vitality. Vital religion! Yes. Nothing else will give and preserve for us the right relationships between men, the relationships that are necessary to peace.

The sixth condition, the reign of Christ. Why, certainly. He is the Prince of Peace. The reign of Christ brings peace to the home. It brings peace to a community, to a nation, and will bring peace to a world.

I am not prophesying how soon we will have world peace, but I do say that when Christ reigns we shall have it. If, then, the reign of Christ is necessary to world-peace, it is up to the church to hasten the coming of the day when Christ shall truly reign. Thank God, young people, that the church of Christ is arousing herself and putting on new strength for the important task of setting up his banners in all parts of the world. May the young people who read this and especially those who are banded together in the Christian Endeavor Societies have a large part in ushering in the reign of Christ which is the reign of peace.

THE SCHOOL OF METHODS.

It seems to be almost the unanimous opinion of the committee appointed to formulate plans for the School of Methods that it will be impracticable to have the school this summer. The original resolution provided that the school be started next year, but was amended to read this year instead of next. It is the opinion of your committee that we will not be disloyal to the wish and spirit of the Young People's Union if we postpone this matter until next summer. Our hearts are in the work; we want to see it succeed, and for that reason we suggest that we make our first attempt next year. The chances of success will be more in our favor next year when we will have had time to mature our plans.

L. W. Gerringer, Chmn. of Com.

FROM RAYMOND ROBINS.

I never face an audience in these later days without a sense of thankfulness and of obligation; both emotions sweep me constantly since the great world war was won for the right, thankfulness that it was won for the right. For, to my mind, there was a real right in the world war and there was to me clearly that right, so right that while we were yet in debate in America, I was glad to go to Canada and speak there for recruits.

I believe that the issues of modern civilization were being fought out in Flanders and France, that whatever might be the cross currents in the allies' cause, and there were cross currents, selfishness behind a thousand things, nevertheless, it was true, that there was a final issue for our day.

I said at that time that I did not wish to live in a world run on the principles of the German General Staff. I believed it then and believe it now; and we are free from that menace forever. (Applause.)

There is another thought of thankfulness that only those who left America immediately after the declaration of war and returned to America when a full year had passed away can appreciate. I know my America fairly well, was born in the South, living on the frontier for years, living in the West, living in Illinois; then speaking and working pretty well over my country. We were a divided people, we were a local people, we were a sectional people before this war and I came back and found a united people. I found a nation that had found itself national unity and life. I found the great cross sections of the economic struggle hand in hand, labor and capital. I found the men and women working in all kinds of fellowship in the tasks of men in the past. I found a black and white and foreign born—one people—a great national unity and it thrilled me. Even though it be passing and there be already rifts in that unity, I remember it with a great sense of thankfulness that it actually has been. No North, no South, no West, no East—one union in a national purpose for the freedom of the world.

The thought of obligation is never separate from the thought of thankfulness in these days in my heart. The first sense of obligation is that you and I should sense the clothing of the old doctrine of vicarious atonement with the bodies of youth, that have gladly died that we might live, for by whatever stretch of imagination the American youth, the youth of South Africa and of Australia and of Canada had no share, however remote in the cause that led to the great world war. They were unimplicated and they went forth and gave the last full measure of their life that you and I might have the institutions of freedom, of liberty, and of national security which we desire.

The thought of that young life, for no one has ever looked on a modern battle field without the sense of how young they are, those upturned faces, the youth at the dawn of life, the unspent, tremendous heritage of the whole experience laid down completely for you and me, and not a one of us can live out our span of life, and especially those whose haid has begun to gray, without the thought that we are living when younger men with more to give than we had, with a better right to live by reason of their youth and unspent years, have gone down that we might live. O God, grant that that sense shall not pass from this generation, that every one of us may feel the obligation imposed and that we carry the deed with us or we fail in our obligation to our time.

We are the only Western nation with unspent youth. The war lasted so short a time for us that it is as nothing compared with the strain of other Western nations, either in the loss of manhood or in the loss of wealth. And I wouldn't be so concerned about the loss of wealth. The one thing that cannot be replaced is the young, adventurous manhood, that eager-hearted youth, that America has in surplus as against the barrenness of the nations of the world. That puts us in the leadership of this generation whether we will or no, and the sense of obligation for America in all the whole world's life. God grant that no narrow selfishness shall make us alien or unfaithful in that obligation.

And so, I think of that and the sense of obligation comes again and eagerness, and then I think of a serving free church which is typical of our America and typical of our America alone among the nations of the world and I feel a surge of obligation upon that church in America for the world's need and I am speaking here tonight in the sense that at least the supreme obligation seems about to be fulfilled.

There were eight months after my return from Russia that I did not speak in public meetings and I spoke only to religious groups. There are some in this room will know that I spoke first after I came back to a religious group because the sense of this obligation was so tremendously living in my day. I had lived six months in the imminent presence of the end, with each day lived on the basis of a day of judgment, and never expecting to return to America; quite gladly ready to meet the issues in those terms because I was in the presence of the most splendid hour that I shall ever expect to live in; terrible, if you will; brutal, if you will; but when a hundred and eighty million people after the oppression of centuries, after the wrongs that are numberless, after all the tyranny of the Cossack whip and sword, rose and took the bit in their teeth and went wild, if you will, blinded by the unaccustomed light, to be in that presence and to dare to believe in it and to believe in life, was the finest moment I shall ever know.

And, I sensed when I came out of that supreme struggle and found myself safe and secure that then if I could have the privilege of working in whatever capacity in the organizing of the Christian conscience, of the great democracy of America for our common task in our world service, I now knew that was the supreme thing.

I have been known as a social worker. I have been known as a labor agitator, as a politician. I am grateful for it all. (Laughter.) I have been damned a good deal, have caught more bricks than I have bouquets in my day. I am grateful for the bricks. I am still catching them.

Suppose I say in this presence that America has got a little longer time but not a whole lot longer time to vindicate a Christian democracy in this human world. Suppose I say that America's institutions are more challenged by the issues of this hour because they are the best institutions of democratic life and of the free Christian conscience that the world has known. Suppose I say in this presence that I believe that the Christian sanction in a vital and definite and sure fashion in individual hearts is the only guarantee of a democratic social order that there is in all the world or ever can be. (Applause.)

An then, suppose I try to tell you why, quickly. Nearly twenty years ago I began to live on the West Side of Chicago with a definite Christian experience coming out of the North in the bitter Arctic and the Yukon and with enough clean gold dug out of the frozen places of the North by my own two hands, gold that had never robbed anybody or bribed anybody or betrayed anybody; that came out of three bitter years in the Arctic land to make me economically free for the rest of my life. Then, a sense of responsibility that I never would have known of had it not been that I had not only found the gold of the Yukon placers, but found the imperishable gold of Christ in the North and was under that obligation.

I am a sort of rough and tumble person and all life is interesting to me, even when I don't agree with it. I have always thought that if God could stand the different kinds of knocks in the world, probably I would have to, and so I have never drawn off on particular sides.

I am working in a community of 75,000 souls, a tenement district of the West Side of Chicago, speaking 21 different languages and there were a good many people there who were engaged in saving the world in their own fashion. Socialists were doing it.

One day I got the representatives of the different groups, the larger groups, together in a room and they came because I asked them and I was a pretty good sort of a fellow, most of them thought who differed from me.

Now, I said, we have agreed about food being the first need of a little child and the future of this community being in the child. All right. Let's get busy. The food situation is pretty bad in this ward. We organized there a pure food squad out of these folks of all these different minds and purposes. We took twenty-two samples of milk from wagons and milk stations and took them down to the University of Chicago and, having a professor with us during the enterprise, and had them analyzed. Nineteen of them contained formalin in greater or less quantity, a poison put in old milk to make it seem fresh. We said to ourselves that it doesn't do any good to feed a child milk with formalin in it or partially decayed vegetables or rotting meats. You have got to have pure food and in the course of fighting for pure food, for little children, we went to the State Legislature and to the City Council and to Washington and worked with Wiley's Food Committee and he did us the honor to say we helped them and we had achieved sanitary inspector and seven subinspectors indicted by the Grand Jury and sent them to the penitentiary in the enterprise of dealing with pure food. I will tell you why.

I never expect to solve any very big problem by sending folks to the penitentiary. I'd rather have folks willing to live a decent life and interested in living it. And then, I never expect to get all the crooks in the penitentiary because it will make too great a difference in the general population, and I wasn't enthusiastic about it. Yet. I will work to send folks to the penitentiary if it needs to be done. We got pure food then. We met together and said to ourselves, "It doesn't do a child a whole lot of good to see pure food through a plate glass window. You have got to tie it up with the child's insides if it is going to do him real good in this world." Now, how does that actually happen in this garden variety world in which we live? It happens out of wages. It happens out of regularity of employment. It happens out of protected machinery, and sanitary workshops so that the bread winner can keep on bringing in the daily wage to feed his child. That is quite a little enterprise. We started out on that and again the Socialist said, "Why, Robins is coming fine. He will be all right pretty soon. He is getting wise."

Yes, we helped to put through a code of decent factory legislation in the State of Illinois and finally we took out on strike 60,000 of the poorest, sweated daughters of the poor, in the sweated garment trades of Chicago, and kept them out fifteen weeks in the winter time and raised a hundred and sixty thousand dollars to keep them from starving to death.

I don't like a strike. There isn't anybody in this room that knows the waste and the wrong and the social and economic injury that lies in a strike any more than I do, both for labor and for capital and for the community. The strike is a school that is kept for those that won't learn in any other, and as long as folks won't learn in any other, that school will be in session. We got a living wage for garment trades.

I am here to say to you that decreasing the hours of labor and increasing the wages and at the same time decreasing the cost of production is the miracle of the modern industrial world that men like Ford and some others are actually performing on this earth. It is the greatest hope in the economic system that there is actually an economic integrity in the universe just as there is a moral integrity in the universe. When you have fair hours and fair working conditions and a decent living wage, you actually produce material at less unit cost in the long run than under the anti-social conditions we have had.

When the conscience of the church knows that and the courage of the church is behind its proclamation, we will have a bettter understanding in some circles than exists tonight.

We got a living wage in pure food. I got the crowd together and I said: "There are still hungry children in this world. Help them." They said: "Sure, and you know it, Robins." I said: "Yes, I know it but I wonder whether you do or not. What is the reason they are hungry? We have got active employment, a living wage and pure food. Why are they hungry?" I said: "Fellow, will you go with me a little ways? I have gone quite a distance. Is this true or not: 'The reason these children are hungry is because the bread winner in these homes comes out of the shops or factory on Saturday evening with his pay envelope in his pocket, goes into a saloon and boozes away the resources that ought to support the home; goes into a house of ill-fame and leaves his money there. Now, what is the matter with that person? Economic legislation? Political purity? Not a bit of it. You know as well as I do that the trouble with that person is, he has got a social wasting, self-indulgent purpose in his individual human heart and you have got to transform that into a social serving, self-controlled human purpose in his individual human heart. What will do that job in the world?"

Then I said: "Felows, isn't it true, and

SOUTHBOUND.

At the request of Dr. Johnson I left home April 11th on the noon train Seaboard for a trip into the Mississippi conference in the interest of the million-dollar drive. Sunday morning at 5:15 found me in Waynesboro. Miss., awaiting the break of day for a drive into the country of eight miles. I found that I had outdistanced the notice of my coming by a few hours ho had to get another car after reaching Clara and through the kindness of Bro. Trigg, one of the Clara members, at 11 o'clock I was twelve miles farther at Providence, one of the churches of Clara charge. There I found Bro. Creel, the pastor, about ready to begin the service. I went in and told him my business and he gladly turned the service over to me and I talked for an hour and ten minutes; the folks were so responsive. They voted to co-operate in the campaign and we began to wend our way back to Clara for a night appointment. Here we found a fine body of young people who were attending the industrial school of the county. It was an inspiration to talk to them. This church also voted co-operation.

Monday morning I rested at the parsonage with Bro. Creel and his good wife and got ready for a 30mile trip in the afternoon to Avera.

I enjoyed my stay with Bro. Creel and he took me to see the cattle dip where they dip the cattle to kill the tick that infests that country. It was a new sight to me and he told me if I needed a dip before leaving they could accommodate me, but fortunately I never,—or rather, the tick never got hold of me. They turn their cattle out there and they do not have the wild onion to ruin the milk and butter as we have here.

There were so many "rake straw" hogs (razor back or pine rooters, we call them) that they gave our Ford lots of trouble. Had to stop a number of times. Bro. Trigg said that a cross between a Ford and a "rake straw" made a thoroughbred, for which they had to pay $25, and they could not afford to kill them. with the car. It seemed to me I had been dropped into a new world; as I left home the buds were swelling and down there the leaves were grown and the yards were full of roses.

I left Bro. Creel with warmest thoughts of his kindness to me, a rank stranger, and promised to send him a few copies of our local paper, the Herald, so he could see something of what the N. C. Conference is doing.

When I reached Avera I found that they knew nothing of my coming and so went to work to have an appointment at Mutual Rights Church (that sounded good to me). So Tuesday it set in to raining and we were completely rained out, or in, as you may term it.

Here I spent a night each with the Avera brothers for whom the town is named, I suppose. I regretted very much not getting to speak at this church as it is one of the old landmarks down there. I trembled in my shoes as news came in of cyclones passing around me and went through the track of one that was very destructive. More later.

We are very grateful to Mrs. Bencini of High Point for a package of valuable clothing for our girls.

The Tri-State Conference of Orphanage Workers.

Met in Atlanta the 19th. It is our custom to make a trip count for as much as possible. As we are contemplating the erection of a boys' building we thought it might be to our advantage to visit the Connie Maxwell Orphanage before beginning our work, and then, too, we wanted to visit Harmony, one of our churches about 20 miles distant.

Friday night was spent with Bro. Curry and his charming little family. Mrs. Curry was at the church training a number of the children and it was our pleasure to hear a class of the little girls sing a few songs and the singing was extra good. They are doing a fine work; they are optimistic over the future for Charlotte.

At five o'clock, Sat. A. M., we boarded the train for Greenwood, S. C. At Chester our good friend, Rev. J. D. McLean, Supt. Presbyterian Orphanage, Itasca, Texas, joined us and to the surprise of both we were going to Connie Maxwell on the same mission and then Monday morning we were going to Atlanta. He went back to Clinton for Sunday and we went out to Harmony. The night was spent in the delightful home of Bro. W. H. Balentine. Sunday morning it was a real pleasure to meet with the Sunday school. The little folks said they felt like they knew the superintendent because they had been making regular offerings for a long time and the boys of the intermediate class had the same feeling. We all felt that we knew one another and now we feel still better acquainted. We were also pleasantly entertained in the homes of Mrs. Medlock and Bro. Taylor. They are looking forward with much pleasure to the coming of their new pastor, Rev. N. M. Harrison.

After hearing of the work in the Children's Home one man said, "If you build a brick building for the boys I'll give my services if you will board me and pay railroad fare. I am a brick mason."

They are interested in the college for our church, too.

Monday morning at Greenwood we joined with four orphanage workers and at 6:30 we had reached the seat of our conference eight miles out from Atlanta, where we were entertained in the Georgia Baptist Orphan Home. This home has about 300 children and is well managed by Rev. T. S. Scoggins. We had free entertainment and it was throu' the courtesy of the Seaboard Air Line Railway Co. that we made the trip. The convention was pronounced one of the best ever held by our conference.

Methodist Protestants should be proud of the fact that nearer all Sunday schools in our Conference contribute to the orphan than any other denomination. If just a few more will contribute we can report 100 per cent. Our people are beginning to find out that the Methodist Protestant Church can do things too. Really don't you think more of your church than you used to? H. A. Garrett.

COLLEGE BOOSTERS' CLUB.

I hereby pledge my services to the college committee of the North Carolina Conference, Methodist Protestant Church, promising to assist them in every reasonable way I can in raising the $250,000 set by our last Conference for buildings and endowment. As an evidence of my purpose to aid the committee I am enrolling in the College Boostrs' Club, paying the fee of one dollar.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Where There is No Vision, the People Perish.—We feel very fortunate at Mitchell's Grove to have such men as Bros. Bates and Ledbetter to speak to us about our great opportunities and the needs which are just now before us; and the question comes to one and all of us as it did to the ones that crucified Christ: What will we do with Jesus? Christ said, Go teach all nations, and he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do because I go unto my Father. Then why have we not done greater work before this? I think first of all we haven't had visions as we might and should have had and so the work has suffered greatly. How many of us pray earnestly as we have been taught in the word for laborers. The harvest has been great all the while, but never in our lives has there ever been such great and golden opportunities for building up righteousness. What will we do? Will we accept this message that is coming to us through and by our humble servants? Let us all consider what this all means. There has been a vision. God has appeared to men and spoken to them as He did to Abraham, Gen. 12:7, and the Lord appeared unto Abram and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land, and there builded he an altar unto the Lord who appeared unto him. Shall any of us be disobedient to this vision? Paul says, I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. Can we afford to be disobedient and just sit still and be at ease in Zion? Will we not strive to do greater works than these? Let us look out on the fields; they are already white to harvest, and may we thrust in the sickle and gather in the precious golden grain. May God touch our hearts with the finger of his love and help us to be more concerned about our Father's business, and that we as children of a King may rejoice to know that we have the work in our hands to do that even the angels in Heaven are deprived of doing. Then will we despise our inheritance? Can we not say, I delight to do thy will? For if we delight in the Lord He will give us the desires of our hearts. Where there is no vision the people perish. Why haven't we all had visions? Zacharias and Elizabeth were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless; and it came to pass that while he executed the priest's office before God there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord; so we see that we must be righteous and be busy, have a spirit of work upon us, be found about our Father's business. Then again, Gen. 28:10, And Jacob went out from Beersheba and went toward Haran and lay down in that place to sleep; and he dreamed and behold a ladder set upon the earth and the top of it reached to heaven and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it and behold the Lord stood above it and said, I am the Lord God of Abraham, thy father, and Jacob awaked out of his sleep and said, Surely the Lord is in this place; and Jacob vowed a vow: if God will be with me and will keep me in this way I go and will give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, then shall the Lord be my God and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.

High Point, N. C., May 5.

Harmony, Yarbrough Circuit—

We were very glad to have Mr. Garrett, of High Point, N. C., with us last Sunday. He made an instructive talk of the Children's Home. He seems to be very much interested in the work of the Home. We are glad to have some one like him to be in the Home and teach the children as they should be.

Rev. E. W. Davis, of Kentucky, preached for us that night which everybody enjoyed very much. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely; the attendance is very good, but still it could be better. Sunday being our regular preaching day our new pastor preached a splendid sermon at both services. Everybody fell in love with him the first time and we wish him much success in his work in the future.

Mamie C. Reeves, Reporter.

Peedee Church, Rockingham Circuit—

The work at this place is progressing nicely. We have just closed one of the most successful revivals this town has ever had. Bro. Ashburn was the pulpit help; he came on Monday after the meeting started on Sunday and he did all the preaching. The church unites in thanking God for sending Bro. Ashburn to this place. Bro. Ashburn believes in the old-fashioned way of sinners coming to the mercy-seat and seeking salvation through repentance of their sins, He preached with such power that sinners were convicted of their sins and came falling at the mercy-seat and crying for salvation. We were made sad when the time came for Bro. Ashburn to leave us: he did a great work here and the church unites in wishing him God-speed, hoping he will come our way again.

In the prophecy of Joel we read, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh, and your sons and your daguhters shall prophesy," and in Acts we read of how God poured out His Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. God surely has given the church at Pee Dee another Pentecost. People who have lived here 25 or 30 years say that this was one of the best meetings they were ever in. We had some old-time shouting going on. One night the writer saw M. E.'s, Baptists, Presbyterians, and M. P.'s all out in the congregation pleading with sinners to come and give their hearts to God, and they came.

There were Presbyterians that shouted just as loud as the Methodists. People seemed to forget their creed and notions and went to work with all their heart for the sinners. There were over 100 conversions. Many of the converts were fathers and mothers. We thank God for so many bright young men and women who gave their heart to God. The pastor has already received 28 into the church and others are intending to join later. We expect to get at the least 40 new members as a result of this meeting. This church has surely passed through the fire in the past. But there is now one of the brightest prospects before us that any church needs to want. God has surely set before us an open door.

Brethren, pray that God may give us courage to enter this door and capture this town for Christ and the M. P. Church.

St. Paul's—

Postal Card, - - - W. F. Kennett, Editor.

The Postal Card has not appeared for some time partly because the editor has been very busy and has gone "here and yonder".

The second Sunday it was our pleasure to make a visit to Flat Rock church, Flat Rock circuit, and to preach to a large congregation. This was our first visit since the close of our last pastorate there. The faces of many who worshiped there four years ago are no longer to be seen. It was a sad sweet pleasure for us to be there again. The third Sunday we were at Hebron, Mebane charge. At 11 a. m. the funeral of father Nicholson was preached. A congregation that overflowed the church was present. Father Nicholson was a most excellent character. He was loved and honored by every man, woman and child in the community. He lived for more than 85 years. Was one of the fathers of Hebron church and might be denominated a grandfather of the Mebane church, as some of his children and grandchildren are among the leaders in the Mebane church. On each of these Sundays we were back at St. Paul's for the evening service. Since our last report the Ladies' Aid Society has placed a new pulpit stand in the church. We are glad to say that if it is necessary that it should be known whether St. Paul will go "over the top" on the million-dollar drive that it may be confidently predicted that she will: You need not anticipate any other kind of report from us. We thank Dr. McCulloch for a good sermon preached the third Sunday at 11 a. m. Last Sunday night the congregation was fine. One man accepted Jesus Christ as his personal Savior and gave his name for church membership. Next Sunday the Baraca class is to be favored by an address by Bro. J. Norman Wills.

We closed the labors of last Sunday by uniting in marriage Mr. John W. Jobe and Miss Frances Hawkins, of Mebane. They, together with a party of friends came to the pastor's home at 306 West Washington St. for the ceremony. Mr. Jobe returned from France about six weeks ago. He and his bride are most excellent young people and we wish for them a long and very happy married life.

From Shelby—Progress—

A former teacher was wont to say that progress is motion either backward or forward. It is this kind of progress about which I write, but time, space and custom all compel me to here record only the good done.

There are many things that both pastor and people had hoped to accomplish that as yet are not accomplished. But as was revealed Saturday at the quarterly conference, something has been accomplished for which we are very grateful and for which we return thanks unto the living God.

The reports showed the Superannuate Bond bought and more than paid [illegible] in each of the churches, [illegible] pastor's salary and all claims paid in full. Each of the churches had [illegible] services and each sent a liberal contribution to the Board of Home Missions. Also each of the Sunday schools is now making a contribution to the Home at High Point. At the previous quarterly conference two of our churches were in debt, now all three are free. Don't know how many tithers we had then but now we have nine and more to come. Such were some of the reports at our quarterly conference.

Another encouraging feature of the conference was the number present. Despite the fact that one of the churches was more than thiry miles away there were more than twenty-five present from this one church. Revs. Edwards and Morris were also present and thus added to the fellowship of the occasion. One of the actions of the conference was to pay the pastor's expenses to the approaching Summer Conference. The conference also took splendid action in regard to the million-dollar campaign.

Our revival at Lincolnton is in progress this week, Bro. Gerringer as pulpit help. Other revivals to follow in the immediate future. H. F. Fogleman, Pastor.

Shelby, N. C., May 26, 1919.

Caroleen Church Shelby Circuit—

Praise the Lord! we are happy! We are going to tell you some of the things that make us so happy just at this time. The time drew near Saturday morning for our quarterly conference and the people began to come from the other churches by the car loads, and our hearts were made to beat just a little faster as they came. We tried to behave ourselves but it seemed almost impossible. We began to think we were going to have to send out a distress alarm about supper time. But when the good ladies began to unpack those baskets, boxes and trunks we saw that we need not be alarmed. After everything was made ready some 150 gathered around the table and Rev. Edwards, pastor of Fallston circuit, invoked God's blessing upon both the food and the consumer after which we began to sample the many good things to eat in the picnic style. After we had eaten all or possibly more, then some of us noticed there was plenty left to feed several hungry people. The hour came for business and we entered the church and after singing, Bro. Edwards read for us the third chapter of Malachi and offered prayer. By request of our pastor, Bro. Morris, our former pastor, presided over the business part of the conference. Bro. Fogleman read his report showing all claims paid to date which makes us feel like we are Methodist Protestants. The conference voted to pay Bro. Fogleman's way to the Summer Conference, for which he thanked us very kindly. Bro. D. B. Johnson and Bro. J. H. Black were nominated delegate to the Annual Conference. Bros. Fogleman, Morris, and Edwards gave us some splendid talks in regard to the million-dollar campaign. The [illegible] very [illegible] this campaign. We are sure to win. It would be a shame if we were to fail. We deem ourselves fortunate to have Bro. Morris and wife, Bro. Edwards and wife with us. We want them to come again. Rev. Bro. P. Q. Rorie of the M. E. Church, South, dismissed the conference with prayer. Our Sunday school is still moving along very nicely. Bro. Fogleman preached two powerful sermons for us Sunday which were very much enjoyed. We are glad to hear these wonderful sermons; they do us good. Remember us in your prayers.

Bethesda, Halifax Circuit—

Last night was a great night for our church here. We had an unusually large congregation for our night appointments.

Those who had subscribed to the million-dollar campaign were interested to know how we were coming out. Bro. Bethea had told many of us privately that he was hoping to go Bethesda out by last night, but there had been some discouraging things during the week but he kept at work.

I heard one good lady say (who had already subscribed) after hearing Bro. Bethea's splendid sermon, "I wish I had a hundred dollars to give". And sure it made us all feel that we would like to do more if we were able. After this interesting sermon on the subject of the opportunities of the present, the preacher announced that we were going "over the top" in that service. Some of us didn't know how, but we were willing to trust his faith. All the cards passed out to those who had not been canvassed were not returned last night, but enough came in to convince that we had gone over with a margin, and we are still going. We are hoping and praying that the entire charge may do as well or even better, and we know that some are nearly out.

We are glad our church took the lead in being the first for Halifax.

Brinkleyville, N. C., May 26, 1919.

New Hope Vance County—

Bro. Powell gave us a very fine sermon on the fifth Sunday in March and also on the first Sunday in April. Bro. Powell, to my mind, is one of our best speakers and one of our best men. If our ministers could get the co-operation of the church they could do a great work; but without it they are handicapped. Suppose we should rally to the church, as we did to the effort to win the war, how long would it take to win the world for Christ? We gave our men to die on the batttlefields, our money and our time and we won. The devil with his organized forces is launching a battle on the church and the religion of our Lord and Savior—and we seem to be asleep. Brethren, the only thing that makes a country safe to live in is the religion of our Master. You may hold all the conferences you please and sign all the peace treaties you please, and then let the religion of our Lord and Savior die, and we will be no better than Russia. Is [illegible] time we were organizing the greatest army the world has ever known—soldiers of the cross? The battle is a great one and it will take a united effort to win. Let us put our money, our time and everything we have into the fight to win the world for Christ. It is our duty, and God expects every man to do his duty. Save the world for Christ. Then wars will be over, and peace will indeed reign supremely.

We complain about the preacher, about long sermons, about paying our small church dues and pastor's salary. The truth is that we need more of the religion of our Master, and the sermons will not be too long, nor the money question tiresome. If we should give to the Lord just what belongs to him, his kingdom would prevail.

Do your duty, brethren. That is all God requires of you. Ask Him in seriousness to shew you your duty, and not your selfish inclinations.

"Let your light so shine before men that they seeing your good works, may be constrained to glorify God" is the substance of the command of our Savior. Reporter.

Saxapahaw, Saxapahaw Circuit—

Another eventful day for Saxapahaw was last Wednesday when Rev. J. Clyde Auman arrived here to lead the final victorious charge with the million-dollar forces. Pastor Williams with the campaign committee had already organized the workers and they were ready to move at command. Like Napoleon and Caesar, our ex-pastor, by a forceful speech moved the hearers to act, who again rallied about their loved leader and responded to duty. We are now out and above the quota and still going. Rev. Mr. Auman has won our esteem and devout friendship. We thank him for coming.

Owing to rain last Sunday there was no preaching here.

A special series of meetings begins next Sunday. Rev. "Railroad" Williams, now a great conductor on the road of life, will be our pulpit help. And we are ready to pledge him our sympathetic co-operation.

Many young leaders are now returning home from college with fresh ideas and willingness to make our Sunday school and church life more hopeful. While from the battle lines we welcome those to again take their places in home service.

C. C. Lindley, team director here, desires to thank (through the reporter) the people for their generous assistance and prompt reply to all requests and letters in the recent drive, whose help made victory easy.

Reporter.

Hollister, Halifax Circuit—

Since our last report it has been the writer's very great privilege to attend the Young People's Convention held at Henderson. It was indeed an inspiration to hear the excellent addresses by our own ministers and laymen as well as those by Rev. Mr. Holloway, D.D., of Baltimore, and Mrs. Maier of Columbus, Ohio. Mrs Maier made us to feel very keenly the responsibility of the future church now resting upon us.

At the dawn of this new day we must awake to the fact that our young people should be well trained religiously as well as intellectually. Therefore it behooves us to have well trained teachers. To meet this demand a resolution to hold a summer school at some convenient place in the state was adopted. That old saying, If you want a thing done well get a busy person to do it, was proved again yesterday. As a result of Bro. Bethea's busy week on the million dollar campaign, he preached one of his best sermons, regardless of having to drive five miles through the rain over a slick road.

Hollister subscribed within $1116.5 of its quota last Monday and ninety of its members had not yet been seen. Am sure we will "go over the top" before this goes to press.

We should not look at this million-dollar drive as a burden placed upon us, but as one of the greatest privileges we ever had.

About 75 per cent of Hollister members have joined the Boosters' Club.

We were glad to have Rev. N. M. Harrison worship with us a week ago last night. After services he made a very interesting talk on the million-dollar drive.

We are sorry to note one of our oldest and most faithful members, Mr. A. C. Courchen quite ill. May the Lord see fit to restore him to his usual health.

We are planning to observe children's day in June. Mrs. W. A. Delbridge.

North Davidson Circuit—

President's plan of appointments:

Union Grove, Saturday, June 7, at night.

Bethesda, Sunday, June 8, 11 a. m., new time.

Shiloh, Sunday, June 8, 3 p. m., new time.

Friendship, Sunday, June 8, 7:30 p. m., new time.

Let the membership be present and invite others. This is the president's annual visit on our field.

We have just closed six months of the conference year and we are just about up with our finance if all the checks were in, except our quota of the million dollars, and the committees are working on this in each church. I will suggest that we make our final drive at my appointments during the month of June if this suits the chairmen of the different committees.

The election for delegate will be held in June as announced heretofore.

Thanks to Mrs. W. J. Berrier for eggs and Mrs. C. A. Green for a bucket of honey.

Tabernacle—

Our second quarterly meeting convened at Julian, N. C., May 21, 1919.

The financial affairs were found to be doing very well.

REPORT OF TREASURER OF THE DISTRICT PARSONAGE GUILD.

The following amounts have been received since the annual meeting of the Guild:

Grace, Greensboro	$6.50
Weaverville	5.00

The amount in the treasury is just sufficient to meet the bills for repairs made on the president's parsonage. Much more needs to be done before it will be quite comfortable and presentable. I am sure you want it to be both.

No means has been provided for the upkeep of the parsonage except voluntary offerings from the members of the conference. We ask but fifty cents from each Methodist Protestant in North Carolina—an insignificant sum for the individual, but sufficient if each will do his part to keep the parsonage in repair and to add to the furnishings from time to time.

If no one has been appointed at your church to solicit the membership, will you not give your pastor your fifty cents and let him send it to me? We need to do some other repairing at once. Send all money to

"GERMANY FORGIVEN."

This was the starting announcement I saw in large letters across the top of the first page of my morning paper. The cruel and monstrous crimes in Belgium, in France, on sea and in the air against all the nations forgiven, all freely and fully forgiven at the great peace conference. It seemed incredible that the outraged nations—Belgium, France, England, Serbia, and all the rest—should join in such an act of grace. But there the statement was in plain letters.

I awoke and found it but a dream, though almost as vivid as reality.

This is the day for German's answer to the offer of peace made by the allies, and there is no probability that the issue will be as in my dream. But when we think of the long catalog of Germany's crimes against humanity and of the just penalties incurred by their commission, we have in our minds a good illustration of our records in the sight of God. How numerous have been our sins against God and how grievous! And yet God has grace enough to pardon them all if we will only repent!

—Rev. C. W. Bates rose early last Sunday morning, while it was yet dark, and rode on his Ford to Vance county to speak in the million dollar drive. He found one man at the church. (It was a very rainy day.) In the afternoon at another church he met a good congregation.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. E. M. Mullens.—Myrtle Stubbins Mullens, wife of E. M. Mullins, passed to her eternal reward Jan. 12, 1919. She was a daughter of the late G. P. Stubbins and of Mrs. M. A. Stubbins who now lives in Durham, N. C. She also left three sisters, Mrs. L. B. Loyd, of Hillsboro, N. C., Mrs. Walter Gattis, and Mrs. L. J. Carden, of Durham, N. C., three brothers, C. S. Stubbins and G. F. Stubbins, of Greensboro, N. C., and R. C. Stubbins, of Enfield, N. C.

Myrtle was born near Hillsboro, N. C., Jan. 13, 1887. She joined Union Grove M. P. Church, Orange Circuit, when she was quite young and remained a faithful Christian till she was called to eternity. She was a member of Carr M. E. Church of Durham, N. C., at the time of her death. She loved and obeyed her parents. She was a close student of the Bible and loved her church and Sunday-school, and to her the Christian life was a life of cheer and happiness.

Her friends were among the old and the young—and they all seemed to love her.

Of course we miss her, but we look forward to a happy reunion some day.

"'Tis sweet as year by year we lose
Friends out of sight, in faith to muse
How grows in paradise our store."

Roland C. Stubbins.

Hinshaw.—Zeno Hinshaw, son of Minu and Mary Brower Hinshaw, was born Feb 2, 1853, died May 13, 1919. Bro. Hinshaw was married to Annie M. Allred April 23, 1874. To this union were born eight children: N. A. Hinshaw of High Point, Rev. M. F. Hinshaw of Randleman, Prof. C R. Hinshaw of Catesville, Ira G. Hinshaw of Washington, D. C, Mrs. E. T. Bost of Bost Mills, Mrs. W. C. Tucker of Greensboro, Miss Blanche Hinshaw, a student in Greensboro College for Women.

Bro. Hinshaw was reared amid the atmosphere of a religious home and his life was the fruitage of it, and he give constant and consistent effort to promote those high ideals of religious life as every act manifested the spirit within. To know him was to love and respect him. He was a man of deep feelings and unbounded sympathy. There was blended in his life all those graces that made it full and complete. With all these attainments he was possessed by a perfect modesty that made him a good listener. But rising above this modesty he not only spoke the truth in his heart, but would speak out the things he believed to be just and right. Only the Supreme Intelligence can appraise the value of such a life. No finite mind can measure it Our brother is gone but may his memory ever abide. It will abide, it must live

It is very fitting, indeed, and God guards the fact well, that he should go out as he did,—suddenly, when all was yet hushed in stillness, just as the gray dawn of a new day was appearing, he entered the new day of eternity.

His body was laid to rest on May the 14th in the cemetery at Bethany Methodist Protestant church of which he was a valued member. Funeral services conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, assisted by Rev. F. M. Cook of Methodist Episcopal, South, Church.

Nixon.—Cornelia F. Nixon was born March 25, 1875, died May 18, 1919. She leaves to mourn her loss her husband, eight children, mother, three sisters and one brother. Funeral service conducted from Grays Chapel by Rev. J. A. Ledbetter.

Winslow.—Flora Bulla, daughter of Dr. A. C. and Mellicent Bulla, was born Nov. 22, 1846, married to Samuel S. Winslow Jan. 12, 1865, died May 5, 1919. There were born to this union eleven children: Maggie J., Claudia, Millie, Hal M., Effie E., Bertha M., Archie, Thomas, Vivian and Jennie E. Sister Winslow was a great and good woman, true to the principles of righteousness. She loved her Christ, her Lord, manifesting it in her love and devotion to her family, her friends, her neighbors. She loved humanity, realizing that to serve her Lord. she could only do so by service to His people. Being the daughter of a physician, she in early life learned life's lessons well, and this she had never forgotten. Her funeral was conducted in Charlotte Methodist Protestant church near Asheboro, by Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, special song service conducted by Dr. C. L. Whitaker and others of Asheboro. Her body was laid to rest in the church cemetery to await the resurrection morn.

MARRIED.

At the Methodist Protestant parsonage. Randleman, Mr. Gurney Lee McDonald to Miss Bessie M. Allred. Rev. J. A. Ledbetter officiating. These are splendid young people of Worthville and their many friends extend good wishes for a long and happy life.

Fyner-Wright.

Among the recent marriages of interest is that of Miss Vera Corinne Fyner and Mr Alfred McDowell Wright, which was solemnized at the home of Dr. Oliver, the bride's pastor, on the afternoon of May 3 in the presence of a few intimate friends. Mrs. Mrs. Wright is the youngest daughter of Mr. J. A. Fyner and has spent virtually all of her young life in Florence where her friends and admirers are legion. She has been especially active and forceful in church and community service and her good works added to the charm of her personality and worth of character have endeared her to many hearts.

Mr. Wright is the son of Mr. and Mrs G. W. Wright, having his home office in Siler City, N. C. in which city the happy couple will reside. They have the best wishes and the lasting affection of many Florence friends.—From the Florence Daily Times, by Lena Wright, Siler City, N. C.

I think the reason "some doubted" was because they did not come close enough to Christ to be certain. Would you dispel your doubts—just draw a bit nearer, and watch them disappear.—G. W. Bull, D.D.

TWO MEN.

"How much can I get?" a young man said:
The morning of life was fair,
And the things to have and the things to hoard
Were glittering everywhere.
"It's every man for himself," said he,
"And I'm going to have my share."

"How much can I give?" a young man said;
The morning of life was fair,
And the things to do and the things to be
Were beckoning everywhere.
"It's every man for his brother," said he,
"And I'm going to do my share."

* * * * * * *

At last, as the evening shadows fell,
A millionaire lay ill,
Served and tended by hireling hands,
Unerring and deft and chill;
There were those who knew him and loved him not—
But they wanted his money so!
And they waited and fretted and sighed and said:
"Why doesn't he hurry and go?"

At last as the evening shadows fell,
A penniless man lay ill.
Watched and tended by loving hands,
And their voices were hushed and still:
And pale and saddened, they wept and said:
"We cannot let him go!
If God would but spare him a few years more—
Because we need him so!"

PROMISE YOURSELF.

To be so strong that nothing can disturb your peace of mind.

To talk health, happiness and prosperity to every person you meet.

To make all your friends feel that there is something in them.

To look on the sunny side of everything and make your optimism come true.

To think only of the best, to work only for the best, and to expect only the best.

To be just as enthusiastic about success of others as you are about your own.

To forget the mistakes of the past and press on to the greater achievements of the future.

To wear a cheerful countenance at all times and to have a smile ready for every living creature you meet.

To give so much time to the improvement of yourself that you have no time to criticize others.

To be too large for worry, too noble for anger, too strong for fear, and too happy to permit the presence of trouble.

To think well of yourself and to proclaim this fact to the world—not in loud words, but in great deeds.—Selected.

—It's amazing—the number of things you never thought of before.

had been there twice. But to none had she given an order.

“I'm not decided on just what flowers I want,” was her answer, each time one of the boys called to solicit an order for bulbs or seeds.

“But won't you give it to me, Aunt Anna,” insisted Jack, earnestly, “when you finally decide?”

“It would seem the natural thing to do,” she smiled evasively.

Late in the forenoon, Saturday, Jack Lewis ran eagerly up the steps of his aunt's home. He was sure he would get her order now.

“Jack, I'm glad enough you've come!” exclaimed Mrs. Wagoner, meeting her nephew at the door. “The steam pipe to my greenhouse isn't working; there's something out of order. Will you hurry over—please—to the new Kendall flats, where Mr. Nicely is working, and ask him to come over here as soon as he can? There's no 'phone there, or I wouldn't trouble you.”

“All right,” returned Jack, slowly. “But can't I get your bulb and seed order first?”

“I haven't time now, Jack, but I'll telephone it in to Kingman & Hall's,” replied Mrs. Wagoner, anxiously. “That will do just as well; I'll get it in before 4 o'clock.”

“Then—I'm sure of it—now,” and Jack ran whistling down the steps. “I won't need to go over to see Mrs. Jason. Aunt Anna's order will clinch the business.”

“Come on; let's go down to Kingman & Hall's and see if there's another special bulletin,” called Winship Calaghan, running into Jack at the end of the street.

“All right; I'm with you!” assented Jack.

It was growing colder, and long after the noon hour Mr. Nicely hadn't appeared to attend to the steam pipe, leading to Mrs. Wagoner's greenhouse.

“I wonder why he doesn't—come,” thought Mrs. Wagoner, growing more and more anxious at Mr. Nicely's delay. “Suppose Jack wasn't able to find him! If he doesn't come, my plants may be frozen by morning.”

At 2 o'clock Mrs. Wagoner noticed Floyd Longden going by.

“Floyd!” she called, having hurried to the door. “Could you—would you—do an errand for me?”

“Certainly; if I—can!”

“Will you go over to the Kendall flats and see if Mr. Nicely is there? And if he is, ask him to come over here as quickly as possible, to repair my green-house steam pipe for me. I asked Jack to do it, but Mr. Nicely hasn't come; I don't know the reason.”

“That means that I shall be too late to see Mrs. Tubbs,” decided Floyd, as he hurried down the street, in the direction of the place where the plumber was working. “Well, I couldn't leave all those flowers of Mrs. Wagoner's to freeze, if I never got a camera,” resolutely.

At a little after 3 Mr. Nicely reached Mrs. Wagoner's.

“Didn't Jack Lewis find you?” asked Mrs. Wagoner, as Mr. Nicely started for the boiler room.

“Haven't seen him—today,” returned Mr. Nicely.

“Then he—never did—my errand,” decided the boy's aunt.

It was twenty minutes to 4 when the largest order received for bulbs and flower seeds was telephoned in to Kingman & Hall's store.

“That will change the complexion of things, I guess!” exclaimed the clerk, who took down Mrs. Wagoner's order.

The next bulletin in Kingman & Hall's window announced the winner of the prize—Floyd Longden.

“It might have been mine,” said Jack Lewis, ruefully, on learning the decision, “had I not neglected Aunt Anna's errand.”—Adelbert F. Caldwell, in Congregationalist.

CHILDREN OF MINISTERS LEADERS IN LIFE.

It is the children of ministers more than any other class who in England and America have been leaders in art, science and literature. More than any others are they the authors, teachers, college professors, journalists and professional men of note. Nor are their names wanting among successful men in business and politics; witness Woodrow Wilson, the present President of the United States.

A few months ago an article appeared in The Popular Science Monthly containing the following statements: “The English Dictionary of National Biography gives these figures: A comparison of eminent men (of England) shows 1,270 to be the sons of clergymen, 510 the sons of lawyers, 350 the sons of doctors; one and a half times as many of the former as of both the latter.” Names of some of these were Ben Jonson, Cowper, Goldsmith, Tennyson, Coleridge, Addison, Keats, Kingsley, and Matthew Arnold. Daughters of clergymen were represented by Jane Austen, the Bronte sisters, Mrs. Gaskell and Lucas Malet (the daughter of Charles Kingsley).

In America, the “Who's Who” in a list of something less than 12,000 showed 898 to be the sons of clergymen. If the proportion had been the same as for the other professions and callings, there should have been about fifty, but there were eighteen times that number. These included Justice Brewer, Senator Dolliver, Justice Hughes, Levi P. Morton, and Presidents Faunce of Brown University, James of Illinois, Wright of Clark, and Taylor of Vassar. Among famous professors are Lounsbury of Yale, James of Harvard and Sloane of Columbia. Others were the railroad king, Edward H. Harriman; W. H. Maxwell, superintendent of schools in New York City; Bishop Potter, Henry James, Governors Bates of Massachusetts and Kellogg of Louisiana, David J. Hill, of the Department of State, Richard Watson Gilder, Lyman Abbott, Wm. Hayes Ward; among the daughters are Catherine and Harriet Beecher, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Jeannette Gilder and Marshall Saunders.

The hall of fame at Washington has fifty-seven American names. Ten of these, almost a fifth, belong to the families of clergymen. They are Agassiz, Beecher, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Henry Clay, Jonathan Edwards, Emerson, Lowell, Morse, Bancroft and Holmes. —The Continent.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF SOME OF THE BREWERIES.

All kinds of economic calamities are predicted by certain people, when prohibition goes into effect. Here are a few facts gathered together by Presbyter Ignotus in The Living Church, which show what has become of a few breweries in various parts of the country. Not only has the destructive output been stopped, but more men are employed today in occupations that are of benefit to the community than were employed in these same establishments producing stuff to impoverish and injure. Here are the facts:

The Ranier brewery, of Portland, Ore., is now a tannery employing sixteen hundred men, where it formerly employed 156 men.

The brewery of the Portland Brewing company, Portland, Ore., is now a furniture factory and employs six hundred men. As a brewery it employed one hundred men.

The brewery at Lansing, Mich., is now used in the manufacture of automobile parts.

The brewery at Hunting, W. Va., is now a meat-packing plant.

The Raymann brewery, of Wheeling, W. Va., is now the Raymann Company, engaged in meat-packing.

The Iowa-City, Iowa, brewery is now a creamery and produce company.

The Uneeda (West Virginia) brewery is now a milk products company.

The Coors brewery, of Denver, now makes malted milk and a fine quality of porcelain.

The North Yakima, Wash., brewery is now a fruit by-products company.

The Salem, Ore., brewery is now manufacturing loganberry juice.

The Star brewery, Washington, Pa., is now the Capital Paint, Oil, and Varnish Company.

The Pacific Coast brewery, Portland, Ore., is now a shoe factory, and employs 2,500 men, as against 123 men employed when it manufactured beer.

The Cedar Rapids, Iowa, brewery is now a creamery and produce company.

The Fairmont brewery, of West Virginia, is now an ice and milk products plant.—Zion's Herald.

—Burlington overran its quota of the million by about $150.00. Burlington was the first church to enlist for the Forward Movement. It was expected that it would go over the top.

—The National Convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America will be held in Washington City, June 3-6, followed on Sunday 8th by a Field Day for the presentation of the prohibition situation to the churches of the Capitol City.

OUR QUOTA IN FULL—

As the campaign moves on, the more am I impressed with the possibility of raising our quota in full. Our people are being moved to give as never before, their gifts are greater to the million dollar campaign than to any thing we have ever undertaken. Country churches are responding with the same readiness and generosity as the city church. This is the more splendid in view of the fact that they have not had the pastoral attention of the city church so that a larger percentage of the membership has not been enlisted in the forward enterprises of the churches, as a rule.

A letter from one of our country pastors assures me that his charge will go over the top with a plus. Just watch my letter for the report of this charge; it will be one of the surprises, possibly.

IT IS AN OPPORTUNITY YOU SHOULD NOT MISS—

No member of the church of today can afford to be left out of this great movement. The cause of Christ needs the money, his people have it and when they give it they will receive the great blessings in store for them. "Bring ye all the tithe into the storehouse that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing." We ought to begin our revivals by raising our quotas in the million dollar campaign. It is a fine way of showing our whole-hearted interest in the salvation of the world.

Siler City Charge, Rev. Paul S. Kennett, Pas.

I held the second quarterly conference of this charge. Four of the five churches were represented. Finances were in fairly good shape. The Liberty church has been practically rebuilt: it is now a beautiful brick-veneered building with Sunday-school rooms, and when the new seats are placed in it will be a most attractive church on the inside as well as on the outside. Over $3,000 have been expended on the building; the work certainly might represent a greater amount than that, and best of all the entire amount has been raised as it was expended: at least there is no indebtedness now, I am told. Our people there and the pastor certainly deserve the congratulations of all our people for this splendid work there.

The Hope church has not yet been completed; plans have been made, but not yet carried out for the completion of this building. Springfield church is ordered sold, the proceeds of the sale to go to this church.

Piney Grove and Zion doubtless should be merged into one church. After one reaches Zion he is impressed with the beauty of the location, but it is off the public road, almost inaccessible to the modern conveyances. It is also on one side of its membership; so if a central location on the public road could be agreed on and the two churches united, it might prove a great blessing to the community as well as to the churches in question.

I preached at our Siler City church on Sunday. This is a live little band of workers, not many, but loyal and willing to do their part. The million dollar drive was started here at the morning service; only a few of the members present, but $286 of their quota of $511 was secured. Siler City church will go over the top. Piney Grove secured their quota, or the pastor did it in a short time Sunday afternoon. We expect the entire charge to raise their quota within the next ten days.

Pastor Kennett is popular with his members and has done a splendid work here during his stay with them and under his aggressive leadership we are looking for Siler City charge to become one of our best charges that combines the country and the town churches in their grouping. It is hardly a satisfactory arrangement, but it is certainly the best that can be done and our people realizing it are satisfied with the arrangement. Ideal arrangement might be for Liberty and Siler City churches to compose the group and receive the entire time of the pastor between them; this they may do at no very distant day.

It was a pleasure to renew old acquaintances here and to spend the time in the splendid home of Bro. and Sister L. L. Wrenn.

you had to deal with economic forces effectively. I found a land that took care of its folks at the base, even though it simply took good care of them to make good cannon fodder later on. I found a land where there was the best guarantee for housing and food, the purity of the one, the sanitary condition of the other, that I have ever found anywhere, on the whole.

Yes, let's look at this for a moment and then you will understand how it was that the Germans held the world at bay on four lines of flaming steel in the worst cause in human history. They didn't do it out of nothing.

I was down in the valley of the Rhine. I was walking over land that was raising forty bushels of wheat to the acre and that land had been cultivated since before Christ. From where I stood, I could pick a stone and throw it and strike the crumbling abutments of a bridge built across the Rhine by the first incursion of Roman legions a generation before Calvary. I asked an agricultural student in the great agricultural school in Strasburg: "How do you manage to do it?" "O," he said, "our agricultural scientists are working side by side with our Junker farmers!"

I saw them mining little strips of coal, little seams of coal, in Westphalia. I am a coal miner. I have worked twelve hours a day and seven days a week for a dollar a week in the coal mines of the South. I know the game from driving a mule to being shift boss and then to being superintendent. CHILDREN'S CORNER

BETTY'S NEW MUFF.

Betty had a beautiful white muff. All the other little girls looked at it longingly. But each one of these little girls had other pretty things of her own, all except Janie Babcock, and poor little Janie had not even a pair of mittens to put on her red. rough little hands. Once, when Betty was looking across the aisle, Janie slipped one of these little rough hands into the muff as it lay on a chair next to her. It was only for a moment, but such a happy moment!

The day was bitter cold, and after Sabbath school was over Janie hurried toward her home as fast as she could go. Her bare hands were drawn as far up into her short coat sleeves as she could get them, but they were almost frozen. As she ran along she was thinking of Betty's new muff. Then she heard some one running along behind her. and in another moment she saw dainty little Betty beside her.

“You haven't got any mittens on, Janie.” said breathless Betty, who had a very kind heart hidden away under her pretty clothes. “And I saw you put your hands in my muff in Sunday school, and I can go as far as your house and then run into our yard the back way, so you can take my muff as far as your gate.”

“Won't your hands be cold?” asked Janie, her eyes round with the wonder of it all. But without waiting for an answer she slipped her numb fingers into its welcome warmth and buried her face in its beautiful fur.

“Not with fur inside my mittens,” laughed Betty, with a happy skip. And she felt even much warmer than she had when carrying the muff down to Sabbath school.

The rest of the way home was all too short for Janie, and when she reached her gate she gave the muff a last loving pat as she handed it over to Betty.

“Oh, this won't be the last time, little goosie,” said Betty, giving her a kiss. “We will walk home every Sabbath just like this.”

MRS. CRIMSON'S AFTERNOON TEA.

It was all ready. The table—a smooth, white toadstool—was spread with a tempting feast. A sliced strawberry represented ice cream and ices. the plates wer rose petals, and the goblets honeysuckle blossoms with a drop of honey in each.

The guests were—Dorothy's dolls? No, indeed! Hollyhock ladies in silky robes of crimson, rose, pale pink, yellow, and white. with soft green shoulder capes. Their heads were green grapes, upon which features were marked with a pin.

Dorothy had worked hard to get everything ready, and was tired. Leaning against the old apple tree root, she closed her eyes for a moment. Suddenly, however, she opened them in surprise, for Mrs. Crimson was saying:

“Madame Blanche, do take some of this delicious strawberry cream.”

“No,” drawled Madame Blanche peevishly; “you know I don't like strawberry cream! Why didn't you have vanilla?”

Dorothy's face became almost as red as Mrs. Crimson's dress, for she recognized the very words she had used that day at desert. Mrs. Crimson went on:

“Miss Pink, Miss Rose, won't you have some ices?”

“I hate ices,” replied Miss Pink, tossing her head.

“So do I,” chimed in Miss Rose.

“Oh,” exclaimed Dorothy, “you're spoiling the party! What makes you behave so?”

“You taught us!” they all cried. “Our stalks are just outside the dining room window, and we hear you complaining at every meal.”

“But I don't do so at parties,” said poor Dorothy, half crying.

“It's just as bad to do it at home,” returned Madame Blanche, severely.

“Besides,” cried Miss Pink, in a shrill voice, “you can't expect people with green-grape heads to have pleasant dispositions.”

At this all the hollyhocks pulled off their heads and began pelting Dorothy with them.

“Dorothy, Dorothy!” called some one. Dorothy gave a start and looked about her. There were the hollyhock ladies, their heads all in place, each wearing the same fixed smile she had scratched upon it with a pin.

“Dorothy, come to supper,” called mother.

As Dorothy took her seat, father said: “Here's some nice hot toast. Pass your plate, Dorothy!”

She began to say: “I hate toast. I wanted muffins for supper,” but she thought of Madame Blanche, and, shutting her lips firmly, passed her plate in silence. She ate her supper without a complaint, and, looking toward the window, fancied the tall hollyhocks outside were nodding kindly at her. After supper she told her mother about it. “I'm never going to forget that dream!” said she.

“I hope you never will,” replied mother, with a kiss.—Our Little Ones.

AUNT SAMANTHY'S CHOICE.

Aunt Samanthy Allan was as queer as her name, but she was greatly loved by nieces and nephews.

One Saturday morning in May the Maddox children all went to the back yard and began eagerly discussing a letter received from Aunt Samanthy the night before. In it she had said she was coming in a few days to choose one of her nieces or her nephew to go with her and spend the summer abroad. So no wonder the children were greatly excited!

“Of course she will take me,” said Pauline. who was fourteen years old; “Aunt will want a companion like me, I feel sure.”

“Oh, no, she would want a gentleman for an escort,” said Paul. who was fifteen and he felt sure Aunt Samanthy would want him.

“I have my new blue silk dress and parasol and several other things,” said Pauline.

“That's all true, but haven't I just taken up French this year? We would spend most of the time in France, I suppose,” said Paul.

“Would you like to go, Beth?” asked Pauline to a sweet-looking little girl of twelve who had not yet spoken.

“Oh, yes, but I'm younger than either of you and I know I won't be taken,” answered Beth.

She was a sweet child and really her mother's favorite.

A week after, Mr. Maddox, Pauline and Paul met Aunt Samanthy at the station.

After an extra cordial welcome from Pauline and Paul, Aunt Samanthy asked: “Where is my little Beth?”

“Oh, she is at home keeping little sister May,” answered Paul, as he helped Aunt into the car.

Beth, with Baby May in her arms, met them on the porch.

“Let me take you to your room, Aunt; of course you are very tired from your journey,” said Pauline.

“I'll go get her a glass of fresh water,” said Paul.

They were all talking in the parlor before lunch when mother called the girls to come help her. Beth quietly slipped away.

“She is such a sweet child,” said Aunt, as her eyes followed Beth with loving smile.

“Yes,” said Pauline, and hastily changed the subject by telling Aunt about her painting. How busy she was and how she longed to take lessons from a great master.

The next morning after breakfast Pauline said: “I think I'll take Aunt around the town this morning while it is nice and cool.”

“But won't your mother need us?” asked Aunt.

“Oh, no, Beth always does the house-work.”

During the week of Aunt Samanthy's stay, she often wondered if Paul and Pauline ever did do anything.

Although nobody spoke of who was going with Aunt on her trip, it was plain it was on the minds of the children, especially the older two.

When the time came for Aunt Samanthy to tell of her choice, she said, “You may all seem surprised, but I'm going to take Beth, if her mother can spare her,” she said with a fond glance at her niece on the footstool.

“Not me, Aunt Samanthy!” exclaimed Beth, very much surprised; “the others want to go so bad!” she said, looking after Paul and Pauline as they slipped out of the room.

They (Pauline and Paul) were angry at first at Aunt's choice, but found it was no use, so began taking pleasure in helping Beth prepare for the great trip.

One morning a few days later, Aunt announced that she had decided she just could not get along without all of her nieces and nephews!

And what delighted children there were then!—Nell B. Gwyn.

what in the history of human society not in any formal or dogmatic way has actually produced more selfcontrol and social serving tendencies in more human hearts than any other thing loose on this human world? Religion!" They knew it. Religion; and all religions have done something there.

Judaism did quite a good deal; Mohammedanism does a little, but of all the religious purpose that has ever moved in the hearts of men uncorrupted and simple, direct Christianity has done more to give social-serving purposes and self-control in individual human hearts than any other force loose on this human world through the centuries and, my brothers, you can't solve the problem of the food supply of the poorest little child in the tenements without dealing with the moral and spiritual forces of the universe and we might just as well accept it, and it will stand up in the actual experience of practical daily life. It doesn't rest upon dogma. It doesn't rest upon authority. It rests upuon the demontration of daily lives.

you will get class domination of your commonwealth and betray your democratic institutions. Christ is essential to democracy. Now, the Russian program challenges democratic social control and the Christian conscience as it hasn't been challenged before in modern times, and it challenges it because behind all of the vagaries and wrong (and it has been lied about more than anything else I know in history), with all of it told, behind that there is the desire to blind masses for a better human life, and that desire for a better human life has come out of the betrayal of both church and state, and so they overthrow both, if you will, and build a new system in accordance with formulas that are economically impossible and morally wrong.

When the light that is in us darkens, oh, how great is that darkness! And a class church puts out the eyes of the soul for the masses. America, America is equal to this challenge if she will! You've got time yet. I come back into America, and the answer to a better human life—what is it, men and women of the Christian church? Is it bayonets and clubs? Now let's don't get confused. I am a reasonably practical bird. Wherever any group of men or set of folks seek to overthrow this government by force and violence or by force and violence seek to deprive persons of legal rights of property and person, they should be suppressed by immediate, overwhelming and efficient force, and it will be supported by a majority of the men and women of every community in this land. And when that is said and done, anyone who shares in it should share in a certain sense sorrowfully in it, as a necessary evil, for bayonets against ideas are an old failure in this human world. They tried that 1900 years ago and failed, and it's been failing ever since. The only answer to the desire for a better human life is a better human life. There isn't any other, and there never will be.

American democracy, American Christian conscience has provided the best human life for more men, women and children, that the world has ever known. But it's not yet completed.

We want a reconstruction program in America that is equal to the spirit and conscience of America, equal to her resources, equal to the sacrifice and service of the men who died to keep America free. There are three spectres at every working man's table. They were at my table in my early youth: Unemployment. Did you ever leave your job Friday evening, told that you were not wanted next week, the mine is closing down? Do some of you remember '93 and '94 and '95? Pretty lean years, weren't they? Some of you older folks remember pretty well.

I tramped in those years from mine to mine with my bare hands hunting a job, as you'd often find in a drift and no man to hire me. Do you know what I did? I didn't talk about the glory of America. I cursed America. Sure, and six weeks of forced unemployment upon men or women who want work, who can work and who need to work to live will make more opposition to the American government than six years of soap box oratory! I know what I am talking about; I've been there with both propositions.

We can take that spectre away from the working man's home. Disease and injury, sickness and injury in the workshop, old age and sudden death—those are the three spectres, and if we can spend nineteen billions for war in one year, we can spend some millioons to take away unemployment and fear from the working man's home.

And the moment you implicate the vast reaches of the population in the institutions of society and give them a stake in those institutions, a guarantee and a protection, then your government having been worth living under for them will be worth fighting for for them and you've got a foundation.

Now, England—uncertain, friends. Class church, a class state, divided situation in England so that it has a great socialist party now underneath, challenging here and challenging there. France—unsafe. Great socialist party, the class cleavage has come in that land, class church, class state. Now you've got your economic class cleavage. Italy—the same. We'd just as well be honest with ourselves. America alone among the nations of the earth has not yet got the class cleavage. We still have got a vital democratic action in our government, if enough people of the whole country will suffer, will fight, if need be die, for this government tonight to make it safe, no matter who is President, Republican or Democrat.

A Christian conscience still so uncorrupted and secure through the mass of the people that if we unite that Christian conscience, if we unite that political purpose behind our whole advancing national life, we can meet the challenge of this class economic force program and throw it back upon the land that gave it birth. We can preserve free speech and free principles and that vital principle of free church to serve the church, the serving economic order, and build that republic under God for which our fathers died.

Men and women of the Christian church, in this great hour of the life of the nation and the world, will we unite? Will we cooperate? Will we put the whole strength of our common churches, our common fellowship behind a great program of Christian service, of Christian purpose, of united Christian mind so that then in this hour we answer the challenge of the time with a strong serving church and a strong serving state?

.MEETING OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE, MILLION DOLLAR CAMPAIGN.

This meeting was held in Pittsburgh, Pa., June 20. The members present were Doctors Davis, Beck, Johnson, Miller, of Pittsburgh; Doctors Benson, Gill, and Haddaway of Maryland; Doctors Sinkinson and Varney of Eastern Conference; Dr. Broomfield, of Fairmont, W. Va.; Dr. Feeman, of Adrian, Mich.; Rev. A. G. Dixon, J. W. Knott, J. C. Williams, Dr. Ward, of Kansas City, Kans., and the editor of the Methodist Protestant Herald. The visitors present were Rev. B. A. Brooks, president of the Kansas oCnference, and Rev. Mr. Isner, of the West Virginia Conference.

It was an earnest and protracted meeting, beginning at 10:15 and lasting till near night, with a brief intermission for lunch.

Reports were read by Dr. C. H. Beck, treasurer, and by Dr. C. S. Johnson, secretary of the Forward Movement Commission These reports showed where there had been progress and where lack of progress. The total sum pledged to date as nearly as could be determined from the partial field reports seemed to be above $650.000 and probably not over $750,000.

The great object of the meeting was to plan for the completion of the undertaking. It was the feeling of the meeting that the campaign should go on until every cent of the million dollars is secured, not only because the money is so urgently needed in the work of the church, but also because of the prestige and inspiration that would come to the denomination from the anouncement that it has gone over the top in this undertaking. Therefore plans were laid for the prosecution of the work in various quarters with a view to reaching all quotas. It was suggested that our North Carolina Conference be visited at an early date by some one to stir us up to greater diligence, but the North Carolina member of the Central Committee had such faith in our North Carolina committees, ministers, and people, that he asked that we be left to ourselves for awhile to see if we cannot climb to the top of ourselves. (We hope our brethren will reward our faith fully in this matter: it may take a good while in some places, but our people, when they come to realize the situation fully, will, we believe, show that they love their church by taking hold manfully and doing their part in this movement.)

The spirit of the meeting was hopeful and earnest. The quota of one of our conferences is over $12 per member. The representatives present from that conference referred to their high apportionment, but said they would go back and make a strenuous effort to induce their people to meet it. If they succeeded, their conference would be the banner conference.

Our apportionment in North Carolina averages a little less than $5 per member.

This is the first time in the history of the Methodist Protestant Church, now over ninety years old, that we have been called on to do such a thing, and we are just now at the victorious conclusion of the most gigantic war in the world's history.

The cause of liberty won out in 1828 when our fathers took their heroic stand, and the cause liberty has won out again, through the valor of millions in arms, including our brothers and our sons. Shall we not celebrate these great victories by gladly doing our full share in this enterprise?

We want to report progress every week in our columns until the top is reached.

—The editor spent last Sunday in Pittsburgh, visiting his son and his family, and worshiping at the Fourth M. P. Church. This church has had for pastor the last five years Rev. Mr. Lippincott, now president of the Pittsburgh Conference. During his pastorate, the old church has been sold and a splendid lot in a much more desirable quarter has been secured. In the corner of this a temporary house of worship has been built, which serves very well both winter and summer. The advance in cost of building prevents going forward with the new church at present.

—While the editor was in Pittsburgh he visited the plant (one of them) of the Westinghouse Electric Company. First he visited the research laboratory. This stands on an eminence reached by a stairway of 110 steps. The building several stories high, is divided up into rooms, each of which is equipped with apparatus for chemical or physical experiment, and has its own force of men engaged in the study of some practical problems arising in the processes of manufacture. The editor's older son is one of the workers there. His work just now is to discover why metals rust and how to prevent it. He had been given the problem of discovering why brass castings contain "air holes." He had solved that, proving that the holes are caused by hydrogen gas generated in the furnace. The problem of preventing this generation of hydrogen was then given to another set of men. This illustrates the plan of operation. A general problem is divided into parts and assigned to different groups of men. Every few weeks they meet in conference and discuss their problems and report progress made and help each other. We then visited the great shops where things are made. These shops cover many acres. The buildings are said to extend for a mile in one direction. The employes number many hundreds, perhaps a few thousands,—men, women, and girls. Many electrical devices are made, motors being the principal ones, we believe. One requires a pass to get in, and note is made of what time he enters and what time he leaves. During the war visitors were not admitted, and the engine rooms where power is generated were guarded by men with guns to keep any German or pro-German from wrecking the power-plant and stopping the works.

While in the research laboratory we were shown some liquid air. It looked like water, but on being poured into the room, it immediately evaporated in a dense vapor and disappeared. A stream was poured out through a rubber tube. The end of the tube became hard and brittle like glass. On being struck with a hammer, it broke into fragments. We picked one of them up cautiously. It felt like a piece of ice. A drop of liquid air striking the hand would probably cause a blister as does hot water. We were also shown the texture of different metals through a microscope.

These are interesting places to visit and to work in, for those that have the requisite tastes. The research is important work that a few men must do and that all mankind profit by.

COL. S. V. PICKENS DEAD.

Word has just reached this office through Rev. J. S. Williams, of Asheville, that our venerable brother, Col. S. V. Pickens, of Hendersonville, passed away on Thursday of last week. Next week we will publish a sketch of the life of this grand old man who after seven years of suffering and many years of labor, fell asleep at the age of 83 years. His devoted wife has our sympathy in this sore bereavement.

CONDITIONS IN INDIA.

Miss Long, our missionary at Dhulia, India, writes, ‘‘In some parts of India the famine is so severe that children are being sold for sixteen cents each. One woman killed her own child and ate him. One woman was found lying dead, and the birds were picking her bones. We are opening famine relief, the famine money just received, and all expenditures will be correctly reported.’’

The conditions in that land ordinarily are very bad, and are greatly increased by many terrible ravages of famine. It is said that daily there are hungry people in India. The farmers use very primitive implements, as a pointed stick for a plow, and shallow stirring yields scanty crops.

Missionaries have been introducing new methods and the many thousands of Indian soldiers returning from the war with new ideas will tend to hasten the coming of a better day for those millions whose land is capable of large yields under proper management.

But if the monsoon, the heavy rains, fail to come then most fearful conditions will arise. Indeed even with the annual rains there is no relief in sight, until November, except as help may come from outside sources.

Our church responded to our appeal so ably supported by our editors, with a generous hand, but the contributors were not very numerous; and because the need is great and will be pressing more and more until late fall,we appeal to others to send to the editors of our church papers a gift, and indicate it is for India Famine Fund, and it will be duly acknowledged in the paper to whose editor you send your contribution.

The Last Call.

Orders for the Children's Day supplies are still coming, and there is yet time for any school to prepare to hold a service. Send your order and the supplies will be sent to you free of cost. Help your school to help your church to do your Lord's bidding and send the gospel to those in far-off lands.

Note.—There seems to be some confusion in the minds of our people in some quarters in regard to the offering. As published, the campaign committee decided the Children's Day service was not to be interfered with, and its offering would go in the usual way to the Board. The Board depends upon the offering to pay a very large part of its monthly expenses. If a school sends its Children's Day offering to Treasurer Beck as a part of the million dollar campaign quota, then in that case the Board of Foreign Missions will only get less than 25 per cent, of it, or all the other Boards and institutions will get more than 75 per cent. of that offering. The Board's share of the million dollars will all be needed for new missionaries, land, buildings, equipment, enlargements, etc., and a goodly portion to the permanent fund to safeguard the future of the work thus developed. Please state to Treasurer Beck that your offering is the Children's Day offering, and the Board will get every cent of it. As the Board has taken over Rev. C. S. Heininger and a great part of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society work in China—a later article will explain—there is added reason why the Children's Day offering in its entirety should come to the Board.

A RURAL CHURCH PROGRAM.

The following article is copied very largely from a book entitled ‘Christian Democracy,’’ by D. D. Forsyth, and Ralph Welles Keeler, published by the Methodist Book Concern. The title of the book arouses the attention of Methodist Protestants, when they understand its authorship, and origin, but that is not a part of this discussion. The book is one of two volumes dealing with the place of Christianity in the present world situation, and is the home mission book published as a part of the observance of the Centenary of Methodist Episcopal missions.

‘‘It is the rural church with a program that wins. In response to repeated calls for a program for rural churches, the Department of Rural Work of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension, in co-operation with bishops, district superintendents, and pastors, has prepared the following outline.

1. Survey at least one point on the charge. Point to be selected according to its availability for a community program. When the district is divided into parishes the entire parish should be surveyed.
2. When the survey is completed, locate the home of each member of the Methodist Episcopal (Methodist Protestant) Church, and of all who prefer the Methodist Episcopal (Methodist Protestant) Church, and all who have no church preference, on a map (to be prepared by person making the survey), by a dot or small circle. These dots or small circles should be numbered to correspond with the cards containing the names of the occupants of the homes, and such other data as may be gathered in making the survey.
3. Work for a banner Sunday school all the year around.
4. Work for the raising in full of all apportionments in benevolences.
5. Introduce the disciplinary financial drive for each church.
6. Organize a Family Altar League. . . . We must cultivate family religion.
7. A home improvement campaign some time during the year, probably during the spring.
8. A campaign for the improvement of church property as follows:—
    (a) Clean up every churhyard, and burying ground.
    (b) See that every church building is painted.
    (c) See that windows, stoves, furnaces, seats, papering, everything needed to make the building attractive and comfortable is in good condition.
    (d) Plant trees where they are lacking. . . . Landscape the church yard. Set out shrubbery. Plant flowers in the spring. Keep the lawn properly mowed.
    (e) If your churches are in villages or communities where the effort would be justified, lay out tennis courts, croquet grounds, basket ball grounds, etc.
    (f) Toilets in the churches or in the church yards so located and beautified as not to be offensive.
    (g) Horse or automobile sheds where necessary.
    (h) Coal- or wood-sheds at every church.
    (i) Parsonages comfortable and habitable, with lawns well kept and landscaped.
    (j) Keep cemeteries in good condition. Organize a cemetery association if necessary.
    (k) Individual communion cups. Communion table and linen.
    (l) Methodist (Protestant) Hymnals in every church.
    (m) See that property is properly insured.
9. Make your churches the center of the social life of the community. Plan social functions for your young people. Organize boys' clubs. Keep something doing in your churches all the time. Make much of the great religious festivals, such as Christmas, Easter, etc. Co-operate with other agencies in community organization.
10. A rural study class in each church for training leaders for conventional church work, and for leaders in community service. Special evening courses during the winter have been found profitable.
11. Develop all phases of evangelistic effort.
12. Take an active interest in Farmers' Institutes and other rural organizations. Attend public sales, that you may meet strangers and become better acquainted with the men of your community. Take a farm journal.
13. If no adequate library exists, introduce the circulating library that can be secured free of cost from the State University, or the State Library.
14. It may be profitable to arrange a course of lectures on ‘‘Good Housekeeping,’’ ‘‘Farming,’’ etc.
15. It would be well to invest in a stereopticon. Slides can be secured at nominal cost. Many can be secured entirely free from cost. You can make these stereopticon lectures highly beneficial. . . .
16. During the summer vacation, organize a Religious Day School. Such a school can be conducted profitably for a period of from two to five weeks. The Bible should be the chief study in the Religious Day School.
17. Divide your entire parish into sections. Have a superintendent for each section, whose duty it shall be to report to you the names of the new people who move into the community, the names of the sick, and all other matters of importance with which you should be familiar.
18. Organize a pastor's visiting committee of from six to ten women in each church community, to visit at least one afternoon each week, under your direction. Special effort should be made where a tenant or other population should be reached. In this way the poor, the sick, the strangers, and the shut-ins will be given proper attention.
19. Organize a band of personal workers in every church, whose duty it shall be to seek out those not affiliated with the church, and to give you any valuable information that you may need concerning the spiritual state of those with whom you may come in contact.
20. Select a few silent workers in each church, who shall befriend the poor, the neglected, ship he treated practically as a farce.

How he did fight in that conversation for his agnosticism, and how he did beat us off as we sought to press upon him the need of Christ's atonement and the claims of Christianity upon him! A needy and interesting soul we soon found him to be; and, as our train neared its destination, he seemed reluctant to let us go. His greedy eyes seemed to demand our staying and the impression which we gathered was that he had been allowed in some way to drift out to sea, but that even yet he was rich material for the soul-winner and the Gospel. A flippant skeptic he had become, but his skepticism hardly punctured his skin.

Oh, think of the thousands and thousands of such fellows who are just as valuable and in greater peril than the heathen abroad! Let not the heathen be neglected, but let us remember that beneath the sneering, blatant exterior of thousands of our young men are souls feeding on just such stuff and yet are eager to listen and drink from anyone who brings the real water of life.—Baptist World.

PRAYING FOR OUR ENEMIES.

There is a beautiful incident given in the little book which Dr. Robert E. Speer has recently written to show who we as Christians should have gone into the war. He says the children in Belgium have been going to school under ground, and studying by artificial light, to avoid the German airplanes. One afternoon a number of these children who came out from the under ground school were on the way home and passed the ruins of a church. With the reverence which they had been taught to show for a place of worship, they stopped, folded their hands and began to repeat in concert the Lord's Prayer. When they came to the petition, "give us this day our daily bread," there was a pause, for they had had no bread that day. At last one of the larger girls with trembling voice said, "Give us this day our daily bread." They all joined in saying, "forgive us our trespasses,". and then there was silence. None of the children could offer the next petition. At last the silence was broken by a male voice with the words, "as we forgive those who trespass against us." When the prayer was ended all the children looked up to see who it was that could pray for his enemies and they saw the king of Belgium standing there with bowed head.

Surely if the king of poor, down-trodden. deeply wronged Belgium could pray for the enemies of his country, we Americans should not find it difficult to do so. God will deal justly with the Germans.

THE PROMISES.

Our government, like the Father of mercies, has made many "exceeding great and precious promises". Its bonds issued to individual holders amount to many billions of dollars, varying from fifty dollars to many millions. But no one doubts in the least the government's ability and willingness to meet these obligations. All are reasonably certain that these bonds will be paid when they become due. The wealth, the power, and the honor of the nation are behind them and guarantee their full payment.

Who dares doubt in the least that the great Father over all is both able and willing to fulfill His many promises? Each promise is a sacred bond in which a benefit is pledged, which cannot be estimated in terms of money values. The infinite resources, the unimpeachable goodness, and the incomparable faithfulness of God are the gracious guarantees that He will meet every promised obligation.

The government's obligations are "for value received". You loaned the government so much, and it will pay you back so much. God's promises are not "for value received". Man has given nothing, has done nothing to secure these promises in exchange. They are absolutely free. He gave them because He loved fallen man so much. They are holy proof that His love is entirely disinterested, inexpressible, and everlasting.

The government's bonds will become due after so many years. God's promises become due every day and every moment of the day. The bond-holder waits till the government's appointed time arrives before he gets his money. God patiently, anxiously, and longingly waits till the holder of the promise meets its simple conditions of penitence, faith, and consecration. He is infinitely more anxious to fulfill His promises than the government is to meet its bonded obligations.

The government pays its obligations but once. A bond paid is thereby cancelled. Each of God's promises may be met (and has been) more than a million times. Not a single promise has ever been cancelled upon its fulfillment. None of them have ever been withdrawn. All of them are just as precious and just as much in force today as they were when they were first given thousands of years ago.

Let us especially be thankful that we live under the beneficent government of God. He has pledged to us wealth untold. Let us prize highly these priceless pledges. Let us cash in the full payment of the promises, and thereby become rich in faith, rich in grace, rich in good works, and rich in eternal glory.—The Word of Life.

HE KNEW WHAT HE WANTED.

When Dwight L. Moody was a young man in Chicago he attended Plymouth Church. This was in the days when most city churches rented their pews as a means of supporting the services. Young Moody went to the church officers and asked leave to rent a pew.

"You don't want a whole pew," he was told. "One seat in a pew will be enough for a young man without a family; there is only one of you."

"There may be only one of me," replied the young Christian, "but I am going to get some more." Inside of two weeks he had found enough other young men to attend church with him to fill the entire pew.

Back to the officers went Moody. "Let me have another pew, please," he requested.

They were so greatly impressed with the earnestness of the man who later became the best known evangelist of the century that they let him have another pew, "whether you can afford it or not," as they put it.

Moody knew what he was about. Before he stopped, he had filled four pews with young men.—Continent.

A GOOD REST CURE.

It is found in a very, very old-fashioned book, but really it is quite modern and up-to-date, scientific if you will. "Rest in the Lord," the formula reads. Have you ever tried it? We commend it highly. It will do you much more good than either the mountains or the seashore. You know the matter with you is not that you have been working too hard or are bearing too heavy a load of responsibility and duty. The real trouble is that you are carrying around with you too many anxieties and worries about yourself and other people and the whole world in general. If you could roll these all off once in a while and get an unburdened, fresh, sane outlook upon life in general, and your own life in particular, the tension would leave you and you would find rest and refreshment right down in your very soul. The man who wrote that old recipe knew life to its very core and reality, and spoke out of an experience that sounded the very depths. God is the soul's rest, man's only true sanctuary.—Christian Guardian.

THE TROUBLE WITH SOME CHURCHES.

By Paul Hamilton.

Many a church has "robbed God in tithes and offerings" to such an extent that He has to withhold His blessings and mercy. And in such cases a church is obliged to be dry and cold.

Sometimes the pastor feels the need and is prompted by the Spirit to preach along the lines of bringing all the tithes into the storehouse. But there are some who are so backslidden. and others feel their guilt so much that they will allow the devil to prejudice them toward the truth and the pastor rather than allow the Holy Spirit to prepare them for the blessings that He has for them. There is something for us to do when we are not blessed. It is not that God has forgotten us. He tells us that it is our sins and our iniquities that separate us from God.

PATHS TO GREATNESS.

Henry John Heinz, the famous manufacturer, was the son of a Bavarian brickmaker, who by his own unaided efforts built up a mighty industry and made his name and his trade slogan household words. The story of Henry John Heinz reads like a romance. In a little garden in the rear of his Sharpsburg (Pa.) home, the idea came to him that he might turn an honest penny by supplying sauces and condiments and other delicacies to the Sharpsburg tables. He began with horseradish peddled from a basket. The alchemy of success transformed the basket into a wheel-barrow, the wheelbarrow became a horse and cart, the horse and cart were the forerunners of endless lines of motor trucks and freight cars. The first Heinz factory was a back room in a two-story dwelling house, and even there the boy's very limited output bore his trade mark, invented by himself, and used as a guarantee of purity.

The son of the brickmaker was a firm believer in advertising. A leading Pittsburgh daily in its comments on his death said said: "If nothing else had ever happened to advertise Pittsburgh to the whole world, that would have been accomplished by the operations of Henry John Heinz." The Heinz success was due to a commingling of advanced methods, of improved processes, of high standards, and of advertising.

He was an interesting personality in many ways, but chiefly as a shining example of the opportunities that America continues to offer to its children—despite the sneers of demagogs and the mouthings of anarchists.—The Christian World.

CIGARETTES INJURE MORALLY.

Dr. D. H. Kress is the man who perhaps more than any other single individual has helped boys and men who desired to break away from cigarette smoking through the administration of treatments that effect a cure.

"The cigarette," says Dr. Kress, "strikes a direct blow at the most vital organ of the body. It weakens the heart action. For this reason it is difficult for the cigarette addict to engage in athletics. He finds he is easily winded and is lacking in endurance. He soon loses all ambition to engage in sports, or, in fact, in any useful occupation. Associating with others of his kind, he soon begins to visit the pool rooms. In time he may end up in the juvenile court, reform school or penitentiary. It is estimated that 96 per cent. of our youthful criminals are cigarette addicts. The boy with a weakened heart is more apt to succumb to typhoid fever, tuberculosis or other diseases which especially tax the heart, should he be stricken down with them. The cigarette injures the boy morally. He is almost as difficult to impress as the cocaine fiend."

Undermines Success.

Dr. Winfield S. Hall, Ph.D., M.D., is professor of physiology in Northwestern University Medical School, Chicago; Fellow of the American Academy of Medicine, Member of the American Physiology Society. He looks at the use of tobacco from a scientific standpoint, and says:—

"Tobacco does much to undermine the success of young men. Why? Because it is the entering wedge of two lines of dissipation, either of which may defeat success. The first line is the dissipation of money for things unnecessary. The second line of dissipation is that of sense gratification. One uses tobacco partly because of its flavor and partly for the sedative action which it exerts upon the nervous system. It is just this sedative effect which steals away a young man's vigilance and alertness and handicaps him in the struggle for success. The use of tobacco paves the way to other dissipation by requiring a compensating stimulant to overcome its sedative effect and by making the common wholesome food taste insipid and flat. A vast majority of drunkards were smokers before they were drinkers. The mental attitude and lack of resistance which permits a man to smoke is likely also to permit other forms of dissipation more destructive in their influence

Cigarettes—Drink—Opium.

The relation of tobacco, especially in the form of cigarettes, and alcohol and opium is a very close one, declares Dr. Charles B. Towns, of New York, in an article in the Century Magazine. "For years I have been dealing with alcoholism and morphinism, have gone into their every phase and aspect, have kept careful and minute details of between six and seven thousand cases, and I have never seen a case, except ocasionally with women, which did not have a history of excessive tobacco. A boy always starts smoking before he starts drinking. If he is disposed to drink, that disposition will be increased by smoking, because the action of tobacco makes it normal for him to feel the need of stimulation. He is likely to go to alcohol to soothe the muscular unrest, to blunt the irritation he has received from tobacco. From alcohol he goes to morphine for the same reason. The nervous condition due to excessive drinking is allayed by morphine just as the nervous condition due to excessive smoking is allayed by alcohol. Morphine is the legitimate consequence of alcohol, and alcohol is the legitimate consequence of tobacco. Cigarettes, drink, opium, is the logical and regular series."

Cigarettes is One of Worst Habits.

Hon. Benjamin B. Lindsay is the judge of the Juvenile Court in Denver, Colorado, where are handled the cases of boys and girls who have gone wrong. He is often referred to as "the golden rule judge" because of his kindness, and the deep interest he takes in boys and girls. In telling "What I Have Seen of Cigarettes" Judge Lindsay says in part:—

"One of the very worst habits of boyhood is the cigarette habit. This has long been recognized by all the judges of the courts who deal with young criminals, and especially by judges of police courts, before whom pass thousands of men every year who are addicted to intemperate habits. These judges know that in nearly every case the drunken sots who appear before them, a disgrace to their parents, themselves and the state, began as boys smoking cigarettes. One bad habit led to another. The nicotine and poison in the cigarette created an appetite for alcoholic drink. The cigarette habit not only had a grip upon them in boyhood, but it invited all the other demons of habit to come in and add to the degradation that the cigarette began."

Cigarettes Spoil Boys for His Business.

George W. Alden is head of the big mercantile establishment in Brockton, Mass., that bears his name. Here are his views on the efficiency and desirability of the cigarette-smoking boy:—

"So far as I know none of my employees smoke cigarettes. We don't hire that kind of boys or men. I should not consider for a minute any candidate for a position if I knew he smoked cigarettes. It would be pretty strongly against him if he applied for a position with either a cigar, pipe or cigarette in his mouth. With the general knowledge prevalent in this state as to the injurious effects of cigarette smoking, any boy should have ambition enough and decision enough to let cigarettes alone. My observation has taught me that cigarette smoking boys are woefully lacking in both ambition and decision. They soon become dull smoke-befuddled boys. I let them know that cigarettes spoil boys for my business."—Presbyterian Board of Temperance.

CHILDREN'S HOME.

Report of Financial Secretary.

Mrs. E. J. Finch, Henderson	$ 2.00
Mr. Jno. B. Ogburn, Flat Rock Ct.	50.00

We are glad to report this week $50 from our good friend, Bro. J. B. Ogburn, who visited the home a few days ago and at once saw the need of our boys' dormitory, and said he wanted a hand, or rather $50 interest in the dormitory. Now who will pay us another visit and leave a fifty? It pays us but will be worth more to you. If you do not believe what I say about it, just try it. I know because I have tried it. We are looking forwards to a big Summer Conference. Hope you all will come and I am sure you will have a good time. Yours. A. M. Rankin.

—On July 1, the first class postage rate will be reduced to two cents an ounce and the post card rate to one cent each.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

STANLY CHARGE, Rev. W. D. Reed, Pastor.

I visited both churches on this charge last Sunday morning and afternoon. Was at Friendship for the morning service. The congregation was not large for that appointment, I understand, but the people were attentive to the message.

Friendship Sunday school is one of the largest contributors to the Home of our rural churches, and even exceeds the gifts from our town churches sometimes. The school is large for the comunity, there are many children and young people in it. Bro. Joe Snotherly is superintendent, and is very much interested in the Children's Home.

At Porter's there was a fairly good attendance for the place. Our church here is small. The village has three churches and naturally none of them have very large congregations. But being small in number does not affect their ardor and co-operation with the pastor. We have some of our most faithful people here.

The million dollar drive had not yet been put on at either church. At Friendship the literature had been distributed and the committee appointed, but the canvass had not been made. Neither was anything reported to me as having been yet accomplished at Porter's in this drive.

The matter seems to be in rather an indefinite form as yet. But it is by no means too late to make the canvass, if our people there desire to have a part in the campaign.

This work is doubtless too weak to support a pastor as the needs of the day demand. This is the second year of the present arrangement and while there has been cordial co-operation with the pastor and the pastor has been supported and is now being cared for, I am of the opinion it would be better for both the people and the general work of our church should some boundary changes be made in this work.

Pastor Reed served this people not long ago and knows them quite well and in his agreeable manner makes friends of them all from the oldest members to the youngest among them. He has under advisement some matters which will be in shape for report in the future, possibly; but so far as I could learn from my visit among them the work seems to be getting on very well and will no doubt be among the honor roll charges at conference.

ALBEMARLE CHURCH, Rev. J. H. Moton, Pastor.

I preached here on Sunday night. I had been told that the congregation might be considerably off because of a revival meeting being conducted in a tent in the town, but we had a very good congregation present and they listened attentively to the message.

This is another appointment that is not able to do what it wants to do for the pastor and the general work of the church. But it is a heroic little company, and I think that it may not be a great while under normal conditions until Albemarle may be able to take her place among the stations.

The Sunday school is already greatly in need of more room, or in need of a modern Sunday school room; this need may be supplied at no distant day. This church has a parsonage debt yet to hinder them, but the pastor told me that his canvassing committee on the million dollar drive had gone to work and between one-fifth and one-fourth of the amount was now in sight.

As to the parsonage, I want to say something that applies to several of our charges: the parsonage here is too small for the average pastor. I know that it is a great deal better to have a small house for the pastor than to have no house, but it is a constant source of inconvenience to have to live in a house that is too small for the family, and I hope that soon this matter will be corrected on this and other charges. And I believe it will be.

Bro. Moton is serving his second year here and has with his intensive manner made the church service also intense, so that a preacher finds it quite easy to speak to his people.

Nine autos loaded with members of the Flat Rock Sunday school had a pleasant surprise in store for us last Fridady. It was the first time that a number of the school had been here. They had full baskets of the very best for dinner. Our whole family can testify to the splendid dinner served, and after all had eaten there was a nice quantity left.

After dinner the children and young people engaged in a number of games and the men inspected the farm. After the tour of inspection Bro. J. B. Ogburn said he wanted to put $50 into the Boys' Building and gave his check for that amount.

We are always glad to have our people come and inspect their institution. We know a visit always means increased interest. We are expecting the Haw River circuit to picnic here this week and on July 1st we are expecting the Bethany Sunday school of near Reidsville.

There is quite a stir now getting ready for the reception of the members of the Summer Conference. You hear Dr. Forlines' name quite often as the children are always interested by his stories and little tricks of amusement.

MILLION DOLLAR CAMPAIGN—NOTICE!

It was decided by the Campaign Central Committee in its meeting held in Pittsburgh on June 20th that the local treasurer of the campaign canvassing committees in the various churches should be requested to make the collections of the pledges they have secured. It is believed by the committee that those who have taken these subscriptions can collect them very much better than the treasurer of the General Conference can do. It was noted that only a small proportion of the canvassing committees had forwarded their reports to the treasurer of the General Conference. Blanks have been furnished for this purpose and it is very earnestly requested that these reports be sent in by an early mail.

The first quarter's payment was due on June 15th and at least one-fourth of every subscription should be paid at once. In a few cases these cards are being held at headquarters. Persons who reside at a distance from the church may make payment direct and we will report to the local treasurer. Now that we are safely passed the first three-quarters of the million, it is very necessary that all the subscriptions taken be collected as rapidly as they become due. We will greatly appreciate prompt remittance and prompt statements from the treasurers of the campaign committee.

Faithfully yours, Charles H. Beck,
Treasurer.

By Rev. C. W. Bates.

Our Relation to Others. I. Toward Enemies. Romans 12: 17-21.

(Consecration Meeting.)

For the past six months we have been considering our relation to God. For the next four months we shall look on the other side of the shield and see what is our proper attitude toward others, the human angle of conduct. The series properly starts with our attitude toward enemies. It is a vital question because what a man does with his enemies measures the sort of religion he has. We need to face that fact squarely.

Some one has said there are four things we may do with our enemies: "He is my enemy; and I hate him." "He is my enemy; I shall do unto him as he has done to me." "He is my enemy; I shall utterly ignore him." "He is my enemy; but I shall love him in spite of it." Certainly the last is the ideal attitude. And, however hard it may be to do, it is the thing we must do if we are to be sincere Christians.

As always, we must go to Christ with this matter and see what he did with his enemies. If ever a man had enemies He had them. If ever a man had cause to hate He did. What did He do with them? What did he say we should do with them?

1. We are to forgive our enemies. Until we do we cannot hope for the Divine forgiveness. "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses." We often see the motto: "Get right with God;" but the necessity is upon us of getting right with man first. If you haven't the forgiving spirit there is no use in asking the Spirit for forgiveness. "First be reconciled to thy brother, then come and offer thy gift upon the altar."

We have Christ's example in this respect. On the cross he prays, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Some one has said that he did not include the Pharisees in it, because they knew what they were doing. It may be so. But this is true: "While we were yet sinners"—enemies; some of us of the rankest sort—"He died for us." That was the supreme forgiveness.

2. We are to love our enemies. There's the rub. It is a difficult thing to go so far as to forgive an enemy. But to love our enemy—who can do it! The word of Christ is plain: "I say unto you love your enemies: do good to those that despitefully use you and persecute you." To do that will require more grace than most of us possess. Two men, whose stores were side by side became bitter enemies. One of them became converted, and going to his pastor said, "I still dislike that man (naming the man next door to him) and I do not know how to overcome it." The pastor said, "If a man comes into your store to buy goods and you do not have what he wants, just send him over to your neighbor." It was not long before both men became fast friends.

There are a few simple rules that may help us in our attitude toward our enemies; that may, indeed, keep us from having enemies.

1. Don't be too quick to take offense. Descartes, who was by no means a Christian, once said, "Whenever any one seeks to do me injury, I raise my soul so high that the offense cannot reach me." Good philosophy for those who follow Christ. It is written of Him: "Being reviled, he reviled not again."

2. Be sure you have the other person's point of view. It may be you both have opposite sides of the same thing, and that if you could see the other angle, there wouldn't be any reason for quarreling about it. We are obstinate "critters," and we don't like to give in that the other fellow may be as right as we are.

3. When you forgive, forget. "When God forgives, He forgets." We must do likewise. The cow chews its cud and enjoys it. I sometimes think we do much the same with our injuries. We soon forget the scars we do not see, but if we leave the rankling barb in the flesh we cannot ignore it.

4. And do not forget how much Christ has forgiven you.

Pensacola Station—

I have been waiting for developments for some time, so that I might have something definite to write. Our pastor, Bro. Riddle, has been holding meetings in four localities; he has held some good meetings with about 60 professions in one at a band mill at Eskota; in another at Concord on Caine River about 40 professions and renewals and one at Low Gap with about 15 professions and renewals. These meetings were rather out of our bounds; but one man joined yesterday and two women are expected to join next meeting. Our Sabbath school is doing pretty well. We reorganized a few days ago by retaining all officers of the school. Our school isn't what it should be by any means, and it is strange that parents do not care two straws whether their children go to Sunday school or not, when their future may depend upon a few years' training.

We have not done anything on the million dollar drive as yet. I have been expecting Bro. T. M. Johnson to come over from Asheville and start it up. I will say that I am old and broken in health, but will try to keep rowing along. With best wishes and kind personal regards, I am, your brother,

Loves Grove Cabarrus Circuit—

We have children's day the eighth at Loves Grove; we had a fine day. Our service was good. We had Professor Bascom for an address in the morning after the children rendered their part and in the afternoon we had Brother Dorton, a man who has preached for us often in the past several years. He was somewhat interrupted by a severe wind and rain storm. Our children did their part well, and were enjoyed by all the house would hold. There were a good many on the outside that could not get in. Our Sunday school is doing fine. We have one of the best country Sunday schools possible. Our much beloved pastor is doing a good work. I do not think that any one can do any more than he is doing. I hear some talk of trying to tear up our charge. We of Loves Grove do not want to make any changes. I say I mean the entire membership of Loves Grove, except only one family who never come to hear him and how can they know what he is? We hope that Fairview is as well satisfied as we are down here. Our collection for children's day was fairly good. We raised $6.90.

I think we have one of the finest localities I was ever in. We have good fellowship with all denominations. There seems to be a general good feeling among all. They visit each other's churches and worship together a good deal. Our church is gaining popularity very fast with our good pastor in the lead. Our good, kind Sunday school superintendent is doing a very great work for the church. He placed a nice large Bible on the pulpit out of his gift, which was badly needed, and very much appreciated by pastor and people. I hope to hear from Fairview some.

Chas. W. Misenheimer, Reporter.

Pleasant Hill, Spring Church Circuit—

Our meeting was brought to a close last night. Bro. Bethea came Monday night and preached earnestly until Friday night. His daughter, Miss Pauline, was with him and we were more than glad to have her with us; and appreciated her helping out with the music. May they come again. We are sure that much good was accomplished, yet we are sorry that some would not step out on the Lord's side. Let us do our best and we can do no more. Bro. O'Briant preached Saturday and Sunday night and opened the doors of the church. There were four to join and some were reclaimed. May we all hold out faithful.

It was sad in the beginning of our meeting for Bro. O'Briant to be called to the bedside of his mother, who was very ill, and she passed away on Sunday night, June 15. Those of us who have lost our best friend can sympathize with him. It was my privilege a few days ago to be in Enfield and to see our nice church there. It is built of brick and good to look at both outside and inside. I was also glad to meet with the pastor, Bro. Stubbins. Best wishes to the Herald and all its readers.

Mrs. W. L. Alston, Reporter.

Mt. Pleasant Uwharrie Circuit—

Our little Sunday school is still going, but the measles scare has caused the attendance to drop off almost half. Bro. Neese filled his appointment yesterday with a good sermon to a small congregation. We have some church members that live in a half mile of the church, who have not heard Bro. Neese preach this year. It seems the church is losing interest. What ist he cause? Is it the lack of faith? Or is it the love of the perishable things of the world? The paper stated that one church would have seated all the people that attended in the city of Asheboro that day. Some one please give answer.

I and my wife have undergone a spell of measles in our old days at age of 63 years. I hardly know how to express myself for kindness our neighbors have shown us: Bro. Sa Kindley for plowing: Bro. S. W. Hughe plowing: Bro. William Wall, cutting oats Mr. Oscar Ruth sent a boy to plow four day May the Lord reward them according to the deeds.

IN MEMORIAM.

Sarah Elizabeth Keck, daughter of Henr and Katherine Keck, was born in Alamanc county, September 18, 1860, died May 1 1919, age 58 years, seven months and 28 day

She was married to Charles P. Jones D cember 25, 1887.

At the age of 18 years she joined Bethlehem Christian church in Alamance county, o which church she remained a faithful member until the end came. She was an earnes worker in her church while she lived near it serving in the capacity of primary Sunda school teacher for a number of years. Late she moved to Guilford county near Mitchell's Grove church. While she lived in this community this church also realized her service, although her membehship was neve changed.

Mrs. Jones was always one of the trues examples of a Christian mother we have eve seen. While not always a regular attendan at all church services, she realized that he paramount duty was to her home and children. It was in the attitude of true Christian faith that she performed the duties o her home. No one who knew her can fail t realize her deep and sincere interest in th Christian teaching of her children. She believed that the best lesson that could b taught was the one demonstrated by her ow life. Thus she lived the peaceful life true to the faith she confessed. Broad and sympathetic minded, conscientious and idealistic are terms which are truly descriptive of her disposition.

She is survived by a husband, four sons, Wright W. and Harrison S. Jones of High Point, N. C., Earl W. and Charles P. Jones, Jr.; two daughters, Nina and Gwendoline; two step-sons, Walter W. Jones of Norfolk, Va., and John C. Jones of Burlington, N. C. One little daughter, Jewel O., was waiting at the gate of the celestial city to greet her and welcome her home. She also leaves a mother, three sisters, Mrs. Mary Waynick, and Mrs. C. M. McCray of Alamance county, Mrs. Eliza Trolinger of Salisbury, N. C.; three brothers, Messrs. Ollie, Wesley, and George Keck of Alamance county.

Mrs. Jones leaves many friends who will always remember her kindness. We believe that it was said of her ''She hath done what she could.''

PATMOS ISLAND, WHERE THE APOSTLE JOHN WROTE THE REVELATION.

Even this near panorama of the human lif for yonder, to our left, and showing wi

the Revelation.

What Patmos Looks Like.

Shining white in the sun upon the topm peak of patmos is the monastery of St. Jo the Divine. Lower, out of sight, is the mo astery of the Apocalypse, with its cave whe
John is said to have heard the Voice sayin
"Write the things which thou hast seen, a

Hard by, a thing of beauty at this distanc

Clouds, bottle to being, as graceful as the gulls that swim d circle about the rocks, and of ever-changing shape and sug-gestiveness, hang over Patmos; and in the distance they wrap the head of Samos' highest mountain like an Egyptian woman's nebulous veil. What forms and similes did the clouds suggest to the lonely companion and most intimate friend of Jesus, as in his ol age he waited in banishment upon these ights? After he had become John the aged had been sent hither, by the Roman Em-Domitian for preaching the Gospel; and the heights and the

and the open air. He read in nature mind of nature's Creator.

Pictures of the venerable, white bearded, luminous faced Disciple, as he sat at eventide on a craggy height, come to mind as we gaze upon Patmos itself. Was it on this gravest, gauntest peak that he used to tarry oftenest? Or did he choose the more central, softer one, rounded like Mount Tabor, because of memories of the mountain that was daily in the eye of the Master and His company as they walked the flowery paths of Galilee? Whatever John's favorite spot, it commanded the ever-changing aspect of sea and sky with the Hellenic islands, which were associated in thought with the pagan deities, destined to fall before the name of Him whom the seer, in exultation of rapt vision, called "King of kings and Lord of lords."

Even Rome, whose prisoner John was, had not been able to conquer the gods of Greece, but had taken them over into its pantheon. Greater than Rome was the New Jerusalem, whom the rapt Disciple saw, with prophetic vision, coming down from Heaven. Though a solitary exile, he bore ever with him the sense of conflict which his environment suggested.

The Geography of Revelation.

This place sense is clearly shown in the Apocalypse by the addresses to the seven churches. Readers of the Bible ordinarily look upon the seven churches of the Revelation as being as other-worldly and as spiritual as the seven stars and the seven vials and the seven angels. To John, alone with his thoughts, they were real and tender memories. Every one of them was an actual company of disciples, many of whom he knew by name, in cities lying a short distance across the water, on the mainland of Asia Minor. His feet had trodden the streets of every one of the cities. Because their Christians were his personal flock, they were, in a way, all the world to him.

The traveler today may visit every one of the cities of the seven churches of Asia; I myself have been in most of them—Ephesus first, John's own dear Ephesus, now a mighty ruin with a church bearing his name; Smyrna, still a great city, and much in the discussions of the peace conference; Philadelphia, a living community amid ancient debris, built about a wonderful spring; Sardis, where Princeton University conducted excavations before the war; Laodicea, Pergamos, and Thyatira, ruins with squalid Turkish villages hard by. Even the inspired writer of Revelation could not escape the influence of his personal associations and affections. The shepherd note sounds wistfully in his book's messages to the seven churches.

From Patmos to Paris.

Because in the light of the eventide of his life—a life so spiritual that it was deemed worthy to have a clearer glimpse into the supernatural realm than had been vouchsafed to him in young manhood, along with Peter and James and Jesus, on the mountain of Transfiguration John saw "a new heaven and a new earth," commentators and preachers and teachers have dwelt for centuries only upon the revelation of a new heaven. Nowadays we accept also the vision of a new earth which he envisaged. Because Christians look for heaven they work for earth.

With the zest of a new apprehension of truth the church and her children have leaped to the task of creating a new earth, one that shall be free, safe, just and happy. In that faith and for that goal a great war has been fought and won; and even more difficult tasks in the realm of statecraft and humanitarianism are being faced and accomplished. The connection between Patmos and Paris is not difficult to trace. John's dream has been long in coming to realization, but it is on the way.

As I sit and ponder and lean on the rail painting the picture of receding Patmos on my memory strange thoughts and recollections crowd into my musings. This island, one of the precious sites of all the world, represents far more than certain shapes and substance—any other island hereabouts is quite as interesting from the genealogical or scenic or historic standpoint. Patmos means a man and a vision; and one man's vision has ever since the world began been a greater thing than soil or cities or armies or events. Is not the deepest cry of our own perplexed day for a Seer, a Prophet, a Man to whom there has been given a vision of a new heaven and a new earth?

What the Sultan Said.

It was but a few days ago that the Sultan of Turkey, himself the accepted spiritual head of 200,000,000 Moslems throughout the world, told me of his yearning for a prophet to come from God to lead aright the stum-

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Yarborough Charge—

Since my arrival on this charge, four weeks ago, I have been too busy getting located, getting acquainted, and raising our portion of the million dollar fund to make a report. The fact that we have been silent, however, does not indicate that we have been idle. The people down here are never idle. They believe in doing things. They are a little timid sometimes in taking the initiative, and sometimes doubtful of their strength to do things. but when set to work they go at it with determination, and discover to their surprise latent power that they dreamed not of. The million dollar campaign has revealed to them this latent power. Brethren, the dawn of a new day is appearing for Yarborough. The seed sown by her former pastors is beginning to yield a more abundant harvest. I predict for her in less years than can be counted on the fingers of one hand the prestige of any charge in the conference.

She has been doing things? Yes. I came here when the time for the drive for a million was half gone. The charge had been without a pastor for several weeks. Of course no preparation had been made, no instruction had been given. The $1458, our quota, appeared an insurmountable mountain before us. We started to work, however. We distributed the campaign literature, we talked the campaign. we ate the campaign. we dreamed the campaign, and we prayed for the campaign. On my second round on the charge the campaign was launched. We commenced it at Yarborough's Chapel. Tuesday night. following the launching on Sunday, President Andrews and Bro. Johnson came down to address us. They spoke to an audience of about thirty-five, mostly women and children. The response of the audience is all the comment that needs to be made on the results of their visit. When the subscriptions were counted up they tallied a little less than $850. The mountain commenced to dwindle before us. We started out the next morning on a house-to-house canvass; we did not see everybody. but before the week was over, from the highest peak of that once thought insurmountable mountain we could wave to the world our banner, "Over the top by fifty dollars." The following Sunday. unaided, the pastor launched the campaign at Harmony, and there, too, with the committee made a house-to house canvass. The membership here is small, only about thirty-five in number. but their smallness is made up for by their loyalty One hundred per cent. of those canvassed pledged. In a day and a half from the same mountain peak we unfurled the same banner, "Over the top by fifty dollars." In nine days and a half from the time the campaign was started the charge was beyond her quota one hundred dollars. Though we have reached and gone beyond our quota and the time limit is out we have not stopped the drive. Not until every member has had a personal appeal will we feel our duty done.

The Christian Endeavor society at Yarborough's Chapel, which was organized last fall and suspended work after two or three meetings on account of influenza, was resurrected last Sunday afternoon, and we hope started on the road of useful service. There were about thirty present. The same officers were retained as elected last fall: President, Miss Lillian Yarborough; vice president, Miss Gladys Wilson; secretary, Miss Bishop; treasurer, Mr. Dunnaway. There are a large number of young people in the neighborhood whom we hope to bring into the church, or into a more active relationship to the church, through this organization.

Mrs. Louis Yarborough, who for several weeks has been quite ill, is able to be out again. Mrs. Sallie Moore, likewise, is recovering from a serious sickness. We are glad to see these ladies doing so nicely, and we hope they will soon be back to their accustomed place of service in church and community.

Our hearts go out in sympathy for our friend, Dr Clarence Workman, of Cross Anchor, in his loss of one of the two of man's greatest earthly friends,—father. The writer did not know the deceased, but from what he can learn he was a man who meant much to his church and community. May God comfort the bereaved hearts in this hour of trial.

N. M. Harrison, Jr., Pastor.

Buncombe Circuit——

I filled the regular appointment at Mt. Zion last Sunday and had a large congregation It is encouraging to a new pastor to note this co-operation: it is evident that they are with him in whatever he undertakes. Anyway, we are counting on Mt. Zion for good work.

The Sunday school at Mt. Zion shows prospects of growth and more interest. They have some working young people there and good live music. We organized a Baraca class there Sunday, which, of course, will create more interest among the young men. These are the life of the church and Sunday school. and must not be lost!

The Weaverville Sunday school is composed mostly of young boys and girls, some of whom are nearing the serious age when so many drop out of the Sunday school. So, to prevent this great leakage, and to build up a school of young men, we organized, last Sunday afternoon a "Hobab Baraca Class" for these boys. They have for their motto the motto of Hobab, the brother-in-law of Moses, "Use me or Lose me." It is believed that by using them they will be kept in the school.

Friendship, Haw River Circuit—

Bro Brown of High Point was with us Sunday morning. and preached a strong and helpful sermon. There was a large congregation present. We all fell in love with Bro. Brown, and we hope to have him with us again some time. At the close of Bro. Brown's sermon he explained to us the need of the million dollar drive. We have begun our drive in the campaign, and we are hoping and trusting to go "over the top".

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. We had a large crowd Sunday. The collection was good.

We are planning to have children's service the fifth Sunday night, about eight o'clock. We hope to have a large attendance.

Our pastor, Bro. Swain, is not very well. We are praying that he will soon regain his health.

Brown Summit, June 15.

Philadelphia, Greensville Circuit—

Bro. Morgan was with us again last night. and preached a good sermon as usual. Our Sunday school attendance was very good yesterday and we are in hopes it will soon be better.

We will hold our third quarterly conference Saturday before the second Sunday in July at Ebenezer church.

We were all glad to welcome home last week two more of our boys, Private John E. Moore, of Triplet, Va., and Capt. Presley J. Walton, Wyche, Va.

Whitakers, Whitakers Charge—

Although our pastor was sick Sunday he didn't fail to give us a good sermon; his sermons are always so helpful. Our Christian Endeavor society is growing in interest and we believe it is going to mean something to us. Last Sunday afternoon we organized a junior society of Christian Endeavor, with Miss Ruth Battle as superintendent. Am sure she will have a good one, as she is so fond of working with children.

Our Ladies' Aid met yesterday afternoon with Mrs. J. M. Cutchin, Sr. We were so glad to report at this meeting that we had paid off an $1800 note on our church. This leaves us $3,000 to pay now. We are hoping and praying to pay off $1,000 a year.

With best wishes for the Summer Conference,

Harmony, Yarborough's Circuit—

We are glad to report that Harmony went "over the top" on our million dollar drive. Sunday our pastor, Rev. N. M. Harrison, preached a most excellent sermon to a very large and attentive congregation at 11:30 o'clock, and Sunday night we held our children's day exercise: it was quite a success. The children performed their parts on the program to the credit of themselves and their instructors. The exercises were enjoyed very much by every one present, I am sure. We are glad to see two of our boys back from France who have fought for our country.

Our quarterly conference met Saturday p. m. at five o'clock. We were glad to have Bro. Yarborough of Cross Anchor with us. Our Sunday school is doing nicely for the past few Sundays.

Mrs. Lou Jones of Greenwood worshiped with us Sunday, also Mr. and Mrs. S C. Killinworth of Donalds.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers,

Guilford Circuit—

The third quarterly conference will meet at Hickory Grove church on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July. Preaching at 11 a. m. Dinner will be carried out to the church. We hope to have a house full of people.

Our revival meeting for Fairfield church will begin on the fourth Sunday in July. Rev. J. W. Hulin will be our pulpit help.

By request of some of the leading business men of Jamestown, and praying over the matter for several days we have decided to hold a revival meeting at Jamestown to begin next Sunday at 3 p. m., and the meeting will close on the first Sunday night in July. The M. E. brethren and the M. P. brethren will all work together. We are looking for a good meeting. The good people of Jamestown are going to do all they can to make it a success. Preaching by A. M. Hamilton, and Prof. J. W. Johnson will direct the singing throughout the meeting.

In order to accommodate the large congregations that will attend the services they are erecting a large brush arbor.

A. M. Hamilton.

Shelby, Shelby Circuit—

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely.

Our Ladies' Aid society met with the president of the Ladies' Aid Friday night. After the meeting adjourned refreshments were served and a social hour was spent.

Our revival begins next Sunday with Bro. Moton as help. Pray for us that we may have a great revival, that much and lasting good may be done. We have been looking forward to this revival for months.

Bro. Fogleman preached today. He always tells something worth hearing. O that people might get interested in the Lord's work as they do in their business.

The death angel visited our community and claimed the wife of Mr. J. C. Williams. She was a good woman, a member of the Baptist church. We pray that He that doeth all things well may comfort the husband and children. She had been our door neighbor for three months and we had learned to love her.

Wishing the editor and readers much success,

Caroleen, Shelby Circuit—

Our revival began the second Sunday with Bro. D. A. Braswell as pulpit help, who stayed until Friday morning, his work compelling him to return. We were glad to hear Bro. Braswell again; his sermons were seasoned with grace and power, and the Spirit worked mightily among the unsaved. Our beloved pastor then took the meeting in charge and continued until third Sunday night. Bro. Braswell did not take the revival away with him as was the fear of some. Bro. Fogleman's sermons were powerful, simple, and true, they penetrated to the depth of many hearts. The meeting was one of the best—possibly I should have said the best I ever witnessed for the space of only one week. There were some 60 who professed saving faith in Christ, and many who had grown cold renewed their covenant with God. We feel that the meeting has been one of much spiritual profit to our church and not only ours, but we feel that the entire town and surrounding community has been made better because of the meeting. There have been received into the church 32 new members with more to follow. Our Sunday school is progressing with 140 attendance and $10.65 collection Sunday. We feel safe to make the aforesaid statement. We were pleased to have our former pastor, Rev. J. D. Morris, with us Sunday; he preached two able sermons for us which were enjoyed by all. The people here are learning that there is joy in giving; they gave Bro. Braswell $42 for his short stay with us, and we felt like we ought to help Bro. Morriss pay for the gas the "tin Lizzie" burned to bring him and the good messages to us, and an offering was taken amounting to $10.63 for him. We feel sure they will do likewise in regard to the million dollar campaign. Indeed we have already some of the money in hand for the million dollar fund and we believe that Caroleen will give as the Lord hath prospered us; if we do we will go over the top. May the grace of God be in our hearts and thus prepare us for the great work he has called upon us to do. Fraternally,

J. T. Sisk.

Mt. Pleasant Circuit—

We are still on the map and are trying to do a few things as the year passes on. The parsonage has had most of our attention since January, as we wanted to get it done before the busy season came. It is now about completed and is one of the best houses I ever saw. The people are proud of it, and well they may be, for they have a parsonage that would be a credit to any charge in the conference.

Our preaching services are well attended and the people seem to have a deep interest in the work of the church.

We were a little late in getting the drive started for our part of the million, but we have it on now and are meeting with splendid success. Pleasant Union has nearly raised its quota and will go over the top. Mt. Pleasant has raised some and I believe will raise it all, for I believe the people are beginning to see that we can't afford to fail in this great undertaking.

The more I study about this campaign the more I become enthused over it, for I am convinced that it is God calling the Methodist Protestant Church to rise up and assert itself.

Our special meetings will soon be here and we are praying for and expecting good revivals.

We are mourning the death of Miss Minnie Soots, our organist at Mt. Pleasant. She is greatly missed in the church.

High Point—

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies held a very pleasant meeting last Monday at the home of Mrs. C. C. Robbins, south of town. There was a large attendance of members, who drove out to this delightful country home in automobiles.

Dr. Brown has been absent from his pulpit several Sundays recently in the interest of the million dollar campaign, but he filled his pulpit Sunday at both services, and preached at one a. m. to a large congregation. He announced that he does not expect to be absent any more soon. Communion will be administered next Sunday morning.

The Summer Conference will open at the Children's Home this evening. A large attendance of ministers is expected. Dr. Forlines will deliver a series of interesting lectures on the Second Coming of Christ.

Mrs. A. G. Dixon and daughter, of Baltimore, are guests at the home of Mrs. J. R. Reitzel, and will remain several days in this vicinity. Rev. Mr. Dixon is expected here June 30 for a visit.

Miss Carrie Stout, who has been teaching at Roanoke Rapids, has returned home for the summer vacation. She has accepted a position in the Greensboro graded schools for the next year, and her sister, Miss Flossie, who has taught here for the past three years, will also teach in Greensboro next year.

Miss Helen Brown left to-day for Charlottesville, Va., to attend the summer school at the University of Virginia.

Wyatt A. Pickens returned from Chapel Hill, where he was a student at the University for the past year. After spending a few days with relatives, he will leave for Baxley, Ga., to spend the summer with his father, R. T. Pickens.

Mrs. Geo. R. Brown returned last Thursday from an extended visit to Pittsburgh, Penn., and to Westminster, Md., where she was the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Edith Armacost. Dr. and Mrs. Brown are rejoicing over the good news that their son, Capt. Geo. R. Brown, who has been in service overseas for a year, has landed in the United States.

Roger Ogburn, of Kernersville, a student at the State University, is spending a few days with his sister, Mrs. W. C. Jones.

Mr. and Mrs. George T. Penny of Greensboro worshiped with us Sunday.

Little Miss Virginia Pickens is visiting the family of Mr. T. F. Wrenn, who are spending several weeks at their summer home at Marion, N. C.

Alexander Rankin, Jr., is at home from Bailey Military Institute, Greenwood, S. C.

Miss Juanita Moffitt has returned home from Salem College to spend the summer vacation.

Miss Iola Perryman, who has been a student at North Carolina College for Women, is at home for the summer.

Klein Pickett has returned home from Chapel Hill.

Mrs. S. S. Coe and little daughter, Julia Elizabeth, are spending a few weeks at Vade Mecum Springs.

Reidsville—

Those who weren't present at our "get-together" meeting Wednesday night, June 11, missed a good program as well as lots of good ice-cream. It was held during the prayer meeting hour and the Sunday school, Christian Endeavor societies, missionary societies, and Ladies' Aid society as well as all members of the church were invited.

During the evening the following program was rendered: Hymn 379; prayer by Rev. L.

W. Gerringer; Scripture, by pastor; musical selection, Miss Madge Thompson; short talk on "Church Members' Reponsibility in the Sunday School," Mr. J. W. Dixon; "How Church Members Can Help the Stewards Do Their Work," J. H. Turner; trio, Miss Kate Hammer, Miss Lorene Williams and Mrs. W. E. McCollum; "The Importance of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society," Mrs. M. A. Jones; "How the Christian Endeavor Helps the Young People," Miss M. Thompson; "What the Ladies' Aid is Doing and How Each One Can Help," Mrs. D. L. Carroll; "Importance of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and Woman's Home Missionary Society," by Mrs. Gerringer and Mrs. McCollum respectively; "How Church Members Can Help Keep Church Treasury in Good Shape," C. H. Garrison; "How to Have Larger Congregations," A. P. Sands; recitation, "My Sister's Best Fellow," Mrs. Lane Rascoe. Our pastor concluded the program with a short talk on the three fundamentals of a growing church: loyalty, service and cooperation; after which all joined in singing hymn 393.

Everyone then adjourned to the basement where ice cream was served in abundance. One child remarked, "This is my eleventh cone." We know that he had a good time and we believe all the others, especially the children, enjoyed it, too. If you have not ried a "get-together" meeting try it and see hat a social time you can have.

s Grove, Guilford Circuit—

Sunday was a great day for us as the s entirely taken up in service; Sunhool in the morning, then in the after-song service which was very much en-by all. Mr. Kennedy and quite a num-f good singers were present. We want ank them for the interest they are tak-n us and cordially invite them to come again. Then at night Bro. A. M. Hamilton preached for us and encouraged us greatly by preaching such a good sermon. His subject was Hope, and we trust that we may lay hold upon the hope that is set before us, which hope we have as an anchor to the soul both sure and steadfast. Bro. Hamilton is doing a great work, we feel sure, for he is a real busy man and that is what it takes to do a great work. We hope that the entire circuit will co-operate with him and much be done this year. Death visited our community not long since and claimed for its own Mrs. Pinkney Jones. Our hearts were made sad to see a good woman taken from her home and neighborhood and we would so much, all of us, love to keep our dear ones, especially our own dear mothers, but a much better place is prepared for all the faithful. So we will just say, Not my will, but thine. be done. Then we would say to the bereaved ones, let not your heart be troubled, but let us remember her love and good counsel and may it strengthen us and when temptations come our way, may we be able to resist the evil and come out victorious, for it is our duty and privilege. Let us ever keep the memory of our mothers; let us think on good things, mother, home, and heaven, the sweetest sounds on earth.

Bethany, Randleman Charge—

We are glad to report that the Franklinville township Sunday school convention met with us Sunday, June 22, for the annual convention. There was a large congregation present, and the day was enjoyed by all present. A very interesting program had been arranged by the officers of the convention. The convention adjourned to meet again next year with the people of Giles Chapel.

Two weeks ago [illegible] had the pleasure of having with us at our regular preaching service Mr. L. R. Hughes, of Randleman, who made us a splendid talk regarding the million dollar drive, after which cards were distributed for pledges. I hope our people will respond to this worthy cause liberally.

The young ladies of our Sunday school are busy preparing for a Children's Day service. which they hope to hold here July 13.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely, but still we are not satisfied; aren't there still some more of the parents who, if they would try, and try hard, could come to Sunday school and bring their children? And then again, aren't there some young people not in Sunday school that ought to be? Let us that are going see to that and if there is any one, invite them to come.

Beulah, Mecklenburg Circuit—

Yes, Zoar, come again with your report, for we are always glad to hear from you. Our pastor, Rev. A. Ridge, preached a soul-stirring sermon at 11 o'clock this morning to a large crowd. It seems that Beulah is growing more each day. We are planning to have our children's day the second Sunday in July, with all-day services and dinner on the ground. All come with well-filled baskets. We were sorry to hear of Stallings church getting burnt by lightning. Beulah people have pledged to help them $117.50; although we feel that is small, but we hope to pay more if we can. And we also collected $18 for our pastor. We have also pledged $46 on a new organ; hope to get the other amount by next Sunday, and we hope to have our organ by the second Sunday. Our Sunday school is getting along fine. We have $5 in the treasury now, and have already ordered our literature for the next quarter. Our prayer meeting has started again; we have it every Sunday night. We are glad to have one of our soldier boys, Mr. Lawrence Phifer, with us again. It has been quite a while since he has been with us, but we will surely give him a hearty welcome in our Sunday school and church work again, for he was a faithful member of our Sunday school. Pray for our success.

Antioch, Mecklenburg Circuit—

During our long silence there has been something doing all the while.

Zoar, we are not dead at all. You know the old saying, "A still tongue makes a wise head." So we are wanting to become wise, and I think we have since you readers of the Herald have heard from Antioch. If you readers don't believe we have been doing something, just listen.

The first of this spring there was $350 collected and this was used to cover and repair the arbor. Last Sunday there was $1.50 collected for Children's Home, $53 subscribed on Pastor's salary, and $18 of it was paid; and there was $181 subscribed to help rebuild the church at Stallingville. We feel that it is a very small amount to compare with what it will take to replace it.

We all like our pastor fine. He has filled all of his appointments. We will have the meeting to begin on the second Sunday in August. Good people, pray that there will be one of the greatest meetings that old Antioch has ever had. Let the people see what the boys and girls are doing. Get them to begin the church work and make the world better.

The officers for the Baraca are: Mr. Austin Mackey, president; Rev. Mr. Lindley, vice president; Mr. Harry Webster, secretary; Mr. B. R. Watts, teacher; Mr. Ernest Weaver, assistant teacher. IN MEMORIAM.

Causey.

Mary H. Causey, wife of Charles C. Causey, departed this life May 11, 1919, aged 77 years, nine months and 23 days. She is survived by her aged husband and seven children, viz.:Mr. H. C. Causey, Mrs. Donnie B. Coble of Greensboro, R. 6, Mrs. J. T. Ivey of New Berry, S. C., Mr. B. H. Causey, So. Richmond, Va., Mr. A. B. Causey of Durham, N. C., Mr. J. T. Causey of Greensboro, N. C., and Srgt. Charles V. Causey, stationed at Fort St. Phillips at New Orleans, La.

Mrs. Causey was a woman of strong character, a kind and loving wife and mother. A true, devoted, and earnest Christian from childhood, having joined the Methodist Protestant Church when quite a girl. No one who was in need ever came to her and went empty handed away. Her conversation was of an uplifting nature; and it was a real joy to her to have her friends come and see her, and they always went away feeling it was good to have been in her company. She lived the "quiet life," yet took a deep interest in her community, and kept abreast with current events, social, religious, and political; as she was a great reader. She lived the allotted time and beyond, and her family and those who knew her best have the blessed assurance that with her "all is well". The summons to a higher state of eternal joy and peace was only of a very few hours' duration.

Yes, wife and mother, we miss thee sore,
Yet for thee to be with Jesus forevermore
We bow in humble submission to His will Who doeth all things well and saith, Peace be still.

Mrs. M. H. Pegg.—Sandy Ridge church on Oak Ridge circuit lost one of its very best members when on Friday, the 13th of June, Mrs. M. H. Pegg went to her reward. She was 67 years of age, and had been a member of the church since she was about 15 years of age. She was for many years a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, but the past several years she was a faithful and loyal member of Sandy Ridge. Four years ago her husband, who was also a faithful and loyal member of Sandy Ridge, preceded her to the glory world.

Sister Pegg leaves behind a son, three daughters, a brother and two or three sisters, and a great number of sorrowing relatives and friends. To all of you who weep we would say, Jesus Christ knows better than any human heart how to sympathize with you, and he is your help and comfort at a time like this.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer at Sandy Ridge church Saturday, June the 14th, after which interment was made in the Sandy Cross cemetery.

CAPTAIN BASCOM L. FIELD.

"True Christian Soldier."

Lieut. Col. Joseph Hyde Pratt, commander of 105th Engineers, 30th Division, A. E. F. in France, wrote to Rev. and Mrs. M. C. Field:

"It is with sincere sorrow now that I have to write you of the death of Capt. Bascom L. Field, who was killed in action on the 29th of September.

"He was in an engagement that will rank equal in greatness and importance to any of the whole war, the breaking through the Hindenburg line at Bellicourt.

"He was commissioned captain September 21, and I considered him one of my best officers. He was always conscientious and painstaking in his work, never complained, no matter how hard things might be going; ever ready to help; solicitous regarding his men and beloved by them. In all his life as a soldier I never heard him utter an oath or speak harshly of any one. He was a true Christian soldier.

"Bascom had been associated with me in highway work for six years and enlisted in my battalion. I was very much attached to him and feel his loss greatly.

"He was buried in the Tinecourt military cemetery, the American plot, row A, grave 25. We placed a cross at the head of his grave, facing the enemy.

"At the time of his death Captain Field was superintending the reconstruction of a road at the front, so that our troops and artillery could go forward. He was killed by a piece of shell that exploded near him. I do not think he suffered the least pain.

"He was a great help to me in my work with the regiment, and was an officer I always liked to have near me."

Captain Armstrong, of the same regiment, wrote:

"I am all broken up that he could not continue with us. He was a born commander, an inspiration to us all, and he will always be cherished with the warmest affection by Company D and a host of friends throughout the 30th Division."

Master Engineer Blythe wrote:

"He was very popular with his men, and will be missed by the entire regiment, and especially by me."

"BOYS WILL BE BOYS."

The bad boy is a problem with which the Mexicans as well as the Americans have to deal. One mother found herself hopelessly unable to cope with her fourteen-year-old son and she sent him to us. He was fearless and as strong as a young ox. He had a keen sense of humor, a high ambition and a fine sense of honor. The trouble seems simply to have been that his faults had been recognized and magnified while his virtues had been passed over as unworthy of notice. Consequently he reveled in his badness and being perfectly able to do it he established his reputation as a pugilist among Americans and Mexicans in his home town. He has changed wonderfully since he came to us last year. He has been trusted and he has proved himself trustworthy. He has begun to discover himself as thousands of other young Mexicans would do if they but had the opportunity. The fighting spirit, we are glad to say, is not gone, but it is being directed into other channels and his energies are consecrated to the Master's use. Here is material for leadership. It should be developed.—From Over the Border.

THE LAST APPEAL

For Foster Parents for 60,000 French War Orphans.

One of the most appealing of the after-the-war campaigns will be launched this month, asking for foster parents for 60,000 little war orphans of France. Mrs. Walter S. Brewster, wife of the Roumanian Consul to Chicago, Chairman of the Chicago Committee and Vice-President of the National Committee of The Fatherless Children of France, has charge of the promotion of this campaign.

Mrs. Brewster has just returned from a tour of investigation through the devastated regions of France.

The highest French officials provided her with military escort and bestowed upon her every courtesy during her visit to the war zone. She lived with the appalling conditions of these children and their mothers—she knows that thousands of children "over there" are undernourished, starving, and succumbing to sickness.

"In all the northern country," says Mrs. Brewster, "there is no village untouched, and scarcely a house with a roof. There is not a bridge that has not been dynamited, a factory that has not been ruined. The tales that are told of the boche invasion are unthinkable—shocking. Still the people of the north tell them dispassionately. They have borne so much they have no energy to show excitement over their suffering. They are coming back into these terrible towns as soon as they are allowed. They bring their pos session with them in two string bags, us ally. Possibly they have enough to fill a r cotton tablecloth knotted at the corners. Cambrai 17,000 out of a pre-war populat of 29,000 have returned. They live ten twelve in a room, and many of the ro have no roofs.

"For two days we motored over this nor ern country before we saw a cow, a chic or a horse. The country is stripped bar everything that makes it livable. But to French it is still lovable. As you ride thr it your pity for France is infinite. B your mind are no words to express you ings toward Germany. There are mil miles of grayish-brown dust where we tile farms, pleasant villages, forests a chards. About Verdun, as far as you ca are heaps of sand, no sign of life tha no promise of any life to come.

"Here and there is a cross where soldier, killed in the last days of the fig is buried.

"Those who died in the frightfuln the earlier battles lie somewhere benea awful heap of dust. All along this s dead country are soldiers' graves, si the middle of plowed fields, in grou the roads, or row after row in so cemetery. The fathers of many of t children for whom we are seeking to buried there, and more have left no

Every day of her stay in the war was made vividly clear to Mrs. Brewst "we must work harder and faster tha before," for thousands of children ar ishing in France.

Under the plan of the campaign being dertaken, each American foster parent pl es ten cents a day, which makes $3 a month, or $36.50 a year, and this added to a tiny allowance of the same amount allowed by the French Government, means saving grace to a French child, allowing it not only to remain in its own country, but with its widowed mother instead of in an institution. Thus are the broken remnants of the little war families kept together. Each foster parent is put in direct touch with the child for whom she has pledged the necessary 10 cents a day, and with its mother through correspondence. Every cent subscribed goes to the child. The expenses of this philanthropy are borne by generous friends of the organization. To adopt a child or to make a donation, large or small, write for information to Mrs. Walter S. Brewster, Room 634, 410 South Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill., with whom all local chairmen of The Fatherless Children of France, in every community, are co-operating.

Jo and Jim's Visit.

Jo and Jim were two brothers, of which Jo was the oldest. Neither of them were bright, but Jo was brighter than Jim who was so dull his teachers couldn't learn him nothing. These two boys took a little journey whose destiny was a public sale. As they proceeded along together on their way they met three boys who were helping each other toll two white and one black pig with beans falling from a busted sack. I don't know how many beans there was in the sack: I calculate some three pounds. A farmer man from a field across the fence asked the boys where are you going to and told the boys I don't doubt but what I'll make the best crop this year I have ever made, and the Hickory King corn makes the best roasting ears of all other kinds and nobody never saw such fine seed wheat as the Kivett. He also said it has been a good while ago since I have seen my stray dog which has left home and if any body finds him I wish they would return him back home to me. Jo said I expect I saw your dog along down the road and if I had of knowed it was your dog I should of brought him along home to you. The boys met a ragged man whom they suspected was Peter Pike, but it was not him. Jo said he's no account but Jim said because he is shabby dressed is no reason you should suspicion him for being a vagabond. All shabby dressed men are not vagabonds. Jo then was silent and said no more.

The boys had been detained and kept back so much on their way that they wondered if they would arrive at the sale promptly on time or not. They hoped they would though they feared they should not. Jo persuaded Jim to try and get some apples of'en a tree near by the roadside but Jim wouldn't try for awhile because he was afraid he might be bit bad by a dog under the tree. But finally at last Jim did try and was bit by the dog although Jo had convinced him the dog would not bite. Both the boys thought the dog was bigger than it was. They met a lot of their school mates at the sale: most every one of them were there. Jo said to one of them I hope you are well and that your father may have recovered from his past sickness with pneumonia though I heard he was expected to die every day. Thank you said the boy I'm pretty good and my father is getting better and convalescing: the doctor says he has no temperature at all. The boys were invited to a seat by a man playing on a Nickleodian, but they said no we're very pleasant here where we are at.

The boys stopped three hours at the sale and for a hour enduring their stay a heavy rain fell making the road on their return back almost impossible. Neither one of them couldn't walk very fast. Jim could not walk so fast as Jo being as he was the youngest. It was awful hot too: the thermometer was 100. They got back home alright, promptly on time, and said Father we are exhausted and very tired but we were very glad to have gone to the sale and we should love to repeat the trip over again sometime.

THE ROBIN'S VISIT.

Once a robin flew into a pretty room; and just as he went in, the wind banged the window blinds so that he could not get out again.

At first he did not mind, but flew about and lit on the bright picture frames and wished his pretty wife were with him to enjoy the pleasant place. Then he rested on the back of a small chair, and then he saw another robin. "Oho," sang he to himself, "here is some one else. I must speak to him. Whew! Mr. Robin, glad to meet you. My name is Cock Robin. What do they call this place?" But the other robin did not answer. He only opened his mouth and jerked his head from side to side just as Mr. Cock Robin did. You see, the other robin lived in the looking-glass and could not speak.

"A rude fellow," chirped Mr. Cock Robin to himself. "Ah! yonder are some cherries. I'll eat some." The cherries were in a bowl on the table. Mr. Cock Robin helped himself. Then he decided to try the other bird once more. "My friend," said he softly as he caught the stem of a fine cherry in his beak and flew to the chair again, "here is a fine cherry for you. Oh, oh!" Well might Mr. Cock Robin say "Oh," for there stood the other robin on just such a chair, offering him a cherry in the most polite manner! "Thanks," said Mr. Cock Robin; "but, my deaf and dumb friend, as we each have one, we need not stand on ceremony."

So both began to eat. "He is a fine, sociable fellow, after all," said Mr. Cock Robin. The door opened and in came a little girl. "What's that?" cried Mr. Cock Robin faintly to himself. The girl clapped her hands for joy and ran toward him. Up flew Mr. Cock Robin in a great fright. He whisked past the looking-glass and saw that the other robin was badly scared also. Then he tried very hard to fly out of a closed window where there was no blind, but he dashed against some very hard air and hurt his sides. If he had been like you, he would have known that it was window glass and not hard air.

"Poor birdie!" said the little girl, as she threw open the window. "You shall go out if you want to."

In an instant Mr. Cock Robin was flying through the sunlight to his little wife. "Where have you been?" she chirped as he reached the nest.

"Oh, I've been on a visit," said Mr. Cock Robin; and he told her all about it.

Soon Mrs. Cock Robin said softly: "I should like to see that other one. Was he very handsome, my dear?"

"Handsome!" cried Mr. Cock Robin. "Handsome! Not at all, my dear, a very homely bird, indeed, a very homely bird, and as deaf as a post."

"How dreadful!" sighed Mrs. Cock Robin. —Exchange.

NOTICE, CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS.

August 20 to 27 the Ohio Conference Union of Christian Endeavorers will conduct a School of Methods at Sabina Camp Grounds, Sabina, Ohio. Preceding this, August 5 to 10 the International Christian Endeavor Conference will convene in Buffalo, New York. This, too, will largely be a school of methods. Both these meetings will be made up of just the things you as a Christian Endeavorer want and need to make you an efficient worker for the Master. If you can at any sacrifice or under any condition get to either or both of these meetings you will be doubly repaid for going. This is a day when business men and professional men are sparing no expense or trouble to make themselves efficient and proficient in their particular line and only employ those who are capable as assistants. You as a worker for the Master should be just as eager to qualify for the very best service possible and should not let an opportunity like the two above pass you by unless it is absolutely impossible for you to take advantage of it. The committee at Sabina has a fine program and will be glad to welcome every Methodist Protestant that will come. At Buffalo on Saturday morning from eight o'clock to 9:30 we are planning to hold a denominational conference. Most of the other denominations will be well represented. You be there to represent yours. May I look forward to meeting you there?

Yours in His service, A. G. Dixon.

—Germany agreed to sign the peace terms dictated by the allies, though their agreement is accompanied by a protest. This may mean that they intend to evade full payment, if they can. It is not such a peace as one could desire, but the spirit of the Gospel is the only spirit that can bring a true and lasting peace. Let us spend more for the Gospel that we may spend less for armies and police forces.

bling feet of the world. In this he was but one of a dozen with whom I have conversed since leaving New York Harbor—a much decorated British general in a high administrative post confessing himself baffled unless there shall arise a great spiritual leader for the race; Venizelos, the one man who is Greece's greatest asset, speaking wistfully of a spiritual rebirth; another, a romantic figure from the desert, a hero and a champion, talking not of battles but of whence and how we may expect a new interpreter of the Eternal; another, a powerful and wealthy business man with whom I dined in Paris, freely declaring that the social tangle of the times cannot be unravelled unless there shall come a clear Voice calling to the spirits of men, "This is the way, walk ye in it;" others, American officers in France, ripened by their own great deeds, musing upon the possibility of a Personality who may merge the distracted and divergent minds of men into one common purpose of good will; still another, himself a soldier saint, troubled in soul because in his America there had arisen no great spiritual leader to call in prophet tones the nation back to God.

It would be less than honest journalism did I fail to report that amid the welter and turbulence and discordance of world politics which is my present assignment I find among thoughtful men of every creed and country a decided note of spiritual wistfulness and expectancy. We are too serious now for the mercenary and mechanical methods of a noisy evangelist uttering only safe and remunerative sensationalism; we want a man from some Patmos who can say, "Thus saith the Lord." As democracy and its imitations spread the world's need of the one King becomes greater. New York Herald.

BLINDED SOLDIERS.

The number of soldiers in the American army who were blinded during the war totals 125, according to an announcement by the war risk insurance bureau. Over 60 of these men were recently discharged from a hospital in Baltimore where they have been undergoing treatment. Some of them, it is stated, are able to see objects dimly but all are classed as totally blind in an industrial sense. Under the provision of the war risk act each man will receive compensation of $100 a month and in addition $57.50 a month from government insurance.

PRONOUNCES LOCUSTS FINE FOOD.

Prof. A. E. Allen of Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore, declares that the 17-year locusts are an especially delicious food. The professor has eaten a number of them and he says that they taste like shrimp. "If there were a scarcity of other food," he states, "persons who had tasted them would probably think nothing of eating them in large quantities. Those of us who have eaten them find the flavor pleasant. It is important, of course, to pick them just after they come out of their shell, while they are still white and tender. After a few days they become hard and unsatisfactory as food."

"So much the better," replied the woman. "Ye ken, he's going to be an undertaker."

THE SIN OF RACE HATRED.

Last week the country was startled by the report of race-rioting in Washington, whites and black in deadly conflict. This week Chicago is the scene of more extensive and more destructive rioting. Already 30 people have been killed in Chicago, and hundreds have been wounded. Soldiers have been sent, but still the trouble does not cease. Passenger trains are fired upon by negroes and sometimes negroes are taken from street cars and beaten by infuriated whites This is dreadful to read about and is truly alarming.

War always results in demoralization. This rioting may be attributed in part at least to the effect of the war in Europe. Men in war become accustomed to killing men and the crime of homicide loses something of its ordinary heinousness.

But the clash between different races of men in this case is doubtless due to race hatred, and all right-minded people will deplore the existence of such a feeling. It is wrong. It is sinful. No human being has a right to hate another, whether of his own or of a different race. God made the different races and desires that they should live upon the earth in harmony. Present relation between the races may not be the best, it may be that some different agreement as to the bounds of habitation would be better. But in no case is race-hatred justified. You should not hate a man merely because he is different from you. He does not differ from you any more widely than you differ from him. If you do right in hating him, then he would do right to hate you. You should not hate a man because he is inferior or superior to yourself. The inequalities among men constitute no ground for hatred.

We have natural antipathies, some of which are mere prejudices and none of which, however justified by fact, can form the least warrant for hatred, the desire to injure.

Has Christianity no word about this matter? To be sure it has. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." No human being is to be despised. The meanest specimen of humanity bears the lineaments of God. God has breathed into him a divine breath. He is a creature of God and God owns him and is jealous of His rights. In fighting our fellowmen we may be fighting against God. We should have a care.

We may wish that the negroes had been left in Africa. It was through the cupidity of white men that they were brought to America. They are not to be condemned for being here. God in His goodness permitted the wrong of African slavery, and it may be that He had a good purpose to be served by that oppression. Certainly the will of God should be regarded first of all in our present treatment of every alien race, and God commands us to love all men and as far as in us lieth live peaceably with all men. We are not to retaliate. We may invoke the orderly processes of law, but we must not usurp the office of the magistrate or the sheriff. We should leave vengeance to God who will mete out exact justice to all. We should love men of all races and colors, and in the great majority of cases they will repay us with love.

USING WORDS ARIGHT.

The exercse given to the boys and girls by a minister in "Jo and Jim's Visit" illustrates many comman errors in soeech and writing. The cause of most of them is loose and incorrect thinking. Our thoughts go astray led by our imagination. We are not careful to observe facts, but yield to fancies Things always maintain true logical relations and should be our guide in thinking. Then if we know the true meaning of words, we may use them aright.

We often hear the expression, "the past year." But there are a great many "past" years. What is meant is "the last year".

Again, we frequently read in marriage notices: "The bride is the accomplished daughter of Mr. A. B. Jones," when Mr. A. B. Jones has other daughters just as accomplished as the one referred to. When there are other daughters or other sons, we should say "a daughter" or "a son".

Think before you speak and before you write whether you are following fact or mere habit or fancy, and you will be better able to speak or write correctly.

"OUR FATHER."

Hector was going to his last battle. His wife, Andromache, went with him as far as the gates of the city, and with them was a nurse carrying an infant child. When he was about to depart Hector put out his arms to take the child and embrace it in an affectionate farewell, but the little one was terrified by the burnished helmet and the waving plume, and with screams of fear clung to the neck of the nurse. In a moment the father divined the cause of the child's alarm and took off his armor; then, smiling through his tears the little fellow leaped into the father's arms. When men interpret the heavenly Father through the revelation that is sometimes made they take alarm, and, like the children of Israel, ask that he speak to them no more. But to see him as he is revealed in Christ Jesus shows him as a pitying, tender and loving Father, full of grace and love. Through Christ they may come boldly to a throne of grace and find help for every time of need. One of the grandest and most comforting truths that Christ taught the world is embodied in the simple but sublime prayer, "Our Father, which art in heaven."—Methodist Protestant.

LACK OF PRAYER.

The great lack of our life is that we do not pray enough. And there is no failure so disastrous or criminal as this. It is very difficult to account for it. If in all times of discouragement and vicissitude we could have access to one of the wisest and noblest of our fellow-creatures, or to some venerated departed saint, or to the guardian angel deputed to attend our steps, or to the archangel that presides as vicegerent over this system of worlds, how strong and brave we should become. Whatever our need, we would at once seek his august presence, and obtain his counsel and assistance. How extraordinary is our behavior, then, with respect to prayer, that we make so little of our opportunities of access into the presence of our Father, in whom wisdom, love and power blend perfectly, and who is always willing to hear us—nay, is perpetually urging us to come!—F. B. Meyer.

THE DAILY ADVENTURE.

Day by day we do actually and literally go out and come in. The phrase marks the ordered sequence of our ordinary existence—that daily life of the trivial round, and the common task of which we sometimes complain that nothing ever happens; that it is wholly commonplace. And yet the commonplaceness of it is surely in ourselves. The ordinary daily life is, if we be spiritually alert, far less certain and far more adventurous than we conceive. To the spiritually alert the street is as hazardous as the wilderness, and the office and the shop are to us as foreign lands. We meet, every day, men and women who surprise us with the revelation of unexpected possibilities, and of unhinted thoughts, and whose action is a thousand times more difficult to forecast. Spiritual gold may wait for us at the corner of any street, and the words that alter the destiny of a life be spoken in the clamor and rumble of a railway platform. We may meet spiritual adventures within a few yards of our own door. And God may come to meet us, supreme, in the street that our feet have trodden every morning. The path where we have enjoyed such quiet communions may be changed in a moment into the scene of temptation and disaster. Any morning and any hour may bring to us the opportunity either of denying or entering into, and sharing the larger and fuller communion of our Lord. And it is just that which sets an expectation upon the threshold of the morning,and sends a man forth with a thrill that is partly of hope and partly of fear.—W. C. Piggott.

THE DECISIVE CHOICE.

Mrs. Langdon opened the library door and entered. The Judge sat at his desk writing with swift pen. An ominous frown rested on his strong, rugged face. His manner indicated that his thoughts were elsewhere than on his work.

"You sent for me, Mark?" As she spoke, his wife dropped into a chair near her husband's desk. The smile on her face vanished as she observed the Judge's stern aspect.

"Yes, Mary; I did." The man turned and faced her. "That precious scamp of a Rowland has gotten into debt again. I shall use heroic measures this time. I shall disown him."

Mrs. Langdon met this outburst with a calmness that rather staggered her husband.

"I agree with you, Mark, that Rowland must be checked in his unbridled extravagance. Send him a peremptory summons to come home at once." Mrs. Langdon furtively studied the Judge's face while she spoke.

"The rascal came home after the first offense. Our kindness then was misplaced, for the same thing recurred three months after. Let him suffer banishment. See how that works!"

"Mark, were your parents very strict with you when you were growing up to manhood?" was his wife's seemingly irrelevant question.

"Not too much for my good, Mary."

"Did you never get into any kind of scrapes or difficulties, when you were in college, my dear?" persisted the determined mother.

"Yes, I did," replied the Judge with frankness; "but never about money matters." Then a blush of honest shame suffused the man's cheeks.

"There are two or three things, Mary, that I always recall with great humiliation of spirit. Father was for turning me out of doors at once, but I remember how mother pleaded for me." With characteristic touch the Judge drew his hand over and through his hair, while his gaze wandered off to the landscape visible through the adjacent window.

A strange smile of understanding illuminated his wife's face. "Just think," she remarked with innocent calmness, "in spite of those youthful lapses, what a strong and upright character you became!"

"Not any too good, Molly-bird; not any too good, my dear," returned the man, somewhat mollified by her adroit speech.

"Mark, it is only recently that I have conceived an intelligent appreciation of the meaning of mercy. Shakespeare's statement that "the quality of mercy is not strained," always fell with dull, monotonous effect upon my heedless understanding; but last month when I was visiting at my sister's, I heard a wonderful sermon by her pastor. His theme was mercy. For the first time in my life I learned its actual significance. He showed me what God's mercy meant over against man's exactingness. Why, Mark, it was a revelation to me to get hold of the idea what would happen—say, to you and me—if God should treat us just as we have deserved! But that would be mercy. Ah! ever since, my husband, mercy has assumed a gracious guise to me." Mrs. Langdon paused. Her serious words and rapt expression moved the man. He stirred uneasily in his chair.

"Mary," he asked with altered tone, "you think I should give that boy of ours a last chance?"

"Not only one more chance, Mark, but every time he fails it is our straight duty to attempt to win him back to righteoousness. He clearly needs discipline; but our loving kindness should be never failing. Our Master has set us the example."

"Go away, dear, quick, that I may write to the young scamp while my heart is tender towards him."

Judge Langdon opened the door that the mother might pass out.

Yet when the young man arrived at home it was Mrs. Langdon's tone that was severe. More than once, the Judge, who had given his son a bluff, off-hand greeting, looked at her with surprise.

Closeted with his mother some hours later, the boy learned what he owed to his mother's tactful mediation; and surmised what might be expecteed for the future, unless he made a radical change in his way of life.

Seriously alarmed at the thought of banishment from a home and family whom he had never before appreciated at their value, Rowland broke down. His irresponsible gayety deserted him.

"This time, my son, I succeeded in averting your father's just wrath. I doubt the efficacy of such an attempt on my part again. In that event you and your family would exist as strangers apart. I am sure that you would be entirely dependent on your own exertions for bed, board and clothes!"

"Do you mean that I could never come again? That I could never be near you, mother, nor my sister Louise? nor—nor my—my father?" The youth's face was white from intensity of feeling. He grasped his mother's hand in a nervous clasp as he strove to comprehend the significance of the facts she had enumerated.

"Rowland, the lesson of self-restraint must be learned in youth. There is no escape. He who seeks to evade its teachings becomes entangled in the meshes of inexorable law."

With tortured face the youth walked the floor. It helped him not a whit to excuse himself by reflecting that he was pursuing the same course as a score of his college associates. His eyes traveled to the table where a great bowl of fragrant roses spoke eloquently of his sister's affection. Just beyond he caught a glimpse of a set of O. Henry's short stories, his father's last birthday gift to him, entertainment for many a leisure hour. As his restless step paused before the bureau from an oval frame there, the sweet frank face of his mother confronted him. He turned sharply to her living presence beside him.

“Is it possible, mother, that I am hesitating between the fleshpots of Egypt and the treasures of home love? My vision is clearing, thank God. Rather would I renounce my associates and their convivial habits a thousand times over than lose sight of your dear face.” He spoke with a finality of tone that augured a viewpoint for the future.

“My boy, my Rowland!” Mrs. Langdon's arms were extended in yearning, and her self-control gave way. “If you had decided otherwise it would have broken your mother's heart.”

“And that shall never be,” was Rowland's emphatic rejoinder. He bent down and kissed his mother's forehead, ere with hasty step he left the room.—Nettie Lounsbury Curtis, in Prebyterian Advance.

THOUGHT.

Every day we are becoming more and more like our thoughts. What we are today is the outcome of the thoughts we have cherished in the past, while the thoughts that we are cherishing today are determining what we shall be in the future. If our thoughts are low and base and ignoble, then we ourselves are becoming low and base and ignoble. If our thoughts are pure and clean and Christ-like, then we are becoming pure and clean and Christ-like. If we could look into the chambers of your imagination and observe what is taking place there, the thoughts you carry about with you, the desires and ambitions of your heart, the stuff of which your dreams are composed, we could prophesy with the utmost confidence the kind of person you are becoming and therefore the kind of person you shall be. It is in the light of such a fact as this that we see the significance of Paul's exhortation: “Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things.” Think on these things, and we ourselves will become true and honorable and just and pure. It is particularly important that parents realize the truth of this. And yet how few of them apparently do! How many parents there are who are careful as to the food their children eat and the water they drink, but who are indifferent to the books they read, the movies they attend, the companions with whom they associate. No doubt we should exercise due care as to what we take into our bodies, but it is infinitely more important that we take heed to the thoughts that enter our minds.—The Presbyterian.

COMFORTABLE TO LIVE WITH.

“There is one serious objection to the place,” exclaimed the house-hunter, “neighbors so close on our left that, as one humorist put it, ‘we could almost hear them change their minds.’ ”

“Yes,” was the laughing retort of the agent, “but there are neighbors and neigbors, you know, and, my word for it, the little woman who lives in that house is the right sort.”

“But those two children I see playing outside might be very annoying, nevertheless.”

“Y-e-s,” drawled the agent, “but what I said about neighbors applies to mothers as well. That one has too good sense to allow her children to make a nuisance of themselves. You just try the place, ma'am, for a month, and if at the end of it you find I have not told you the truth I will refund your money.”

And so, with many misgivings, the quiet-loving woman moved into the house in question, which resulted in the following, six months later:

“Yes,” rejoined she, as aguest remarked on the closeness of neighbors, “I, too, thought that an objectionable feature at the start and hesitated about renting because of it, but now I would regret exceedingly to part with them. The mother is a veritable sunbeam. I have never once heard her nag. fret, or scold. Some might dub her ‘easy,’ yet she is a model mother, withal, and keeps such a firm hand on those littls boys of hers that they never cross the boundary line.

“The father is rarely at home, as he is a traveling salesman. That old gentleman? Oh, that is his father, though for some time I supposed it was her father, because of the harmony between the old genttleman and daughter-in-law, and especially the latter's indulgence of every whim of the former. For instance, when I remarked upon the turning over of sod, my little neighbor replied, laughingly:

“ ‘Oh, yes, grandpa took a notion to make a little garden, so I told him to go ahead, though, really, that grass plot is worth far more to me as a playground for the boys; but grandpa's happiness comes first with me, for he's getting old, and naturally his good times are ‘most over’.

“ ‘I expect, though,’ added she, with a happy laugh, ‘that his daughters will take me to task when they hear of his making garden, they caution me continually to watch their father, while, on the contrary, I let the dear old man do whatever he takes a notion to do, for he is too sensible to be treated like a child, and is still robust.’

“So I understood the situation when, a few weeks later, grandpa, with whom I had exchanged but passing greetings before, as he is a man of few words, held out his hand, saying: ‘I want to say good-bye, as I am going back to my old home in Kansas and will, doubtless, never return.’

“I expressed my surprise and regret, which met with a shake of the head and:

“ ‘I don't want to go, for a fact. California seems just made for old folks. But my daughters insist on my going back—write that one of them will come after me if I don't go right off. You see,’ added he, lowering his voice, ‘I felt so proud of my garden, and helping 'round—seeing my son is gone so much—that I foolishly wrote about it, and now the girls are up in arms, and so I must face about. Will have it that I am too old to wait on myself, even’.

“His daughter-in-law expressed genuine regret, aside, at his leaving, but her only comment was:

“ ‘Perhaps I don't know how to treat old people, for I was orphaned at so early an age that I can not even recall my parents; but it has always seemed to me that it is better to err on the side of letting old people overdo, if the overdoing is their own choosing. And so I tried to make father forget his advancing years. instead of continually reminding him of them.’

“And now, just two months later,” continued the story-teller, “you can see that very same grandpa making a new garden, for, as he put it this morning;

“ ‘I'm glad to be back where I can make gardens four times a year, if I want to.’ ”

“But why did the daughters consent to his coming back?” queried the interested guest.

“Well, I fancy that they found it a case of ‘vinegar made of wine,’ from what the old gentleman told me when I expressed surprise at seeing him back.

“ ‘I know it seems contrary to nature to prefer to live with a daughter-in-law to my own daughters,’ replied he, with a shake of his head, ‘but I do, for a fact. It seems mighty good to get back again, I tell you. My girls are as good as the average, too—fine housekeepers, good cooks and all that, but they are mighty uncomfortable for an old man to live with.’

“ ‘I don't know,’ continued he, hesitatingly, ‘as I can make you understand, not knowing 'em, but it was “Don't! don't” continually. They meant well, of course, but just as sure as I felt my blood stirring and started in to do something, one or the other of my girls—one a widow and t'other single—would cry out, “You are too old to work!” and, honestly, the only way to keep peace was for me to let 'em cuddle me like a baby. I stood it just as long as I could—after the liberty I'd had here for a spell—and then I made a bee-line back to the place where I can act young when I feel like it, for I'm not so old but what I can draw checks, and here I'll stay!’

“ ‘Good for you!” exclaimed I; ‘your daughters, I fancy, would have shortened your life with mistaken kindness if you had not had the courage of your convictions.’

“ ‘Sure they would!’ was the hearty rejoinder. ‘Why, they made me feel like I was a hundred years old and nothing but the grave ahead of me: but now that I've got where I can handle an axe or a hoe when I take a notion, I feel like I've got a new lease o' life.’ ”—Herald and Presbyter.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

SEVEN GOALS FOR 1919.

A revival in every church.

A family altar in every home.

A Sunday school in every church.

Every school contributing to the Home.

A Church paper in every M. P. family.

Every cent of every claim paid by Nov. 12th.

One superannuate bond to every charge.

THAT SECOND GOAL—

Those charges and churches that have raised their allotment in the million dollar campaign are now ready to put on that other campaign—the evangelistic campaign. The two goals set by our last general conference, the million dollars and twenty-five per cent. net increase in our membership is yet to be reached. About three-fourths of the million has been pledged, and we are urging that all churches that have gotten this money campaign out of the way, begin at once to plan this spiritual awakening campaign.

We are asking that more than the usual efforts be made, the usual efforts are not enough to put forth. More than usual must be done, if we are to reach our goal this year. It may requires more plans to make this possible; it doubtless will. It may require more work to accomplish, it more than likely will; it will doubtless require more prayer to put this campaign over than it has ever required of us before; but if it does, we must give up that which is needed to make it a success. Give up that vacation this summer; sacrifice your leisure upon the altar of service; make that start in doing personal work which you have promised the Lord you would make. WIN ONE NOW for the Master.

Do not let the revival meeting become an ordinary thing. It is greater than the usual service because most preachers and church members do not expect conversions at the regular services. Therefore, continue to make it greater than the usual service until the regular service becomes a revival service.

But the danger threatening many people is, that the revival services become a social affair. A good place to go to see friends, to renew old acquaintances, to get a good dinner. A good place to loaf at, to enjoy oneself. Really, that is all some people make of the protracted meeting held at their churches. It should be so no more.

It must be a revival meeting; it ought to produce conviction of sin and ought to see souls converted. The great objective,—saving the unsaved should never be lost sight of for a single moment; it must not be lost sight of, if we are to succeed as we can and should succeed.

The whole church should enter into this campaign. The campaign might well begin with prayer first; secondly, the appointment of a committee of spiritually-minded people to help plan and carry on the meeting. Personal workers selected and trained to do personal work might greatly aid your meeting. Get people interested enough before the meeting begins to have a good start. This might be done by the personal work of the pastor and his assistants by giving a few days to house-to-house visitation.

PAGELAND CHARGE, Rev. J. W. Quick, Pastor.

I visited Bethesda, Rose Hill, and New Hope churches on this charge. There is one other church, a small church, but no appointment was made for me there. Bethesda, Rose Hill and Bear Creek are in South Carolina and New Hope is in North Carolina.

The revival services had just closed at Bethesda, but the condition of the streams, bridges, roads, etc., kept people from attending the services and doubtless kept some from the service we held on Saturday. This church is in a poor farming section and our people here are not of large means, but some of them are liberal and much interested in the work of the church. A movement was put on foot that day to raise money to paint the church, which is badly in need of paint. This and Bear Creek churches are rather far from the other two and are most inconvenient to reach, thus making it expensive for the pastor to travel the work.

Rose Hill church, at Pageland, had raised its allotment in the million dollar drive, so they were happy over it. This is the strongest church on the charge and the parsonage should be built in this place, when one is built. Pastor Quick lives here, is postmaster besides being pastor, but I heard no one complain that he was not giving sufficient thought and time to the work.

New Hope church has been enlarged since my visit last year. It has been greatly improved and when completed will afford a more comfortable place for the membership and and their friends to worship in.

The people have increased the pastor's salary from four hundred to seven hundred dollars fos this year and will doubtless make it more for the next year. This is a good sign, it shows that the people are prosperous and are willing to share their prosperity with their pastor. Pastor Quick is serving his fourth year and the people speak well of his services and the evidences of growth I saw are indicative of a hearty co-operation between pastor and people.

Within the bounds of the old Monroe circuit were many more churches, I am told, but these went the way of all the earth, those that did not go into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. One church, Grace Chapel, doubtless was taken by one of the members and turned over to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Our conference has done well in that it has refused to recognize or receive church property with strings to it that may be worked for the benefit of interested parties. This church and the Gastonia church have been lost to us by such a method.

I urge all of our pastors to FIND THE DEEDS to ALL your churches, read them carefully and if the title is not clear, get it cleared up or buy a lot and move the church upon it while you can. R. M. Andrews.

A SONG OF TRUST.

Lord, Thou has been my sunshne,
  Through days of toil and care—
The brightness of the moonlight,
  In nights of dark despair:
The shadow of a mighty rock
  In many a weary land,
A beacon light to lure me on
  To that celestial strand.

Through sunny days I wander,
The nights bring thoughts of Thee;
From fleeting mist of earthly love
I to Thy bosom flee.
From phantom of earth's friendships
  That seek for wealth or fame,
I come to Thee, my Saviour,
  And all Thy mercies claim.

And now to Thee, my Father,
  My Brother and my Friend,
I lay upon Thine altar,
  All things that Thou dost send;
The past with all its pleasures,
  The present and its pains,
The future with my hand in Thine
And all that it contains.

GROWING OLD.

The days grow shorter, the nights grow longer;
  The headstones thicken along the way;
And life grows sadder, but love grows stronger
  For those who walk with us day by day.

The tear comes quicker, the laugh comes slower;
  The courage is lesser to do and dare;
And the tide of joy in the heart falls lower,
  And seldom covers the reefs of care.

But all true things in the world seem truer,
  And the better things of earth seem best,
And friends are dearer, as friends are fewer,
  And love is all as our sun dips west.

Then let us clasp hands as we walk together,
  And let us speak softly in low, sweet tone,
For no man knows on the morrow whether
  We two pass on—or but one alone.

CHILDREN'S SERMON.

A New Suit.

"Be clothed with humility." 1 Peter 5:5.

There are some children, particularly boys, who are very careless about their clothes. Once I heard a mother say to her little boy, "I wish you would think more about your clothes. You don't care how you look." Most boys do not think enough about their clothes, and most little girls, I imagine, think too much about them. But we must all think sometimes of what we wear. There are some clothes that we do not wear in the summer, because they are too heavy, and there are others that we do not wear in the winter because they are too light. Today we are to think of a suit that you can wear all the time, summer and winter. It is the kind of a suit that Paul meant when he said that we were to be clothed in humility.

We have seen soldiers clothed in khaki; and the ladies are often clothed in silk, and your father is clothed in wool, but humility, you say, is a very strange thing for a person to be clothed in. Let me tell you what he means by being clothed in humility.

Maybe in your home hung up in the closet your mother has a long apron that she puts on when she is busy getting supper, or doing something about the house. When you come in and find mother wearing that apron you know that she is doing something for you. That is her robe of humility She only wears it when she is doing something for you or someone else. Now you know what the verse means when it tells us to be clothed in humility. We are to be always ready to do kindnesses for others.

We ought to do it because Jesus did it, and if we are true Christians we will try to be as much like Jesus as we can. At the Last Supper when Jesus and his disciples were together, he put on an apron and served the others to show them that they ought always to be willing to serve others. Long after that if those men were tempted to be proud, they thought of Jesus wearing that apron and serving them. and then they knew that they must never become too proud to serve others.

Another thing to remember is that if we are ever to amount to anything in the world we must be clothed in humility.

Long ago in Persia there was a good shepherd named Dara. He became the head man of his village, and ruled so wisely that at last the king made him governor of a large province. But by and by there were strange stories about this man Dara. They told the king that he took money from the people unjustly, and then hoarded it away in a huge iron chest that he carried around with him wherever he went.

The king made up his mind that he would find out the truth about these stories, so he made a journey to the province where Dara ruled. The governor came out to meet him with a number of soldiers. Close beside him was a camel with a great iron chest fastened on his back. When the king saw that iron chest he was very angry and commended that it should be opened immediately. Dara had it opened and what do you suppose was inside? There was nothing there but an old, ragged shepherd's coat.

The people who had been accusing Dara were very much ashamed, and the king demanded to know what the coat meant. Dara told him that it was the coat he had worn when he was a shepherd It had helped him to be thoughtful and kind to other people. When he became governor he was afraid that he would become proud and selfish and mean. as so many did when they had money and power, so he carried that old coat with him wherever he went to remind him how poor he had once been, and to keep himself humble and kind.

There is no robe that is so becoming and fits so well as the Robe of Humility.—Rev. Stuart Nye Hutchison, D. D., in The Presbyterian of the South.

INTERCESSION AN ELEMENT IN ALL TRUE PRAYER.

A Good Man's Prayer.

The relation between all men and God, as taught by our Lord, places intercession in the very heart of prayer. When the disciples asked Him how to pray He said: "When ye pray, say, Our Father." That is, make your prayer at the very outstart include all men and, by implication, all needs.

Thinking on these words, a certain good man went alone to pray. Conscious of many personal needs, he rejoiced that a moment of respite had come when he could talk to his Father, who had assured him that even the hairs of his head were numbered, and tell all his needs to God, who had promised to supply them all. He comforted himself that he, an individual unworthy as he knew himself to be, could come undaunted into the very audience chamber of God and tell Him even imperfectly all his wants. Having sympathy with all men, today he felt his own needs insistent, exclusive. He would pray for himself.

An Intrusion.

His lips framed the word, "Father," when he heard at his side a footfall, and, turning, saw kneeling beside him a soldier from the battlefield of France, wounded unto death, who said: "Take me into your prayer." Once more, with doubled meaning, he began, "Father," and was once more interruptted. He heard, in a strange tongue, which, nevertheless he understood, the voice of a wretched man from darkest Africa, saying, "Take me in." And they kept coming from every continent, from the islands of the sea, from prisons and palaces, hospitals and asylums, all sorts and conditions of men, they came like doves to their windows, a great multitude whom no man could number, and they said. "Take me in." Then the good man heard again the words of Jesus, "When ye pray, say, Our Father," and knew that even as no man liveth or dieth to himself, so no man can pray for himself alone.

A Changed Prayer.

Once more he opened his lips to pray, but the words he had thought to utter strangely eluded him. A kind of aphasia laid hold upon him. Many of the needs which had seemed to him most insistent were lost, submerged in a new world consciousness and sense of human brotherhood. And, strangest of all, while part of his purposed prayer had sunk into oblivion, other parts stood out with distinct and startling clearness. He had not meant to be forgetful of others, but now he saw, as with new understanding he said "Our Father," that he had been thinking too much of himself alone, unmindful that many of his petitions had quietly assumed for himself a favored relation with God and could not be granted except through the deprivation or active suffering of others. Then he knew the meaning of the words. "Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss," and began to understand the brotherhood of man as he whispered "Our Father."

Jesus and Intercession.

The life and teachings of Jesus give intercession a central place. He is the great Intercessor, who gave His life for the world. He lived a crowded life. Few were the moments when He could be alone. If He sought respite from the crowds on the mountain side or in the desert the multitudes pursued Him even there. He could not escape from men because He is the Son of man—of the very substance of humanity, friend and brother of all men. How, then, can prayer in His name be narrow, merely personal, selfish, less than universal?

Prayers of Jesus.

The recorded prayerers of Jesus are models of intercession. He prays for Himself, "Father, glorify thou me," but the glory which He asks is to be shared by those who are redeemed through Him. He and they are to be glorified together. Without them He asks nothing for Himself. The men about His cross spoke more truly than they knew when they said, "He saved others, Himself He cannot save." It was impossible for Him, being what He was, to save Himself alone. Therefore, Gethsemane, Calvary and the tomb. The world was ever in His thought.—Rev. Chas. W. McCormick, in N. Y. Advocate.

THE FAILURE OF REGULATION.

Great Britain during the war made the most ambitious and conscientious attempt to solve the liquor problem by regulation that has ever been made. That attempt is just now breaking down completely because of two things:

1. The trade will not submit to restrictions
2. The shortening of hours of sale, the weakening of the product and limitation of output allowed the people to get enough alcohol to preserve and irritate the appetite without getting enough to satisfy it.

Because of these two things almost the entire press of Great Britain is denouncing the Central Board of Control of the Liquor Traffic. There have been "more beer" riots and "stronger beer" riots, and the government has yielded to disorderly demands by increasing the output, increasing the hours of sale and increasing alcoholic content.

The only way to stop the drink evil is to stop it.—The Voice.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, in his New York speech declared that "Prohibition was breeding Bolshevism." That is a fair sample of Sam's ground and lofty tumbling. He overlooked the important fact that many states have been dry many years without any Bolshevism whatever. and further that most of the rampant Bolshevism is to be found in the wet states.—American Issue.

—China appeals for help to prevent the pernicious liquor traffic from being transplanted in China. American liquor capital is financing a propaganda to induce the Chinese to use liquor as a cure for the opium habit.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

LITTLE BOYS AND LITTLE SHEEP.

Joe came home with his clothes, and even his curly hair, all wringing wet. "Just knew the ice wasn't strong enough!" he grumbled.

"Then why did you slide?" asked Auntie.

" 'Cause all the other boys did," said Joe; "so I had to, or they'd laugh."

His aunt gave him dry clothes, set him down by the fire, and made him drink hot ginger tea. Then she told him a story.

"When I was a little girl, Joe, my father had a great flock of sheep. They were queer things—where one went, all the rest followed.

"One day the big ram found a gap in the fence, and he thought it would be fun to see what was in the other field. So in he jumped, without looking where he was going. And down he tumbled to the bottom of an old, dry well, where father used to throw stones and rubbish.

"The next sheep never stopped to see what had become of him, but just jumped right after, and the next, and the next, although father tried to drive them back; and Watch, the sheep dog, barked his loudest. But they just kept on jumping till the well was full. Then father had to pull them out as best he could, and the sheep at the bottom of the well were almost smothered to death."

"My! what silly fellows!" exclaimed Joe. Then he looked up at his aunt and laughed.—Sunday School Times.

FISHING IN THE WATER TROUGH.

Katie's mother had been very sick, so they moved into the country. Their house was an old farmhouse. Close to the barn stood a big wooden pump. A trough was half-full of water that had stood so long it was not fit to drink.

"Maybe there might be fish there," said Katie. So she fastened a crooked pin to a string, tied a nail on to sink it, and waited patiently for the fish to bite.

Brother Will had been to college and knew almost everything; so Kate felt sure he could help her find the fish, for there was water, and only yesterday mother declared that the pretty speckled trout they ate for breakfast lived in the water.

"Yes," said Brother Will, "that trough is brimful of fish, but they are so tiny you could never see them unless I should lend you my microscope. Get your tin pail, and we'll capture a few. What do you see?"

"Nothing but some green, shiny stuff."

Gazing through the microscope, she found that the green stuff was made up of thousands and thousands of little cells, each one was a fish curled up asleep.

Brother Will stirred the mass with a stick, and the busy creatures darted here, there and everywhere.

They were shaped like a pear and moved with the small end first. Two tiny threads came out of a little peak at the small end, and with these thrashed through the water just like a boy swimming.

"These are berryfish," said Brother Will. "They have a long Latin name, too."

Katie half filled her tin pail with the water that held these odd fish and carried it back to show mother, who set it on the low mantel to watch the changes that would be sure to take place. In a few days the whole inner part divided in two. Then each half divided again until the inside jelly was cut up into a great many parts. These grew round and made a cluster of berries. Now the outside shell grew very soft and melted away; and then, instead of one green mother fish, there was a whole flock of baby berries that scattered themselves and swam about merrily.

"There is a large family of these berry fish in Greenland," said Brother Will; and instead of living in water, they stay in the snow. They are of a bright red color, and people who have never heard of them say the snow is red."

"But we know better," said Katie, "and I shall always be glad that I went fishing in the old pump trough."—Zion's Herald.

A DEAR LITTLE GIRL.

Her name was Pauline, and she came to visit her Grandma Dexter by the latter's invitation.

"She'll be lonesome here, won't she?" inquired a dear old white-haired lady the day that Pauline arrived.

"No," was Grandma Dexter's smiling answer; "I don't think so. She isn't the kind that gets lonesome. She is different from a good many children."

Grandma Dexter's home was only a boarding house. The boarders, for the greater part, were elderly people. and there were no children. The only child in the house was the little daughter of the cook, and she never ventured farther from the kitchen than the back yard; in fact, none of the boarders knew there was such a child until after Pauline came.

Pauline's coming to the boarding house was like a ray of sunshine after a dark day. She seemed to fit in everywhere. She was hands and feet to her Grandma Dexter as long as she was there, which was a month. It seemed to Mrs. Dexter and to those who saw the child's devotion to her a wonder how she had ever done without her and how she would do without her after she had gone.

Mrs. Dexter was not old, only a little past fifty, but she was greatly afflicted. She could manage to get about a little with the aid of a chair and a cane, but most of her time was spent in her wheel chair. She could use her hands part of the time, but there were many weary days when they were so stiff and painful that they lay idle in her lap.

There was nothing like servitude in the little ministering things Pauline did for her grandmother. And her loving ministry was not entirely confined to Mrs Dexter. It would be a difficult, if not impossible, task to enumerate the small, loving acts of just one of Pauline's days. They were such as these—the picking up of an old lady's handkerchief that had been accidentally dropped or the lifting up and gently wrapping about the shoulders of a light shawl that some feeble hands were trying in vain to arrange; the opening of a door for some afflicted one who wanted to pass out or the closing of it if a draft made some one shiver; the bringing of a glass of cool water to some one who needed it and was not able to get it; the unfolding of a paper for weak hands or the reading of items here and there if requested.

One day while Pauline was tossing her ball over the lawn it suddenly disappeared through a thick hedge which divided the front from the back yard. Pauline went in search of her ball. She found it and something else—a small, pale-faced girl leaning on crutches, who looked at her wistfully. Pauline instantly lost all interest in her ball.

"I'm Pauline Dexter, who are you?" she said, by way of introduction.

"I'm Katie Runyon, the cook's daughter," was the timid response.

Presently they were talking together as if they had known each other for years, Pauline, naturally, taking the lead. They yere sitting near together on an old settee. On the same settee were an old doll with a broken nose and a torn picture book. Pauline, observing the doll and book, drew her own inferences and a great pity for the crippled child took possession of her.

"Oh," she said to herself, "I must do something for her—I must!" and then aloud to Katie, "Would you like to see my dollie?"

"Indeed I would," Katie said, eagerly.

"Then I'll get it right away," and Pauline disappeared. Presently she was back with a smile on her face and a doll in her arms. The latter she handed to Katie, who took it shyly and looked at it longingly.

"Oh," she cried, "isn't it beautiful?"

"Yes; I think it is. I love that doll."

"So do I," said Katie, gleefully, touching her pale lips to the doll's yellow hair. "She'd keep the pain away, wouldn't she?"

"What pain?"

"Oh," exclaimed Katie, "the pain that comes on in the night."

"Do you always have pain at night?" asked Pauline.

"Yes, always—in my leg. It hurts and hurts. Oh, how it hurts! And poor mamma has to get out of bed and rub it."

"Why do you say 'poor mamma'? Is she sick?"

"Oh, no; mamma isn't sick. But she has to work so hard she gets tired, and I hate to call her up in the night. That's why I said 'poor mamma'."

"I'm sorry for you," Pauline said with ready sympathy. "I don't believe I could stand it if my leg should ache every night. You said you thought my dollie could keep the pain away, so she isn't my dollie any more—she's yours."

Katie looked at Pauline wonderingly. Then she held out the doll to her, but it was not taken. Pushing the hand that held it back with gentle insistence, Pauline said:

"It's yours, you know. I must go now, but I'll see you again tomorrow."

Pauline was as good as her word. Consequently, "tomorrow" found her there again. This time she found Katie with face alight sitting on the old settee with the beautiful doll in her arms.

"Oh!" Katie cried at sight of Pauline, "she (patting the doll gently) slept with me all night. Oh, I love her so (holding the doll close), and I love you, too, for giving her to me. Mamma says you're a 'dear little girl,' and I think so, too."—Mrs. Helen Hall Farley, in Ex.

BOYS' AND GIRLS' CONTEST.

Concerning "Jo and Jim's Visit."

It may interest and benefit the children who read the Herald to study some of the errors in "Jo and Jim's Visit," fifty-five of which were corrected by Miss Jennie Dale Pickett In some instances there were two or three errors in one word, as in "busted," which should be "burst." I must present errors and their corrections as succinctly as I can.

"Jo and Jim's visit" should be, "The visit of Joe and Jim"; "were two brothers," "were brothers"; "of which Joe was the oldest," "of whom Joe was the older (or elder)": "neither of them was bright, but Joe was brighter"; how could either be "brighter" if "neither was bright"? Better say, "Joe was not as dull". Three boys helping one another," not "each other." "How many beans—three pounds" should be how much beans". "Many" applies to things counted; "much", to things weighed or measured. "I don't doubt but that," "I don't doubt that". A farmer "across a fence" could not raise a crop; and no farmer could "raise the best crop this year he has ever raised". He may raise a better crop than he has ever raised. Nor can any crop be "The best of all other kinds"; it may be "better than," etc. "Nobody never saw such fine wheat as," etc., has three errors and should read, "Nobody ever saw other wheat so fine as", etc. "Because he is badly dressed is no reason," etc., has an error of frequent occurrence in even good writing. It should read, "His being badly dressed is no reason," etc "All shabbily dressed men are not vagabonds," has an error of which almost all writers are guilty. Let's find this error: when we say of a man, he is not white, we mean he is black. Then when we say of ten men, all of them are not white, we seem to mean, all of them are black, although we may mean to say some of them are black. So it is better and strictly correct to say, "Not all shabbily dressed men are vagabonds." "I expect I saw": we can expect future things only. We don't "wonder if", but "wonder whether". A man is not really "persuaded" to do what he refuses to do, nor can one be "convinced" of anything but actual fact. A dog will not bite a man who is convinced he will not bite him Nor, precisely speaking, can we think a dog, or anything else, "larger than it is." Suppose somebody were to say, "That dog is larger than he is." You would know the statement untrue. Nothing can be now larger than it is now. But a thing may be larger or smaller than you think it is. We "stop" instantly, we may "stay" indefinitely. The patient who "has no temperature" hasn't anything else in this world. The spelling of "nickleodian" is not improved by substituting "melodian", If "a rain fell during a stay of three hours" it fell for three hours; "during means "the whole time of." "Impossible road" is miscorrected to "impassible road," a very different word from "impassable road" and meaning an entirely different thing. And why do people say, "The thermometer is 100?" It registers 100. These are a few of the 105 errors submitted for correction. The little ladies competing for the prize did well, all of them. And by careful reading, and constant critical study of their everyday conversation, and frequent peeps into a dictionary they may, without going to college, acquire an excellent command of good English—something worth far more than all the dollars I could give them.

(We thank the kind minister for this interesting exercise. He informs us that Miss Jennie Dale Pickett, of Liberty, N. C., wins the prize.)

THE THIEF OF THE CRICKET CLUB.

The summer breeze shook the honeysuckle by the walk and sent down showers of petals from the crimson rambler that clambered over the big white pillars on the Brownell porch. Here fifteen girls swayed in rocking chairs, swung in hammocks and lounged against sofa pillows. The Cricket Club was holding its usual Saturday afternoon meeting. Suddenly little Doris Day's scissors came to the floor with a crash. "My pink velvet is gone," she screamed. Wildly she tumbled the contents of her workbag into her lap and searched through the pieces of velvet, silk, and lace. "Yes, it is gone," she said with a sigh. "And I had just started to make mother the dearest pincushion out of it."

"Perhaps you did not bring it," drawled Minta Howard, a tall, blond girl in a ruffled blue gown.

"Brought it? Of course I brought it!" flared Doris. "I showed it to Rita not five minutes ago and told her where I was going to embroider a rose. Where do all the things go?" Doris was on the verge of tears.

"All of you look and see if you have lost anything," cried Beth Brownell, rapping with her thimble on the porch railing. She was a slender girl with brown eyes and closely coiled brown hair. Although she had lost nothing she was vaguely disturbed. Six months before the Cricket Sewing Club had been founded by Miss Brindell, their Sunday-school teacher, and now, suddenly and mysteriously, at three consecutive meetings, pieces of silk, scraps of embroidery and short lengths of velvet with which the girls had been working had disappeared.

"Ach! I have what you call luck. No time have I lose anythings!" A smiling little German girl stood before Beth. Her fair hair, quaintly parted, fell in two thick, smooth braids below her waist. Her cheeks were pink and her eyes were blue and merry.

"Always early I must go," continued her sweet voice. 'Mein fader he ees not well. I cannot leave him long."

Beth watched her as the heavy shoes clumped stolidly along the walk. "She is a dear, isn't she?" she said, turning to the girls on the porch; "so kind always to her old father."

But Minta Howard shrugged her shapely shoulders. "I call her dowdy," she said. "Really she hardly ought to belong to our club. She isn't exactly in our set anyway. Her father is a fiddler."

The uncomfortable silence continued. Minta was the leader in their set, the president of their club. She had the most beautiful clothes and gave the biggest parties of any girl in town. Now her eyes narrowed to mere slits and a crafty smile played around her lips. "Isn't it strange that Gretchel never loses anything?" she said, softly glancing around the circle of listening girls. "And do you know—she always goes home early?"

"Of course she takes them." It was Hazel Onslow, flushed and eager to take sides with Minta.

But Beth stood up very straight and tall against the white porch pillar. "Girls, I know she doesn't take them." Then her trembling voice became strong. "Her mother is dead and Gretchel has been so lonely. I just know she is good and true." She stopped with a queer little catch in her voice.

But Minta Howard shrugged her shapely shoulders. "I have nothing more to say," she said with an injured air, drawing on her long white gloves. Then with head held high she hurried away, Fluff, her little dog, close at her heels.

As they passed out of the shade of the cottonwood trees into the white glare of the sunlight, Beth saw something that made her catch her breath sharply. "I know who the thief is," she said, turning to the astonished girls on the porch. Some of them looked at her curiously and Hazel whispered to Mae Combs: "Do you hear that? She means Minta is the thief. I shall tell Minta."

The next Saturday the members of the Cricket Club held their meeting on Beth's porch.

Chattering merrily the girls sewed or crocheted or embroidered. Only Beth was idle. Sitting quietly in the low rocker she gazed out across the garden to where a field of grain rippled golden-yellow in the sunshine. Back and forth among the girls trotted Fluff, stopping often to be praised and petted.

Suddenly like an animated white ball she sped away across the garden and disappeared through a hole in the hedge. An instant later Grace Marshall waved her sofa pillow excitedly and cried: "My embroidery silk is gone I had it only a moment ago Where can it be? But what is the matter with Beth?" cried Grace, suddenly forgetting her embroidery silk. "Has she gone crazy? All of a sudden she jumped up out of her chair and went tearing across the garden."

Then suddenly they heard Beth's laughter and heard her call: "Girls, come. I have the thief and the stolen goods." Over the porch railing vaulted Grace. Down the steps tumbled Mae and Elizabeth. Close after them crowded the others. Breathless they went through the gap in the hedge. They found Beth sitting on the ground, Fluff clasped tightly in her arms. When she saw the girls she tucked the dog under one arm and reached into the hedge. Triumphantly she drew out a tangled and soiled mass of velvet and lace and silk. Eagerly the girls fell upon it. Yes there was Doris's pink velvet, Ena's silk, Edith's swansdown, spools of thread that nobody knew that they had lost, and bits of embroidery silk.

Every one began saying: "Oh—how clever!" "How did you ever catch her?" But Beth laughed a glad little laugh. "You remember last week when Minta was going home—how I said that I knew who the thief was."

"Yes," said Doris Day. "We thought you meant that Minta took the things."

"No," laughed Beth. "I meant the thief was Minta's dog. I saw a pink string like Doris's velvet caught fast in Fluff's teeth. And then I happened to think what Minta had told me about Fluff's having belonged to a professional pickpocket. I was sure then that she was the thief, but she was so clever —no one saw her take the things. And I had no idea where she had hidden them.

Apart from the others stood Minta. "Fluff —oh—Fluff, how could you disgrace me so!" she cried with a queer little catch in her voice.

"Never mind," whispered Beth comfortingly.

Suddenly a pair of strong young arms clasped Beth and drew her up on a big, vine-covered stump. "Now, three cheers for Gretchel," cried Grace's voice. Every one cheered.

"Now three times three cheers for Beth—defender of the stranger and the friendless—wise unraveler of mysteries!" And then every girl in the Cricket Club cheered until she was hoarse.—Congregationalist.

A Steubenville, Ohio, citizen was recently relieved of $7,500 worth of booze which he had stored in his cellar against the day of drouth. Officers have been unable to find any trace of the stolen liquors. Two people have been arrested suspected of having committed the robbery. A tunnel was dug from an adjoining lot to the basement and 1,488 quarts of bonded goods carried away.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

REV. A. G. DIXON, General Secretary.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 10.

Speech, wise and unwise. James 3: 1-18.

M. Judged by words. Matt. 12: 33-37.
T. Backbiters. Jer. 9: 1-11.
W. Slanderers. 2 Sam. 10: 1-5.
T. Jesus, Master Pleader. John 6: 57-71.
F. Rash words lose a kingdom. 2 Chron. 10: 1-11.
S. A God-taught speaker. Isa. 50: 4-11.

There is scarcely a member of our body that is of more service to us than the tongue. We use it from morning until night. It works so perfectly that it can aid us in making any number of sounds with such ease and perfection that we are seldom ever conscious of the tongue being tired. Indeed the tongue is useful and is a great convenience to us. Try for a minute to get along without your tongue and see how you are handicapped. Now the tongue is so closely connected with our speech that we give it credit for the good things we say and condemn it for the evil. St. James says if any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man.

Our subject is "Speech, wise and unwise." What is the wise and what is the unwise? By unwise speech we mean:

1. False Words. The scripture says "Speak the truth in love." So that we are not only urged to speak the truth but we are to speak it in a certain manner—love. Sometimes it is very easy to tell the things that are untrue but the world has learned long since that such never pays. There is a stanza of poetry something like this,

"Truth crushed to earth shall rise again
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error, wounded, writhes in pain
And dies among its worshippers."

2. Unkind Words. Many lives have been crushed by unkind words. Sometimes parents in the home speak roughly to the children and sometimes the children speak roughly to the parents. And sometimes when we feel that our fellow man has not played fair with us we write him a rough letter and say unkind things to him, but after all it does not pay. It is said that Abraham Lincoln's secretary had a grievance with a man and wrote him a very severe letter. Before sending it he showed it to Mr. Lincoln for his approval, whereupon Mr Lincoln said, "That is fine, just the thing, but do not send it." "Why?" said his secretary. The great president said, "You have relieved your feelings by saying it, and that is all that is necessary."

But the Bible teaches that we are to be judged for the things that we do not do as well as for the things we do. What then should we say—wise speech?

1. Words that Cheer. A great many people are fainting by the wayside and need a little bit of help. Some of these could overcome by just a little word of encouragement. In this field perhaps was where Jesus did his greatest preaching. It is true that sometimes he was severe but the very next moment he says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

2. Kind Words. There is a song which says, "Kind words can never die." I am sure that we all would like to utter something which shall live on after us. For life is short and it takes only a little while to live out all our days, so if we can utter some truth that shall live on after us it will be well with us. Solomon says, "Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver." He must have been speaking of kind words. Then let us as young people resolve that we will speak kind words instead of harsh ones, true ones instead of false ones and our lives will be happier and the lives of others will be happier.

Questions from Our Topic Card.
What disasters come from harsh words?
How can we gain control of our tongues?
How can we pactise kindly speech?

JUNK.

"Junk." That's an odd word, isn't it? You have used it again and again. Sometimes you couldn't think of any better word to use when you emptied your pockets of the stuff that was there in the suit you've been wearing, or when you dug up an old suit that you had almost forgotten.

"Junk was the only word you could use when you looked through that desk drawer of yours the other day, and found a lot of things you had once stowed away as treasures. They don't look nearly so valuable now as they did when you put them away.

You used that same word when you threw away the basket of old playthings you used to have when you were a little fellow. Many of them were broken, all of them pretty well used up. Yet while you were just a little sorry to see them go out of the house, you realized that you had no further use for them.

Every now and then the door of a little section of a fellow's life swings open, and he is surprised to find how much stuff there is behind that door that he is ashamed of. The boy is rare who can take a stranger into his room and say, "Just look about this place, and I'll be glad to have you count whatever you see as showing the kind of fellow I am." Somewhere there is likely to be hidden away little heaps of rubbish that show a weakness, or point to a streak of carelessness in the boy's life. That's the thing that happens when a boy opens up some of the doors into his own life and examines frankly what he finds there. If he is honest with himself, he will take a good look, and then perhaps utter just one short word—"junk".

Rubbish takes a good many different forms. Sometimes it exists in the form of pictures that the boy has in his mind, the kind of things that he thinks about, and which he would not want to describe to his mother. Sometimes he finds a lot of broken promises scattered around, promises that he meant to keep when he made them; but somehow they got smashed up. Then again he discovers some broken resolutions that no one but himself knew anything about, but gets disgusted about them. How many times he said he would, and then he didn't!

It cannot be that having a lot of stuff of this sort around is good for us. Each day ought to begin with a new, clean determination to have every part of the life so open that if the doors should suddenly be flung wide, no junk would be found. The thoughts as well as the desk ought to be clear of things that are in the way.

Do you suppose a fellow could start his day with Jesus and walk with Jesus throughout the day, and close that day with a little talk with Jesus, and at the same time gather up a great lot of rubbish in his thought and in his life of which he would be ashamed? In military schools, boys have both their rooms and their belongings inspected. Everything must be in its right place. There are some things not allowable, and there are things that must be on hand. The boys don't always know when inspection is coming, and therefore they must keep things in shape all the time, so that if an officer looks into their rooms, there will be nothing for which they will have to apologize as affecting the rules.

Could you today swing the door of your life wide open and say to father and mother, "Come right in and look around. There isn't anything here that I don't want you to know about?"—Kings Treasuries.

THE VOLSTEAD ENFORCEMENT CODE.

The lower house of Congress deserves and will receive the heartfelt gratitude of all people of this nation who are anxious to see Prohibition given a fair test, for the enactment of the Volstead enforcement bill.

It is especially gratifying to note the overwhelming majority vote this measure received, a majority of 187. This majority does not signify any lack of opposition from the liquor interests. They fought every inch of the way, especially the brewery advocates who were intent upon securing an exemption for beer and wines. But it does signify an intelligent interpretation of the will of the people whom the Congressmen represent.

When the Legislators of 45 of the 48 states approved the Eighteenth Amendment they did it in response to the demand of their constituents. There was no mistaking that demand. It was a demand for the complete abolition of the liquor traffic. There has been no evidence that the people have changed their mind or nothing to show that they were not in earnest when they pronounced the death verdict upon John Barleycorn

Several events have transpired to show that dry sentiment, if anything, is on the increase. The elections in Michigan, Texas, and Ohio are notable instances. It is not surprising, therefore, that the House did what it did, earnestly devote itself to the task of enacting an enforcement code that would be just to all and carry out the clear intent of the people with reference to National Prohibition.

The Judiciary Committee had given weeks of careful thought to every provision of the measure and it is worthy of note that the bill as reported by the committee was not weakened in any particular when put to the vote of the House. In several instances it was strengthened.

Perhaps the most perplexing problem was that presented by the search and seizure clause. As finally passed, this clause is not so drastic as search and seizure provisions in many of the state Prohibition enforcement codes. The fear of violating the sanctity of the home deterred the Representatives from making it as drastic as it would otherwise be. However, under its provisions a home may be searched if there is good reason to believe that the home has been converted into a speak-easy or a place for the carrying on of the sale of liquor illegally. Severe penalties are provided for the issuance of search warrants without just cause and for any abuse in executing them. Thus the home is protected from unwarranted search and invasion and at the same time a barrier is raised against those who would turn the home into a speakeasy.

The definition of intoxicating liquors fixing the alcoholic content at one-half of 1 per cent. blasts the hopes of the brewers.

The measure now goes to the Senate where the Prohibition advocates plan to call it up for consideration at the earliest possible opportunity. Friends of Prohibition should not fail to let their Senators know that they have the support of the folks back home in the approval of this House enforcement bill or its equivalent.—The American Issue.

Caroleen, Shelby Circuit.—Bro. Fogleman was with us Sunday evening and preached an able sermon. His subject was, Our Responsibility to God. We were glad to have a number of the Baptist people to worship with us. We are always glad to have visitors come and worship with us. Bro. Fogleman will be away this week; he goes to Yarborough circuit to help Bro. Harrison in a revival meeting. Our prayers go with him. Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. The prayer meetings are good. In fact, everything is going well with us here. The Ladies' Aid society, which has just been organized by Bro. Fogleman, is getting along well. The officers are as follows: President, Mrs. W. O. Williams; vice president, Mrs. R. J. Tate; secretary, Miss Josie Nancy; treasurer, Mrs. D. W. Smith. They have a membership of about 25 of the best ladies of our town

TO PROTECT HORSES FROM FLIES.

Through a valued correspondent of Our Dumb Animals, Mrs. Sarah A. Turle, of Duluth, Minnesota, we are able to present the following prescription for protecting horses from flies. It was obtained by her through a state experimental station:

Resin, 1½ pounds
Laundry soap, 2 bars
Fish oil, ½ pint
Water enough to make 3 gallons

Boil resin, soap and water till dissolved. Apply with brush. If spray is used, a half pint of kerosene may be added.

BOARD OF HOME MISSIONS

Rev. C. H. Beck, Sec.

OUR NEW PROJECT.

Missionary work in India differs in some important features from that in other lands. This arises from the caste system which originally divided the people into four great classes, but now there are numerous castes.

One breaks caste by eating, etc., with any of another caste and is degraded, suffers ostracism and persecution as a result. Hence, when ane renounces his idols, has the cue which binds him to Hinduism cut off, and accepts Christ he turns from all his past, loses caste, is persecuted by those of his caste and village or town. It follows that he cannot labor as formerly and invites hardships and privations. Of course, when a whole community accepts Christianity, all labor, etc., goes on as usual, and this is taking place in India now, and is known as the ''mass movement''. Our missionaries report it is reaching into our territory.

The converts already secured have had to be helped to maintain themselves, and with whole families recently baptized, and more seeking to be, and the growth of the movement being clearly indicated, some provision was demanded for the care of our people.

To adopt any plan which would tend to make them mere dependents could not be considered, but to the vision and good judgment of our missionary, Miss Williams, is credited the plan which has met with the approval and support of the government officials, and with the unanimous endorsement of the members of the Board of Foreign Missions. These are the salient features of the project:

''Now settlement work is very successful, and is looked upon favorably by the government. There is a great stir going on among the Mang Garudis (criminal tribes) of this district, and there is going to be a mighty turning away from idols to serve the living God. These poor people have nothing, the men wander about shaving buffaloes, etc., while the women and children beg.

''For these people I have made an appeal to the government. The Collector of West Khandesh told me to make it strong so it would have weight with the government. I was so wrought upon by the project that the officials, too, caught the spirit, and several were quite enthusiastic over it. My petition has been sent up, and the Commissioners favor the scheme.

''Now this is the plan. About four miles from Dhulia there is a tract of fine forest land. I have asked for one hundred acres (more to be given as the need comes) for our new converts. The first thing a church is to be built, then their grass covered huts, later on houses as our dear people prosper, and a school house. The Mission to furnish bullocks, plows, a cart or two, and the first year's seeds, then these dear people will be independent, industrious, law-abiding citizens.

''So you see we will have our fields, gardens, church, school, a master-teacher there, and a headman of the village. Last foreign mail brought $225 for the church there from a dear, godly, hard-working girl out in Texas.

''So we will need one thousand dollars right away to open this Christian village. I believe by the time you send that, enough will be sent us here for the church building. The government wanted to know if our Mission would stand by the project. I vouched for your faithfulness. You will not fail in this great work, for God is back of it.''

The Board's decision to send out the thousand dollars is being carried out, and further details are, of course, expected shortly, but it is felt this is really the kind of work that should be done, and ''in fact a realization of our purposes,'' as Board members wrote. I call upon the church to pray for the success of this great project, and all our missionary work.

Remember the famine still rages, the needs are great. Send your help to the editor of the Herald. Fred C. Klein, Cor. Sec.

TALKING WITH CHRIST.

In every great city there are scholarly, eloquent, popular preachers, who draw big crowds, but are almost totally unacquainted with Jesus Christ If I had a son or brother, or other dear friend, thoughtful on personal religion, but undecided, about the last place I would take him to would be to hear such a preacher. Such a man counts as trivial the awful themes of heaven and hell, and hardens the heart of every soul that listens to his voice.

In Acts 4:13 we find the secret of how a handful of ignorant fishermen turned the world upside down. ''When they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled, and they took knowledge of them that ''They had been with Jesus.''—Henry W. Adams.

A NATION MOURNS.

The Evangelical churches of Germany set aside Sunday, July 6th, as a day of mourning, because of the sad condition into which Germany has fallen. Even the church bells chimed a hymn of mourning. It was requested that quiet prevail and that all Germans help their fatherland to recuperate by consistent, self-denying work. With little hope of a better day tomorrow, there is an increasing disposition in Germany to stop work or to do work half-heartedly. The Ruhr miners, Mr. H. N. Brailsford says, have worked barely half the period from November to May; by the end of April the coal mined in Germany had fallen to a fraction of the normal quantity. The double burden of war taxation and foreign tribute has made the chance of personally enjoying an appreciable profit seem slim indeed. If the church can arouse the Germans from their deep depression, she will do well, and every person who sincerely wishes a better world will hope for a response to the appeal of religion. No man nor nation liveth or dieth unto himself. No Christian can rejoice over the spectacle of Germany in collapse. The world's welfare is conditioned on the welfare of each nation. We need a new concept of nationalism. ''Break, beam of light, into our disordered dwellings and merge our faint and feeble crosslights into broad and endless day.'' This is no time for vainglorious boasting, but rather for penitence and prayer, and that the spirit of God may be poured out on all flesh, and human brotherhood become a glad reality. No League of Nations is worth the name unless the erring nations are included in the brotherhood when they have shown works meet for repentance.—Rev. George Wailes King, D.D., in Markham Memorial.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Burlington—The Burlington Sunday school registered 259 in attendance last Sunday. Announcement was made that the annual picnic for the school will be held next Saturday, August 2nd, at Piedmont Park. This was good news to the children. The members of the school who can attend, are requested to meet at the church at 3 p. m. They will be conveyed to the park by autos and autotrucks.

The morning church service was well attended, and a helpful sermon was delivered by the pastor on a subject that was of special interest to the old people. Opportunity was given for persons to unite with the church, and two young girls were received into the church.

The evening church service was attended by the usual size congregation and an inspiring sermon was delivered by the pastor.

The Christian Endeavor societies held their meetings as usual, the juniors at five p. m., and the intermediates and seniors at seven p. m.

Next Sunday morning the senior Christian Endeavor society will conduct the church service in the absence of the pastor There will be no church service in the evening. Bro Pritchard will be assisting Rev. N. M. Harrison, Jr., in a meeting in South Carolina, commencing next Sunday.

C. B. Way, Reporter.

Orange Circuit.— Attendance at regular church services for the past month has been very good, however, there are still some vacant pews which are open for those who wish to be accommodated. Those who get the most good out of the church services and church work are those who are accustomed to attend regularly all the various services afforded by the church. There are some people it seems who make it a point to be present during the special meeting and then they are never seen until the next season's meeting. They content themselves with a few days of meeting and let this supply their need for a whole year. If this condition should prevail or this idea become universal, there would be no need of a pastor holding regular prescribed services, but only an evangelist would be necessary who would make a call once every year and then pass on But this is not the true way. All services throughout the year are special opportunities for worship, and hence to derive the highesst good for self and to cast a favorable influence upon others it is imperative to attend every service conducted in our church unless providentially hindered, and too, be sure that the "providentially" is correctly interpreted.

Our special meetings for Orange Circuit will be conducted as follows: Union Grove, the first Sunday in August with Rev. H. F. Fogleman in charge; Efland, the fourth Sunday in August, Rev. L. W. Gerringer as help; Chestnut Ridge, the fourth Sunday in September, conducted by Rev. J. D. Williams. If you have not been praying for the special services, then let us begin to pray that these meetings shall be a great uplift to ourselves and a wonderful blessing in bringing souls into the Kingdom.

The third quarterly conference was held last Saturday at Chestnut Ridge Church. Business was transacted in the spirit of harmony and reports were quite favorable. Bro E D. Thompson of Efland Church was elected delegate to the Annual Conference. The 4th quarterly conference will be held with the Efland Church, the time to be announced later

H. Fred Surratt.

Vance Circuit.—We have just closed a good meeting at Flat Rock. Rev. R. M. Troxler was my help. We had floods of rain, but we stuck to it till finally it cleared away and interest and congregations increased to the close. Friday night, some ten conversions and a number of reclamations; eight joined the church. The membership was stirred as I never saw them. Bro. Troxler preached the word with power and it was gladly received. Bro. Troxler is a good singer and doesn't seem to tire—a forte that not many of us have.

Our next meeting is at New Hope beginning first Sunday in August.

Third quarterly conference at Flat Rock on Saturday before second Sunday in August: 10:30 is the hour. I hope to see all officials present. Don't fail.

H. L. Powell, Pastor.

Matthews Chapel, Greensville Circuit.—We do not want the readers to think we have gone asleep, for we have not. Our Sunday school is still doing nicely, very good attendance every Sunday. Bro. Morgan did not preach for us first Sunday, as we held our circuit rally on that day at Wesley's Chapel. All the Sunday schools on this work were represented excepting Hobbs Chapel and Ebenezer. The programs were carried out very nicely, and all seemed to enjoy them. To our delight we had with us that day, Superintendent H. A. Garrett of the Children's Home. He gave us a short talk on the Home, which was very interesting. And we had with us also. Bro J. B. O'Briant of Pleasant Hill, N. C. He gave us a talk on the million dollar drive. We were glad to have them with us. Come again.

Our special meeting will begin next Sunday. We hope to have good attendance, and also a good revival.

We are still behind in the million dollar drive, but guess we will go over, by and by, as the old saying is, "slow but sure".

Sunday was our regular preaching day, but the weather was so unfavorable we failed to have any services. Best wishes to Herald and readers. Reporter.

Bess Chapel Circuit.—The nominees for delegate to annual conference are: Bros. A. M. Little, Sherrill's Ford; M. W. Leonhardt, Crouse, N. C. Both are good men. Our meeting at Bess's Chapel will be second Sunday in August. Rev. G. L. Reynolds as help. Our meeting at Bessemer City, third Sunday in August, Rev. A. M. Hamilton as help. We are praying for good revivals.

W. B. Surratt, Pastor.

Bethesda, North Davidson Circuit.—Our church held its annual children's day services last Sunday; had a good service, children doing their part well although the practices were hindered very much by rain. Dr. Yokley from Denton made a short talk and Hon. W. F. Brinkley of Lexington made the address. Both were good. Collection, $24.25 for foreign missions.

On Saturday, the 12th, our third quarterly conference met at Bethesda. Preaching at 11 o'clock by pastor Cecil. After dinner conference assembled for business. Of the officials 53 were present and a large crowd of members and visitors. We were very glad to have them come. Reports were good. There were four preachers present: Pastor Cecil, Rev. W. T. Totten, Rev. Otho Stone, and Bro. Geo. Berrier. Bro. A. H. Evans was elected delegate to next annual conference. Our protracted meeting begins next second Sunday at eleven o'clock; preaching by Rev. Mr. Brown of High Point. Let's pray for a good meeting.

Our organist, Miss Alta Leonard, went off after our children's services Sunday evening and got married to Mr. John Everhart, one of Uncle Sam's soldier boys from the Philippine Islands. Miss Leonard is the daughter of Bro. P. F. Leonard of Bethesda, and is a good Christian girl. Mr. Everhart is the son of Mr. Andrew Everhart, of Midway Methodist Episcopal church. May they have a long and happy life together.

Mrs. C. M. Yokley is in Charlotte at the bedside of her sister, Mrs. M. F. Grimes, who underwent an operation a few days ago.

Relatives, friends and neighbors numbering about two hundred and thirty-five gathered at the home of Mr. Mathew Hanes on last Sunday to celebrate Mr. and Mrs. Hanes's 60th and 58th birthday. Mr. Hanes lacks six days of being two years older than Mrs. Hanes. May they live to see many more birthdays. Chas. M. Yokley.

Stanly.—Two weeks ago, we sent to the Herald report announcing our third quarterly conference to be held at Friendship on Saturday before the first Sunday in August. Also, a long list of those who had remembered us with gifts. Among others was a nice lot of honey given by Miss Ruby Marley; but since it has not appeared in print, we presume that it has found its way to the waste basket, or it may have been within the range of possibilities that the "sweetness" contained therein was taken too literally by the editor and he may have devoured the whole thing; since unfortunately and unjustly editors are never pounded.

(Must have melted in the mail-bag, Bro. [illegible]. Not even one scent of it reached us.—Editor.)

Had a splendid children's day service at Plyler Sunday. Mrs. J. H. Snotherly was responsible for the splendid program rendered by the children; Miss May Hatley for the fine music. Collections, $12.15.

We were pleased to have Bro. Brack Furr and wife from Stallings church, once a member here, worship with us.

Bro. Furr is enthusiastic over the rebuilding of Stallings church—such zeal cannot fail.

Our special meeting at Plyler will follow the quarterly conference. Rev. B. F. Huneycutt of Cabarrus will be our help. We are hoping for great results. W. D. Reed.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—Henry Shepherd has returned from over seas. So far as we know, nearly all of the twenty-seven young men who went to the various camps from our church and Sunday school have returned. Not any were slain in action, one or two were slightly wounded. One contracted pneumonia in camp, came home on furlough, took a relapse and died. We believe that God preserved our boys in answer to earnest prayer for their safety.

Floyd Amick conducted prayer meeting last Sunday, using 55th chapter of Isaiah.: made practical talk.

The quarterly conference is to meet Saturday before the first Sunday in August.

Our revival services to embrace third Sunday of August. Oh. Lord, revive us again.

High Point.—Dr. Brown delivered a splendid sermon on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock from the text found in 2 Peter 1:5, "Add to your faith virtue."

The Sunday school will hold their annual picnic next Thursday, July 31, at Hayworth's Memorial Spring, about three miles from town. The children will go out in trucks and automobiles about three o'clock, followed by the grown-ups at six. A pleasant time is anticipated.

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies met Monday, July 21st, with Mrs. L. J. Diffee.

We regret to state that there is more sickness than usual among the members of our congregation. Mrs. J. D. Newton has been quite ill for several weeks, also Mrs. Dora Braswell. Mrs. Newton's condition is regarded as very serioous.

Henry Koontz, of the U. S. Navy, has been here on a recent visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Koontz.

Mr. W. P. Pickett returned Sunday morning from Richmond, Va., where he has been taking treatment in a hospital for several woeks. His health is now quite good.

Miss Helen Bartlett, a schoolmate of Miss Margaret Rankin at Westminster, Md., is now her guest for a few days.

Mrs. J. H. Slayden and daughter, Hazelle, of Fayetteville, N. C., who have been visiting their cousin, Mrs. R. T. Pickens, returned home last Saturday.

Mrs. Herman Meredith and children of Wilmington are guests of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Pickett, on North Main street.

Miss Kathleen Welch is attending the summer school at State College, Greensboro, and will teach in Mechanicsville graded school the coming session. Reporter.

July 28.

Pensacola Station.—We have held our third quarterly meeting and find that S. M. Wilson was duly elected as delegate to annual conference. Brother Riddle has held another protracted meeting at Eskota, at a large saw mill plant, with some 40 or more professions and renewals, and as a result we received three members yesterday. One is a young man, Bro. E. Stepp, who wants to preach the gospel; he was converted a year ago at Mr. Riddle's meeting and has been superintendent of their Sunday school and helping in prayer meetings and is still making good; he seems to be a bright, intelligent fellow, and we are hopeful that he will prove to be a success. We are very hopeful of him. Our meeting at the station is still to hold. Pray for us that itmay be a great success. With love and good wishes for yourself and all Herald readers, I am, yours truly, M. P. Ray, Reporter.

P. S.—We are going to try to get more of our people to take the Herald. We ordered 8 disciplines, I suppose today. M. P. R.

Welch Memorial.—Last Sunday was a warm day but quite a large number at Sunday school and preaching. No preaching at night as the wires are disconnected and we can't get lights while work is being done on the church.

The church when it is finishhed will look lots better, will seat more people and will be more convenient in many ways. We hope to have it finished before our special meeting, which will be in September

Rev. Raleigh Hunter and family of West Greensboro were up visiting at his father's and he preached for us the third Sunday night, giving us a most helpful sermon, which all present enjoyed very much. We trust he will come again.

Mrs. Browning, sister of Rev. A. L. Hunter, is spending some time at the parsonage.

Glad to have Miss Dorothy Hiatt and brother Lawrence from the Children's Home worship with us last Sunday, visiting at their uncle's Mr. C. A. Hiatt's.

Next Sunday morning we will elect delegate to annual conference. The candidates are Bros. Easter and Eldridge.

Much love to the Herald and readers.

Gillburg, Vance Circuit.—Pastor Powell filled his appointment here Sunday morning. A large nongregation were out to hear him. Some said it was the best sermon he had ever preached, at this church.

We were very sorry that one of our old members could not be out on account of sickness, this being Mr. G. M. Stainback. Let us pray for his early recovery.

Our children's day service will be given on the second Sunday night in August.

The special meeting will begin on the fourth Sunday in September here. Bro. W. F. Kennett will be Bro. Powell's help.

We, the people of Gillburg, wish to extend our thanks and appreciation to Mr. H. A. Garrett, superintendent of the Children's Home, for the picture of the Children's Home for our church.

With best wishes to the Herald,

Lottie Moss, Reporter.

Saxapahaw, Saxapahaw Circuit.—Our report must necessarily, bear news both of joy and grief. But such is life and it is Christlike to make the best of every situation, however disaggreeable.

Dr. R. G. McPherson is to leave our town and congregation very soon to take up regular service with his medical skill in a neighboring county. To say we are grieved to see him depart is not enough. The whole village and community stand in a debt of love and appreciation for time to come. Mrs. McPherson, also, will be no less missed. We appreciate her, too. In township and local Sunday school reunions her official service has been marked. And while our own church and Sunday school will be minus this high type of leadership, a people without a physician, a Baraca class teacherless, yet we are certain that the community so fortunate as to receive such a family will be elevated by their ideal of helpfulness.

Last Sunday morning we were much gratified to receive Miss Ola Mae Smith as a member of our church. She is a real girl for service in a Philathea class, Christian Endeavor representation or for musical talent. We greet her with a glad welcome and sincere congratulations.

Of course it is useless to state that Pastor Williams is effecting a great work here. His messages are inspiring and educating, while continually he is endearing himself and family to the people he lives among.

Lexington Mission.—The third quarterly conference met at Mt. Carmel church Saturday, July 5. The usual business was transacted. Preaching at 11 a. m., dinner served 12 m. Quarterly conference business in the afternoon. Bro. Carl Gibson was elected delegate to the annual conference. After the usual business of the conference had been transacted, superannuate bond was introduced by the pastor, and after some discussion it was decided we would take one superannuate bond of fifty dollars and divide it equally between the three churches. It was decided that we would work up the interest in the million dollar campaign. None of my churches have decided to raise their part of the million dollars except Yadkin College. They have acted their part well. Mrs. Flora Dale and Mrs. Lucile Oaks were the committee to see our members at Yadkin College, and they did their work well. We thank them for their faithful work. I do not believe my other churches are willing to lag behind and I believe they will do their part. The finance of the quarterly conference was shown to be in good condition.

We were glad to have Rev. C. A. Cecil with us in our quarterly conference. Bro. Cecil was a very great help to us in the conference. My people know him and they like him. I am hopeful of our work. We hope to have some good news to write about our work at Lexington soon. Our meeting will begin at Mt. Carmel the first Sunday in August. Pray for a good meeting. Yours in His name. D. A. Braswell.

Death and Burial of Miss Ora Frances Gallimore.

The death and burial of Miss Ora Frances Gallimore, which occurred on June 1 was a shock to the family and many friends. But the grim hand of death is no respecter of persons and seems to follow thick and fast in the wake of the terrible malady that is now stalking about so mighty in our land. Ora was sick only a few days with typhoid fever.

We do not understand why she was taken so soon in life, when there was such a bright future before her. But God knows best, and doeth all things well. He makes no mistakes when he calls his earthly gems home. While we shall greatly miss her, we feel that our loss is her gain. Ora was a good girl and loved by all that knew her. She always met her friends with a smile and words of encouragement. She was a member of the Missionary Baptist church at Walters Grove and will be greatly missed in the Sunday school and community. She was only sixteen years, five months and twenty-eight days old at her death.

The funeral service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. Mr. Chrisman of High Point, and followed by Rev. W. H. Neese. The remains were laid to rest at Piney Grove cemetery. The flower girls were Nina Neese, Jessie Swing, Betty Williams, Lizzie Beck, Maud Ward, Clara Yates and Myrl Hill.

The beautiful Christian character and exemplary life of Ora will ever be remembered and will live long among us.

The deceased leaves a father, mother, five brothers, and two sisters, to all of whom we extend our greatest sympathy. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

Her Cousin.

Orange Chapel, Saxapahaw Circuit.—Very sorry we couldn't have our children's day service the 20th as we had planned. It was such a rainy day lots of the children could not come; they live so far from the church. We were all disappointed. Bro. Williams came with the intention of being a listener but he had to preach for us, said he didn't have a sermon prepared, but he certainly preached a good one anyway. We intend having our children's day service the third Sunday in August in the morning and our revival begins in the afternoon. If nothing prevents Mr Lester, the Christian preacher of Graham, will be the pulpit help. He helped in the revival at Orange Chapel last year and he preached soul-stirring sermons. We feel that he accomplished much good and we are so glad he is going to be with us again. Let every one begin praying now that many may find Jesus precious to their souls and we all may be drawn closer to God. Another one of our boys has gotten home from overseas, Oscar Thompson. We are glad to say all of our boys have gotten home but one. We hope he will soon be home. Didn't but four of our boys have to go to France: Reid Thompson, Ernest Williams, Oscar Thompson and Clyde Ferguson. Reid and Ernest came home in the spring; all are home now but Clyde, and we are so anxious to have him with us again. Boys, we cannot express how glad we are to have you home again, for you went over and fought for us, and helped win the war, and we will always be proud of you all.

Clark's Chapel, Buncombe Circuit.—It is encouraging to note the increasing attendance in our Sunday school Sunday. The general collection was $5.88, all of which goes to the Children's Home at High Point; $2 was from the Philathea class and $1.00 from the Baraca. These classes are creating great interest among the girls and boys of our Sunday school. We think that much good can be accomplished by the efforts of these classes. We are glad to see our pastor, Bro. Lindley, taking so much interest in these classes. And by his help we hope for good work.

We were delighted to have with us Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett of the Children's Home, and the splendid talk Mr. Garrett gave us about the work of the Children's Home was enjoyed by all present.

The revival meeting started at our church Sunday. Bro. Lindley held services Sunday evening at 8:00 o'clock and gave us a splendid sermon. Rev. J. H. Moton will be with us tonight (Monday) and hold services. He will be the pulpit help during the meeting. We ask the prayers of all for a good meeting.

An enjoyable day was spent by all last Wednesday, when our Sunday school went on a picnic. Everybody took well-filled baskets. And in the afternoon we all had a good time eating watermelons. A very pleasant day was spent by all.

THE CHURCH IS NO EXPERT IN ECONOMIC QUESTIONS.

The relations that exist between employers and employees today are acute. For two decades or more the country has heard much of predatory wealth. Corporations have been called soulless, and laborers have been educated in the belief that they are being robbed by the great organized industries for which they have worked. Labor in many of its phases has been organized and has been constantly increasing its demands for shorter hours and increased pay. With the entrance of this country into the great war this movement was greatly accentuated. Wages have gone soaring and the cost of living has climbed to unprecedented heights. The situation between so-called capital and labor is tense, and the controversy is waxing hotter continually. Shall the church take up the battle-cry of either the capitalist or the laborer? Is the church an expert in determining the merits of such matters? Manifestly it is not. Men whom God has called to the high vocation of the gospel ministry have had no training in such matters. The leadership of the church has had no opportunity to know just where right lies as between the parties of the controversy. It is easy enough to say that labor should have a just wage, and there is nobody to dispute it; but what is a just wage in any particular instance? Neither the church collectively nor any particular leadership of the church can qualify to give expert testimony here. It is perilous to undertake it.

A Concrete Example.—The bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church have recently promulgated an address that undertakes to deal with some of these social questions. We are not referring to it primarily to condemn or approve, but a concrete example is more tangible than abstract argumentation. In discussing this question of wages they say among other things: "An equitable wage shall have right of way over rent, interest and profits." It sounds good, doesn't it? A fine academic statement! But Mr. Frank McDonough, Sr., gets hold of it, and here is what he says about it: "If we understand this conclusion and declaration in precisely the terms of its expression, it means nothing but plain Bolshevism, which is an advanced step in Socialism, to which apparently our bishops would commit us." A fine terminus at which to arrive, is it not? Mr. McDonough is a lawyer prominently connected with business interests and with the church, judging from what is said of him in "Who's Who in American Methodism." He proceeds to analyze the conclusion of the bishops to show that it leads to the destruction of business, the stopping of all wages, and the consequent starvation of the laborer. The trouble is the bishops stepped beyond the field in which they are experts and attempted to give expert conclusions. It is not surprising that they were caught among the thorns. In commenting upon this address the editor of the Central Christian Advocate, while commending the bishops for making it, says: "We consider the pronunciation of the Board of Bishops one of the most dangerously loaded pieces of explosives ever laid at the basis of industrial society." Speaking in general terms with no particular reference to this special deliverance, we cannot follow the learned editor of the Central. It is no business of the church to be laying "dangerous explosives" at the "basis of industrial society."—N. C. Christian Advocate.

—Dr. F. H. Washburn, reporting on the sanitation of a popular hotel, makes several complaints, concluding with this paragraph: "Because of the condition of the kitchen I do not believe that food is served in a sanitary way. This belief is strengthened by the fact that I took supper at the hotel on the evening of July 22 and was served with a glass of ice tea containing a dead fly and with a helping of spoiled fish."

IN MEMORIAM.

Miss Margaret Whitaker Beavans.

In the passing of Miss Margaret Beavans, on July 7, at her home near Enfield, Whitakers Chapel has lost its oldest member, and the Methodist Protestant Church one of its staunchest supporters.

She was a woman of the old school, of rare intellectual type. Modest, but strong for the right, unwavering in principle, and a lover of pleasure through duty well done. Unselfishness was her motto, service, her creed. Her seventy-five years of life were truly spent for others.

She believed the true, plain path of life to be well-doing—not brilliant doing for effect—but doing the every-day commonplace duties, the things sometimes thought small, with a willing, cheerful, mind and brave, loving heart, earnestly.

Her deft fingers for a period of over fifty years so frequently plied the needle for the poor and needy, for friends and loved ones, that she won the name of "Dorcas."

She loved to study her Bible and read her church literature. From its first year she was an enthusiastic subscriber to the Methodist Protestant Herald, often influencing others to take this organ of the church—and if financially unable to do so she frequently subscribed for them.

Since an operation in December she was never so strong, but active and energetic until her final illness.

Although her suffering was at times intense, she bore it bravely—feeling God's will is best—retaining a lively interest in things, thinking of and encouraging others to the last.

Looking back over nearly fourscore years of time her philosophy may be summed up in her words, "Love and friendship are all there is to life."

In the home her cheerful, loving helpfulness will be sadly missed, in the community her encouragement and good deeds are long to be remembered, but "to live in hearts we leave behind is not to die."

She leaves two sisters, Mrs. W. D. Bustin and Mrs. L. T. Whitaker, and one brother, Mr. Walter Beavans, and a host of other relatives and friends to grieve at her departure.

A Loved One.

In Memoriam.

Sarah A. Rightmyer, daughter of Wm. Arden and Nellie Overbough, was born near Catskill, N. Y., and died July 7, 1919, aged about 84 years.

She was married to F. O. Rightmyer Feb. 22, 1858. She was the mother of five children, four of whom survive her. George O., Miss Lizzie A., and Mrs. Nellie O. Squire, of Littleton, N. C., and E. M. Rightmyer of Vaughan, N. C. Mrs. Ada H. Brown, of Vaughan, N. C., preceded her in death.

After she and Mr. Rightmyer were married, they lived in the town of Catskill, near New York until 1870, when they moved from there to a farm three miles south of Vaughan, N. C., where her husband died one year later.

She continued to live on the farm until the children were grown. She went through many hardships in order to raise her children up together.

Like many other mothers who are left with a houseful of children to provide for, often without the real comforts of life, in order that she might help some one else who was more unfortunate than herself, she was liberal and often gave much to others, helping the sick, and feeding the poor in her community, both white and black.

She was one who believed in doing all things well.

She gave to the Master's cause, and what she gave was the best of the kind she had.

After her many years of toil and hardships on the farm, she and the two children, George O. and Miss Lizzie A., came to Littleton, N. C, where they have lived for about twenty years. And it was then that George took her place as provider, and Lizzie as manager of the housekeeping, and they have both performed their duties well.

Although the mother was full of energy and did not want to give up the work in her home, and she continued to help keep up the work in the home until two years and a half ago, when she was confined to her bed until death

Mrs. Rightmyer was one of the sweetest spirited old ladies I ever knew. I often called to see, and have a talk with her. She often spoke of heaven and loved ones gone before The last time I talked with her, she said, "I long to go and be at rest with my husband."

She seemed to be very patient all through her sickness, and bore her affliction with Christian fortitude.

She joined the Dutch Reformed Church when a young girl and her membership was never changed.

She leaves a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss of an affectionate mother and a loving friend.

Her remains were laid to rest to await the resurrection morn in Vaughan cemetery on the 8th of July. The floral tribute was beautiful. The services were conducted by the writer.

May the Lord bless the children and grandchildren and help them to so live that they can say, I long to go and be at rest. Peace be to her ashes.

—Rev. Homer Casto, of Eskota, has resigned the pastorate of the church at that place and will go to Weaverville, N. C., where he is establishing a home for tubercular men. Rev. Mr. Casto has been a pastor in this county seven years and has made many friends while here. He has been Chairman of the Yancey County Red Cross Chapter since its organization and has taken an active part in all war work. He will move to Weaverville the first of June and devote his time to this new work. His many friends here will regret to see him leave the county.—The Eagle.

OUR PROGRESS.

You read that a western ranchman buys an airplane for locating strayed cattle. Another farmer installs a wireless outfit to keep in touch with the Chicago grain market. Italion government is operating 1700 motor plows; they do the word that required 20,000 yoke of oxen a year ago.

Wonderful is the progress of agriculture. Dramatic, in the march of time, the invasion of soil tilling by chemists, bacteriologists, scientists.

Not long since plowing was done with a crooked stick. Even as recently as 100 years ago all plows were made of wood. Grain was cut with a sickle, gathered in the arms, thrashed by flail and winnowed in the wind.

Even Abraham Lincoln probably would have had heart failure at sight of a tractor hauling five plows.—Christian World.

WAR ON WOODCHUCKS.

Gassing woodchucks is the latest method of exterminating them Elbert L. Fargo of New Marlboro, Mass., was bothered by groundhogs. Elmer King motored to Fargo's farm, attached a hose to the exhaust of his automobile engine, ran the pipe far down a woodchuck hole and started the engine, using a liberal mixture of gas. This operation was repeated at all the woodchuck holes found Not a woodchuck has been seen since on the farm.

SPOILING GOOD MEETINGS.

I have noticed that after one hour of concentrated attention on a church service, an audience begins to lose interest, not because the subject is uninteresting, but because the mind cannot concentrate much longer. Let us cut out the unnecessary "preliminaries" and simplify our speaking programs. There is "a time for every matter under heaven," but there is not time for the padding of time which ought to be used, and not wasted in giving speakers a chance to exploit an audience at the expense of the convictions they ought to be getting.—Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, in the Christian Herald.

THE FLAG AND THE CROSS.

Beside the flag must stand the cross
The pitying Christ revealing.
For bitter grief and cruel loss
His love alone has healing.
O Christ, to Thee the world must turn,
To Thee is our appealing:
Thou dost o'er all Thy sadness yearn,
The world to Thee is kneeling.

SOME UGLY LITTLE IMPS.

If you don't believe in fairies, and the elves are not your friends,
And you have no faith in brownies or in gnomes,
Let me give you just a glimpse
Of the ugly little IMPS
That invade today so many happy homes.

IMPoliteness is an IMP whom every child should try to shun,
And older people too, without a doubt.
IMPatience is another
Who will cause you lots of bother
'Less you send him quickly to the right-about.

IMPertinence and IMPudence are naughty little twins,
And, oh, it is astonishing to see
The mischief that they do;
And, my dear, if I were you,
Their comrade I would never, never be.

One little IMP will sit astride a pencil or a pen
Whene'er there is a problem hard in view,
And draw his mouth 'way down,
And whine out, with a frown,
"IMPossible, IMPossible to do!"

IMPrudence and IMPenitence and IMPulse are three more
(Though the latter is not always under ban);
And there are more, no doubt,
Who are hovering about
To get us into mischief if they can.

Of little foxes you have heard, who spoil the lovely vines.
These ugly IMPS are dangerous too, you see.
Let us raise a battle-shout!
We may put them all to rout!
Oh, what a glorious victory that would be!

—Pauline Francis Camp, in St. Nicholas.

THE HOME OF AN ANT COLONY.

Being very much annoyed by the frequent visits of our neighbors—the ants—to my flour bin and sugar jar, one day I determined to sweep away their home and see if they would not find a new location which would be far enough away from my premises to dispense with their visits, says a writer in Our Dumb Animals.

I had never thought that the mounds of loose dirt, which we see on the surface of the ground and call ant hills, were anything extraordinary. When I swept off the loose dirt a small gully or path attracted my attention and I proceeded to examine the ant hill. I found that this little ball or path led to four or five different rooms or holes dug deeper into the earth. As the ants came and went they seemed to know exactly into which room they wished to go.

I dug into one of the rooms, or holes, and found that it was stored full of bread crumbs and small bits of food, which they had carried bit by bit and deposite there. I at once decided that this must be the ant's kitchen.

I dug into another room and found that it was full of little white eggs and baby ants. The other rooms into which I dug were vacant and I suppose that the ants that were away working and carrying food occupied these rooms when they were not working.

When I saw that the ant hill was built so nearly like our own houses (though in a very crude and imaginary way), I felt very much ashamed that I had torn it up and decided that the ants should never be molested by me again but that I would visit them and learn some of their habits.

In tearing down their house several of the ants were killed. I watched and the ants formed in line, two by two. The first two picked up a dead ant and the next two did not, the third two picked up another dead ant and the fourth two did not, and so on until all the dead ants had been picked up. When the first two were tired they laid the dead ant down and the next two picked it up, and in this manner they carried the dead ants to an ant hill some distance away. This hill had evidently been deserted, for there were no ants living there at this time. When all the dead ants had been placed in this hill, the other ants returned to their home..

They began carying little grains of dirt, and as I did not have the time to watch them longer and knew that the rebuilding would be a slow process I went back to my work. In a day or two I went again to visit my neighbor ants and they had heaped the loose dirt high above their house again and from all appearances had rebuilt it in the same manner as I had found it the morning I swept it away.

They work continually, carrying bread crumbs and small bits of food, and as I watch them I often think that if our housekeepers of today had half the thrift of that ant family, their houses would have a neater appearance and their families would be better satisfied with their homes.

The ants are still my neighbors and I have never molested their home again but have found that they visit me less frequently since I have scattered black pepper about the kitchen and used oil rollers on my kitchen cabinet.

Even the smallest creatures may teach us lessons that the great professors fail to instil in our minds. My neighbors—the ants—have taught me a lesson of thrift that I could not have learned from a text-book.

It is hardly necessary to say that each of the above contributions is deeply appreciated. Bro. Reynolds certainly deserves our heartiest thanks as do all the good people from Mill Grove and Midland. "Small but loyal." What about it, Sunday school superintendent, are you giving your school the chance to prove that they are loyal to their church? Have you asked for that special collection? This appeal may be getting old, we know that it is, still we are not hearing from the Sunday schools as we had hoped; they seem to think that we do not need their collection. Some probably think that it is not their duty to help build a church a hundred miles away. I don't know. How do you feel about it, superintendent? We believe you are going to help us yet, but listen! We have our church plans, are ready to buy our brick and lumber, and will be ready to start building in less than thirty days, yet we need about three thousand dollars, we are going to get it! Still we want ONE SPECIAL COLLECTION FROM EACH SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Truly, A. Ridge.

GOD IN THE NATION'S LIFE.

There is a ring in the following verses from the Baltimore Sun which should awaken a cordial responsive echo in every Christian heart. Surely we need their sober devotion.

"Putting God in the nation's life,
Bringing us back to the ideal thing—
There's something fine in a creed like that,
Something true in those words that ring.
Sneer as you will at the 'preacher air,'
Scoff as you will at the Bible tang,
It's putting God in the nation's life
That will keep it clear of the crooked 'gang'.

"We've kept him out of its life too long,
We've been afraid—to our utter shame—
To put him into our speech and song
To stand on the hustings and speak his name.
We've put all things in that life but him,
We've put our selfishness, pride, and show;
It is time for the true ideal to come,
And time for the low desire to go.

"Putting God in the nation's life,
Helping us think of the higher thing—
That is the kind of speech to make,
That is the kind of song to sing.
Upward and forward and let us try,
The new ideal in the forthright way—
Putting God in the nation's life,
And putting Him there in a style to stay."

—The train was just disappearing around an Arkansas bend as the drummer reached the depot.

"Say," he asked the station agent, "how did that train happen to be ahead of time?"

"It wasn't," explained the agent. "That was yesterday's train."

WHY IS THE BIBLE THE BEST SELLER?

In the special Bible number of the World Outlook, March, 1918, appeared the following concise but excellent statement by Dr. Frank Crane in answer to the question, "Why is the Bible the Best Seller?" A careful perusal of the article will strengthen the faith and fire the zeal of God's people for a more careful study of the Bible and for its dissemination throughout the world:

Why is the Bible the best seller? Because it is the most universal in its appeal—it knows no class, race, sect or cult; it is humanity's book.

It is the common reservoir from which all men draw their supplies.

It is the community power house of the spiritual world.

It is read by the white man and the negro, the Oriental and the Occidental, the proletariat and the aristocrat, the college professor and the hod-carrier, the ruddy-cheeked boy in the Sunday school and the pale and wasted old man on his dying bed.

Nobody, no group, no organization has been able to box it or fence it or own it as exclusive property.

Churches are founded upon it, rise, increase, and in time decay; theologies are constructed from its texts, and they flourish and dissolve; it abides as the mountains abide whence flow the inexhaustible springs of human hope.

It is a book that reaches back into gray antiquity, forward to the golden age.

It is like the great tree Yggdrasill, whose roots are in the past and whose branches wave in the sky of the future.

It contains the only program of civilization.

Its principles constitute the only practical basis of commerce; it is the cornerstone of business.

Only by its teachings can we come to the parliament of men, the federation of the world.

It is not the Jew's book, nor the Catholic's, nor the Protestant's, nor the orthodox's nor the heretic's; it is man's book: and wherever a soul is born into the world this book is for him.

It contains the rarest traditions, the noblest poetry, the most convincing preachment; it is the world's greatest literary masterpiece.

It portrays for mankind the Hero of history, rightly called Wonderful.

A myriad of Magdalenes have wept away their shame at his feet: myriad soldiers have lisped his name with their last breath upon the shotted field.

The Bible utters the soul of man. It is mysterious, as he is full of mystery. To its commands he responds with an instinctive "Amen". To its vision of holiness his heart turns, as a flower to the sun. Its appeal to conscience lays upon him a ghostly, compelling hand.

It restrains crime more than all the police. It solves more problems than all the philosophies. It wins more wars than all the armies. It promotes progress more than all the reformers. It is the terror of the oppressor, the liberator of the slave, the solace of the disillusioned, the morning star to them that overcome, and the cup of comfort to them that fall by the way.

It is the pledge and proogram of the millenium.

It is the secret source of the world optimism.

And in that final hour that comes to all men, when the spirit shudders forth into the unknown, this book alone brings the word, like a bell in the fog, of Him who says: "I am the resurrection and the life."

SHE KILLED HER KEEPER

She was a lioness. In spite of her being caught in the jungle where she was born, and caged and carted around a strange country behind iron bars, she had become a mother. Two cubs nestled against her breasts, and the fierce passion of a wild mother's love guarded them from man's approach. It was in Woodbury, N. J., they tried to separate her from them. She flung herself against the door of the compartment they had put between her and her children, seized the keeper by the neck, and crushed him to death. Attacked by a score of attendants with iron bars, tent stakes, hooks and clubs, she finally broke from her cage, escaped into the crowd, till, riddled with bullets, she dropped and died. Why shouln't she have killed her keeper? It was the natural thing for her to do. Generally, after one of these outbreaks of anger when the last strand in the cord of patience snaps, the caged lion or tiger is again beaten and cowed into submission, and the keeper continues to hold his prisoner in restraint through fear. Not often does the strength of the caged captive triumph over the cunning and the cruelty of man.

A friend writes us, "I lack eloquence to express adequately my sympathy as well as admiration for the magnificent maternal courage of that poor lioness, who, though riddled with bullets, still fought to her last gasp for her litttle cubs.

"The pity is our small and defenseless animals have not the size and strength of a lioness when cruelties are practised upon them, in order that they can perform for the laughter of inhuman humanity."

Some day an enlightened public conscience will put an end to the cruelties of the circus and the zoo with their imprisoned victims doomed to that eternal pacing back and forth that sickens the heart of every humane spectator.—Our Dumb Animals.

MAKE THE STALLINGS FIRE A BLESSING.

Lightning destroyed the house of worship built laboriously by our people at Stallings. On some congregations the effect might have been utterly discouraging. The superstitious might have said: "The Lord burned the church—He doesn't want us to worship there." The faint-hearted might have said: "We haven't recovered yet from the effort of building the other church—we can't think of building again now." But our people at Stallings showed themselves superior to that. They said, "We will build again as soon as we can; we will begin to move at once." Pastor Ridge encouraged them, expressing his faith that brethren and sisters elsewhere would help them. Led by this faith, Bro. Ridge has made appeals. There have been gratifying responses and will be others. Note Bro. Ridge's appeal this week. Stallings' loss may become a gain and a blessing to every church in the district. How? By every church's responding to Bro. Ridge's appeal. It won't take much money from each but the effort to help, the assertion of sympathy, will bring a blessing to both the church that helps and to Stallings church. The result will be that Stallings will have a better house of worship than before, the people of Stallings will have more interest in their church, more faith in God, more love for the Methodist Protestant Church, and our people who help Stallings now will have greater joy in seeing her go on to prosperity as a church. Mecklenburg county is good soil for the Methodist Protestant Church. The men of Mecklenburg were the pioneers in the American declaration of independence.

Let us help make Stallings' fire a great blessing. The Lord knew what He was doing when He permitted the lightning to burn that church.

A WONDERFUL APPARITION.

We refer to nature, especially at this season of the year. If you would get an especially good view of the wonderful sight, rise early and go out under the open sky. Then look out around you and above you. Trees, fields, hills, valleys, sky, clouds, stars or sun—all you can see in every direction are parts of the great apparition. Ask yourself whence all this came and what it all means. If this does not awaken in you a feeling of adoration for Him whose wisdom and power produced the stupendous picture about you, then your soul must be dull indeed. The scene is not merely magnificent,—it is wonderful for beauty. It meets an insistent demand of your own spirit. You feel that you have found your other and larger part. You have come into your own. You have entered into the joys of your Creator. You look and rejoice in the wealth of your Heavenly Father. He has placed you in the midst of a marvelous garden surpassing Eden in glory as in grandeur.

ONE OF MR. BRYAN'S STORIES.

W. J. Bryan spoke here recently on Prohibition. To illustrate the readiness of certain lawyers to serve the saloon men in the effort to annul the prohibitory law, he told this story:

Two Irishmen were on the way to London. They came to a bridge where the sign was displayed: "Five Dollars Reward for Rescuing a Drowning Person." As they needed money, they agreed that one of them should fall into the stream below and the other should rescue him and that they would secure and divide the five dollars. The one who was to fall in could not swim, but the other was a good swimmer. The first man proceeded to carry out his part of the contract. When he had been struggling in the water for some time, having gone under twice, he looked up and called for an explanation of the inactivity of his friend. The man on the bridge explained by saying: "I have read another sign which says, 'Ten Dollars Reward for Recovering a Dead Body'."

—The fate of the daylight saving law seems in doubt yet. It has strong advocates and strong opponents. It would seem, however, that it is not a matter for much contention either way. People can set their watches and clocks any way they choose and can adopt any hours they please for beginning and stopping work. It is a great convenience, however, for all to have the same time; that is, have their watches and clocks set to run together. Then we can know our neighbors' time as well as our own and can meet social and business engagements promptly.

"Socializing for the New Order" is an illustrated book of over 100 pages by James Franklin Page, M. A. It contains a resume of 14 youth organizations: Boy Scouts; Camp Fire Girls; Woodcraft Indians; Queens of Avalon, and ten others, enough being given of each to enable a leader to determine which organization is best adapted to his particular locality. An ample discussion is given of character building and of the psychology of boys and girls. Price, 85 cents, postpaid. Order from The Methodist Book Concern, 740 Rush Street, Chicago, Ill.

BETTER MUSIC FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

(A Paper Read by Mrs. W. A. Delbridge, of Hollister, at Halifax Circuit Rally.)

In the average country church you seldom find more than ten or a dozen hymn books. As it is not now customary to "line out" the hymns, it is utterly impossible for a person to sing should he not know the song by heart. There should be more money invested in the purchasing of hymn books.

Begin with the children. It is wonderful how quickly they grasp the words and tune of a hymn. Children naturally love to sing. In most of our Sunday school song books we find the music too classical for the average person to enjoy. Insincere singing should have absolutely no place in our Sunday-school worship today. It has thrived altogether too long at such centers. Put a stop to it! If no other way presents itself withdraw the privilege of singing for a season. Whet the appetite for it by cessation, then bring it back with renewed vitality and skillful leadership. Like most other good things that people do, effective Sunday school music is of value in proportion to the amount of time, thought and heart put into it.

We adults treat song as altogether listless. Hymn No 10, first and last verses—this is all there is to average hymn singing: nothing more than a bad dime in the collection plate, or a vain repetition in prayer—all are alike a mockery of the Most High. God would have the best we are and have and we give Him laziness, indifference and cold heart in the way we sing our hymns.

We are prone to sing the same old hymns in the same old way and that old way is utterly unprofitable. How are boys and girls to realize there is high privilege in singing when superintendents and choristers use hymns as they would burlap or packing material—capital padding for the parts of an ill-arranged service of worship. Give song high status, behind closed doors, with quiet attention, interest, inspiration, and it will yield magnificent results.

Every hymn has its own peculiar message. Seek it. Let the telling be a part of the worship. Study the text absolutely apart from the music. Hold the words up to the light—look through them, and between them and behind them. Note, for instance, that certain hymns carry their messabe in their names, as in "O Love that wilt not let me go," "O Light that followest all my way." Or in the nouns and verbs, as "We've a story to tell to the nation, We've a song to be sung to the nation." Or in the verbs alone, as in "Christian, dost thou see them," "Christian, dost thou feel them," "Christian, dost thou hear them."

Some hymns are invariably sung too fast, as "In the cross of Christ I glory;" "The King of Love my Shepherd is," "Break Thou the Bread of Life."

But most hymns are sung too lazily and slowly, as "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Jesus, Lover of my soul."

Hymns need to be of certain length in order to create their own mood. To sing one or two stanzas is to build nothing to grip no where, to touch young hearts not at all. Hymns will never seem long if sung with expression, with variety, with the play of light and shade, of fast and slow, of soft and loud. Be in dead earnestness in all that is sung. Express fully what is in text, music, history and devotional content.

THE GREATEST WORLD NEED.

So much is being said today about the great world needs, and looking about us, we might ask—What is the greatest world need? Think-about which revolve national and internationtional strife; the tottering and fallen empires, and dethroned rulers, we might think the greatest need may be, for capable leaders, for men, who with brains trained in political affairs, with spirits fired by patriotic zeal; who understand the intricate machinery about whch revolve national and international affairs; such will be able to adjust affairs and bring order out of chaos. Just so far as we think of and look for adjustment and reform through man's self-sufficiency, just so far will we be following a delusion. True—men must be trained for leadership, we must have leaders of nation, state, church and domestic life. But upon man's intellectual, political, or economic efficiency, we dare not trust for satisfactory reforms. The greatest world need, as the greatest thinking men of the age see it today, is summed up in two words—brotherly love. Remembering the 13th chapter of I. Cor. we understand something of the importance of the words, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am become as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. Though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge and though I have faith that I could remove mountains, and have not love I am nothing. Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and I give my body to be burned and have not love, it profiteth mem nothing." This being God's message to man, we can plainly understand what is of first and greatest importance, we cannot fail to see that all things grow into insignificance when compared. You see, we may have all knowledge, and have power to understand all mysteries; may be very wise, and possess all charms of manner and speech; give lavish gifts to the poor and benevolent causes; may even sacrifice our bodies to be burned, and yet, and yet, unless embedded in our hearts we can find the rarest of all gems, godly love—it profiteth nothing. To love means to lift up and help on the struggling ones by the way.

To love means that we must be busy in brightening some one's little day. It is not Christ-like to befriend those who befriend us most. If we do good only to those who do good to us, what thank have we? Even sinners do the same. There must be a great oversweeping tenderness in our hearts for humanity. So powerful that we can think of the people across the sea, even, with heartfelt interest; we must think of humanity as a friend, and not gauge our devotion to our favorites in a small realm. It is quite an easy thing to help, or care for those who come up to our standards. Indeed, we delight to linger in a congenial atmosphere. But the Christian's call is to service. It is a humanity call. And there is instilled in a true Christian's heart, a great new kind of sympathy for the needy ones. They can say to you:

Love, not because one seems worthy,
Nor yet, because one loves you;
But because the greatest need of the world
Is a steadfast heart and true;
And because where sin and sorrow is rife
There the heart's best blood is due.

The churches throughout our fair land are failing along this line. There are wrecks all down the shores of time where there might have been beauty, light and peace, made sublime through Christian love. The blood-drenched battlefields of Europe, the wrecked homes, and starving millions testify to the statement. Too late to avert the catastrophe now; too late to restore life to the slain; too late, too late, and the saddest words—it might have been. But while we still live we may be a star of hope to some struggling life, we may be an inspiration to the lives about us. When we think of human influence ever widening and reaching on throughout eternity, then we will realize something of the stupendous importance and value of life and the opportunities which are ours. Every day as we go forth, we place a moulding hand upon our destiny and leave a deathless impression upon our characters. The kind word, or the bit of tenderness shown to some struggling soul of today, may help to make of him a leader of men of tomorrow. For who can measure God's transforming power? His power is as limitless as the blue of heaven. And when He is allowed to lead a life we dare not measure the attainments of that life. The ones who have on the armor of God need not fear the fiery darts hurled by an enemy's hand. God will protect them, and it will be sent back with redoubled force to the heart that sent it. The greatest need of the church today is not man-made efficiency. Such must fail, for remember, "Whether there be prophecy it shall fail, whether there be tongues they shall cease, whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away." But love never faileth. The church need have no fears of its future when it is clothed with the immaculate robe of brotherly love. "Perfect love casteth out fear."

The suffering nations across the sea are calling, have been calling to us through the years for help, which means life to them.

The call has echoed and re-echoed on and on—men to bring the knowledge of Christ's saving love to the perishing ones. The churches of America failed to respond to the call. Few, so few men were sent. Later a call for men was sent out, as we have witnessed. A call for men, not to carry Christ's gospel messages now, but to destroy the lives that should have been rescued through love.

Money was called for by the billion, men were sent over by millions to stop the onrushing conflagration, originating through the fiery passion of hatred. God gave to us victory at a tremendous cost in money and human life. The cost was a thousandfold greater than would have been necessary to have spread the knowledge of Christ's saving power throughout the world.

You may say it was divinely planned and had to take place. On and on we have been taught, the wages of sin is death, and we know that retribution and death must follow sin. Sin brought on the conditions, and God's punishment had to follow. The greatest need of the present, and the hope of the future will not be realized through the peace treaty, or league of nations. There will have to be a league of human interests; there will have to be a bond of brotherhood, uniting men's hearts to the highest purposes of life. We will have to move out of select circles, abandon petty prejudices, look the world straight in the face and be a friend to man.

PREDICTIONS COME TRUE.

Am I a prophet? Soon after this terrible war commenced I decided that three things ought to be accomplished by it, and ventured to predict that they would be acomplished, my prayers daily running along the lines of my predictions. God kept us waiting four long years, and it looked very dark at times, but my faith, though terribly tried, never relaxed its grasp on Him.

The first thing was that the great, cruel, proud, haughty German nation, which boasted of its invincible power, would be humbled in the dust before God and man. The proverb was continually in mind: "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." And has not God done it far more thoroughly than was anticipated?

The second thing predictted was that the great, tyrannical, conglomerate Austrian Empire, which built itself up by conquering and annexing its weaker neighbors, would be broken into its constituent fragments. The figure in mind was a piece of conglomerate rock broken by a hammer into the parts that compose it. Has not God done this also? There is no longer an Austrian Empire.

The third thing predicted, and greatly desired, was that the land which the Saviour hallowed by His presence would be redeemed from the tyranny of the Turks, and handed over to the care of those who love Jesus of Nazareth. God has done this also; and we cannot believe that the land of Christ will ever go back under the dominion of that cruel nation.

Is not all this the Lord's doing and marvelous in our eyes?—Henry Graham, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in Zion's Herald.

—The non-stop flight across the Atlantic by the British dirigible R-34—the first by a lighter than air craft on record—must be counted one of the great achievements of aeronautics. It has demonstrated the practicability of the use of dirigibles for transatlantic commercial and passenger service.

—The French losses in killed and missing on land and sea, as officially established up to the day of the armistice, Nov. 11, were 1,366,000 men. The losses of the army were 16.2 per cent of the total mobilized force.

"The loss of wealth is loss of dirt,
All sages in all times assert,
The happiest man's without a shirt."
—John Haywood.

A RECIPE FOR HAPPINESS.

Man was created to be happy. He was placed in Eden where his every need was supplied. One of the chief purposes of redemption is to restore to man his lost happiness. God has a plan, or purpose, in every life. To find out that plan and carry it out conscientiously and completely is the whole duty of man. And the carrying out of this plan will always bring happiness. The recipe for happiness, then, is, Let God have His way always, or, Take God's way to be your way.

God's way is the right way. "Just and right is he.' And He has prescribed this way of righteousness for man. A right character and righteous conduct will invariably yield happiness. The good man is happy even in the midst of misfortune and affliction. Nothing can stop the joy that flows from a pure heart and a right life. It is a mistake to think that real happiness can be secured from indulgence in sin, or by conformity to the world. To seek pleasure in sin is a device of the evil one. Sin intoxicates. And the pleasure of intoxication is not worthy to be compared with the joy of righteousness.

God's way is the unselfish way. All creation, universal providence, and the entire scheme of redemption are overwhelming evidence of God's unselfish conduct in the universe in which we live. He made all things for His creatures, and particularly for man. The sun shines and the showers fall for the benefit of breathing life. And it is recorded that the Son of God, "for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." Christ died, and now intercedes, for others. And He found great joy in doing so. But God is more than unselfish. His abounding and unceasing care is a manifestation of His passionate devotion to the fallen race. He could not be otherwise. It is His nature to love even the unlovable and the unloving. For "God is love." And God's eternal blessedness flows from His infinite love. The man who loves deeply and constantly has within him an ever-flowing spring of joy. And the unloving, greedy, grasping man is reaping a harvest of unhappiness every day.

God's way is the helpful way. This is quite a task in a world of sin and of retribution for sin. Sin must get its wages, which is suffering, sorrow, and death. God must be just to, and the Justifier of, the ungodly. He must kill and make alive. This is not double dealing, but the working out and the weaving together of one great plan. There is nothing too hard for the Lord. He makes even the retribution of the wicked to supply a powerful motive to a religious life. "He maketh the wrath of man to praise him." He makes "all things work together for good to them that love God." He is helping everywhere. A blessing is wafted upon every wind. Every bitter has its sweet; and every sorrow uncovers a hidden joy. And how supremely blest the kind Father must be in dispensing so much help to men! And appreciative man, following in the footsteps of the Man of Galilee, finds unending satisfaction in scattering kind gifts and deeds along the way of life.

And God's way is the better way. —— much better than man's ways. Says the prophet Isaiah: "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." God is supremely wise, man is largely ignorant. God is infinitely good, man is inherently and practically sinful. God loves so much, man loves so little. How much better it would be to take God's way instead of ours!

The world is full of misery. Wretched lives, unhappy homes, joyless churches, and troubled nations are the monumental fruits of sin, selfishness, and self-seeking. Individuals, churches, and governments persist in having their ways instead of letting God have His way. Let us banish all this unhappiness. It can be done. Let righteousness, love, and a desire to serve others rule in every heart and life. Pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done." And do your part in bringing a full answer to these petitions.—The Word of Life.

AN EMERGENCY CASE.

"Why has that case no door that can be opened?" asked a boy of the conductor of a train, pointing to a case covered with glass, which contained an axe, a saw and a sledge hammer. "Suppose you should have need for one of those tools on account of some little mishap on your run today!"

"I couldn't get it," replied the conductor.

"Then of what possible use can they be?" asked the puzzled boy.

"Look at that sign," replied the man: " 'In case of emergency, break the glass,' it reads. And that's just the reason the case has no door. If it had one, the chances are that every man in the train crew who thought he had a use for one of those tools, would borrow it, and likely not return it. That is an emergency case, and will stay there undisturbed unless there is a wreck; then we'll need the tools, and we'll find them there without fail."

"It seems to me rather useless to have those fine, shiny tools nailed up waiting for a wreck before they can be used," the lad persisted.

"Just the reverse," smiled the conductor. "Did you see the word 'emergency?' That means when we've had a wreck and the passengers are pinned under the coach, we'll have tools with which to get them out." The man mused a moment while he observed the changing expression on the boy's face.

"Here's something else for you to think about," resumed the conductor. "You ought to have an emergency case, and I'm going to tell you what to put in it: some money you've earned and saved, some plans for the future, a good bit of energy, and a liberal amount of time. Put these things in your emergency case, and be sure to have a glass front, so that you can see what you have there, then keep them till a great big emergency comes. When it does come, smash the glass and use your emergency stores. Lots of people use up everything they have, and when the emergency comes, there is nothing to fall back on."—Selected.

BETTER MUSIC FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

(A Paper Read by Mrs. W. A. Delbridge, of Hollister, at Halifax Circuit Rally.)

In the average country church you seldom find more than ten or a dozen hymn books. As it is not now customary to "line out" the hymns, it is utterly impossible for a person to sing should he not know the song by heart. There should be more money invested in the purchasing of hymn books.

Begin with the children. It is wonderful how quickly they grasp the words and tune of a hymn. Children naturally love to sing. In most of our Sunday school song books we find the music too classical for the average person to enjoy. Insincere singing should have absolutely no place in our Sunday-school worship today. It has thrived altogether too long at such centers. Put a stop to it! If no other way presents itself withdraw the privilege of singing for a season. Whet the appetite for it by cessation, then bring it back with renewed vitality and skillful leadership. Like most other good things that people do, effective Sunday school music is of value in proportion to the amount of time, thought and heart put into it.

We adults treat song as altogether listless. Hymn No 10, first and last verses—this is all there is to average hymn singing: nothing more than a bad dime in the collection plate, or a vain repetition in prayer—all are alike a mockery of the Most High. God would have the best we are and have and we give Him laziness, indifference and cold heart in the way we sing our hymns.

We are prone to sing the same old hymns in the same old way and that old way is utterly unprofitable. How are boys and girls to realize there is high privilege in singing when superintendents and choristers use hymns as they would burlap or packing material—capital padding for the parts of an ill-arranged service of worship. Give song high status, behind closed doors, with quiet attention, interest, inspiration, and it will yield magnificent results.

Every hymn has its own peculiar message. Seek it. Let the telling be a part of the worship. Study the text absolutely apart from the music. Hold the words up to the light -look through them, and between them and behind them. Note, for instance, that certain hymns carry their messabe in their names, as in "O Love that wilt not let me go," "O Light that followest all my way." Or in the nouns and verbs, as "We've a story to tell to the nation, We've a song to be sung to the nation." Or in the verbs alone, as in "Christian, dost thou see them," "Christian, dost thou feel them," "Christian, dost thou hear them."

Some hymns are invariably sung too fast, as "In the cross of Christ I glory;" "The King of Love my Shepherd is," "Break Thou the Bread of Life."

But most hymns are sung too lazily and slowly, as "Onward, Christian Soldiers," "Nearer. My God, to Thee," "Jesus, Lover of my soul."

Hymns need to be of certain length in order to create their own mood. To sing one or two stanzas is to build nothing to grip no where, to touch young hearts not at all. Hymns will never seem long if sung with expression, with variety, with the play of light and shade, of fast and slow, of soft and loud. Be in dead earnestness in all that is sung. Express fully what is in text, music, history and devotional content.

THE GREATEST WORLD NEED.

So much is being said today about the great world needs, and looking about us, we might ask—What is the greatest world need? Think-about which revolve national and internationtional strife; the tottering and fallen empires, and dethroned rulers, we might think the greatest need may be, for capable leaders, for men, who with brains trained in political affairs, with spirits fired by patriotic zeal; who understand the intricate machinery about whch revolve national and international affairs; such will be able to adjust affairs and bring order out of chaos. Just so far as we think of and look for adjustment and reform through man's self-sufficiency, just so far will we be following a delusion. True—men must be trained for leadership, we must have leaders of nation, state, church and domestic life. But upon man's intellectual, political, or economic efficiency, we dare not trust for satisfactory reforms. The greatest world need, as the greatest thinking men of the age see it today, is summed up in two words — brotherly love. Remembering the 13th chapter of I. Cor. we understand something of the importance of the words, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am become as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. Though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge and though I have faith that I could remove mountains, and have not love I am nothing. Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and I give my body to be burned and have not love, it profiteth mem nothing." This being God's message to man, we can plainly understand what is of first and greatest importance, we cannot fail to see that all things grow into insignificance when compared. You see, we may have all knowledge, and have power to understand all mysteries; may be very wise, and possess all charms of manner and speech; give lavish gifts to the poor and benevolent causes; may even sacrifice our bodies to be burned, and yet, and yet, unless embedded in our hearts we can find the rarest of all gems, godly love—it profiteth nothing. To love means to lift up and help on the struggling ones by the way.

To love means that we must be busy in brightening some one's little day. It is not Christ-like to befriend those who befriend us most. If we do good only to those who do good to us, what thank have we? Even sinners do the same. There must be a great oversweeping tenderness in our hearts for humanity. So powerful that we can think of the people across the sea, even, with heartfelt interest; we must think of humanity as a friend, and not gauge our devotion to our favorites in a small realm. It is quite an easy thing to help, or care for those who come up to our standards. Indeed, we delight to linger in a congenial atmosphere. But the Christian's call is to service. It is a humanity call. And there is instilled in a true Christian's heart, a great new kind of sympathy for the needy ones. They can say to you:

Love, not because one seems worthy,
Nor yet, because one loves you:
But because the greatest need of the world
Is a steadfast heart and true;
And because where sin and sorrow is rife
There the heart's best blood is due.

The churches throughout our fair land are failing along this line. There are wrecks all down the shores of time where there might have been beauty, light and peace, made sublime through Christian love. The blood-drenched battlefields of Europe, the wrecked homes, and starving millions testify to the statement. Too late to avert the catastrophe now; too late to restore life to the slain; too late, too late, and the saddest words—it might have been. But while we still live we may be a star of hope to some struggling life, we may be an inspiration to the lives about us. When we think of human influence ever widening and reaching on throughout eternity, then we will realize something of the stupendous importance and value of life and the opportunities which are ours. Every day as we go forth, we place a moulding hand upon our destiny and leave a deathless impression upon our characters. The kind word, or the bit of tenderness shown to some struggling soul of today, may help to make of him a leader of men of tomorrow. For who can measure God's transforming power? His power is as limitless as the blue of heaven. And when He is allowed to lead a life we dare not measure the attainments of that life. The ones who have on the armor of God need not fear the fiery darts hurled by an enemy's hand. God will protect them, and it will be sent back with redoubled force to the heart that sent it. The greatest need of the church today is not man-made efficiency. Such must fail, for remember, "Whether there be prophecy it shall fail, whether there be tongues they shall cease, whether there be knowledge it shall vanish away." But love never faileth. The church need have no fears of its future when it is clothed with the immaculate robe of brotherly love. "Perfect love casteth out fear."

The suffering nations across the sea are calling, have been calling to us through the years for help, which means life to them.

The call has echoed and re-echoed on and on—men to bring the knowledge of Christ's saving love to the perishing ones. The churches of America failed to respond to the call. Few, so few men were sent. Later a call for men was sent out, as we have witnessed. A call for men, not to carry Christ's gospel messages now, but to destroy the lives that should have been rescued through love.

Money was called for by the billion, men were sent over by millions to stop the onrushing conflagration, originating through the fiery passion of hatred. God gave to us victory at a tremendous cost in money and human life. The cost was a thousandfold greater than would have been necessary to have spread the knowledge of Christ's saving power throughout the world.

You may say it was divinely planned and had to take place. On and on we have been taught, the wages of sin is death, and we know that retribution and death must follow sin. Sin brought on the conditions, and God's punishment had to follow. The greatest need of the present, and the hope of the future will not be realized through the peace treaty, or league of nations. There will have to be a league of human interests; there will have to be a bond of brotherhood, uniting men's hearts to the highest purposes of life. We will have to move out of select circles, abandon petty prejudices, look the world straight in the face and be a friend to man.

PREDICTIONS COME TRUE.

Am I a prophet? Soon after this terrible war commenced I decided that three things ought to be accomplished by it, and ventured to predict that they would be acomplished, my prayers daily running along the lines of my predictions. God kept us waiting four long years, and it looked very dark at times, but my faith, though terribly tried, never relaxed its grasp on Him.

The first thing was that the great, cruel, proud, haughty German nation, which boasted of its invincible power, would be humbled in the dust before God and man. The proverb was continually in mind: "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." And has not God done it far more thoroughly than was anticipated?

The second thing predictted was that the great, tyrannical, conglomerate Austrian Empire, which built itself up by conquering and annexing its weaker neighbors, would be broken into its constituent fragments. The figure in mind was a piece of conglomerate rock broken by a hammer into the parts that compose it. Has not God done this also? There is no longer an Austrian Empire.

The third thing predicted, and greatly desired, was that the land which the Saviour hallowed by His presence would be redeemed from the tyranny of the Turks, and handed over to the care of those who love Jesus of Nazareth. God has done this also; and we cannot believe that the land of Christ will ever go back under the dominion of that cruel nation.

Is not all this the Lord's doing and marvelous in our eyes?—Henry Graham, of Brooklyn, N. Y., in Zion's Herald.

—The non-stop flight across the Atlantic by the British dirigible R-34—the first by a lighter than air craft on record—must be counted one of the great achievements of aeronautics. It has demonstrated the practicability of the use of dirigibles for transatlantic commercial and passenger service.

—The French losses in killed and missing on land and sea, as officially established up to the day of the armistice, Nov. 11, were 1,366,000 men. The losses of the army were 16.2 per cent of the total mobilized force.

"The loss of wealth is loss of dirt,
All sages in all times assert,
The happiest man's without a shirt."
—John Haywood.

A RECIPE FOR HAPPINESS.

Man was created to be happy. He was placed in Eden where his every need was supplied. One of the chief purposes of redemption is to restore to man his lost happiness. God has a plan, or purpose, in every life. To find out that plan and carry it out conscientiously and completely is the whole duty of man. And the carrying out of this plan will always bring happiness. The recipe for happiness, then, is, Let God have His way always, or, Take God's way to be your way.

God's way is the right way. "Just and right is he.' And He has prescribed this way of righteousness for man. A right character and righteous conduct will invariably yield happiness. The good man is happy even in the midst of misfortune and affliction. Nothing can stop the joy that flows from a pure heart and a right life. It is a mistake to think that real happiness can be secured from indulgence in sin, or by conformity to the world. To seek pleasure in sin is a device of the evil one. Sin intoxicates. And the pleasure of intoxication is not worthy to be compared with the joy of righteousness.

God's way is the unselfish way. All creation, universal providence, and the entire scheme of redemption are overwhelming evidence of God's unselfish conduct in the universe in which we live. He made all things for His creatures, and particularly for man. The sun shines and the showers fall for the benefit of breathing life. And it is recorded that the Son of God, "for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." Christ died, and now intercedes, for others. And He found great joy in doing so. But God is more than unselfish. His abounding and unceasing care is a manifestation of His passionate devotion to the fallen race. He could not be otherwise. It is His nature to love even the unlovable and the unloving. For "God is love." And God's eternal blessedness flows from His infinite love. The man who loves deeply and constantly has within him an everflowing spring of joy. And the unloving, greedy, grasping man is reaping a harvest of unhappiness every day.

God's way is the helpful way. This is quite a task in a world of sin and of retribution for sin. Sin must get its wages, which is suffering, sorrow, and death. God must be just to, and the Justifier of, the ungodly. He must kill and make alive. This is not double dealing, but the working out and the weaving together of one great plan. There is nothing too hard for the Lord. He makes even the retribution of the wicked to supply a powerful motive to a religious life. "He maketh the wrath of man to praise him." He makes "all things work together for good to them that love God." He is helping everywhere. A blessing is wafted upon every wind. Every bitter has its sweet; and every sorrow uncovers a hidden joy. And how supremely blest the kind Father must be in dispensing so much help to men! And appreciative man, following in the footsteps of the Man of Galilee, finds unending satisfaction in scattering kind gifts and deeds along the way of life.

And God's way is the better way. It is so much better than man's ways. Says the prophet Isaiah: "As the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." God is supremely wise, man is largely ignorant. God is infinitely good, man is inherently and practically sinful. God loves so much, man loves so little. How much better it would be to take God's way instead of ours!

The world is full of misery. Wretched lives, unhappy homes, joyless churches, and troubled nations are the monumental fruits of sin, selfishness, and self-seeking. Individuals, churches, and governments persist in having their ways instead of letting God have His way. Let us banish all this unhappiness. It can be done. Let righteousness, love, and a desire to serve others rule in every heart and life. Pray, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done." And do your part in bringing a full answer to these petitions.—The Word of Life.

AN EMERGENCY CASE.

"Why has that case no door that can be opened?" asked a boy of the conductor of a train, pointing to a case covered with glass, which contained an axe, a saw and a sledge hammer. "Suppose you should have need for one of those tools on account of some little mishap on your run today!"

"I couldn't get it," replied the conductor.

"Then of what possible use can they be?" asked the puzzled boy.

"Look at that sign," replied the man: "'In case of emergency, break the glass,' it reads. And that's just the reason the case has no door. If it had one, the chances are that every man in the train crew who thought he had a use for one of those tools, would borrow it, and likely not return it. That is an emergency case, and will stay there undisturbed unless there is a wreck; then we'll need the tools, and we'll find them there without fail."

"It seems to me rather useless to have those fine, shiny tools nailed up waiting for a wreck before they can be used," the lad persisted.

"Just the reverse," smiled the conductor. "Did you see the word 'emergency?' That means when we've had a wreck and the passengers are pinned under the coach, we'll have tools with which to get them out." The man mused a moment while he observed the changing expression on the boy's face.

"Here's something else for you to think about," resumed the conductor. "You ought to have an emergency case, and I'm going to tell you what to put in it: some money you've earned and saved, some plans for the future, a good bit of energy, and a liberal amount of time. PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

SEVEN GOALS FOR 1919.

A revival in every church.

A family altar in every home.

A Sunday school in every church.

Every school contributing to the Home.

A Church paper in every M. P. family.

Every cent of every claim paid by Nov. 12th.

One superannuate bond to every charge.

THOSE SUPERANNUATE BONDS—

Many of these bonds have already been taken; we want to sell one hundred. We set out to raise $5,000 for this cause and we should not raise a cent less than this amount. Most of our people know that the average preacher has not been able to lay aside enough money to provide his and his family's needs when he is old; this amount we are now trying to raise is intended to increase the permanent fund, the increase on which is to be used for the superannuated preacher and his dependent family.

It is now just four months until conference, so that what is done in this conference year must be done quickly. Therefore, if you have been thinking of this cause, now is the time to rise up and act; if you have not been thinking about it, you have still the opportunity to put into operation plans by which this amount can be secured. Any individual or church or charge can take one or more of these bonds in memory of any deceased loved one or friend, not necessarily a pastor. The bond will be inscribed to them with the name of the contributor upon it, and may be hung up in the church or put among the sacred mementoes of the family. The amount to be raised for each bond is fifty dollars.

BEING A PASTOR—

The name "pastor" is the Latin for a shepherd, one who feeds. The Christian pastor occupies a large place in our present order of life. We could not very well get on without him. What would we do when troubles come, when sorrow comes, when death enters our home and bears our loved ones away? We need his ministering care then as never before. His words of helpfulness and sympathy, his knowledge of God, his hope of heaven, his expectation of the final reunion of separated loved ones and friends; ah, he is our true friend, counsellor and guide.

But what shall we say of that preacher who has not this conception of his calling? That one whose interest in preaching is keen, but who has little or no interest in shepherding his flock? He enjoys making and preaching sermons more than he does practicing them. He delights in making high standards for his flocks, he enjoys making the church as an organized institution run smoothly, but he has little or no interest in visiting his people.

Well, he is missing his chance. He must decrease. The structural character of his sermons may never be less splendid, but he will not speak out of a warm heart long unless he stays close to the suffering of his people. It should be the joy of the preacher to go with his people through the valley of disappointment and of sorrows and of failures; to stand between them and temptation; it will make life richer and sweeter and holier thus to shepherd his flock.

And his flock should follow him. The shepherd's crook should be little used in keeping the flock in the right way. Discipline ought not to be necessary in a well ordered church. Respect for those in authority and reverence for the house of God with all the things of God, should keep the church members walking in love with one another and in the fullest co-operation with their pastor.

MAKING THE REVIVAL COUNT—

The writer has often been impressed with the lack of interest some pastors and their churches apparently had in the results of their revival. In the first place, they seemed not to care whether there were any converts. No definite plans were formed to this end other than preaching and singing. There was no house-to-house visitation in order to secure attendance upon the services. No publicity was given of the services. Things remained normal in so far as the activity of the church was concerned. And it usually happens that such churches never are crowded, nor are their altars filled with penitents.

Then, too, there are those who seem to desire converts and get them in their services, but never seem to care whether these converts join the church or not, It is not an infrequent thing to see people converted and no one ever invites them to join the church except it be done in a public appeal by the pastor. That pastor will usually fail to get members into his church who pursues this plan. If there happen to be other churches that do invite them personally, they will go there, but if not, then it usually happens that the new convert backslides. Our pastors will do well to visit and talk privately with every person making profession of faith in their meetings. In fact most of the ingathering of churches have comes through this kind of personal effort on the part of the pastor and members of the church.

SAXAPAHAW CHARGE, Rev. T. A. Williams, Pastor.

I held the third quarterly conference of this charge at Salem on Saturday and visited Orange Chapel, Concord, and Saxapahaw churches on Sunday.

All the churches were represented at the conference and showed an interest in the work of the church. Some of the churches were not up with pastor's salary, one of them, Orange Chapel, having paid about 25 per cent. of their assessment. I found that a mistake had been made in the report of this charge as to the amount raised on the million dollar drive. Saxapahaw charge has not gone over the top pet; Saxapahaw church and Concord church are over, and Salem is trying to get over; but Orange Chapel is about as contented with its present status as a fat pig in the shade on a hot summer day. They refused to co-operate with the general church on this drive when the pastor and a visiting preacher presented it to them, and unless they have changed their minds, the church as a body is occupying the same position to the general church that a slacker did during the world war. But I am glad to report that there are some of the members who now feel that something ought to be done and I am trusting that they will yet decide to put on the canvass and raise their allotment of $512, for they are fully able.

Pastor Williams has had the experience of living in a new parsonage, building a barn, cutting down trees, grubbing the ground for a garden and getting things generally in shape. He has succeeded well in all these things. There yet remains one thing needful: he must have a well; the one there was not dug deep enough and soon dried up, so the pastor and his family have been forced to carry all the water used quite a distance; but we are expecting them to be relieved of this job soon.

The salary paid on this charge is not adequate for the support of their pastor. Most of the official members see this and they will doubtless raise it two or three hundred dollars by the next year.

Saxapahaw charge is like many other of our rural and semi-rural charges, it is able to do larger things for the kingdom of God and when it does them with the whole heart will experience a deeper joy in their hearts.

SIXTY THOUSAND WAR WAIFS.

The Aftermath of the World War in France.

"A charge to keep I have!" This line of the old revival hymn is the tocsin of the campaign being launched by the Fatherless Children of France for the foster adoption of 60,000 little French war orphans who are refugees in their desolated country, their mothers numb with grief and dazed with fear, and still striving to keep the breath of life in their children.

Mrs. Walter S. Brewster, vice-president of the organization, which since the beginning of the war has co-operated with a similar one in France of which Marshal Joffre is head, recently returned from France, and has just been appointed chairman of a special campaign committee to provide for these 60,000 little war waifs. She has emphasized the great need of this help in a ringing message to those who were her co-workers in the previous drives which have provided American aid for 150.000 of these war-ravaged children.

"We must work harder and faster than ever before, during the next few months!" Mrs. Brewster declares, though before her trip to France she had meant on her return to settle into a quiet adjustment of her life to peace conditions.

What the terrible sacrifices France made for the cause of freedom meant to the homes of the United States, she realized more keenly than ever before during the three months' intimate association with the conditions surrounding the thousands of fatherless families who had been cast into the wilderness of ruin and poverty by the war, mothers and children living in suffering as their sacrifice for the homes in the rear. Mrs. Brewster and all the other members of The Fatherless Children of France are serving in the spirit of "A charge to keep have I", while asking for the willingness of the loyal men and women of America to become foster parents of these fatherless children through the contribution of only ten cents a day to add to the tiny pension of the same amount allowed by the French government for each war orphan.

The children are scheduled, name and address, and name of the mother, at the organization headquarters, and for a pledge of $36.50 for one year, which enables a child to remain with what is left of its own people in France, foster parent may choose a child. Each foster parent is expected to write occasionally to the mother of the child, or to the child. The children want these letters, for they mean a friend in America. And grateful letters come back from France with clock-like regularity.

"We must work harder and faster!" repeats Mrs. Brewster—she has seen children perishing, "These little ones must not be made a sacrifice to freedom, but saved for the future of the world. We need donations—even very small ones—as well as 'adoptions'."

The campaign is on, and all information will be given by Mrs. Walter S. Brewster, Room 632, 410 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago.

ANNA HOWARD SHAW.

In the death of Anna Howard Shaw the women of America have lost a wise and brilliant leader, and the progressive forces of civilization are one heroic soul poorer today. Semiramis and Victoria had their visible thrones and their jeweled crowns. But democracy finds her kings and queens in the common realm of manhood and womanhood, crowning them with the riches of their own genius and enthroning them in the hearts of the people in the ratio of their service to mankind. Anna Howard Shaw served her generation with the moral enthusiasm of a martyr: and while the times were ultimately favorable to the cause she espoused, and while other great leaders shared the glory of her final victory, yet she would have fought the battle alone against all the world, on her own initiative; and if the cause had demanded the supreme sacrifice, she would have gone with jubilant feet to a martyr's death.

Born at New-Castle-on-Tyne, and coming to America with her parents in early childhood, Anna Howard Shaw was a full-rounded Anglo-Saxon, uniting in herself the genuine spirit of both hemispheres; possessing at once the dogged persistence of the Briton and the unfailing optimism of the true American. Her sense of humor,, the saving quality of every fighter in a good cause, became in the career of this noble reformer still another kind of genius; and she laughed off many a burden which would have broken other hearts. This gift divine always came to the aid of her patience, her tolerance and her generosity, in every crisis of her embattled life, and even as it aided her in winning the victory, it surely sweetened her triumph at the last, and added not a little to the sunset glory of her great life.

The crowning gift of Dr. Shaw, the one talent which was clearly reflected in all others, was her straightforward common sense. But hers was a common sense endowed with vision, and with a boundless hope for humanity. In her logical grip on the great questions of the age, as well as in her rugged readiness at any moment for the hardest kind of a battle in a worthy cause, gave a masculine tinge to her genius. And yet she was the soul of gentleness; and all womanly graces were angel-big in her every thought and action. She fulfilled in herself something of Tennyson's prophecy of a progressive kinship between the souls of men and women:

"And in the long years liker must they grow;
The man be more of woman, she of man;
He gain in sweetness and in moral height,
Nor lose the wrestling thews that throw the world;
She, mental breadth, nor fail in childward care:
Till at the last she set herslf to man
Like perfect music unto noble words."

In the Beekman Avenue Methodist Protestant Church, at Tarry-town-on-the-Hudson, October 12, 1880, Anna Howard Shaw was ordained to the gospel ministry. The present editor of The Methodist Recorder was then pastor of the Tarrytown Church, and he rejoices in the part he was permitted of the Lord to take in making possible this happy event. Dr. Shaw in her autobiography has given us all too much credit for her final victory in the long struggle for recognition. It is indeed true that we opened wide the doors of the local church; and, with the eager help of the progressive laymen of the congregation, we secured the necessary recommendations; and we also had the pleasure of bringing forward the argument of the hour. But in all this the pastor was simply a co-worker with other progressives; with such men as Rev. Dr Mark Staple and Rev. Dr. Charles Edgar Wilbur, both of whom, together with other leaders of the ministry and the laity, contributed in a most essential way to the final result. It may be of interest to our readers to know that on this occasion there was no extended debate on the abtract question of the ordination of women. In our support of Anna Howard Shaw we emphasized, not the universal rule of the church up to that hour, and not our desire to reverse these precedents of the ages, but rather we emphasized the notable exception which we truly believed it right to make. Our argument was something like this: if a candidate for the ministry appears before this conference, and gives evidence of having "all the gifts, graces and acquirements" essential to the office of an elder; if this candidate possesses natural talents for the ministry which, taken together constitute a perfect genius for the ministry; and if, as a training for these natural powers, the candidate has received the most thorough education, at once in the field of science and in the field of theology; and if there is superadded to these gifts and acquirements a self-consecration which is so vital and sincere as to become a living sacrifice—given such a candidate, shall the ordination be refused simply because this candidate is a woman? We encamped around this one argument and sought no other; and the ordination followed on the day after the decisive vote was taken. We clearly foresaw that our candidate would fully justify what we did that day at Tarry-town-on-the-Hudson. Anna Howard Shaw not only justified the day of her ordination, but she even glorified it. Her whole life, from her earliest childhood in the woods of Michigan to the end of her great career, was one long battle for the right. She finally resigned her pastoral office to devote herself entirely to the achievement of the equal rights of women; and her last triumphal years, though accompanied with many personal afflictions, must have been very comforting to her ardent soul, as she approached, by swift stages, the final goal of the Olympic race. And so great and elemental was her sense of justice that, if she had lived in some land of the Amazons, where women alone held the scepter or the ballot, Anna Howard Shaw would have fought there for the rights of men.—Methodist Recorder.

For Overseas Experiences.

Nearly every lad who went overseas has an interesting story to tell—pathetic, amusing, or tender—of some child in France. Perhaps it is little Pierre who crept in to eat with him at mess; or Marcelline whom he found, white-faced and terror-stricken, in the cellar of a ruined house; or Henri, whose father was killed in the trenches and whose mother was taken to Germany by the enemy; or it may have been Aimee who insisted upon being adopted by the "Americaine." At any rate, there is always a story and a child.

For such stories as these, or simple ones telling of the friendship between the French child and the American soldier, 178 cash prizes are offered, Soldiers, sailors, marines, men and women who were in France during the war in any capacity, or their families, sweethearts or friends, are invited to compete for these prizes. Literary ability is not required. Anybody who can write a letter home can write well enough for the purpose of this contest. Conditions of the contest can be secured by writing "The Fatherless Children of France, Room 634, 410 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago." There is no expense attached to entering the contest, which is open to anybody who wants to compete. Mothers, sisters, sweethearts and wives should turn over their letters from Bill or Tom or Jack which they have been so proudly treasuring, and hunt up the references to the little French children. Just some one little incident told simply in a letter may win a prize!

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

At the call of the president, Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, an executive committee committee meeting of the North Carolina Branch of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was held at the home of Mrs. C. W. Bates. At this meeting many matters of interest to the work were discussed, some of which will come out soon in leaflet form and be sent to every auxiliary. At the board meeting at Pittsburgh in May the North Carolina branch was assessed an additional $50 in order to help "go over the top." This $50 is to be apportioned to the various auxiliaries in our branch. So plan at your next meeting to meet your part of the fifty dollars.

Keep in mind the thankoffering service and the missionary share plan which will be used again. At the board meeting the missionary share plan sheets were absent.

And finally, dear women of the North Carolina Branch, when plans and leaflets and anything of interest is sent to your auxiliary, please take it to your auxiliary meeting and pass it around. The committee may plan, but unless you each one help, our planning will be almost a failure.

"It ain't the gun and armament
Nor funds that they can pay,
But the close co-operation
That makes them win the day.
It ain't the individual nor
The army as a whole,
But the everlasting team work
Of every blooming soul."

OUR WORK.

We deal today with the same human nature, the same diversified needs, and we have the same commission and agencies as those who extended the kingdom in apostolic times. But wonderful progress has been made in all departments of life and labor, and the best we have must be made to render the largest and farthest-reaching service to uplift mankind.

There can be, however, no change or modification in the essentials which made possible the expansion of the church in former times, for the Gospel in its fullness and power must remain preeminent.

Enormous sacrifices were made for the liberties of the world, and the end was secured by unparalleled bloodshed.

To the church has been assigned the peaceful conquest of the world, and just as new strategy, larger armies and armaments and new inventions were utilized to secure victory in the world war, so must the church use to make more effective and successful its work among the peoples of different attainments in civilization, and increase its working powers through the addition of missionaries and money.

The church never faced such times as these, for the imperative demand is that the foundations, not merely the superstructure, of democracy be accepted and incorporated in the lives and affairs of all peoples of earth, to insure abiding world peace and the progress of the nations.

But those foundations are Christian, there is but one way for them to be laid, and only one authorized, sufficiently empowered agency to accomplish it—the church.

The church has sent its heralds to proclaim deliverance from the shackles of ignorance, sin and superstition through Him who sets men free indeed. But it has been only a picket line facing millions, and while great victories have been won, the true mission of the church must be fully realized, and large reinforcements sent out in this crucial hour of the world's history.

Preachers, in increasing number, through the dark lands must go living and proclaiming the glad tidings, organizing churches, and establishing Christian communities.

There must be Christian education to lay aright the foundations, and the church can render invaluable service to tribes and nations by its missionaries, reducing their language to writing, preparing books, etc., and establishing schools that will lay the basis for largest development.

It is impossible to estimte the value and work of mission schools in pagan lands, where ignorance is dense, home life is crude, and where a mighty transformation is needed and must come from without. In all such schools the spirit, example, and teaching of Christian men and women are uplifting to the thought and life of thousands.

Then medical missions are a great necessity in lands like China and India, where our Board now operates, and the most insistent needs in those fields are for doctors, nurses, dispensaries, hospitals, etc.

There is scarcely a field in the world where a life would count for more in real service to mankind than in either of those lands.

Medical missions have added lustre to the great achievements of the church, whose self-sacrificing laborers have gone forth to distant lands to bring healing to the bodies, and salvation's joy to the souls of those He would have us help and save. We can only be true to Him as we do His will in extending His kingdom. Fred C. Klein.

AN AFRICAN CUSTOM.

One morning I heard the baby crying as if his little heart would break. I went to see what could be the matter with him in front of her house. And do you think she had a nice little bath-tub and scented soap and warm water? Oh, no. She was holding the little baby on his little feet, and was pouring cold wateer over him by the handfuls. The poor baby was screaming at the top of his lungs, and fighting against the cold water as hard as he could; but the mother paid no attention to that, and went on with the washing. Did she have nice, warm flannel cloths to dry him with, and others with which to wrap him? No; but when the washing was over, she lifted the baby up and with her mouth blew vigorously into his eyes and ears to drive out the water, and that was all the drying he got. Then she proceeded to dress him. The dress consisted of a string of beads around his waist, one around his neck, and one around each one of his wrists and ankles. The air and the sun did the rest of the drying. —The Lutheran.

THE CHOICE OF HYMNS.

The influence and power of our hymnology is incalcuable. Compilers of our church hymnals have an unenviable task, since it is quite impossible to include all the worthy selections and, of course, equally impossible to exclude those that, in the judgment of some, should have no place. Perhaps the average hymnal is as remarkable for the hymns it does not contain as those that it does. Not every compiler would elect to include "The Old-Time Religion," and yet at least two of our presidents counted this old-time song as a favorite, and while McKinley "liked it," it was asserted that "Garfield liked it immensely."—Western Christian Advocate.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JULY 27.

Confessing and Denying Christ.

(Rom. 10:9; Luke 22:55-61.)

The question, How do men confess and how deny Christ? is a practical one. It is a question not only for those who are seeking Christ or who have never known Him, but for those who profess to be His followers. Let us consider the former class first. How does the sinner confess or deny Christ?

The question is answered by the first reference given us: "If thou shalt confess with the mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." But confession is only a superstructure built upon a foundation. That foundation is repentance and conversion; a sorrow for sin and a turning away from it. Here is where much of our modern evangelism is at fault: it seeks to erect the superstructure without first laying the foundation. Lips that have been purged from sin only can confess. Saul sought to confess through the offering of sacrifice; the prophet met him with the stinging rebuke, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams." The tongue that seeks to praise without having first been pardoned will give a most uncertain sound. Certainly the world will not accept the testiony of lips whose confession does not accord with its profession.

On the other hand, the sinner denies Christ when he refuses to believe on Him. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Note that there is a vast difference btween believing "on" and believing "in" Christ. Belief "in" Christ is intellectual; belief "on" is experimental. One accepts Him as a historic personage, the other receives Him as a personal Savior. Peter says of the Jews, "They denied the Holy One and the Just," and they did it when they refused to let Him come into their lives.

But we are concerned most in this discussion with the question, How does the Christian deny or confess Christ? The reference given is to the incident of Peter's denial. From that we may get lessons.

1. Peter denied Christ because he was overconfident. I give him credit for sincerely believing that his loyalty to Christ could stand any test that it might be put to. The spirit was willing but the flesh was weak. We ought to deny ourselves the things that would tempt us to deny the Christ. The best way to prove our loyalty is to stay away from the place of temptation.

2. Peter denied Christ because he sought his own comfort. The warm fire is a dangerous place for the Christian when that fire is in the presence of the enemies of Christ. Sodom was a poor place for Lot. We must give Peter credit for wanting to be near Christ; but if he followed John to the fire, he ought to have gone on with him farther —out of reach of that temptation.

3. Peter denied him because he lacked the courage to confess. He was a man afraid of a maid. I do not know what would have happened to Peter had he said in answer to the maid's question, "Yes, I am a follower of the Nazarene." But it is very evident that John was present through all the trial of Jesus, and was not molested. I think the same would have been true of Peter. His denial was all the more culpable because unnecessary. And I suspect that is true of us today. The world admires the Christian who is not afraid to speak for His Lord, and has a supreme contempt for him who is afraid to own his Christ.

And how do we confess Christ? Certainly by our words. The mouth that confesses has no place for idle gossip, for vulgar speech, for sharp words. He who desires to honor his Lord will be constantly praying, Let the words of my mouth be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer.

And by our lives as well. The peril of this day is inconsistent living. With the line between the church and the world so loosely dawn, it behooves us to walk circumspectly, and to let men know by our conduct on whose side we stand.

WHAT IS IT TO BE FREE?

Not merely to have one's hands and feet unbound, and the doors unlocked, and no guard in front. Not to have no "boss" over one and no rules to obey. The man who hates is not free. The man who fears is a slave. The man controlled by petty prejudices is worse than manacled with steel. The man whose life is shaped by a false theory, or a narrow view, or an erroneous doctrine, is like one whose ship is guided by a compass whose needle is in error; he is not free. The open mind, the sincere heart, the clean conscience, that Jesus gives are the only true freedom. The boy who kicks up his heels as soon as school is out is not free if he goes home with some unconfessed wrong on his mind, some thing he is afraid the teacher will tell to his father.—Rev. John F. Cowan, D. D.

—The variety of "tangle-tonge" called "Spoonerism" originated, probably, with the earliest attempts at human speech, but though so well known, it is not yet defined in the dictionaries. The association of it with Professor Spooner is recalled by a newspaper paragraph which says that in a sermon to Oxford undergraduates he is reported to have said: "Brethren, have you never felt within your heart a half-warmed fish to be good?" His little son came by the failing honestly, for he is credited with saying at breakfast, "Mamma, please pass the parlor maid." Another case mentioned is that of the young curate who, basing his first sermon on the text, "The cock crew and Peter went out and wept bitterly," said solemnly, "The cock wept and Peter went out and crew bitterly—no, I mean Peter crew and the cock went out and wept bitterly."—Outlook.

—A traveler asked a boy standing by a well to give him a drink of water. He complied very promptly and when the gentleman had satisfied his thirst the boy remarked innocently, "Pop got a rat outa this well yistiddy and it was bald headed."

—A little boy who was not treated as well as he thought he deserved to be ran away. After going about twenty miles he returned home, expressing his surprise at the bigness of the world. "If the world is as big every way as it is the way I went, it's a whopper."

He said he had gone so far that he found a place where the people called "sop" "gravy."

THE FIRST CANDLESTICK.

The first candlestick was a boy. He sat in the corner of a Scotch kitchen holding a piece of fir candle in his hand, from time to time cutting and trimming it to make it burn brightly.

The fir candle was a length of wood cut off a kind of fir tree, which is found embedded in the peat. This kind of candle is still used in some parts of Scotland.

It usually fell to the lot of the "herd-laddies" to act the part of candlestick, but should a beggar ask for a night's lodging, he was expected to relieve the "herd-laddie" of his duty. A candlestick is still called, in Aberdeenshire, a "puir man"; or poor man."—Selected.

POPULAR CHAPTERS OF THE BIBLE.

What is the most popular chapter in the Bible? Of course, answers would be different, as there are many tastes.

Recently, at the Georgia Normal and Industrial College, President Parks asked the members of the Freshman class to indicate in writing what they considered to be the five most popular chapters of the Bible. There were 345 members. Each one voted for five chapters, and here is the result:

327 votes for the 15th chapter of 1 Cor.
217 votes for the 14th chapter of St. John.
178 votes for the 23rd Psalm.
138 votes for the 1st Psalm.
77 votes for the 5th chapter of Matthew.

Most Popular Proverb. And what is the most popular proverb? When the Freshman class of the Georgia Normal and Industrial College voted for the five most popular Proverbs, as the votes indicate:

223 members of the class voted for Prov. 15:1 (A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger.)

225 members of the class voted for Prov. 22:1. (A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches).—Wesleyan Advocate.

Reidsville Christian Endeavor.—Our new officers that were elected at the previous meeting are as follows: President—Mr. J. W. Dixon; vice president, Mrs. W. E McCollum; recording secretary, Miss Florence Williams; corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. A. Jones; press reporter, Miss Madge Thompson; treasurer, Miss Lola McCollum.

We held our business meeting with Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Jones on Thursday night, July 3rd.

The following committees were appointed — prayer meeting, look-out, information, missionary, social and visitation.

Other matters of importance were discussed. After the business transactions Mrs. Jones served delicious refreshments. We adjourned to meet at the church on Sunday evening for our regular prayer meeting.

FIRST KHAKI UNIFORM.

Far up in India not so many years ago, a body of English troops grew weary of exposing themselves in white uniforms to the fire of the enemy snipers. So they adopted nature's good old law of protective coloring and daubed their uniforms with mud from the banks of one of the sluggish streams.

Those that direct the affairs of the army in India heard of this camouflage and proceeded to make some interesting experiment. What they discovered evidently pleased them, for eventually a uniform of this color as a standard was adopted for all troops in active service in the East. Khaki, the name given the color of the new uniforms, is the Hindu word for muddy. While the original khaki was cotton, the soldiers campaigning in France wear wool of this muddy gray-brown color.

The mud-colored tinge is not obtained by immersing the piece of woven material in a bath of khaki dye and then cutting up the fabric to be made into uniforms.

The regulation color is purely and simply the result of the skillful blending of wools. No fewer than eight distinct colors enter into the preparation of our khaki, some of which, when seen individually, have a very vivid tinge, such as a brilliant red and a bright orange. It is the cunning combination of these colors which produces the ultimate mud tone.—Western Journal.

SINGING FIXED HIM.

Benny was just seven. He had been playing where men were digging for a cellar and had fallen into the hole. Now, he was in a big hospital and the doctor was finding his hurts.

"I wish I could sing; I think I'd feel weller," said Bennie.

"All right, laddie, you can sing," said the doctor, "if you will sing something nice."

Bennie didn't wait a minute. His clear voice rang out through the room and into the other wards. He was singing, "Nearer, my God, to Thee." The nurses and doctors came in softly till a hundred folks were listening.

"Well, little man," said the doctor to Bennie, "I guess you are all right. I can't find any broken bones."

"I guess it was the singing that fixed me," answered Bennie. "I always sing when I feel bad."

Let us be ready to sing our songs of Jesus. It is the way we can show our love for him.—Exchange.

THE KAISER'S TRIAL.

Lloyd George's statement in the House of Commons last week that the former German Emperor would soon be tried for his crime against civilization, opens another chapter in that drama through which the world has been passing since that fateful day in August, 1914, when the dogs of war were unleashed. Future generations will look back to these years and events with the awe that attends the study of the great turning-points in history. William Hohenzollern is to be tried in London by a tribunal of five judges representing Great Britain, the United States, France, Italy, and Japan. Lord Sumner, lord of appeal in ordinary, is to preside. Chief Justice Edward Douglass White is expected to be the representative of the United States. Dutch newspapers have been discussing the proposed trial, the ground being generally taken that Holland cannot surrender the former Kaiser, as his crime, "a supreme offense against international morality and the sanctity of treaties," does not come under extradition treaties. It is to be presumed, however, that this phase of the question has not been ignored by the Allies. It is expected the trial will take place in the fall. Attempts made by Bethman-Hollweg, former German chancellor, and Hindenburg, the chief of staff, to assume responsibility for the war and its conduct, will be futile. They were simply instruments of the Emperor, who ruled "by divine right," which carries with it the corollary that "the King can do no wrong"—a doctrine abolished in England with the execution of Charles I and in France with that of Louis XVI. The world will now get rid of it. The report is that not execution but banishment to some lonely island will be the fate of William Hohenzollern. The statement concerning the trial of the former Kaiser was made by Lloyd George in the course of an address in which he made a plea for the treaty of peace, which he described as "the most momentous document to which the British Empire ever affixed its seal."—Zion's Herald.

—Bro. Dixon was with Bro. Ashburn at Gray's Chapel last Sunday and spoke on the million dollar campaign. Bro. Ashburn, when asked how he was getting on with that, replied: "We haven't reached a million yet." But Randolph charge may surprise us, as others have.

—Pres. Andrews and Rev. T. M. Johnson are in Pittsburgh to attend a meeting of the Executive Committee. They will tarry only a day or so.

—Bro. Bates and family have gone to Asheville for ten days. Bro. Johnson is to preach for us next Sunday.

NOTICE, ENDEAVORERS.

The Burlington Methodist Protestant Christian Endeavor society will be glad to assist any church within easy reach of Burlington in organizing a Christian Endeavor society. The society has some of the best and most experienced members in Christian Endeavor work who will be very glad to help any church organize a society.

If there are any churches in Alamance or adjoining counties that wish to organize a society, let the pastor, or some one interested, communicate with Ferry Lee Gibbs, president, 700 E. Morehead St., Burlington, N. C.

—Lloyd George as prime minister will be called upon to nominate very soon four new bishops of the Anglican Church, the sees of Chester, Oxford, Truro, and Lincoln being vacant. Much interest attaches to this in the fact that the premier is a Baptist. The Christian World, commenting upon the incident, says, "There will be not a little excitement in Anglican circles as to the choice that will be made."

A SERMON TO PREACHERS.

I am greatly disappointed with some preachers of today,
With their logic and their ethics; their aristocratic way;
With their science and their theories, and their new Theology,
Full of everything but Jesus and His love for you and me.
There is plenty in the Bible for the preachers of today,
If they will but search its pages and for help divine would pray;
For God's World is everlasting, and it will never grow old—
'Tis, indeed, a priceless treasure—far more precious e'en than gold.
What we want is consecration in a good true man of God,
With a Bible education, and a love for God's dear Word;
Who can lead us and direct us to the truth, the life, the way,
Which brings peace to soul and body through the burdens of the day.
If the preachers in our churches would preach Jesus crucified,
How through love for us He suffered, and through love for us, He died,
Then our pews would not be empty, as so many are today,
But be filled to overflowing, in a pentecostal way.
What we need is just plain Gospel, in the good old-fashioned way,
Place of Emerson or Shakespeare, or some topic of the day.
What care we for all their sayings, or their teachings true and tried?
We want just the dear old story of the Saviour crucified.
That alone can make men better, that alone can make men free—
Just the precious, dear old story, of God's love for you and me;
That is what the people's wanting, there is where the crowd will be;
Where they hear the same old story, which they heard at mother's knee.

Luetta Cummins, in The Christian Herald.

—West End congregation have given their pastor a vacation. We were glad to see some of them in Grace last Sunday night.

STATEMENTS HARD TO BELIEVE.

The average age at which smoking is begun today is eleven years. Seventy years ago it was at the age of twenty-two.

We smoke each day in this country 3.788 miles of cigarettes, or enough to reach from Boston to San Francisco and then back to Great Salt Lake.

Four out of five adolescent and adult men use tobacco in some form. The habit is easy to form, hard to break.

Our annual tobacco bill is said to be twice that which we give for both education and the church.

A former head of the American Tobacco Company is said to have left his grandson the sum of $50,000 on condition that he abstain from the use of tobacco and drink until thirty years of age. Why these conditions?

Major Webb, of Colorado Springs, a member of the War Tuberculosis Board, reporting on 3,288 cases in which there was lung trouble, found that of those who did not use tobacco 73 per cent. were free from bronchial trouble; of occasional users, 17 per cent.; of moderate users, not more than two cigars a day, 14 per cent.; but that of heavy smokers, 91 per cent suffered from this ailment, or in other words, 9 per cent. were free, or eight times as many heavy smokers were affected as were those who did not smoke.

Cancer of the mouth or throat is practically unknown among women, while among men it has in creased in proportion to the use of the pipe, cigar and cigarette.—Presbyterian Board of Temperance.

COMMUNTY SERVICE.

By T. A. Wigginton, D.D.

The recent experiences through which we have passed have served to emphasize anew the importance of making any social service at least community-wide. In the great military camps it was deemed impracticable to attempt as many programs as there were different types of men and shades of thought. The camp was considered as one great community, and the effort was made to put on a program of instruction and recreation which was comprehensive enough to meet the needs of the entire camp. In the communities adjacent to these camps organizations were effected which sought to bring the resources of the community to bear at the points of greatest need, and in the various drives for funds, the community was made the unit of organization.

All these things have naturally served to quicken the interest in community service. Before the war there were numerous individuals who had caught a vision of social service the program of which would seek to embrace the needs of the entire community, thus securing united community action; and there were cases here and there in which such programs had been put on, with varying degrees of success. The experiences of the past few years have quickened the interest and enlisted the sympathies of a greatly increased number of people in this form of service, and various organizations are seeking to capitalize this quickened interest for the perpetuation and improvement of the plans and methods which served us so admirably in the days of crisis.

This is as it should be. It would be a tragedy for us to ignore, or forget, any of the great lessons of the war, especially any of those which have to do with social efficiency. It should be said, however, that there will have to be painstaking investigation and careful instruction before we shall be able to realize all that we have dreamed of community service. It is not impossible that some costly mistakes may be made before we have brought this form of social service to the highest efficiency. Even so, it is better to make mistakes in the effort at worthy accomplishment than to make no effort at all.

Of the things which seem already to be quite clear one of the first is, that true community service must seek to serve the community. To do this it must seek to understand, in order that it may meet the real needs of the community. There are not lacking evidences that there are some persons and organizations whose idea of community service is to give a community what it wants rather than to awaken it to a sense of its need and to assist in meeting the same. Communities need wholesome recreation, but they need much more to be brought to an understanding of the real needs of the community and to a knowledge of the ways in which those needs are to be met. They do not need a sedative to make them content to let well-enough alone, but a stimulus which will fill them with a noble discontent.

Another thing which would appear to be quite clear is that any adequate program of community service must secure the co-operation of all those agencies which seek the welfare of the community. This will require great skill and patience in making nice adjustments, but it is a price which will have to be paid. It has been more than hinted that some organizations would avoid these difficulties by ignoring them, but to proceed in that way would be to invite failure, or a form of success which would be worse than failure. No successful community service can ignore the industrial, social or religious interests of a community, or the agencies through which it is sought to advance these interests.

It is very gratifying that the churches are showing a commendable interest in this form of social service and a readiness to be instructed more perfectly in the ways thereof. That this interest shall be increased, and that they shall consider with open mind any proposition looking to the increased efficiency of such service is greatly to be desired. They should be warned, however, that there is need for them to give careful consideration to the program of any movement, or organization, seeking their co-operation; that they should beware of those which have no program; that they should reject, as inadequate any program which offers nothing more than recrea-

HELP MOTHER NOW.

Said Peter Paul Augustus: "When I am grown a man,
I'll help my dearest mother the very best I can.
I'll wait upon her kindly; she'll lean upon my arm;
I'll lead her very gently, and keep her safe from harm.

"But while I think upon it, the time will be so long,"
Said Peter Paul Augustus, "before I'm tall and strong.
I think it would be wiser to be her pride and joy
By helping her my very best while I'm a little boy."

THE PRINCESS FANNETTE.

Fanny was a very unhappy little girl. She couldn't have beautiful clothes, and ride in a wonderful carriage like the little Princess did. That was the reason Fanny was so unhappy. She even hated her name, and made up her mind that she would change it some day. Sometimes she wondered what kind of food the Princess ate. She knew it must consist of lovely, pink-frosted cakes and ice cream.

One day, when she was longing most to be just like the Princess, she suddenly found that she was walking in the palace grounds. She felt a little bit afraid at first, but there was a lady with her, so she knew she was safe. It was a very, very beautiful garden, and she wanted to pick some flowers, but the lady said:

"No, no, Princess, you are forbidden to touch the roses. You might prick your fingers."

So she was a Princes. Oh, how beautiful! Still, it would be nicer if she could pick just one rose.

A beautiful butterfly was winging its way from flower to flower. The little girl darted after it, but the lady called out:

"Oh, oh, you mustn't run like that. It is very undignified in a Princess. Come, let me take you to the palace."

The palace! She was really going to the palace! On the way she passed the gardener, and smiled very sweetly to him. The lady Scolded her about it, but she couldn't understand just what she had done that was wrong.

In the great hallway, another lady met her, and bowed before her. How funny. No one had ever bowed like that to her before.

"I have orders from the Queen Mother to dress you for a ride."

Dress her! Why, she had been able to dress herself for years. Anyway, she was already dressed. What a bother to do it all over again.

"The Princess Fannette will please lead the way to her boudoir."

Of all things! What was a boudoir? But somehow she seemed to know the way. At last she was gowned in a wonderful blue velvet robe. It was quite long and heavily trimmed.

As she stood at the top of the stairs, and looked at the shiny banister, she thought what fun it would be to slide down it. She got ready to do it, but the two ladies threw up their hands in horror, and she knew that she had made a mistake. Couldn't a Princess do anything?

The carriage was waiting, and she saw her mother sitting in it. She ran delightedly to meet her, but her mother frowned as she said:

"There, there, you will wrinkle me all up. You must learn to control your emotions."

Oh dear, she couldn't even kiss her own mother. She sat very quiet in the big carriage, until she saw a little girl whom she knew. Then she jumped up and waved both hands to her.

"Princess Fannette," said her mother, in surprise, "I have told you repeatedly that it is not becoming in a Princess to wave her hands. You must just bow."

Fannette didn't enjoy the ride very much, because there were so many things she couldn't do. At last they were back in the palace, and the ladies had to dress her for supper. This dressing business was a nuisance, but now for the pink-frosted cakes and ice cream. They led her to another beautiful room, and she sat down at a little table. A man in wonderful clothes, with shiny buttons, brought a bowl of milk, and set it before her. Then he brought some slices of bread on a plate. As she was very hungry, she soon finished them. Next, a tiny square of sponge cake was given her. That was the end of her supper. Oh, how disappointed she was! No pink-frosted cakes, no kind mother to tell her she mustn't eat too much jelly! How she longed to see her mother. The tears began to burn in her eyes. Then, from away off somewhere, she heard a voice calling:

"Fanny, Fanny, come in to supper."

She opened her eyes, and there she was lying under the apple tree. Had she really just been dreaming?

"Fanny, I've made you a dear little tart."

She jumped up quickly. It was her own mother's voice that called her. Oh, how glad she felt that she was Fanny, and not the Princess Fannette! On the way to the house she stopped to pick a wild rose. There was no one to tell her she might prick her fingers. She ran happily to the kitchen, and tucked the flower in her mother's dress. Never again would she wish that she was a Princess!—Exchange.

CHILDREN'S SERMON.

By Rev. Stuart Nye Hutchison, D.D.

A Morning Prayer.

"I laid me down and slept: I awakened; for the Lord sustained me." Psalm 3:5.

Every night when we go to bed we kneel down and say that little prayer,

"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep.
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

I wonder how many of us when we wake up in the morning remember to kneel down and thank God for keeping us through the night. We have a prayer for the night, but most of us have none for the morning. So I am going to try and tell you about a little morning prayer that David used to say, when he woke up.

David is said to have been the man after God's own heart, and I think that one reason why God thought so much of David was because David never forgot to say "thank you," when God had done something for him.

When David woke up he knelt down and thanked God for keeping him during the night, and this was his prayer, "I laid me down and slept; I awakened; for the Lord sustained me."

That is a very short prayer, but there is more in it than in many very much longer prayers. He thanked God for three things that we ought to thank Him for every day.

First, he thanked Him for a place to sleep, for a good home and a comfortable bed. There are millions of boys and girls today who have no homes and no beds to lie on.

A good woman was telling of a man who stopped at their house one evening. They took him in and gave him a good bed to sleep in. But the next morning she found that the bed had not been slept in. He said that he had not slept in a bed so long, that he was afraid he could not sleep, so he took the blankets and curled up on the floor.

When Jesus was here there were a few times, when he stopped at the house of Mary and Martha and Lazarus, where he had a place to lie down at night, but for most of his life he had no place to lay his head. Think of that when you get up tomorrow from your good bed, in your comfortable home, and thank God that you have a place to sleep.

Then we ought to thank God every day for sleep. One of the greatest blessings that you enjoy is sleep and as you never think at home of eating your dinner without thanking God for it, so you ought never to begin the day without thanking Him for sleep.

I heard a man say that he had not been able to sleep a night through for months, and what a dreadful feeling it is. You have no trouble to sleep. You come in at night and undress and go to bed and almost before the light is out you are sound asleep. You sleep till morning, and when you get up, your weary eyes are bright, your tired muscles are rested, and you are ready for another day of school or play.

The third thing for which David thanked God was that he had awakened. He might never have opened his eyes again. He had enemies that were watching to kill him, and he never knew when one of them was near.

None of us when we lie down to sleep at night, know exactly what will happen during the night. That is why we pray our little prayer when we go to bed. And so when the morning comes and everything is bright and happy, we must not forget to thank Him.—The Presbyterian of the South.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Creswell Circuit—

As there has been no word from this circuit in the Herald for some time, I guess I would better write a little for fear our people will forget we are a part of them. I want to tell a few things on my people any way. They are all hard at work these days remodeling their different churches, and some of them are now looking fine. Creswell church has on a new coat of paint inside, a new carpet, the pews worked over, and electric lights. Woodley's Chapel has a new tower with bell, new coat of paint inside and out, pews worked over and so on. Mt. Elma, new carpet and some other improvements. Rehoboth is planning to remodel soon, and Mt. Hermon will begin soon also. But while they have been doing all this, they have not forgotten their pastor. They have done many things that have made his heart glad, and then they were not content with things already done, so they decided to do a bigger thing, and they gave him a fine suit of clothes The very thing he needed most. Now if they will come across with the rest of their allotment in the million dollar drive, I will be one of the happiest pastors in the North Carolina Conference.

Our meeting at Mt. Hermon closed Sunday night, July 6th. We received in our church eight new members with four or five more to come. Bro. S. W. Taylor did our preaching, and did it well. I think Bro. Taylor was at his best. His sermons were food for the church member that I am sure we all fed upon with great profit to our souls. The meeting will be bearing fruit for many days to come. Our church was unable to accommodate about one half the people who came, so we are planning to lengthen our cords in this respect as in others.

R. L. Hethcox, Pastor.

From a Traveling Man

Newton, Kans., July 5, 1919.

Dear Editor:

After spending all of the afternoon in hunting "jack rabbits", and in thinking of home, and home folks, I have decided to write you a letter to tell you something of the religious life as I have seen it in Kansas.

Last Saturday I registered in one of the leading hotels in a large city in this state. The manager asked me if I would be in town for Sunday. My reply being "yes," I was asked to attend Sunday school and church with him the next morning. Sunday morning found me in a large class in the M. E. Church known as the "young men's business class." Don't think I ever enjoyed a Sunday school class more. Almost every man in the class shook hands with me, and asked me to attend their class again. After listening to a good sermon I met several other people, and was also introduced to the pastor who invited me to attend his church any time I might be in the city.

On the Sunday before this I attended church in the country. Arrived too late for Sunday school. However I was given a royal welcome by the pastor and the members of the church. I believe almost all of the men on the church ground spoke to me.

Wonder why we cannot have more of this spirit in North Carolina churches? Is it not a fact that we do not make a stranger feel at home in our M. P. churches in N. C.? Did yo uever go to church where there was not a person who spoke to you? Give the stranger a smile, and good hand-shake and he will not feel like you did when you attended church in a strange town or community and no one spoke to you.

Hope you have already gone "over the top" with the million dollar campaign.

Yours truly, J. D. Hardy.

Roseneath, Roanoke Charge.—Rev. R. C. Stubbins filled his regular appointment Sunday, July 6, and delivered a very noble and inspiring sermon. We had quite a large congregation, and every one seemed to enjoy thoroughly the sermon. Our congregations are growing larger at every appointment, and it goes to show that his work with us is very impressive. We are very sorry to say that we haven't gone over the top in the million dollar drive, but we hope to soon. We shall all look forward with the deepest interest to our meeting on next 3rd Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock and hope to have a large congregation out to hear the splendid sermon that I am sure we will have. I wish to express through the Herald my feelings when I read the nice pieces written by the Eden people: it seems almost like a hearty handshake and a pleasant smile from some of the good people of that section. I wish for Eden and its people much success. I also wish to say we were very sorry to hear of Mrs. Stubbins' illness; we earnestly hope she will soon be in her usual health again.

Again we thank the kind friends for the kind contributions, especially Bro. Alexander for the nice one from Love's Grove. We are still hopefully waiting for the Sunday schools and churches to start out for our cause; as yet we have had only a few contributions from our Sunday schools. "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." If your church was burned, would you like for us to help you rebuild? Would you like to help us? Pastor, what about it? Truly, Atlas Ridge,

Pastor.

Buncombe Circuit.—The writer has at last visited every church on the above-named charge, and has found some encouraging features at each place. All the churches have very good Sunday schools, and some of them have excellent music. These splendid singing classes speak well of any church or Sunday school.

There will be two special meetings held on the work in this month. The first will be at Mt. Zion the third Sunday, with Rev. C. J. Edwards helping. The other at Clark's Chapel the fourth Sunday, with Rev. J. H. Moton as help. Think, talk, and pray that these meetings may be successful and see the results.

Our third quarterly conference will convene at Weaverville on Saturday afternoon before the fourth Sunday in this month.

Decision Day at Liberty.—On last Sunday Decision Day for the Liberty Sunday school was observed in connection with the morning preaching service. Preparations had been made for some two months through various channels and the children of the Sunday school had become very much interested. After a sermon emphasizing Friendship with Christ the invitation was given and ten boys and girls between the ages of eight and fourteen made a public confession of Christ and united with the church. It was a beautiful sight to see these children come forward during the singing of one stanza without the slightest hesitation and without any perconal work whatever during the service. The ten are Dorothy Curtis, Frances Curtis, Charles Elkins, Ralph Garrett, Addie Hudson, Frank Shepard, Margaret King Shepard, Herman Slack, Cora Wheeler, and Lillian Wheeler.

Paul S. Kennett, Pastor.

Hawkins Chapel. Littleton Circuit.—Dear Herald: We are still at work for the Master. Our pastor has preached twice since I last reported; both sermons were good and helpful to each of us as we sat and listened. How it thrills our hearts with joy to the Master! We are preparing to have Children's day.

My brother has been confined to his bed for some time with a stroke of paralysis; he is getting along very well, I am thankful to say. He has no use of one side. He has a family. The people here have been so kind and obliging; he wishes to thank them through the Herald. They took up a collection in the church for him: now the people are carrying on his farm. He says he can't do anything for them, only he can pray the Lord's blessings to rest upon each of them.

Vannah Shearin, Reporter.

Shelby, Shelby Circuit.—To say our revival was a success would be mild It was great and glorious. There are still some unsaved that we have prayed for; we will still trust God, for he does hear and answer prayer; 25 added to our church, more to join later. We feel so grateful to God for what He has done for us.

But listen, friends! Bro. Moton preached soul-stirring sermons We don't think he left anything unsaid he ought to have been said. We pray that God may bless him with good health that he may preach the Bible truths many years to come. We were so glad to have him in our home part of his stay here. We were pleased to have the good people from Caroleen and Lawndale, also two preachers from Fallston, Bro. Morris and Bro. Edwards, to be with us some of the time in our revival: feel they were a lot of help.

Bro. Fogleman filled the regular appointment here Sunday night. Would have been glad for more of the wayward boys to have heard him.

Pray for us, dear Herald readers.

Reporter.

Charlotte Over the Top, Plus.—When we learned that Dr. Dixon was not to be with us on last Sunday we were very sadly disappointed. But knowing that the Central Committee had to consider the interest of the whole denomination and not simply one church, we tried to be charitable and wish Bro. Dixon Godspeed as he went to help our good Brother Ashburn. With us it turned out to be another case of a people helping themselves when they were thrown upon their own responsibility. After the cause of the million dollar campaign was presented to the very attentive congregation the pledge cards were passed through the congregation and when results were made known it was found that we had pledges for $324.80. This means that we have a margin of $24.80. We are quite sure we will receive other pledges. This was another great service for Charlotte and one that will long be remembered. We are happy.

On last Wednesday night our good Bro. Braswell was with us and preached a most excellent sermon. It will be remembered that a little over six years ago Bro. Braswell was the pastor who organized the Charlotte church. I have many times wondered, had it not been for the untiring efforts of this good servant of God, if we would now have this splendid church in the city of Charlotte. Some of those who were faithful in the days of Bro. Braswell are still faihtful and true.—even more so today than ever, if such a thing be possible. We were indeed glad to have Bro. Braswell with us. Come again.

On last Sunday the four persons who had previously declared their intentions to become members were received into full membership. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Daughtry and Miss Hattie McCall come to us from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, while Master James Daughtry joins us on profession of faith. These are four good members and we are glad to have them.

We very much miss Misses Lillie and Inez Hinshaw, who are spending some time in Worthville visiting parents and other relatives. Lillie and Inez are among our best and indeed we miss them. Their return is expected in the near future and their sister, Miss Nora, who is also a member of Charlotte church, but who has been spending some months in Worthville, is expected to return with them.

A recent improvement, which was overlooked in the report of last week, is a sanitary drinking fountain which has been placed at the north side of the church. Why not have a sanitary fountain at a church? They are placed on the streets for the use of the public, they are in our schools, in the train and in other public places the law prohibits the use of the common drinking cup and the church should be just as good or a little better than any one else. Our Ladies' Aid bears expense of this splendid improvement. Thanks.

Geo. L. Curry, Pastor.

Concord.—Our attendance at Sunday school for the past two Sundays was 214 and 205 At the first Sunday morning's service our pastor baptized six children. At this service a cradle roll department was organized with Mrs T. F. Robbins president and Mrs. D. A. McLaurin secretary.

Bro. Lowdermilk preached a splendid sermon Sunday morning to a large congregation from the text, "And he brought him to Jesus."

In the afternoon; Rev. Charles G. Lynch, district superintendent of state Christian Endeavor work, of Charlotte, spoke to the Christian Endeaverers on the duty of officers and committees. And at night a Christian Endeavor union meeting was was held in our church, at which time the officers were elected for the Cabarrus county Christian Endeavor union, which has lately been organized with eight societies as charter members.

The officers were as follows: Mr. E. G. Cowan, president; Mr. S. A. Perkins, first vice president; Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk, second vice president; Mr. J. C. Query, secretary and treasurer; Mr. D. A. McLaurin, superintendent of young people's work; Miss Melissa Montgomery, superintendent intermediate work; and Miss Margaret Query, superintendent of junior work.

Rev. Mr. Lynch made a short speech on "The Pledge" and Mr. G. M. Beaty of Charlotte made a talk on "The Importance of the Christian Endeavor Societies," and he also conducted a short conference, at which time questions were asked and answered. We feel sure that Christian Endeavor will go forward in Concord now, and we trust much good will be accomplished.

Miss Bessie Hamilton has just returned from the Concord hospital, where she underwent an operation. Her condition is improved somewhat, and we hope she will soon be able to worship with us again.

Mrs. D. A. McLaurin, Reporter.

Burlington.—During the warm and sultry summer days the attendance upon Sunday school and church services decreases. So it has been with Burlington Sunday school and church during the last few weeks. Last Sunday we had 237 present in the Sunday school. The senior Christian Endeavor choir rendered a special selection to the Sunday school. Bro. Pritchard presented to the school a certificate which was awarded our school in recognition of the donation of an acre to our Children's Home, the amount donated being $146. The men's chorus rendered a special selection of music.

The morning church service was conducted by our pastor after an absence of one Sunday. The attendance was not as large as usual, owing to the warm and sultry condition of the weather. Bro. Pritchard brought us a helpful sermon on the theme, "The Man Who Stands Alone." The text was from Matt. 26:56.

The junior Christian Endeavor held their regular meeting at 5 p. m. with the usual attendance and interest. The intermediate society met at 7 p. m.

Owing to the extreme heat there was a small congregation at the evening church service. Bro. Pritchard delivered a very helpful sermon, using as a theme, "God's Message to His People."

The senior Christian Endeavor society held their meeting at the Reformed church at the request of the pastor, for the purpose of organizing a new society in that church. After the discussion of the subject, "Some of the Best Things in Christian Endeavor," the new society was organized with ten members.

The regular monthly meeting of the Burlington-Graham Christian Endeavor union was held in the Presbyterian church at Graham Monday night. The senior society of our church won the banner for the best work done since the previous meeting of the union.

Services next Sunday will be as usual and we hope to have a good attendance at all the services of the day.

High Point.—The members of the Ladies' Aid society motored to Greensboro on Monday afternoon, July 7, and held their regular monthly meeting with Mrs. Geo. T. Penny at her handsome home on Church street. There were 27 members present, and the meeting was altogether delightful. We were pleased to meet Dr. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon and Vista again. During the meeting the question of support of our French orphan for next year was discussed. The sum of $22 was quickly raised, with pledges amounting to $28, and a committee, Mrs. J. R. Reitzel, Mrs. C. L. Gray and Mrs. R. T. Pickens was named to decide whether to continue this donation to the French orphan, or contribute it to some other of the many worthy causes now pleading for assistance. After the business meeting and the reception of two new members, Mrs. H. U. Oakes and Mrs. A. L. Cecil. Mrs. Penny, assisted by Mrs. J. M. Millikan, of Greensboro, served a delicious salad course, followed by an ice course. The return trip was made at 6 o'clock, and everybody voted this meeting a very delightful one in every particular.

Last Thursday evening the Christian Endeavor society motored to Hayworth's spring, where they were joined by the Christian Endeavor society of Grace church, Greensboro, and enjoyed a splendid picnic supper. The spring has been greatly beautified recently by the owner, thus making it an ideal place for picnics and outings. It is about five miles from High Pont, and is proving to be quite a popular resort during the warm days. The young people had a merry time, as well as Mr. and Mrs. Bates and the chaperones.

Miss Margaret Rankin has returned from Westminster, Md., where she attended school last year.

Miss Lucille Pickens has as her guest Miss Alice Trogdon of Toccoa, Ga.

Little Miss Virginia Pickens has returned from a visit to the family of Mr. T. F. Wrenn at Marion, N. C.

Mrs. Emma Cummings

On Tuesday morning at 1:40 o'clock, July the 8th, the death angel entered the home of Bro. J. R. Cummings of Winston-Salem and the gentle spirit of his loving and faithful wife was released from a body of suffering and triumphantly passed into the saints' eternal rest. Before her marriage she was Miss Emma White, the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. A. White of Winston-Salem. She was happily married to J. R. Cummings May 30, 1895. To this union two children were born; one died in infancy, the other survives. She leaves to mourn their loss her husband and daughter, Miss Edna White Cummings, her stepmother, Mrs. Mary J. White, one brother, Mr. J. O. White, two sisters, Mrs. J. C. Bessen and Mrs. J. W. Hester, all of Winston-Salem.

Sister Cummings professed saving faith in Jesus Christ when she was 14 years of age and united with the Winston Mthodist Protestant church where she remained a faithful member until God called her to her heavenly home. She proved the genuineness of her profession by an upright life and her wholehearted devotion to her Lord and her faithfulness to the church and to every good cause. For a number of years she was president of the Ladies' Aid society of her church and it was in this capacity that she did some of her best work for the cause that was so dear to her heart. We believe a good woman has gone to reap a rich reward and her loss we deeply feel, but the memory of her faithful life will remain to bless those who were so fortunate as to know her.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ abide with the sorrowing husband and daughter who feel more keenly than any one else the passing of this good woman from labor to reward.

"Sister, thou wast mild and lovely,
Gentle as the summer breeze,
Pleasant as the air of evening,
When it floats among the trees.

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God that hath bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

"Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled,
Then, in heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed."

J. D. Williams, Pastor.

Bethany, Randleman Charge.—I will try to make a report once again though we do not do any big things to boast about, but after all it is not the big things that count the most every time. Our Sunday school is still on the increase both as to number and interest. The teachers are busy organizing their classes, putting on the cradle roll and home department.

We held our children's day service Sunday; the children did their part well. The offering amounted to $25, which is an improvement over what we usually receive as an offering for foreign missions. Also our part of the parsonage debt was paid off Sunday; this was $25.00.

Our annual protracted meeting will begin Sunday, August 10, so let every one begin to prepare for this meeting now. Pray that God may help us to make this one of the best meetings in the history of our church.

Reporter.

Whitakers.—Since our last report we have held communion service at both churches. Our service at Speights Chapel was not as well attended as usual, yet I consider it a very sweet service. Some one said that it was too hot to go to church that day, yet with the faithful the day is never too hot to attend to the King's business.

Yesterday a goodly number commemorated the death of our Lord around his table here at Whitakers Temple.

Our Endeavor societies are moving on splendidly under the leadership of Mrs. J. M. Cutchin as president of the senior society and Miss Ruth Battle, superintendent of junior society. Each society seems to be growing in interest. Yesterday afternoon Miss Ruth Battle had a very interesting meeting of the junior Christian Endeavor. After the little folks had been together for an hour or more, something was said about going home, but a number of them wanted to stay longer. Our churches need more leaders like Miss Ruth. The subject under discussion for the juniors was "Building."

Recently the Whitakers church has finished paying for an acre of land at the Children's Home. The church is greatly indebted to Bro. J. M. Cutchin in doing so much to make this possible. Those that have not had a part in so splendid an enterprise, please see Bro. Cutchin. This is my request, not his.

We are glad to see our Bro. J. M. Cutchin, Sr., who has been in the Rocky Mount Hospital for treatment of the eye out again. We hope for him a speedy recovery in his sense of sight.

On our return from a visit to home people a little over a week ago I found my little friend, Henry Cutchin, Jr., carrying his arm in a sling by reason of a broken collar bone, which was caused by falling from the porch. Dr Cutchin tells me he expects to take his arm from the sling this week, which I am sure will be to the great joy of our little friend.

The death angel visited the home of our sister, Mrs. Mary Outerbridge, on June 24th and took from her her beloved companion. May the Lord comfort the bereaved. The deceased was a member of the Baptist church at Scotland Neck where he was making his home at the time of his death. His bereaved companion is a member of my church here at Whitakers. He leaves a companion and five children to mourn his loss.

In closing I feel that I should give some expression of my appreciation of the kindnesses shown me since I have been in the midst of the good people both at Whitakers and Speights Chapel. I could call them over by name, but it would take too much space here. I must say this, however, that I am truly grateful to each individual that had a part in the purse that paid my expenses to the Summer Conference. By this kind act the pleasure of the trip was very much increased. Furthermore, I feel that I must express through the columns of the Herald my deep appreciation and gratitude to Bro. Henry Johnston, a member of the Presbyterian church, for the privilege of using his nice horse and buggy free of charge. May the Lord truly bless these good friends for their many kindnesses.

Caroleen, Shelby Circuit.—Sunday was a good day for us. The Sunday school was very interesting. The attendance was 139 with $8.66 collection. However, we feel sure we haven't reached the top yet. Pray for us that we may reach the wandering ones and bring them into the Sunday school. Bro. Fogleman was with us at 11 o'clock and preached for us. His sermon was specially adapted to the church and made us feel that he was deeply interested in our spiritual growth; we are glad to hear such sermons as these: they do us good. It was encouraging to see so many of the young converts at church Sunday: there was a largeer per cent. of the young converts there than of the other members. We have prayer meeting each Thursday evening. We have splendid prayer meetings conducted by the lay members, as our pastor cannot be with us all the time. We are beginning to feel the need of more pastoral work. May the benediction of God the Father rest upon the Herald and all its readers is our prayer.

—In response to an appeal from the school authorities of the country, Secretary of the Treasury Glass has announced the intention of the Treasury Department to make the issue of government securities a permanent institution. By this announcement it has made clear that the Treasury Department looks to the sale of Thrift and War Savings Stamps and Savings Certificates not only as a means of aiding the financing of governmental operations and of building up the new capital now sorely needed by industry and trade, but also as a means of fostering thrift as a permanent, American habit.

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Patterson.

The following memoirs were read at the burials of Bro. and Sister R. E. Patterson by their pastor, Paul S. Kennett, and are published now in lieu of obituaries.

Mrs. R. E. Patterson.—The dying words of Lady Selina Huntingdon, the devout English countess, were: "My work is done; I have nothing to do but to go to my Father," How sweet the comfort of rest after labor well done! How comforting the asurance that after "It is finished" one may go to the Father.

Our friend has had a long life as days are measured. But life cannot be estimated by dates; it must be judged by ideals and service; and viewed from this standpoint, the standpoint of things which really matter,, hers was a life of peculiar richness. It possessed that abundance which our Master shed his blood to make possible. She was a true disciple; a follower of the lowly Galilean.

Mary C. Fleming was born Jan. 9, 1837, and fell on sleep April 8, 1919. She was united in marriage with R. E. Patterson Nov. 24, 1869 and for nearly fifty years served as the queen of his home. Five children came from God to bless this union, two of whom preceded the mother into the great beyond: three are with us today, and they with the grandchildren and bereft husband mourn their loss; but not as those who have no hope, for we lay her to rest in assurance of the resurrection morn.

Mrs. Patterson's life has been closely connected with children. For some years prior to her marriage she was a teacher of ability helping to shape the lives of many little ones. Not only there but as a teacher of small children in the Sunday school for long years she wielded an almost inestimable influence for good. Since the organization of the Methodist Protestant church in Liberty no small child has attended the Sunday school without coming in touch with this good woman, and hundreds of useful men and women today rise up to call her blessed.

It has been remarked that her life was controlled by a spirit of unselfishness, a spirit which manifested itself in the home, the community, the church. She thought of others and was ever ready to sacrifice her own desires in order to be helpful.

Her work is done, it is done well and she has gone to her Father. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord: Even so saith the Spirit; for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them." "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying: neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away."

R. E. Patterson.—On March the 14th, 1841, Robert E. Patterson was born. For seventy-eight years he made his home in this world and then "he was not, for God took him." Slightly more than three weeks ago we laid the companion of nearly fifty years to rest in this cemetery and yesterday his spirit joined hers beyond the sunset. It is idle to speculate upon the joy of that reunion, for though the separation was short, yet it was a crushing blow to him. Let us think of them as beginning life anew in that land where the years leave no imprint upon our spirit and where they may again labor together with God.

Fifty years ago this spring Mr. Patterson first established a business at Liberty, afterward moving away, and later returning. During these years, you, his friends have known him and many of you have loved him. Since early manhood he has been actively connected with Sunday school work, laboring many years ago at Liberty Grove and Tabernacle, and having served almost continuously for the past twenty-five years as superintendent of the Methodist Protestant school in Liberty.

During the past year his heart has been very fully in work of remodelling the church building and his interest in that work has meant much. He did not live to worship in the new structure.

Never have I seen a man grow old more gracefully. Nearly four score years in this world and yet of a progressive spirit which would have put many a younger man to shame. A man of amazing cheerfulness, his smile was almost always in evidence, and his ever ready jokes were the joy of his friends. There were certainly times of discouragement and hours of deep sadness but no bitterness marred his life; no hatred found harbor in his soul. Truly, "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness."

Mr. Patterson was a veteran of the Civil War and took great pleasure in telling the tales of camp life and of the battlefield, but I never heard him boast about his own exploits or call attention to himself. His was a modest disposition; a quiet life. He loved his home; wife and children meant more to him than to many men; and methinks that heaven will mean more to him than to some.

On this glorious spring day we lay him among the flowers that he loved so well. His life was peaceful; his sleep is calm, and it is fitting that his burial should be characterized by simplicity and neatness. He would have had it so, for he never wished great ceremony. Ripe for the harvest he came to his "grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season." We will miss him sorely. To many will come lonely hours because he has gone, but let us find comfort in the hope which we have for the future. For

"It needs not that I swear by the sunset redness,
And by the night with its gatherings,
And by the noon when at her full,
That from state to state ye shall be surely carried onward."

"The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years,
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds."

"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hand, eternal in the heavens."

—Mrs. W. A. Teague, of Siler City, was in Greensboro recently, the guest of Mrs. Garland Daniel.

Rogers.—Mrs. Sarah C. Mann Rogers was born May 27th, 1863, and died July 6th, 1919.

She was married to Mr. John B. Rogers December 27th, 1877.

In early life she professed faith in Christ and united with Mt. Pleasant church, but later transferred her membership to Concord church, Saxapahaw Circuit, where she remained a faithful member until death.

Mrs. Rogers was a true example of a Christian mother. No one who knew her can fail to realize her deep and sincere interest in the Christian teaching of her children. She told her pastor just a few days before death that her prayer had always been that she might live to see her dear children grown and that it had been answered.

She was a great sufferer, having been sick for a long time. However, she bore her affliction with patience, and we feel sure she has reached her reward.

She is survived by a husband and ten children, six boys and four girls, and several grandchildren. She also leaves many friends who will always remember her kindness.

The funeral service was conducted by her pastor and she was laid to rest at Concord cemetery. The grave was covered with beautiful flowers from her many friends. The pall bearers were ladies.

"Dear mother, the image of thy loving face,
Whose radiance cheered us on life's way,
Shall always live in memory's fond embrace,
To cheer us through life's gloomy day."

Mrs. T. A. Williams.

Rogers.—Mrs. Sarah C. Mann Rogers is survived by three sisters, three brothers, husband, and ten children, as follows: Miss Callie, Messrs. Bun and O. T. Rogers who live with their father; also Mrs. Robert Mann, Chatham county; Mrs. Robert Harris, of Siler City; Messrs R. H., Kerney, and Clyde Rogers of Orange county; Mrs. M. S. Guthrie of Alamance county; and Mr. J. A. Rogers of Norfolk, Va. All were present at funeral except last named. The telegram failed to reach him in time for his mother's funeral, but he came, and spent a few days with his people.

Mrs. Rogers was always in her place, and quietly did her duty in the church and community. In sickness she was ever ready, and willing to lend a helping hand, and there was no night too dark or distance too great for her to visit a sick friend.

It has been my pleasure to visit her many times. She was always cheerful, and seemed to enjoy life, and always made others that were with her have a good time.

She was sick for a long time, having been confined to her room for about nine months. She bore her suffering quietly, putting her trust in a Higher Power. Everything was done for her that loving hands could do, but the love of earthly friends could not prolong her stay among us when the Savior said, "Come; it is enough."

The funeral was held Monday afternoon at Concord church conducted by her pastor, Rev. T. A. Williams "There'll be no dark valley", being one of her favorite songs, was sung, a duet by Misses Beulah Johnson and Beulah Guthrie.

Then amid sorrowing relatives and friends the beautiful casket containing her body was lowered into the earth. The pall bearers were Mesdames T. H. and R. F. Moore, A. N. Roberson, M. W. and B. S. Curl, and W. J. Riddle. Then after the family came Mesdames W. M. Lewis and Monroe Smith with flowers, little girls following. The mound was covered with beautiful flowers. One of her daughters, with weeping eyes, said, "The grave is so pretty; if she could only see it." She was a great lover of flowers; it seems that there was nothing but the good and beautiful connected with her life.

It was so hard to give her up, and a vacant place which cannot be filled is left in the home, and our hearts. But we grieve not as one without hope, for we know that she is standing at the right hand of God ready to welcome with him, her husband, children and other loved ones as they, one by one, enter that beautiful home where cometh no sorrow, no care. While we weep with those who weep we rejoice that she is safe in the arms of Jesus, and we point the sorrowing ones to him who is able to bear all our burdens.

Dear mother now from us has gone,
Into her long, eternal home;
Her smiling face we see no more,
Until we reach that shining shore.
Then why should we lament and mourn,
Since God our Father thought it best,
To take her from this world of sin,
Into a world of happiness?

MARRIED.

Ingold-Phillips.

On Wednesday morning, July 9, at nine o'clock at the Methodist Protestant parsonage the writer united in marriage Mr. Hubert A. Ingold and Miss Leona Phillips, both of Saxapahaw. The young couple left on Wednesday morning train for High Point. They will make their home in Saxapahaw, N. C. We wish for them a long and happy life.

T. A. Williams.

Crutchfield-Thompson.

On Sunday morning, July 13, at ten o'clock Mr. Robert A. Crutchfield, and Miss Alice Thompson were united in marriage at the parsonage by the writer. Both of these young people are members of Salem Methodist Protestant church, Saxapahaw Circuit. Best wishes go with you, are the wishes of your Pastor, T. A. Williams.

Birthday.

On July 4 Mr. Johnson Paris's many friends gave him a birthday dinner in honor of his 83rd birthday.

Grandpa Paris is a member of Salem church, Saxapahaw circuit, and has been for many years. He is one that is loved by all that know him. He seemed to enjoy his dinner so much and I wish for him many more happy birthdays, and as the years come and go may he become stronger in the faith and ever lean on the strong arm of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

The pastor and family were invited and we enjoyed it very, very much.

Mrs. T. A. Williams.

"RICH TOWARD GOD."

There is no limit to the possibilities of grace. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." Heavenly riches in reward for faithful service on earth are abundantly promised in the Holy Scriptures. But the Christian can be rich toward God even in this world. The rich fool was a pauper in God's sight. Lazarus was a spiritual millionaire.

The child of God should aspire to be rich in faith. For faith is the Christian's working capital. Little can he do that is worth while without it. Jesus said, "This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." This means that faith is the means of condition whereby God performs His wonderful works, in the world. And he is richest in faith who can thereby bring down the largest measure of blessings from above.

The believer should be ambitious to be rich in good works. Now good works are the products of invested capital, which is faith. The highest and best of good works is the winning of souls from sin to a better life. "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance." Saved souls are a very choice treasure. And they are to be won mainly by faith in prayer.

And the Christian should strive also to be rich in glory. The Master exhorted, "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." Now treasures in heaven are in proportion to good works on earth. Men are rewarded according to their works. People don't get a rich reward simply by getting to heaven. They must lay up treasure there by good works here if they receive any reward at all.

Few can hope to be very rich in material things. Spiritual riches are within the reach of all who trust in Christ. Spiritual poverty is a greater reproach than material poverty. There is far less excuse for it. May the gracious God help all to strive to be rich in faith, good works, and everlasting reward.—The Word of Life.

MANY IN ONE.

John, Jack and Jean were three of the happiest, merriest, liveliest laddies any teacher ever had in her Sabbath school class.

John was English, Jack was Yankee, and Jean was French, but whatever their country, they were one and the same in their love of fun. They seldom squabbled, but if they did it never lasted long, an hour or two at most saw them all three trailing along bound on some new play.

One day, the last day of June, Jack came to me and asked:

"Please, Miss Erda, may I ask you something?"

"Go on, Jackie."

"Say, Miss Erda, what are we boys to do for the Fourth of July? Do you s'pose John and Jean will want to celebrate with me?"

"Why not, laddie?"

"Well, you see Jean is French, and John 's English. Jean might not care so much, but somehow it didn't seem as if John would want to 'hurrah' for a day that saw his country beaten by us. 'Twould seem too much as if I was crowing over him, and I wouldn't want to do that, you know."

I looked at his honest little face and answered:

"Of course you wouldn't. Now let us see. Jean would surely join in your cheering, because his great Lafayette came over to our help, but I don't know about John. Does he really care much about something which happened so long ago, when the two countries are fighting on the same side against Germany?"

"Well, I don't want to parade without John."

"I'll tell you what, Jackie. Do you know our motto of the United States?"

"No, Miss Erda, what is it?"

"Here's a quarter in my work basket. Now, Jackie, what does it say on the pennant which is caught in the eagle's bill?"

"'E Pluribus unum.' What does that mean, Miss Erda?"

"That is Latin, and means, 'Many in one' —that is, we have made one country out of many states, one people out of many nationalities all protected by our grand old flag. Now, John may not feel like cheering as loudly as you do on the birthday of your own particular country, but he certainly ought to be willing to parade under the flag which is protecting him now, even if his ancestors way back didn't like the idea of your having a flag and country separate from theirs."

"That sounds pretty good, Miss Erda, and I'll just give him a try with it. You always help us boys out of a fix."

I was interested to see if my explanation helped out the parade with a third member, so on the Fourth when I heard a loud drum coming down by the driveway, I looked out and there were the three. John very important with the drum; behind him, Jean with plumed helmet, sash and horn; and last little Jack, the American flag proudly borne over his shoulder.

When I saw Jack the next day I asked: "Why, Jack, were you the last one yesterday? I thought the flag always took the lead."

Jack smiled his dear little smile as he said: "It was just this way, Miss Erda, John wouldn't march unless he could go in front, and he does play the drum lovely, you know, and really it wasn't his day, so we wanted to make it nice for him. Then Jean had such a pretty cap and sash and, after all, I had the flag and I was the only one to carry the flag, you know, and I played that the others were guarding it. It really didn't matter so long, as we were all there. The one thing was the parade, and remember the 'E Pluribus'—well, you know what I mean if I don't know the rest of it."—Child's Hour.

When God speaks, He likes no other voice to break the stillness but His own, and hence the place that has always been given to solitude in all true religious life. It can be overdone, but it can be grossly underdone. And there is no lesson more worth insisting on in days like ours than this: when God wants to speak with a man, He wants that man to be alone.—H. Drummond.

tion or amusement; and that they should shun any organization proposing to supersede, rather than co-operate with existing agencies for social welfare. The difficulties in the way of uniting the churches in community service should not tempt them to withhold their co-operation, thus permitting the establishment of a service which is essentially godless.

WASHING MADE EASY.

To save labor in washing, make a good fluid by mixing eqqual parts of liquid ammonia and turpentine. When boiling the clothes, use about two tablesponfuls of the mixture.

TO KEEP LEMONS.

Put into a stone jar some dry sand and be sure to sift the sand so that it cannot contain any sticks or anything that will hold moisture, for that will spoil the lemons.

Place the lemons in the sand and do not allow them to touch each other. Lemons will keep for weeks if they are packed this way.

Only Temporary Removal.

Dear Editor: I wish to correct a mistake in the Methodist Protestant Herald, July 10, stating that I had moved from Charlotte to Worthville. I am only spending my vacation here with my parents. The reason I had my paper changed, I did not want to miss a copy of the church paper while I was gone.

THE ORPHANAGE AT MT. ZION.

Upon a hill that overlooks the Holy City, the Mount of Olives, the mountains of Moab, and the hills back of Bethlehem, is the home for children orphaned by the war. The Mount Zion Home was founded several months ago by the American Red Cross Commission for Palestine, but has since been entrusted to the Juniors to maintain. They have adopted the home fully equipped with orphans. The running expenses are to be provided for by the school children of America out of the milion dollar fund which they have pledged to carry on their works of relief this year for children throughout the world. Their little proteges have seen months, even years of hardship, cruelty and fear. But their future will be one of rosy promises, as the dream of their proud American sponsors, the Juniors, gradually unfolds. First, there is the home where they have care and love and laughter that they may become physically normal girls and boys again; second, a school and a church where they may study to become powers for good in the world. This is only one of the many undertakings of the Junior Red Cross to start European children on the road to a happier life.

Dr. M. W. Ball, who has been visiting his sisters, Mrs. W. T. Spencer and T. B. Riddick, has returned to his home at Newport, N. C.

Next the women are going to attack that stronghold of masculinism, the Episcopal church. Under the existing rules of that church no woman in the church may bring charges against a minister or bishop, but any charges must be brought through "10 or more male communicants in good standing." The women are beginning to ask what reason there is for having that word "male" there. Now that the whole nation is to recognize women as on the same footing with men in the political capacity, the question comes up, can the churches afford to be less just and less progressive? When the politicians have got to the point where they recognize the equality of the sexes, can the church leaders continue to uphold the old idea of male ascendancy? And if the churches insist on suppressing the feminine element are they not going to drive this element largely into other activities in which there is no such unjust sex discrimination? The women now are the main support of the churches; can the churches afford to treat them as inferiors to the male sex? In short, when this issue of feminism has forced itself on all the secular world, is the religious world going to be able to suppress it? Is the soul of a woman of less value or of lower grade than that of a man? On what grounds can the males assume that they are authorized to speak for and represent the females of the species in matters religious? These and other equally pointed questions are being asked by the women, and they are going to have satisfactory answers or know the reason why. They will no longer be put off with the fiat that things are "so because they are so." The National Woman's Suffrage Association, the National Woman's Party and other big women's organizations have endorsed the movement that is now under way for striking out the offending little word "male" from the Episcopal rules, and the issue is going to be put up to the church leaders at the next convention, to be held in October. It is no business of ours, but we predict that the women in due time will gain their point in this as in other cases.—The Pathfinder.

of God for men. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." There are men who realize today the significance of that statement as they never have before. Many fathers and mothers, many households, have given their loved ones in behalf of the great cause. It was love that gave. We will not get very far with our social reconstruction, whatever the content may be that we may read into the term, unless something of this same love actuates us. A new world is impossible on any other basis.

We shall not reconstruct society simply by using force, whether it be in the industrial or in the political world. Strikes, lock-outs, standing armies, revolution, will not accomplish much in the final analysis of things.

It is only as society is controlled by that basic principle of love for one another which Christ Himself proclaimed, that permanent reorganization that will deal justly with all, is possible. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." Love of neighbor is as important as love of God; and "neighbor," as Christ Himself taught us, is all inclusive. The cross of Christ with its revelation of the love of the Father for mankind, and of the love of the Son even to the point of death, is the preaching demanded by an age that is groping about for justice through social readjustment.

The preaching of the cross of Christ, as applied to the social needs of the age, is not an impersonal matter, as some imagine when they speak of social salvation. "Guilt is personal," asserted a noted statesman some years ago in a statement now become famous. We will save human relations by saving the individual first. Men must seek right relations with God personally, if they are to have also right relations with their fellowmen. The preaching of the cross, still foolishness unto some and a stumbling-block unto others, as it was centuries ago, is the power of God and the wisdom of God today as then to them that believe.

The world hungers and needs this cross because men have come to know as they never have known it, the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and have come to realize as never before the impotency of all human means for redemption. It is the cross of Christ which reveals to individuals, as it does to society, at once the sinfulness of the human heart and the power of God unto salvation, because of the great love which He bears for man.

If there is any one thing above all others which men need today both for themselves individually and for the race in its social relation, it is the preaching of the cross.

There may have come to pass a neglect of this preaching, as the Wesleyan clergyman has pointed out. If so, it is a condition fraught with disaster. The ministry owes it to the world groping about in darkness, seeking for a way into the larger life, to preach this cross as perhaps it never has been preached before.—Zion's Herald.

GERMANY'S NEW SEAT OF GOVERNMENT.

The German National Assembly appropriately convened at Weimar, and not at Berlin —Berlin, a hundred and forty miles away, the capital of Prussia and of Germany, a city of over 2,000,000 people; Berlin, the city of Bismarck and the Hohenzollerns; Berlin, Prussian, machine-made, metallic, hard, with its vast vistas of modern, monotonous edifices.

On the other hand, Weimar, though the capital of the Grand Duchy of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, is a quaint, quiet, irregularly built old town of some 35,000 inhabitants, nestling on the banks of the river Ilm, and sprawling about, running here and there, the antithesis of the machine-made metropolis.

Weimar is the "Athens of Germany," the home of German art and literature, where lived the Cranachs, Goethe, Schiller, Herder, Wieland, Schopenhauer, Richter, Liszt, Lassen, Strauss, and that fine old fellow Karl August, Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, and patron of art and literature.

On every hand you find something to remind you of these men. In the Stadtkirche is a masterpiece of the elder Cranach, who died here in 1553; in it you can see the face of his friend Luther looking at you from the canvas.

But before everything Weimar is the home town of two other friends who lived here later, Goethe and Schiller. Their manuscripts are preciously preserved in the massive Goethe-Schiller Archiv, which overlooks the Ilm. Rietschel's bronze statue of the two poets rises in front of the theater; they stand side by side on one pedestal. On the southern edge of Weimar is the cemetery in which both bodies are buried The memory of these two men dominates Weimar, and the famous "Briefwechsel," their correspondence, reveals one of the most precious alliances of all time.

For fifty-six years Johann Wolfgang von Goethe lived in Weimar. No wonder that the town's chief sight is the house of Goethe, where he resided for four decades. The house was erected by Karl August as a surprise present to the poet on his return from Italy. It is constructed around a court, and is now the property of the state. One sees the various rooms in all their original decorations, furniture, and equipment down to the smallest details just as Goethe saw them. In special one sees Goethe's study and bedroom and the old-fashioned armchair in which he died (1832). One sees his collection of paintings, drawings, pottery, medallions, coins, gems, the piano on which the young Mendelssohn played, and the delightful garden.

Then one seeks the charming little English park on the edge of Weimar with the stone altar erected by Goethe to the "genio hujus loci".

But Goethe was responsible for larger constructions. The Grand Ducal palace was built under his supervision. So was the theater, once managed by Goethe, and then by Schiller The building has now been pulled down, despite its associations with the "golden age" of German drama (among other productions there was the first of that unsurpassed acting play, Schiller's "Wallenstein"). In 1907 a new theater was built. The other day it was the scene of the birth of the German Republic.

Goethe was certainly a many-sided man; not only architect, dramatist, and theater manager, poet, and philosopher, but also a practical economist—he was Superintendent of Roads and Bridges and Minister of State; he was interested in agriculture, horticulture, mining, and in all natural sciences. It is not surprising that such a universal genius excited the jealousy of Court officials. Outside of the Grand Duchy Goethe is recognized as one of the greatest dreamers of great dreams for all the world, but we do not always remember that this dreamer was also a very practical person in his relations with the people of Weimar and the Government of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach. Goethe was also the dictator of opinions in Weimar—not a dictator as we use the word, but, as he said, "we were content to let the people go their own way." His was a free, democratic, idealistic but rugged and practical regime, and largely due to him Weimar has remained to this day a prototype of the real Germany as opposed to false Prussia. Did the youthful Karl August foresee this in 1774 when, passing through Frankfort, he invited Goethe to visit Weimar? A year later the Grand Duke repeated the invitation and Goethe accepted, little realizing, doubtless, that Weimar was to be his home for the rest of his life. Since his death Weimar has been a pilgrimage place for all the world.

At Goethe's request, in 1789, Friedrich von Schiller, himself already a notable poet and dramatist, was appointed Professor of History in the neighboring University of Jena, where he remained for twelve years then resigned and came to Weimar, where he lived until his death (1805). There he wrote some of his best plays, "Maria Stuart," "The Bride of Messina", and, above all, that marvelous picture of Switzerland's longing and struggle for freedom, "William Tell". Hence one of the Weimar's sights is Schiller's house. It has now been converted into a museum. It is close by the traveler's lodgings at the Hotel zum Elephanten or at the Erbpriz or at the Russischer Hof—the last nam-prinz or at the Russischer Hof—the last nam-Russia.

In the year when American independence was proclaimed—thus a considerable time before Schiller's appearance in this part of Germany—Johann Gottlieb von Herder, also through Goethe's influence, was appointed Courst Preacher and Superintendent of the Church District of Weimar and lived there until his death (1803). In the center of the town arises the Stadtkirche, and close by is the parsonage where Herder resided. The church covers his grave, marked by a simple slab bearing his well-known motto, "Licht, Liebe, Leben" (the new German state might do worse than take this as its own motto). The square in front of the church has long been known as Herder-Platz. There stands Schaller's bronze statue of the man who was much more than pastor at Weimar; he was Lessing's follower in the formation of German national literature and philosophy; he was great as an art critic, but greater as founder of the sciences of comparative philology and comparative religion.

The least famous of the four great men who took up residence in Weimar was the earliest to do so. Four years before Herder arrived came Christoph Martin Wieland as tutor to the young Karl August. Wieland was already poet, man of letters, and professor in the neighboring University of Erfurt. He lived in Weimar thenceforth until his death in 1813. He edited "Der Merkur", the most influential literary review in Germany, and exercised a needed and permanent influence on German literature. Of all the Weimar galaxy he was the most vivacious. He was almost Gallic in his touch-and-go. Of course one sees his house, too, and his statue.

These four were real Germans, real men. They lived and loved and labored in Weimar for the great democracy of humanity.

But Weimar has known other men too. In 1789 the famous essayist and humorist Johann Paul Richter, generally known by the name he himself chose, "Jean Paul," resided at Weimar to be near his friend Herder, and in 1813 the no less famous philosopher Arthur Schopenhauer came to be near his friend Goethe.

Much later Weimar was to be the scene of another historic friendship, that between Franz Liszt (for twenty-two years Kapellmeister, or conductor, of Court concerts at Weimar) and Richard Wagner. Without Liszt Wagner's success might have been indeed long deferred. Liszt it was who, after the younger composer's activity in political agitations, aided him in his flight from the country, who financed him, who produced his "Tannheuser" (1848) and "Lohengrin" (1850) at Weimar—productions so well done as to prove the turning-point in the German appreciation of the then revolutionary music of Wagner, an appreciation which was one day to culminate at Beyreuth in the establishment of the great Wagner Festivals at Wagner's own immense theater. At Weimar Liszt also discovered and aided many young composers and artists and there he wrote his own chief works, establishing a school of music of greater freedom than the old. Liszt was succeeded as Kapellmeister by Eduard Lassen, who held the position for thirty-four years. Then came Richard Strauss, who, like Lassen, also won fame at Weimar both as conductor and composer

Thus we begin to hear about Weimar first and last through the world of art—the domain of painting calling our attention to it in the sixteenth century and that of music in the nineteenth In the interim the world of literature and philosophy called supreme attention to it.

Weimar is a little city, but it has striven for the things that belong to all the world. Berlin is a big city, but it sands for narrower ideals.

Surely the government-makers who held a National Assembly and drew up a new Constitution for a new Germany must have been aware of this difference. It is a difference in manner as well as in matter, for in contrast to the serenity of Weimar Berlin seems a nervous place.

Materialism and militarism, greed and force, behind them, the government-makers came to this tranquil, intellectual, romantic, picturesque capital on the edge of the Thuringen Forest—the heart of the Germany of our old story books. The democratic humanitarian idealism of Goethe and Schiller still dominates Weimar. Perhaps is was of it that Herr Ebert, the President of the new Republic, was thinking when he invoked "the old German spirit of Weimar," and declared, "We will have a realm of justice and truth."

Only so will there be a new Germany and not merely camouflage for the old Junker gospel of brute force.—The Outlook.

A GREAT WORLD CONFERENCE.

By Larimore C. Denise.

The Third World's Christian Citizenship Conference which will be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., armistice week, November 9-16, 1919, will be in every sense a world assembly and promises to do much to aid in advancing the moral welfare of mankind and in bringing to the attention of the governments of the world the necessity for basing national laws upon Christian principles.

Dr. James S. Martin, the General Superintendent of the National Reform Association, Pittsburgh, Pa., under whose auspices the Conference is to be held, has just returned from abroad where he was successful in obtaining representatives to the Third World's Christian Citizenship Conference to the number of 87 from 47 allied and neutral countries. Of these 87, 59 are government officials.

Among those definitely secured are M. Pierre Chotch, Minister of Justice and also of Public Education in Montenegro; Dr. C. Telford Erickson, Albania; Bishop Nickolay Velimirovich, until recently ambassador of Serbia in London, England; Captain N. M. Bachman, native of Russia, and special envoy of the American peace delegation to Russia for data to be used by the peace conference; Senator Ruffini, Rome, Italy; Dr. Henry Anet, Brussels, Belgium; Bishop Stoelyn and wife, Christiansand, Norway; Dr. J. L. Pierson, Groningen, Holland; Dr. William Thomas, Vaud, Switzerland; Mr. W. J. Hanna, of Australia, for forty years a members of the Public Service Commission of New South Wales; Paul Bellamy, mayor of Nantes, Eugene Reveillaud, serving his ninth year in the French Senate, the distinguished Madame Avril de Sainte-Croix, of national and international fame, and Dr. Andre Monod, Secretary of the European Protestant Committee—all from France; Dr. and Mrs. Danjo Ebina, Tokyo, Japan, both of whom are recognized leaders of the new movement in Japan in favor of industrialism, democratization and internationalism; Ping-Wen Kuo, Ph.D., Nanking, China, President of the National Higher Normal School and also chairman of the Educational Commission, consisting of twenty presidents of Chinese universities, colleges and normal schools to visit European and American educational institutions; Mrs. Theodore Cory, London, England, the distinguished writer under the cognomen, "Winifred Graham," and alse a recognized authority on Mormonism; Dr. A. C. Dixon, for the past eight years pastor of the Metropolitan (Spurgeon) Tabernacle church, London; Henry Peel, Liverpool, England, authority on Mormonism in Europe; Rev. Norman McLean, D. D, Edinboro, Scotland a noted Scottish Highland orator thoroughly versed on all moral reforms and especially interested in subjects relating to the family; Joaquin Mendez, Uruguay; Policarpo Bonilla, formerly president of Honduras; Antonio Burgos, Minister Plenipotentiary to Spain from Panama and a noted international attorney, who had to do chiefly with the drafting of the constitution of Panama, and whose opinion on international law prevailed on more than one occasion in disputed questions in the peace conference in Paris; Alexander Hume Ford, of Honolulu, editor of Mid-Pacific Magazine, and an authority on the problems of the peoples of the Pan-Pacific countries.

More than two hundred of the statesmen, Christian thinkers and moral leaders of the world were interviewed by Dr. Martin, who worked chiefly through the peace delegations at Paris He was met cordially and assured of co-operation by practically all.

This Conference, by the blessing of God, seems destined to be a mighty factor in creating and strengthening throughout the world the Christian moral sentiment so much needed in this hour of world reconstruction. A cordial invitation is extended to all Christian laymen and ministers to attend it. Further information can be obtained from the National Reform Association, Pittsburgh, Pa.

—Every teacher in North Carolina schools this year must hold a certificate from a reputable physician stating that he or she has not an open or active infectious stage of tuberculosis, or any other contagious disease. This is in accordance with an act of the General Assembly of 1919 that was fathered by Representative Turner of Mitchell county.

The law provides that the teacher must secure such certificate each year before assuming his or her duties, the examination to be made without charge by the county physician. The law is entitled "An act to prevent public school teachers from infecting their pupils with tuberculosis."

AN ORPHAN CITY.

Gulliver's Travels have made famous in fiction the land of the Lilliputians, but it has remained for Mr. Bayard Dodge, son of Cleveland H. Dodge, the philanthropist, who has just returned from Turkey, where he spent the past six years doing relief work in Syria, to bring to the attention of the world the existence of the City of Orphans. This city is to be inhabited by the Syrian orphans who were left destitute by the massacres of the Turks and the ravages of war. The children are being gathered together already in temporary orphanages by the American Committee for Relief in the Near East

"Even if the best and wealthiest government in the world takes over Syria," said

Mr. Dodge, "it cannot care for the orphans properly. This is not so much the matter of relief as of reconstruction. The true horror of the famine in Syria has not been the physical death so much as the moral break-down. The horror of having thousands of neglected children growing up without homes or education, the victims of a demoralized environment, is awful to contemplate." Mr. Dodge said that in a small area of Syria for which he had compiled statistics there were 389 villages containing 4,364 orphans and 9,688 children with only one parent alive.

To meet this condition, Mr. Dodge outlined the plan of Dr. Stanley White and Major James H. Nicol, who have been in charge of the local relief work of the Red Cross and the Near East Committe. They propose to train a number of native children as farmers, mechanics, clerks, artisans and industrial laborers, thus forming a nucleus for further educational work in the generation upon which will fall the responsibility of creating a new nation. "As far as possible," Mr. Dodge commented, "the children should be trained as Syrians and the American influence should be just strong enough to develop efficient management and high ideals but not so strong as to breed dissatisfaction or lack of patriotism. In accordance with these principles, the Committee in Beirut hope to limit the number of children to five thousand, to group them into small families with self government, to teach them useful trades and to bring representatives of different sects together."

A site is to be chosen for the Orphan City, small houses are to be built so that they may be sold after ten or fifteen years, and American child experts, physicians and teachers are to be obtained to conduct this work.

BISHOP NEELY ON THE SHANTUNG MATTER.

"The revelations as to the taking of Shantung from China, with its millions of Chinese inhabitants, and giving the territory and the people to Japan, have shocked the moral sense of America. To do it at all was a terrible outrage on a people and a friendly people at that, but when it is admitted that it was done to buy Japan's vote, it becomes almost unbelievable. It has, however, been admitted that it was to secure the vote of Japan for the treaty of peace and for the league of nations. How many other trades there were to get support for the league of nations may appear later, but here is positive proof that there is a moral taint on the so-called league of nations which as yet has no legal existence. There could have been no enthusiastic demand for the league when support for it had to be purchased. Honorable America should reject the league resting on such a foundation, with such a corrupt taint, and especially when it proposes to rule the United States."

PHILOSOPHER'S WEATHER.

It ain't no use to grumble or complain,
It's just as cheap and easy to rejoice.
When God sorts out the weather and sends rain,
Why, rain's my choice.

In this existence dry or wet
Will overtake the best of men.
Some little slips o' clouds'll shet
The sun off now and then.

They ain't no use as I can see
In mortals sich as you and me
A faultin' Nature's wise intents
And hookin' horns with Providence.

It ain't no use to grumble or complain,
It's just as cheap and easy to rejoice,
When God sorts out the weather and sends rain,
Why, rain's my choice.

OUR LEADER GOES TO THE LAND OF NEED.

Mr Charles V. Vickrey, Executive Secretary of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, left on July 22nd for Armenia and Syria with four other members of the organization. They will make a general survey of the relief work to date, with a special interest in the merely relief work over into work of rehabilitation and reconstruction. The facts and pictures which they bring home will be used in the financial campaign in the fall.

In England Mr. Vickrey's party will confer with the Lord Mayor's Committee and the Armenian Committee; in France they will discuss the general food situation with Mr. Hoover of the Supreme Economic Council; and in Geneva they will interview Sir General Henderson of the League of Red Cross Societies with reference to co-operation with the Red Cross.

THE TWO STUPIDEST NATIONS.

No! Not Russia and Germany!

Nor even Nigeria and Timbuctoo!

But—Great Britain and the United States!

Now, what do you think about that? You don't believe it? They are the most enlightened nations?

They are and they are not!

In some things, Yes! In one great vital essential of these vital times, No!

For Great Britain and the United States are embarking upon the most colossal world competition in all history with the wrong kind of equipment!

They are tackling world trade with the wrong tools!

Two hundred and twelve nations and countries are doing business together under the simple practical and universally understood metric system.

Two nations are attempting to do business with the 212 under the old-fashioned, cumbersome, obsolete German system.

These two old-fashioned, behind-the-times, dozing nations are Great Britain and the United States!

And the system they are using was discarded as worthless by Germany half a century ago!

The two greatest (?) nations in the world are trying to do business with Germany's cast-offs!—John H. Gerrie, in San Francisco "Bulletin".

—When Sergeant Alvin C. York, of Pall Mall, Tenn., the world's greatest soldier, performed the feat in the Argonne forest whereby he killed 28 Germans, captured 130 prisoners and put out of commission 30 machine guns, he was not stimulated by liquor. That is his declaration. He said:

"I have not taken a drop of any sort of liquor for five years."

Sergeant York declared himself for Prohibition. What he has found beneficial in his own case he wishes to pass on to other people he said, until the whole world is dry.

Lieutenant A. C. Read, who commanded the NC-4 on the first ocean flight ever made, said that there was no drinking of liquor by himself or any of his crew, while preparing for the flight across the Atlantic, nor during that flight's progress.

"Everything was done," he said, "to make the flight a success."

Sergeant York and Lieutenant Read spoke from the same platform at the Centenary Celebration of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Columbus. Neither had a good word to say for liquor, and it is significant that the two men most noted for individual effort accomplished their work while sober.

"Were you 'fortified' with liquor when you made that fight in the Argonne?" Sergeant York was asked.

"I was perfectly sober, as I have been for years," he answered. "I don't touch a drop and haven't had a drop for five years. Liquor is no good."

At the Centenary Sergeant York's brother was with him. These two men have grown up in Prohibition Tennessee. In their county, Fentress, the jail has been closed by Prohibition, education has received a boost and good roads are being built.

Wilhelm told the truth at least once in his life when he said the nation that should win the next world war would be the one that used the least alcohol.

Noted Scientist Dead. Lord Rayleigh, an eminent scientist, died in London a few days ago following a long illness. During the latter part of his life Lord Rayleigh devoted much of his time to the study of spiritualism.

—There is one thing that this war has taught us, i.e.: the real man to be feared in a scrap is the Sunday school boy. The mild looking, gentlemanly, soft-voiced chap who is considered something of a molly-coddle in his home town, is very likely to be the one who will charge a machine gun nest and win the D. S. C. The "tough guy" is almost sure to be found with a white face and shaking knees when the guns begin to roar.—E. D. Pickett.

We have before us for discussion two very interesting characters, Esau and Jacob. These boys were twins, but Esau was the older of the two. In patriarchal times the elder son had what was known as the birthright which seemed to confer some special blessing upon the one possessing it. As the tribe expanded the elder one was the head of the tribe. Also there seems to have been some spiritual blessing conferred upon the elder. The two characters before us are very different. Esau was a rough wild man with very little thought for sober things. He is the type of man who thinks more about the present than about the future. He is the man who cares more about gratifying his appetite than his soul. Jacob was the more serious and looked more to the future. While neither of these men was ideal, yet Jacob seems the better of the two even from youth and in old age, after having passed through some bitter experiences he even seems to possess a real religious disposition.

At the time we see these young men there seems to be a scarcity of food and Esau who was a hunter came in very tired and hungry. Jacob had prepared some pottage which was very inviting to a hungry man. Esau buys some of this pottage by selling his birthright to his younger brother. The epistle to the Hebrews says that afterwards he found no place of repentance, that is of undoing the contract, though he sought it carefully with tears. How like people today.

Every one of us has been given a birthright. This birthright includes the best things God has to offer to His people and He is just as anxious to confer these benefits upon us as any one else, but not every one is willing to receive them. Some people sell them for that which temporarily satisfies. Men sell their birthright for—

A Life of Worldly Pleasure.

God has pleasure for those who serve Him, but some people seem to think that religion does not bring pleasure. A life of rowdyism and worldly carousing is what some people seem to look upon as being pleasure and they forget their soul for the sake of this. Others sell their birthright for—

That Which Satisfies the Appetite.

Strong drink has been the undoing of many a man who might have been useful in life. But because he preferred that which gave temporary satisfaction he lost the permanent satisfaction.

Still others sell their birthright for a life of ease. God has so ordained that before we can get the most out of life we must be active and alert. There is no place in the kingdom for a lazy man. By the sweat of our brow we eat bread. God helps those who are willing to help themselves. Those who are willing to pay the price may have the birthright, but some young people are like the heirs of great fortunes sometimes are; lazy, indifferent and extravagant and use up the principal rather than live on the interest and after awhile find themselves poor.

Finally we sell our borthright for—

Any Form of Sin.

Sin has always been an expensive proposition as men of all ages can testify. Sin and the birthright of God and from God cannot go hand in hand. The one is opposed to the other and the two can never be friends, the two can never dwell in peace together. If the man would accept the best gifts from God he must leave off the sin; if he clings to the sin he must sell the birthright.

"What is our birthright as God's children?"

"How do men despise their gifts?"

"How do men sell soul and heaven for sin's pleasures?"

A Trip to Yancey and Buncombe.

On the morning of July 22 Mrs. Garrett and I started over the Southern, wondering whether we would make connection at Clinch Cross with the C. C. and O. as the connection is very close and trains hold only a few minutes. That was one of the days connection was not made. We missed our train just 15 minutes and that caused us to reach our destination 24 hours late.

Our first stop was Pensacola where we found a welcome in the homes of Messrs. Jake Bolling and M. P. Ray. The Carolina Spruce Co. is the biggest thing there. It owns an immense tract of timber land and has a big lumber plant. By invitation of Mr. Dolan, the general manager, we boarded his log train and rode up to the logging camp where more than 100 men were getting logs down to the road. A force is working all the time building or rather extending the railroad. After tramping through the virgin forest for some time we enjoyed a good dinner at the camp with Mr. Dolan.

The logs are either drawn down with horses or skidding machines. The men have no lifting as nearly all work from the loading logs to the lumber yard is done by machinery.

The spruce bark is shipped to the tan yards, the chestnut laps and all that can not be sawed into lumber is cut into cord wood lengths and shipped to make acid and the soft wood is shipped for pulp so the ground is left nearly bare.

This land is adapted to the growth of grass and there is a splendid opening for some man who has capital to engage in cattle raising. Stock raising is developing throughout our mountains.

Our next stop was in the pleasant home of Dr I. N. McLean, one of the busiest men in all that section. He is employed to do the practice for the lumbermen and covers a territory for more than 30 miles. He goes night or day through the mountains. He is popular with his people; they say he never puts them off but goes in a hurry.

On our arrival in Weaverville we found Rev. C. C Lindley holding the third quarterly conference for the Buncombe circuit. It was his first to preside over and he did it as though he was accustomed to presiding. Bro. Lindley has been on this work only a short time but seems to be making good impressions. The special meeting began at Clark's Chapel Sunday and Rev. J. H. Moton came Monday and preached deep spiritual sermons and when we left all indications were that they would have a real revival.

This church is composed of some of Buncombe's best people and they are beginning to realize there is something for them to do.

We enjoyed the hospitality of the following homes: C. N Pickens, Lucius and Albert Eller, Ben Watts and A. G. Webster.

It was a pleasure to find Rev. Homer Casto engaged in looking after Christian young men in his Sanatorium. He engaged in this work that he might make it pleasant for such. In many places Christians have to hear God's name taken in vain and see and hear many other things not pleasant or stay alone. In his place they can enjoy religion. We wish him great success.

In Asheville Rev. J. S. Williams, one of the best known men in that city and the Good Samaritan to the stranger, took charge of us. He is the right man in the right place. His good wife enters heartily into his work and with his system of records he keeps in touch with Asheville's visitors. He is called at all hours of the day and the night to visit the sick, the dying and the distressed. He is doing a great work.

The scenery was fine and in the trip we passed through 24 railroad tunnels. It was an enjoyable trip as we met many old friends and made a number of new ones.

AS TO RACE HATRED.

My dear Mr. Editor:

I write to congratulate you and to thank you for your recent editorial on the racial conflict which seems to be giving some trouble just now. I think it breathes the true Christian spirit, and only wish that our people as a unit could see it from the same Christian standpoint as that of yourself. This is not and should not be a political question, but one of a purely Christian character. The writer can truthfully say that he bears no malice or hatred towards any race or people on earth and would be glad to help any of them, regardless of race or color, to a higher and bĕtter plane of living, and can see no good reason why there should be any friction between the races. I sincerely hope and trust that we as professing Christians and as the superior race may divest ourselves of all prejudice and ill felings, if any exist, and help to restore good feelings between all peoples everywhere.

DR. JOWETT'S SUGGESTION FOR HOLIDAYS.

Dr. Jowett told the evening congregation at Westminster Chapel, London, that whenever he went for a holiday it was his invariable custom to take with him a small Concordance, and he recommended the custom to his hearers. Wherever he might be, whether by the sea, a river, a mountain, or a forest out came the Concordance — quite unobtrusively; nobody knew what he was doing—in order to see what figures of speech were employed by the various writers in the Holy Book to describe those handiworks of the Lord. By this means he had drawn much inspiration.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

SEVEN GOALS FOR 1919.

A revival in every church.

A family altar in every home.

A Sunday school in every church.

Every school contributing to the Home.

A Church paper in every M. P. family.

Every cent of every claim paid by Nov. 12th.

One superannuate bond to every charge.

ROUNDING UP THE YEAR'S WORK—

With the coming of the 19th of this month we will be within three months of the annual conference. This is a reminder to you. Many things remain to be done in order to put your charge on the honor roll.

Last year there were a surprisingly large number on the honor roll considering the epidemic that broke out a month before the conference was to meet. We want to make a great effort this year to put all of our charges on the honor roll. It can be done and should be done. All that is needed to accomplish this is to pay your conference claims and your pastor what you promised him. You expect to do that anyway, so doing it before conference meets will work no hardship upon you.

But how about that INCREASE in your membership? There certainly has been a very small increase at this writing. Many charges have really lost instead of gaining. And while the last quarter is the most important quarter, insofar as securing new members is concerned, because it is during this period that most revival meetings are held,

But are we as much concerned about this important matter as we should be? If the increase in the mission churches in the heathen countries was no larger per member than it is in this country, we all might well despair of evangelizing the world within the next millennium.

THE PASTOR'S SALARY FOR NEXT YEAR—

The high cost of living is such a well-known fact that no one needs to be told about it. But one class of people have been victimized by it, it is the person who works for a salary, but whose salary has not been raised. The trader has traded and made more money than ever with which to meet the high cost of living. Recently I was told of a man who has made over fiftfy thousand dollars trading within the past eight months. He has not been hurt by the high cost of living. People who have anything to sell have not been hurt, it is the man and woman who has to buy and whose income has remained virtually the same it was four years ago. They are victimized by it.

Many articles have not only doubled in price, they have quadrupled. A pair of shoe lace cost as much as a moderately good pair of socks cost four years ago.

Now your pastor, brother, sister, has been caught on the point of this dilemma. I want to speak for him. There may be an exception here and there, but a large majority of them are finding it most difficult to live at present prices. I know some, who, although they are economical, have been forced to draw upon that little they put aside for the "rainy day" and for old age. This is wrong, it ought to be righted, if you can possibly correct it.

There are two things I want to urge you to do. OVERPAY your pastor this year. That is, pay him more than you promised him, and increase the salary for next year when the time comes for fixing his salary. Our pastors have never yet received an adequate salary for their services. But now when the unskilled labor makes a salary larger than the average of our pastors, and when it is known that his living expenses, such as board, room rent, house rent, etc., are much below what your pastor has to pay: it is plain that your pastor is an underpaid man. You not only handicap him by underpaying him, but you fail to secure his best services for yourself by such a policy. No preacher can do his best work on his charge and at the same time be compelled to help provide a living for his family.

RANDLEMAN CHARGE, Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, Pastor.

I visited all the churches on this charge. Bethany, Worthville, Mt. Lebanon, Level Cross and New Salem. I met with both surprises and disappointments. I was surprised to see the material on the ground for a new church at Level Cross. When I was there last year, I was not sure that the church was dead: it looked like it was dead, it acted like it was dead: and by other unmistakable signs I might have concluded that it was dead. I was therefore surprised to find that plans are on foot for a nice new structure and they expect to have it completed before conference. Rather vigorous activity for an invalid, much less a corpse. I rejoice with them in their achievements. And hope that their fondest hopes may be realized. There was a very good congregation present, although it was an afternoon service.

Bethany appointment was made Saturday afternoon. Not a good time for a congregation. But those present were interested and I felt that the service was not altogether in vain.

I was at Worthville on Saturday night. Some of the brethren thought we would not have hardly enough to hold a service, but there was a fairly good number present. This is a live little body of workers. Already they have paid all their conference claims and are quite well advanced with the pastor's salary.

I was disappointed at the congregation at Mt. Lebanon. It was entirely too small for our people there to be satisfied with it. I was told that it was not as large as usual. But the membership ought not to be satisfied with such an attendance at one of their regular services. This is a well established church, in the midst of the people and ought to be well attended. Post-war congregations have not been equal to those during the war, and may be explained by well known facts, but even these may be remedied by a live program and vigorous activity on the part of the people.

At New Salem there was a good congregation for the community. This church is situated just outside of New Salem village, and is also attended by some country people, I suppose.

The following things have been done during the year, aside from the regular services: One hundred and fifty dollars was raised on the Home farm; Worthville church has been repaired; New Salem is to be painted, $400 has been pledged on the million dollar campaign and the church is to be built at Level Cross. Paid off parsonage debt, $115.

Pastor Ledbetter is spoken well of by his people and has doubtless done a good work since he went there. Conditions seem favorable for growth at all the churches except one, and the people there can change these conditions whenever they have a mind to. The churches have not yet pushed the million dollar drive vigorously, they were left out by the committee working out the allotments, by some cause, and have therefore not gotten an equal start with some other charges.

But Randleman can yet go over the top, we are anxious that they shall.

R. M. Andrews.

THE PARSON AND THE ORGANIST.

The Parson and the Organist were walking side by side.
Said the Parson to the Organist, "Your tunes I can't abide."
"I'm sorry," said the latter, "that our tastes should disagree,
But I really must say frankly that your sermons don't touch ME."
And so they fell discussing from their different points of view,
The pulpit and the organ-loft, but quite forgot the PEW.
Till up came Deacon Johnson, who was passing by that way,
And hearing the discussion he just thought he'd have HIS say.
"See here," said he, "my brothers, you both are in the wrong!
One shows the way to Heaven and the other leads the song.
Let each to his vocation his best endeavors bring,
For when we get to Heaven we must all know how to sing."
This ended the discussion, for they felt that he was right,
So the Parson and the Organist shook hands and said "Good-night."

THE SOLDIERS' ATTITUDE TOWARD RELIGION.

So many and so diverse opinions have been expressed regarding the attitude of our soldiers abroad toward religion and the church that the following reliable statement by an observer in Coblenz, Germany, is of special interest. The account covers the period of occupation, and shows how important the religious work of the Y. M. C. A. has been in this testing time of the army morale. The writer says:

Religious meetings on Sunday nights over here don't have the field to themselves. They have open, fair, announced competition with the movies. And the religious meetings win out. They gain the favor of the men of a mighty tired army, purely on merit, and therein lies the reflection that the men of this army are "hungry" for a word of Gospel, famished for comforting thought in these the most trying hours of their army life.

So great is the demand for men who can properly address religions meetings that Dr. Maitland Alexander, a preacher of Pittsburgh, and Dr. Reid Dickson, a preacher of Lewistown, Pa., who are directing the work here, cabled Y. M. C. A. headquarters in New York for twenty more men of striking power to hurry across and help the "Y" with its religious program.

The men summoned were not asked to come with prepared sermons or a preconceived idea of what is good for the soldier over here. They were first to sit at the feet of the religious men who through months of service with the A. E. F. had learned what not to do to gain the confidence and hold the attention of the soldier.

It used to be in days not so long gone by that a meeting would be billed as a cinema show, or perhaps a concert. After starting as per the billing it would be turned into a purely religious meeting. No matter how much the boy might like sermons he resented getting a sermon when he expected pictures or a concert.

"No camouflage," says Dr. Alexander. "We announce our meetings for what they are." And sure enough, the handbill announcing the Sunday Night Services at the Fest Hall in Coblenz has in the biggest type across the top of the paper:

"RELIGIOUS MEETING."

Then follows the whole program. It includes good instrumental music, perhaps a quartet out of the A. E. F., half a dozen interesting numbers, and then a sermon by one of the leaders in religious work over here. It is interesting to note how the religious meetings came about at the Fest Hall. This is the big municipal festival building without which no town is a town in Germany. When the Army of Occupation moved in, this place was taken over by the Y. M. C. A. It is the only gathering place of any size for the men stationed in Coblenz and for the thousands who come in on leave days from the various divisions radiating out of Coblenz. "I want to put on a regular religious service in the Fest Hall every Sunday night," said Dr Alexander to one of the real high-ups of the army.

"I am in sympathy with you," said the officer, "but it can't be dans; the boys are tired and homesick; they want amusement. You can't hold their attention or interest."

"What do you say to giving us one night's trial?" suggested Dr. Alexander. "If we fail, we'll stop. If we succeed, we will keep on, if that suits you."

The officer was extremely dubious. He agreed to the one-night trial. "But," said he, "I know what the boys want. You won't have any objection to the moving picture show being open Sunday in competition with your religious meeting."

Dr. Alexander said he had no objection, so one Sunday night early in January the cinema billed its program and the religious workers billed theirs, purely as a religious meeting. Here was direct competition; and the religious program won. The cinema house was comfortably crowded. The huge Fest Hall, which holds 2,000 and more persons, was more than comfortably crowded.

And not a man went out during the sermon. Dr. Alexander gripped his audience because he knows his boys, knows their life, knows their very thoughts. He satisfied their growing hunger for spiritual things. He gave them encouragement and optimism at the time when they need encouragement —at the time right now when they are more sorely tried than ever before in their lives.

After the meeting many boys came up to him. "Keep up these meetings," they said. "They really do us good; we need something to help us on."

Some of the soldiers said they hadn't attended religious services for four, six and even eight months. They were famished for the comfort that comes from the Scriptures, they said.

But the soldier boys alone weren't the only ones who were pleased. The higher army officers were there to observe. They were watching their army pretty colsely, striving and planning to make it happy in face of the eternal question written in every boy's face and spoken in every boy's words, "When are we going home?" They realized the value of any agency that builds morale. And if it be religious, so much the better.

They sensed the audience. They noticed how the soldiers bent forward eagerly to catch every word of hope and inspiration that came from the speaker's lips. They read the contentment that the boys felt as revealed in their expressions as they left the hall.

"It's fine," said the army; "these religious meetings. Let's have more of them." So the Sunday night Religious Service became a regular institution at this. the center of all activities of the A. E. F. in Germany.

Now and for some time back the Religious Department has been sending forceful ministers into each of the divisions comprising the Army on the Rhine. No circuit rider in his younger days ever had harder conditions, and certainly nothing like so much to do as these men who, with the aid of petrol at $1.25 a gallon, buzz about from camp to camp.

There is Dr W. Francis Irwin, pastor of a Presbyterian church at Irvington-on-Hudson.

for instance. His work was with the Fourth Division, scattered out in billets through any number of small towns. He filled thirty-two dates in fifteen days.

His talks were spiritual, ethical discussions of the problems that crowd the soldiers' minds. During the Argonne and St. Mihiel and all along the front they didn't have so much time to think. They were busy fighting. But after the armistice they were thinking—thinking very hard and very long. And they were wondering and puzzled and beset by conflicting emotions. Perhaps they were tired of themselves and tired of each other. Anyway, they were hungry for a voice from the outside, and seemed to hang on the speaker's every word. Often speakers were held in discussion and debate for an hour and a half.

The Y. M. C. A. started out as a morale creator and builder, rather than to be a quartermaster or canteen organization for the army. And after armistice came its greatest opportunity along religious lines. Now big men had their chance to help the boys by directing their thoughts along optimistic lines. And it must be admitted that a strong corps of men have been at work along these lines in the occupied area. Aside from the men mentioned the following have done much the same work with magnificent effect in the outlying areas: Dr. G. W. Truitt, a Baptist minister of Dallas, Texas; Dr. J. A. Francis, a Baptist minister of Los Angeles, Cal.; Dr. J. Ross Stevenson, president of Princeton Seminary; Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Boston; Bishop Guerry of the Episcopal Church, South Carolina; S. W. Magill of Nashville, Tenn., and many others. The religious program has been carried out through literature, speakers, Bible study, and the Comrades-in-Service movement.

When this department moved up here just after the army came there were no hymnals. But some soon were printed by German printers and the books bear the fine inscription, "For the Army of Occupation." Dr. Stevenson got out a popular pamphlet on "Life Callings". In the absence of Bibles, New Testaments only being prevalent, W. I. Kelsey issued a wonderful leaflet as an aid to soldiers in reading the New Testament.

Not the least gratifying part of the work is the way the soldiers listen to the words of a good speaker, and the fact that the officers, seeing the effect, have supported with great earnestness the Y. M. C. A.'s Religious Program, even insisting that it be amplified and extended.

It seems that Randleman, like the Grecian widows, was overlooked in the distribution, but she comes in anyway with a good amount already pledged. No charge could desire to be left out of a thing like this. Forsyth also is moving, but we have no figures.

"Behold I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious." (I Peter 2:6). Christ is of precious virtue, which He lets forth and imparts to others; of such virtue that a touch of Him is the only cure of spiritual diseases. Men tell of strange virtues of some stones, but it is certain that this Precious Stone hath not only virtue to heal the sick, but even to raise the dead. Dead bodies He raised in the days of His abode on earth, and souls He still doth raise by the power of His word.—Archbishop Leighton.

Rattlesnake Kills Zealot. Cleveland Harrison, of Colbert county, Alabama, died a few days ago from the effects of bites by a rattlesnake which he allowed to strike him as a demonstration of his great faith in God. Harrison was a member of the sect called "Holy Rollers". During an evening service the minister announced that a man in the congregation had such faith that he would allow a rattlesnake to bite him, believing that he would be immune from any ill effects. A rattlesnake in a box was produced. Harrison came forward and grasped the snake just below the neck. The reptile struck him five times in rapid succession on the forearm. He became ill at once. Medical services were of no avail and after two days' intense suffering he died.

Huge Spots on Sun. Although it is now three years past the period at which disturbances in the sun were supposed to be at a maximum, the solar surface has been greatly disturbed lately. A few weeks ago the observatory at the University of Virginia found that a circular section of the sun's surface, approximately 45,000 miles in diameter, is in violent agitation. The great central spot was measured and found to be 28,000 miles long and 5,000 miles wide. Large sun spots may be observed by looking through a dense photographic negative or a heavily smoked glass.

LYING ABOUT AMERICA.

The character of the news being sent abroad by news agencies in regard to prohibition in the United States is an international disgrace. For instance: the British papers carried numerous and lengthy dispatches regarding the activity of Ernest Boehm in promoting a no-beer, no-work rebellion. When Michigan voted down the beer and wine proposition by a tremendous majority nothing was said about it. People of Europe are being led to believe that America will not go dry; that only a few long-haired fanatics succeeded in putting over a technical victory by means of reprehensible methods.

While in London I called on Reuters Agency, the Central News, and other agencies, and discussed this matter at length with their managers, pointing out how they were endangering good feeling between the two peoples by slandering forty-five—forty-eighths of America. These men showed complete ignorance of American conditions, but were greatly concerned and promised to take the matter up with their American agents at once.

The truth is that the average Englishman is much less informed as to America, than the average American is as to Europe.—E. D. Pickett.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Halifax.—The quota for our part of the million dollar drive secured in subscriptions and cash: we are now beginning our revival campaign and are expecting a gracious outpouring of the Spirit as a result. Our folks, many of them, are doing their part in a material way. By the time this reaches the press we will be in our special meeting at Eden with Bro. Troxler doing the preaching. The second Sunday we begin our meeting at Union with the same pulpit help. Then no more special meeting until September. Will all who read these lines pray for us that we may enjoy a great awakening and that many may be saved as a result.

We are still the recipients of many things to help in the wardrobe as well as the pantry. Bro. Spivey, the first pears and peaches of the season. Aunt Peggy Lee, fruit a number of times. Mr. and Mrs. Doc Aycock, a nice shoulder of meat and a lot of Irish potatoes. Mrs. A. G. Wilcox, pears. Mrs. Luther Neville, nice shoulder of meat. Mrs. Willie Aycock, butter beans and green corn. R. V. Neville, six gallons of gasoline. Charlie Knight, car work. Dr. Palmer, apples. Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Neville, fine shirt and tie, two pair ladies' white silk hose and first melon of the season, a nice one weighing 24 pounds. Miss Willie Cheek, fruit. We thank you all, friends. These continued acts of kindness keep us in good spirits when we are tempted to become discouraged. We are trying to show our appreciation by being faithful, but see every day the impossibility of one man's doing the ever increasing work of this large charge. Intensive work is what is needed at this day in everything and our people are beginning to talk a division for the saving of what is here as well as the strengthening of what we have.

May this revival season be one of great spiritual power to us as a church and may the goal set be far over-reached. Sincerely,

N. G. Bethea.

Midway.

It was our pleasure to be with Dr. Swain in a four days' revival meeting at this church. Midway gets its name from the fact that it is at a half way point between Flat Rock and Reidsville. The present building was erected during my pastorate, Midway at that time being a part of Flat Rock Ct. The dedication sermon was preached by Rev. R. H. Wills. Bro. Wills was at that time president of the Annual Conference. It was in this church a few years later that Bro. Wills preached his last sermon and went to his home in Greensboro to die of pneumonia. His death was most peaceful and he entered upon a rich reward.

The Meeting.

The meeting last week was a most helpful one. Monday A. M. Mabel Butler, a very sweet and bright little girl, was converted Monday afternoon many people praised God aloud. It was a happy day and reminded us of the great revival which preceded the erection of the present building years ago.

Tuesday afternoon eight young people were converted. This was another happy day. The people gave such intense attention to the word preached as to afford a real inspiration and the preacher found great joy in preaching. We were sorry for the meeting to close on Wednesday evening. We felt like tarrying "certain days." The meeting was not only spiritual feast, but these Midway men are fine farmers and the Midway women fine cooks. They fed us on the best of the land. Fried chicken, ham fried and ham boiled, together with cakes, custard, pies, &c., &c. We preached eight times and perspired—well, the weather was awfully hot and we cannot estimate the quantity of perspiration. Wednesday morning as the very large number of children were gathering we said, "What a future for Midway church and what a work for the 'man of God.'" As we preached the mind at times would take a reminiscent mood and memories both sweet and sad would crowd the mind and color the sermon. We returned to Greensboro with a heart full of joy and with two pounds added to the body. May God bless Midway and lead the pastor in the great work committed to his care Let me add—God bless the children. Midway has a large choir and the young people furnished excellent music. The organists, Misses Nell Haynes and sister, selected songs appropriate to the spirit of the meeting which added much to the effectiveness of the services.

St. Paul's.

Friday P. M. we ran out to St. Paul's for a few calls. Bro. J. Norman Wills will speak to the people at St Paul's again the 4th Sunday in August at 11 A. M.

Union Grove, Granville Ct.—Our revival came to a close yesterday afternoon. Rev. R. S. Troxler of Graham was our pulpit help. He came to us on Sunday, and preached good sermons throughout the entire meeting. The singing was good. Bro. Troxler being a good singer as well as preacher. We appreciate his help very much, and I am sure we have all been benefited by his work. We are sorry the meeting closed with some that were not on the Lord's side. Bro. Troxler and Bro. Williams did their part, they worked earnestly to bring the unsaved to Jesus Christ: may they both be rewarded for all they did. We were glad to have Bro. Powell of Vance Ct. with us one day.

The Children's Day services of this church will be held the second Sunday afternoon, Aug. 10th. The public is cordially invited to attend. We are sure the children are going to do their part. We are sorry Bro. Williams, our pastor, cannot be with us for the services; he will be away helping in a revival.

The Sunday school of our church is not what it ought to be by any means; so many that should attend remain at home. We hope the parents will take a greater interest in the upbuilding of the Sunday school than they have hitherto done. If they will I am sure we will have a great Sunday school.

We are glad to welcome home some more of our boys from France.

Best wishes to the Herald.

Aug. 1, 1919.

Harmony, Yarborough Circuit.—Our revival meeting began last fourth Sunday and closed Friday night. It was quite a success. Bro. Fogleman was our pulpit help. He preached some stirring sermons; we don't think he left anything unsaid that ought to have been said. We pray that God may bless him with good health that he may preach the Bible truth many years to come. There were several conversions and four united with the church. There are several unsaved people yet around in the community which we hope will be saved. We were very glad to have Bro. Fogleman with us during the meeting. We wish him much success in his work.

We organized our Christian Endeavor Society last Wednesday afternoon; there were several that joined. The following officers were elected: Mrs. S. S. Beeks, president; Miss Ina Wood, vice president; Miss Sudie Medlock, secretary; Miss Mozie Knight, corresponding secretary; Miss Julia Medlock, treasurer. We hope we will do good work.

We are also glad to have our pastor, Rev. N. M. Harrison, with us every second Sunday night. We are glad to have him with us twice a month. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely, but there is still room for improvement. With best wishes to the Herald and its readers,

Mamie Caroline Reeves, Reporter.

Ware Shoals, S. C.

Spring Church, Spring Church Circuit.—As my last report found its way to the waste basket I will now try to write again; if this escapes perhaps you will hear from us more often.

The fact that we have been silent, however, does not indicate that we have been idle. We were a little late in getting the drive started for our part of the million, but we have it on now and hope to meet with success.

We have just had our church painted on the inside, which adds very much to its appearance.

Last fourth Sunday was a good day with us; we held our children's day service; quite a number were present: the church was filled to the utmost capacity, and many remained on the outside. The program was carried out very nicely, much credit is due Mrs. H. E. Vassar and Mrs. R. M. Robinson for training the children and music. Offering, $20.79.

Our special meeting will begin next fourth Sunday with Rev. R. S. Troxler, pulpit help. We hope to have a good attendance, and also a good revival.

The fifth Sunday in August we are expecting to have a circuit rally here; we hope all the churches on circuit will be represented. We are expecting to have President Andrews with us.

REPORT BUILDING FUND, STALLINGS M. P. CHURCH.

Mrs J. W. Stallings, $25; Jas. S. Rust, $25; Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Linker, $2.50; Rev. J. F. Dosier, $1; Perry L. Garmon, $15; J. W. Stallings, Jr., $5; Love Joy Sunday school, by Bro. D. F. Hulin, $6.

The following received from Bro. Rec Friendship church. Stanly charge: J. W. Fink and family, $5; J. H. Moose, Jr., 75c; J. Wade Moose, 50c; D. W. Sicles, $1; J. W. Hatley, $1; J. A. Herlocher, $1; C. R. Hatley, $1; Miss Flora Snotherly, $1; J. F. Mason, $1; Walt Almond, 25c; M. M. Furr, $1; W. A. Hatley, $1; C. A. Harkey, $1; W. F. Hatley, $1; H. E Bost, $1; B. R. Hatley, $1; J H. Harkey, $1; Daniel Herlocker, $1; W. J. Mason, 25c; M. Hatley, 50c; J. A. Gande, 50c; R. H. Stowe, 50c; Zoar church, Mecklenburg charge, $38. Total, $140.75 Previously reported, $3,250.40. Grand total, $3,391.15.

Look out for Zoar, they had a big revival over there last week, got jam up full of brotherly love and decided that $129 was not enough to help us rebuild our church, so they took a special collection for us and the result was $38 Brother, sister, that is what I call real, genuine brotherly love; when Zoar helped us $129 we thought that they had done fine and now with $38 on top of that we feel just like writing a whole column about those good people. And did you see what Friendship over in Stanly did? Good, we were depending quite a lot on our big brothers to help us, but it begins to look as if, though, the small country churches are going to be our real standbys. And here comes Bro. Hulin with about the third real "honest to goodness" Sunday school collection we have had: God bless Love Joy Sunday school. If the other Sunday schools in our conference will just follow their example we are going to soon build and pay for our church

We have our lumber and brick bought and will soon be ready to start building. Yet we must have almost three thousand dollars before we can complete our church and go in it, and there are still about 150 Sunday schools that have not sent in that special collection. What about it?

Yours in Christ, Atlas Ridge, Pastor.

Mecklenburg Circuit.—Third quarterly conference convened at Zoar July 26th: all churches represented, all the usual business transacted. Spirit and plenty of it; old Mecklenburg is most certainly living in a new era, with plenty of new life. The financial report was just about double what it was this time last year. Bro. M. T. Stallings was elected delegate to the Annual Conference.

We just closed, August 1, our revival at Zoar. Rev D. A. Braswell was our help and when a small church like Zoar does down in its pocket and pays its help $34 for pulpit help for one week it is not necessary to say that he was highly esteemed by all the people, also not being satisfied with that they took a free-will offering for the pastor of $9.10, not to count on his salary. But the most glorious of all was to hear old church members with gray hair, who had never prayed in public, stand up and pray in public and let me tell you they prayed, and we had a good meeting; the church was greatly revived. Thirty-eight reclamations and conversions, with three new members received into the church.

I wish to thank the entire Mecklenburg charge for their kindness and love which they have shown me this year, while I feel unworthy of the many tokens and good things given me during the past year. Among some of the many good things given me during the past few months are: One stand of bees, about full of honey; one nice shoat, cabbage, ham of meat, shoulder of meat, chicken, one nice Sunday shirt, suspenders, pocket book with money in it, and to take time to mention all would be imposing on the goodness of the editor, but I might say that watermelons are plentiful Every Sunday school superintendent who has not replied to my appeal in behalf of Stallings church. I want you to get the spirit and do not delay. "Now is the day of salvation." With love to all,

A. Ridge, Pastor.

Forsyth Circuit.—The third quarterly conference will meet in the Methodist Protestant church in Winston-Salem Friday before the third Sunday in August, at 2:30 p. m.

The few who heard Bros Stone and Penny of Grace church, Greensboro, on the million dollar drive were pleased and benefited. The congregations were very small at all three churches. Some were waterbound, some mud bound, and some hide bound. Maple Springs is over the top, and Mt. Carmel is approaching the crest.

The Sunday school at the former church gave the children's day exercises last night. There was a fine attendance: the little tots did especially well, though all did well, and the offering was more than last year. Special meeting began yesterday. We are hopeful.

C. H. Whitaker.

Shelby, Shelby Circuit.—Present today at Sunday school, 95: this is very encouraging

Our prayer meetings on Wednesday nights are well attended; this makes us hopeful. I forgot to report in the last report the number converted and reclaimed in our revival: 67 was the number. Also Bro. Moton received $54

We are planning to repair our church in a few days.

Our third quarterly conference will be held at Lincolnton on Saturday evening before the fourth Sunday in this month.

Also on the fourth Sunday our church will be dedicated. That surely does make us feel glad. I, for one feel so glad I can't express it on paper.

The Ladies' Aid met at the home of Mrs J. T. Ramsey on July 25, 24 members present.

Bro Fogleman will preach for us next Sunday night; we are always glad when preaching days or nights come.

Listen, Herald readers: we had the pleasure of hearing the same text preached from twice in two months: the text being, "Nobody cares for my soul." The first Bro. Fogleman, the other Bro. Edwards. We attended a few days in a revival on Bro. Edward's charge. He would make you laugh and cry. Trust he may do much and lasting good.

Pray for us, dear Herald readers.

"FOLLOW ME."

Leaving all to follow Jesus—
What a sweet life that must be!
Looking only for His coming,
Precious Lord who died for me.

Died for me? Yes, died to save me
From a life of death and sin;
On the awful cross He suffered
To teach men to follow Him.

O that I might in His footsteps
Daily walk so perfectly,
That should He look down from Heaven
His sweet smile would beam on me.

I often long to be like those people
Who no earthly goods possess,
Who have sold their goods and followed
Seeking that eternal rest.

By God's help this very morning
I'll consecrate myself anew,
And in all life's trying problems
Try to do as He would do.

If we walk in love before Him
With Him ever as our Guide,
Though our feet be torn and bleeding
He'll take us through whate'er betide.

And give to us a crown everlasting
He has laid up for His own;
For those who have given their all and followed,
That they might gain that heavenly home.

(The writer of the above poem says: "I wrote it on the morning of July 4th, while I was preparing breakfast and getting ready to go on a picnic for the day. I think God gave it to me to show me the difference between the life of pleasure and the life 'hid with Christ in God'."

We thank her for giving it to our readers. It breathes a trustful Christian spirit.—Editor.)

Friendship, North Davidson Circuit.—Our regular appointment was filled by Rev. O. Stone of Thomasville with a very able and impressive sermon. He presented it in a plain, practical way. He has the prayers and best wishes of all for his success in life $9.61 on budget, $1 10 Children's Home. Glad to have the Misses Sink from Thomasville and Miss Lelia Byerly from Cooleemee worship with us. Our Sunday school is right good.

Reporter.

Zoar, Mecklenburg Circuit.—Our special meeting began the fourth Sunday in July with Bro. D. A. Braswell as pulpit help. On Saturday before the fourth Sunday we held third quarterly conference. Bro. Braswell preached us a fine conference sermon and the business was transacted in harmony, with Bro. M. T. Stallings elected delegate to Annual Conference All the churches were represented in the conference except Antioch. We had our new organ for the meeting, which helped us out very much with our singing.

We had a real good meeting. Bro. Braswell preached us soul-stirring sermons, which we all enjoyed very much. The church was greatly revived. We had thirteen professions and three accessions to the church, which were:

Mr. Sam Hargett,
Mr. Wesley Plyler,
Miss Ida Plyler.

Bro. D. A. Braswell had to leave us early Friday morning, which we all regretted very much. But our pastor decided to stay and preach for us Friday and Friday night. He preached us two fine sermons. There were 28 penitents at the altar the night the meeting closed. And we had a glorious meeting. We made Bro. Braswell a $34 purse before he left us, and we took a free will offering for our pastor, Bro. Ridge, Friday night, which amounted to $9.40. We also collected $18.75 on pastor's salary during the meeting, and Zoar people have pledged $38 more on Stallings church. Christian people, pray for us that we may move forward as we have never done before. Bertha Hartis, Reporter.

Yarborough Christian Endeavor.

Since July 6 we have had four meetings conducted by the following: Mr. General Lee Gossett, July 13; Miss Clara Jackson, July 20; Miss Julia Tinsley, July 27; and Miss Lilly Yarborough, August 3. The members seem to be taking more interest in the Christian Endeavor at each meeting. The meeting last Sunday was conducted by the junior superintendent, and Miss Gladys Wilson took charge of the junior society in Miss Lilly Yarborough's place. Sunday afternoon Miss Agnes Patton read the scripture lesson; seed thoughts on the topic read by different members of the society: we had a very helpful and interesting talk by Mr. Harrison on the topic, "How do Men Confess Christ and How Deny Him?" This seemed to be a very appropriate topic on account of the revival beginning at Yarborough Chapel Sunday. We now have topic cards in the hands of each member, and we have also received our pledge cards. We now have 28 members on roll. I hope that each member will keep their pledge and try to do their duty. Pray for us that we may be successful in our work: and that we may bring the unsaved to Christ.

Oak Grove, Cleveland Circuit.—I think it's time for a report to go in. We will have to beg to be excused for being silent so long. I have been ill most of the while. I underwent an operation for appendicitis on May 8 and stayed in the hospital for some time, and therefore I haven't attended church very much. And I find that no one has taken my place in reporting our work. But you may look for regular reports from us, for they are coming.

Last week we held our special meeting (with Bro. Curry for our help) and we surely did have a glorious meeting. We were all glad indeed to have Bro. Curry to help us, as he was with us eight years ago, and we had not forgotten the grand meeting we had that year.

We are looking forward to the third Saturday and Sunday of this month with much pleasure and anxiety. These are the days we are to have our singing convention, and we hope to have a grand old time. I wish it was so that every Herald reader could come and join us in our "singing praises unto Him." We want every one of you who is in reach of us to come.

Our second quarterly conference will be held Monday after the second Sunday of this month, and we hope to have a good quarterly conference this time.

Our Sunday school is moving along just fine. We are having a good attendance this year. But we hope to have more.

We want the prayers of all the good Herald readers. Willie Gettys, Reporter.

Mt. Hermon, Creswell Circuit.—Sunday was our regular "preaching day". Bro. Hethcox delivered a very helpful sermon to an interested congregation; his subject was. Lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes. Isa. 54:2.

Our pastor will not be with us next first Sunday; he will be away helping in a meeting. I know we will all miss him very much, although our Christian Endeavor will furnish an interesting program; every one is cordially invited.

Conference will be held at our church Saturday. We are all pleased with the opportunity of having it. I am sure dinner will be furnished for all who are there.

Our Sunday school is moving along nicely: we are not forgetting to take the offering for the Children's Home.

Callie Barnes, Reporter.

Lebanon Charge.—The third quarterly conference will meet at Pleasant Grove Saturday, August 9, at two o'clock.

Officials, please take notice and be present. We are behind with our reports some but hope to catch up soon. We have received many tokens of kindness since our last report, which we hope to report soon.

Edward Suits.

Concord.—We had a good day last Sunday. At the morning service we were pleased to receive the following persons who became members of our church:

Mrs. John L. Potts,
Miss Loula Herrin,
Mr. Roy Bost.

The sacrament was then administered and in this 63 persons communed.

The Sunday school has lately put on the Million Dollar Drive and at the present writing $148 is reported collected. The Philathea class was the first class to "go over the top". It is safe to say the next time you hear from the Sunday school it will be further up the road than it now is.

Mrs Robert Furr, Mrs. Gertrude Cagle and Miss Bessie May Hamilton all are sick, but all are now improving.

E. G. Lowdermilk, Pastor.

Fairfield, Guilford Circuit.—Our meeting closed Sunday at three p. m. with good results. The church is greatly revived and a good number of converts. Fifteen joined the church. I am glad to say that Fairfield church is in fine condition. They have already paid pastor every cent they promised for the entire year and are still paying him. We have a noble band of workers. May they remain faithful, and the Lord continue to bless them.

A. M. Hamilton.

Graham.—On Saturday evening, August 2, the Methodist Protestant Sunday school had their picnic at Harden Park and the Burlington school had theirs at the same time and place. We had a nice time and I think that all enjoyed themselves very much. At seven o'clock they began to move the baskets out to the long table in the grove and I wondered if Bro. John Amick was sick. I wish the editor of the Herald could have been with us on this occasion, for I am sure he would have enjoyed it. I want to say, however, that the Methodist preachers are not the only ones that like chicken. Getting back to the supper, when everything was ready we had a short prayer by Bro. Troxler and then the people were waited on by the Philathea classes from both schools. We had a plenty and to spare. We had a good Sunday school Sunday and a good collection for the Children's Home. We had a good congregation at the morning service and the following joined the church:

Mrs. John Parks,
Mr. John W. Parks,
Mr. Brucefield,
Mrs. Eula Swing Clapp,
Miss Mary Tom Hughes.

We appreciate all of them.

The Graham work is going along nicely and I think every one should rejoice in the work.

AN APPEAL FOR HELP.

(The editor does not know the lady who sent this appeal, but has no reason to doubt any statement she makes. Let us have testimony from some one who does know.)

Aug. 5, 1919.

Dear Readers of the Methodist Protestant Herald:

I am a member of this denomination. I hold my membership at Love Joy in Montgomery county. I have a husband and five little children. My husband is unable to work much: he has rheumatism and stomach trouble and head disease and the doctor says he will have to have an operation performed on his head before he is any better, and I am making up money to have him sent to the hospital, and I am writing to the readers of this paper to see if you all would help me some. I certainly would appreciate it, if you will. He has been unable to work so long, we are not able to send him without help. You know the Bible says the Lord will bless the cheerful giver. So I will close trusting in the Lord for help. May the Lord bless every one that will help me some. Yours respectfully, Mrs. Ola Hilliard.

Changes of Address.

A POINTER.

It was more than thirty years ago. He was the star preacher in his conference. He had held a number of the most important stations in his conference. Was fascinating. Dressed well. But he became so idealistic as not to believe the "rib-story," and a lot of other things that less ethereal persons believe, as related in the old Book.

He was pastor in one of the leading cities of his state, at the time Rumors began to circulate of an unsavory kind. They did not "blow over". They would not "down". He was cited to trial on charges of immorality. He was convicted. His "credentials" were demanded—he was expelled from the ministry and the church. Some months after his downfall he published in one of the church papers a lengthy "confession," in which he attributed the beginning of his downfall to the reading of German rationalism and kindred things He tried to be "broad", and in trying to be "broad" he lost his faith. When he was assigned to G.—, he went with a "heavy heart"—miserable—he realized his "faith was gone". This continued for some years—going from bad to worse—but his star of popularity rising higher and higher. He fooling the people the while by his brilliancy, until the crash came. Then later his "confession" revealed the fact that rationalism was the cause of his downfall. Deterioration began in the heart. Belief in a fully inspired Bible died out. Human reason took the place of divine revelation. He tried to "keep up appearances". He was in a dilemma. But his brilliaant intellectuality could not save him. His unbelief culminated in criminality, dishonor, and shame.

Moral: Better keep on the main trunk line of an inspired Bible. Whoever rushes on the "bucklers" of Jehovah gets the worst of it. "Whoever falls on this stone shall be broken, but on whomsoever it falls, it will grind him to powder." J. F. Dosier.

THE PASTOR'S WIFE.

I am not a pastor's wife, but happen to be the husband of an ex-pastor's wife, and want to say that there is often a lot of unjust criticism indulged in, in regard to the pastor's wife.

When a man is employed to do anything else under the sun, but to be the pastor of a charge, nobody ever dreams this includes his wife, unless it is so specified in the contract. And of course it does not include the wife unless so specified No law, human or divine, so regards it. But often the church acts and talks as if in employing the pastor, his wife is under obligation to do a whole lot of work also, and if she does not do it, there is a whole lot of unkind criticism. She is under obligation to do her Christian duty just like any other woman—no more nor less. She is under no more obligation to do a whole lot of visiting than any other woman. Sometimes a pastor's wife has no children. Her husband receives a good salary, and she has the opportunity to do quite an amount of visiting. Not that she is under obligation to do it, any more than the wife of a railroad or cotton mill employee is under obligation to work for said company for nothing, just because her husband is employed. But it is oftener that the pastor's wife has a number of children to care for, and all the household duties of any other woman to look after, and no money to hire help. She is often the hardest worked woman in the community. And yet some are so ignorant and thoughtless as to say to the pastor's wife, "O, you have nothing to do: but we have to work." This is an insult and an outrage. Enough to stir the righteous indignation of any self-respecting woman.

When a pastor's wife does all of her work: cooking, washing, ironing, making, mending, house-cleaning, etc., she has no more time for out-side work than another man's wife. And this is the lot of many pastor's wives. But many of the people seem to expect her to do all of her work—keep a tidy house—see after her children, keep them neat, and—visit everybody at the same time. And if she does not do it, censure her severely. The whole thing is a piece of unreasonable nonsense and injustice. The pastor's wife is under no more obligation to visit the people than the people are to visit her. And this they seldom do.

We've felt somebody ought to say something in defense of the pastor's wife. We've had our little say. We've said it in kindness, though it may seem a little sharp to some. But the subject demands plainness of speech. Visit the pastor's wife occasionally and cease criticism. She's one. You are many. The many can visit the one easily, but it is a hardship many times, if not an impossibility, for the one to visit the many.

PULVERIZED LIMESTONE.

The North Carolina State Department of Agriculture has very large holdings of limestone in East Tenn—a tract of about 226 acres estimated to contain not less than 150,000,000 tons—and a small pulverizing plant that can put out about 50 tons a day. This limestone is given to the farmers of North Carolina at cost of production, plus the freight.

The stone is milled to pass a ten mesh screen and analyzes from 80 to 90 per cent. calcium carbonate and carries a small percentage of magnesium carbonate. It is known as a high calcium limestone.

The capacity of the plant is now being increased somewhat and we expect to run day and night, beginning about August 15th or 20th. This will double our present output. Orders reaching us early can likely be filled in time for use this summer and fall. Address all orders to

W. A. Graham, Commissioner of Agriculture, Raleigh, N. C.

CLOVER AND CORN

Should grow on the same land the same season. Sow the clover in the fall and plow it under in the spring, just before planting the corn crop. But the clover crop frequently fails from poor seed or from lack of proper inoculation. Both these causes of failure can be avoided by having the seed tested for germination in the State Laboratories, and by securing the proper inoculating fluid from the State Department of Agriculture at Raleigh.

FREE TO NORTH CAROLINA FARMERS.

The North Carolina State Seed Laboratory will examine and test all kinds of agricultural seeds for the farmers free of charge. Most crop failures are due to poor seeds—seeds filled with weed seeds or seeds of low germinating power. This cause of crop failure can be entirely eliminated by taking advantage of the seed laboratory at Raleigh and having all agricultural seeds—wheat, rye, oats, clovers, alfalfa, the grasses, and so on, tested before planting. Do not sow crimson clover seeds this fall without having them tested for germination. It costs nothing and may save thousands.

Of these, 273 were men and 648 women; 520 were teachers, while 112 more were preparing to teach; 87 were high school students. Those pursuing work of university grade numbered 352, while 569 pursued normal courses. North Carolina had 869 students, while 52 came from other states. Cuba and Japan also had students there. CHILDREN'S CORNER

GEORGE WASHINGTON'S NAME.

For three years father had promised to take Jim on a trip all alone. Each year Jim had reminded him, father had replied, "Our trip will be taken when you are twelve years old, son."

Maps were studied, questions were asked of travelers, plans were made, plans were unmade, but on the very day when Jim was twelve, at the breakfast table father said, "Jim, this is your vacation, as well as your birthday; do you suppose you could pack this suitcase and be ready to start on our trip by twelve o'clock?"

Jim gazed at the brand new suitcase with his initials neatly painted on its shiny leather side then he gazed at father.

"Ready! You bet I'll be ready and waiting for you by eleven o'clock."

True to his word Jim sat waiting in the sitting room as the clock struck twelve. Beside him stood his suitcase, upon a chair lay his hat and coat, his umbrella and best kid gloves. He took up a book and tried to read but somehow he found himself reading over and over the same words. Next he tried his favorite magazine but with the same strange result. At length he decided to just sit and think, and for the first time he realized he had no idea where the trip was to be, nor had he the slightest notion what he was to see! A thousand questions filled his brain Before he knew it, mother was kissing them good-bye and he was hurrying down the garden path with father; each of them clasping suitcases; each of them swinging umbrellas each of them wearing best kid gloves Very much alike! Two men starting off together on a holiday!

The train trip was thrilling with its strange stuffy, sleeping berths, its delightfully dignified dining-car and its cozy comfortable tables. Instead of trying to be grown-up like father, Jim found father was changed, except in size, to a boy of twelve taking his first long trip.

I wish I could tell you about that trip, but it would fill pages and pages. Instead I will tell you about the day Jim went to the Natural Bridge Hotel in Virginia.

Jim had seen plenty of bridges, he had watched trains go under them, he had walked bravely over them but always they had been built by man's hand. To day he was to see a natural bridge, a bridge built by no man

It was hard eating breakfast, hard swallowing cereal and boiled eggs, but at last it was done and he stood ready by the front door to see the great sight with father. On the steps gazing into his face, sat a huge Collie dog, old and fat. Beside the father dog sat his son, young and frisky. As Jim started down the path, Father Collie stepped politely before him leading the way down the path. Son Collie jumped and bounded by their side. Father Collie turned now and then to hear Jim say, "Father, isn't this a perfect day," or "See how that stream tumbles and dashes through the ravine!" "Oh, there's the Natural Bridge! And there's George Washington's name carved on the stone just as you told me! But how could he ever carve it in such a place? How could he ever stand below the bridge long enough to do it without being swept away by this rushing stream,"

How indeed? Father Collie waved his tail triumphantly. Jim had asked just the question he should ask. Jim had wanted to know exactly what hundreds of people had wanted to know every single year since Father Collie was very young. He didn't quite remember what happened before that, yet dimly he felt his father had led strangers to this same wonderful bridge, just as he was doing; firmly he intended that his son should take up his life's work when he stopped. As they reached the bridge, Father Collie stood still while Jim and his father with Son Collie walked under. They turned at the other end of the bridge, precisely as he expected they would. It was father's voice this time which said, "Oh what a view! Look, Jim! It's like a wonderful picture with the bridge for its frame!"

That was enough. Father Collie beamed his thanks for their appreciation of his treasures, then turned with renewed dignity and walked slowly back to his post of duty by the front doorsteps, ready to escort the next visitors.

It seemed a delightful day for a long ramble. Father, Jim, and Son Collie started out to see all they could in one morning of this delightful corner of Virginia.

On and on they walked till of a sudden father cried, "Look at these dark clouds! We'd better hurry home." And hurry they did, over fields and through woods yet every path, every lane they took, landed them in waving green cornfields.

Son Collie enjoyed it hugely. He liked the rustle of the corn, he loved the sight of frightened rabbits jumping lipperty-lip, at the first sight of his bright eyes. He opened his mouth and barked with joy at their whisking tails and vanishing ears. On and on he sped! Darker and darker grew the sky, faster and faster blew the wind. The corn began to rustle excitedly in the storm.

Father and Jim would have enjoyed all this as much as Son Collie if only they had known which cornfield lay in the direction of home.

It was dark now. The storm seemed likely to descend in fury at any moment.

Suddenly, father had a new thought. "Stand still, Jim, our only way out of this is to make Son Collie stop chasing rabbits and attend to business."

That was easier said than done. Father uttered a shrill whistle. Son Collie bounded obediently to his side. "Home!" commanded father With an understanding nod, Son Collie started off at a dead run, father and Jim doing their best to keep up with him. Just as father was congratulating himself upon a safe return a grey rabbit jumped from their path. Off rushed Son Collie.

The only thing to do was to stand and wait for their four-legged leader to obey another whistle. The storm clouds hurried nearer and nearer; the sky grew blacker and yet more black. Father whistled, Jim whistled, but Son Collie did not return till the rain began to fall in great flopperty drops. He did not return till friend rabbit outwitted him and disappeared down the trunk of a tree. Then and not till then he pricked up his ears and listened to the far-away whistle.

Back he trotted and again father commanded, "Home!"

I don't know whether Son Collie dreaded the storm or his father's reproval most; I don't know whether all the rabbits were frightened by the oncoming storm and so hid carefully themselves, but Son Collie settled into a steady trot, a regular dog-trot, with father and Jim following close at his heels.

Just as the rain came down in buckets he looked back long enough to grin at his friends whose collars were turned well up, whose caps were pulled way down, for there on the front steps stood Father Collie wearing rather a worried air as much as to say, "What will these strangers think of our wonderful Natural Bridge if that son of mine can't be depended upon to bring them safely home?"

FOR PARENTS—CAN YOU ANSWER YES?

1 Do you "make time" to play with your children, and teach them to play alone?

2. Do you read and tell stories to them?

3. Do you know what they study in school?

4 Do you use the public library so as to more wisely train your children?

5. Have you good books and magazines in your home?

6. Do you frequently visit your children's school?

7. Do you welcome their teachers in your home?

8. Do you heartily encourage worthy ambitions?

9. Do you develop self-reliance in your children by trusting them to do right.

10. Do you give them opportunity for self-development?

11. Do you teach your children the value of money by giving them a chance to make and spend their own?

12. Do you teach housekeeping to your daughter, and do you teach your son the dignity of honest toil?

13. Do you tell the story of life to your children?

14. Do you pray for divine help in training them?

15. Do you try to help other parents?

Parents should not make decisions for their boys and girls. Teach them to decide wisely for themselves. Parents are not to say, "I will conquer that child whatever it may cost me," but rather, "I will help him to conquer himself, whatever it may cost him." Learn to use your will power as you learn to swim—by using it.—Child-Welfare Magazine.

—Quit glorying in Methodism and glory in Christianity. Whatever Methodism has that is good, it received from Christianity. The same thing is true of every Christian church. To Christianity belongs the credit for every virtue. The vices and weaknesses and incidental peculiarities that attach to organizations of men are not things to be gloried in. Paul said: "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." That prayer is befitting Christians of every name.

—St. Paul's church had over 30 conversions in the recent meeting and a number of accessions. The meeting continued until Tuesday night of this week; Bro. A. L. Hunter returned home yesterday. Bro. Kennett has witnessed a good growth this year, an increase of over 25 per cent. in the membership. This church seems to be more alive in every way than ever before.

—Asheville was on the verge of a water famine when rain came. But there were prayers going up before the rain came down. God never forgets, but He sometimes waits until men remember.

"TWO-BY-FOURS."

This is often used as a term of contempt, but that is by people who don't know much about the subject. Really the term is one of great respectability. What could you build without some two-by-fours? You might have boards and shingles and nails in abundance, but without the two-by-fours for framing, you would put up a very rickety building. It takes the two-by-fours to give strength and durability. Compare a two-by-four with a plaster lath, and you will have more respect for the former. Two-by-fours figure very largely in the operations of the building world. They are not to be despised. They excel in usefulness. They are indispensable.

In our human world, the "two-by-fours" occupy a similar place. They are the common people. Lincoln said God must especially delight in the common people, for He makes so many of them. A common man is a great creation. Compare him with a stone and note the marvelous differences. The stone may have been there ten thousand years, but never once in all that time has it had a thought or a feeling. But the man is endowed with the wonderful power to say "I think, I feel, I will." He is conscious not only of himself, but of the world about him, and of God above him and beneath him. He is an actor in relation to the world and in relation to God. He is so wonderful a being that God hath chosen to give him immortality.

The feeblest human being is wonderfully endowed and is capable of a great and high destiny. Let us beware of speaking, feeling, or thinking contemptuously of any one. The incidental differences among men are small in comparison with the essential likenesses.

THE LAYMAN'S PART IN CHURCH WORK.

Too many laymen still hold to the old idea that their way of service is by proxy. They think they pay the pastor to do their work This is wholly false, and never was true. They pay the pastor to enable him to do his work—not theirs. Their work still devolves upon them and will not be done unless they do it. You can no more employ a minister to do your church work than you can employ a man to eat and sleep for you.

The aim in doing work—church work, especially—is not simply to get the work done, but also to get the benefit that comes from doing the work.. If the pastor does all the work, he gets all the benefit. The spiritual benefits of doing religious work are real and important. They are essential to our spiritual growth. Others may be helped by our religious work, but we are helped more.

The reason it is so hard for you to do religious work is because you have done so little before; also possibly because you are out of spiritual condition from other causes. Your spiritual health demands that you take the religious exercises of real church work—not mere gymnastic exercises Get in earnest about somebody's salvation. If you cannot, you may well doubt your own salvation. Let not your soul rest until you have done all you can do to bring that one to Christ. And then proceed in like manner with others. O, there is so much to do—so many listless, so many indifferent, so many wayward, so many antagonistic to the good purpose of God. The Lord is calling for the help of every man, woman, and child.

THE PLUS THINGS.

Every person who has achieved success has done it by paying attention to what are called the plus things of life. As someone said a long time ago, the man who never does any more than he is paid for never gets paid for any more than he does.

The worker who says, "I am not paid to do that," will never be promoted and paid for doing bigger work.

It has been demonstrated time and time again that the person who expresses himself in service, who is unselfish, who does things for others without thinking about his own personal reward, and who makes it his business to create friends for himself and for others, is the one who will achieve the heights.

It is the person who is a plus giver who becomes a plus getter.—Thomas Dreier.

—President Wilson continues his battle for the league of nations. Congress is much divided, apparently, and we may witness a prolonged discussion of the matter before the final vote is taken.

—Bro. Bates is laboring to prepare our people for the revival meeting to begin the first Sunday in October. Let all our people catch his spirit of earnestness and do their best. The time to work together is now. Let no one give himself cause of regret by failing the opportunity.

PURPOSEFUL READING OF THE BIBLE.

If we read the Bible aright, we read a book which teaches us to go forth and do the work of the Lord; to do the work of the Lord in the world as we find it; to try to make things better in this world, even if only a little better, because we have lived in it. That kind of work can be done only by the man who is neither a weakling nor a coward; by the man who in the fullest sense of the word is a true Christian, like Great Heart, Bunyan's hero. We plead for a closer and wider and deeper study of the Bible, so that our people may be in fact as well as in theory "doers of the word and not hearers only."—Theodore Roosevelt.

Resignation to the will of God is the whole of piety; it includes in it all that is good; and is a source of the most settled quiet and composure of mind. Our resignation to the will of God may be said to be perfect, when our will is lost and resolved up into His; when we rest in His will as our end, as being itself most just, and right, and good. And where is the impossibility of such an affection to what is just and right and good, such as loyalty of heart to the Governor of the universe, as shall prevail over all sinister indirect desires of our own?—Joseph Butler.

THAT SUPERANNUATE INTEREST.

The church is much like a modern army. It has many departments of operation. Each needs thought, care, attention. It is easy to become enthused about one or two interests, and forget, overlook, or neglect, some others interests to the detriment of the whole. An army may be quite efficient in one department, and fail because of inefficiency in some other department. So of the church. While all the departments are not equally important, yet no department is unimportant. None is to be neglected.

The claim of superannuates may not be as important from some view points as some other claims, but from the view point of justice and humanity it cannot be second to any. As a matter of aggressiveness, it may seem to be secondary, unimportant, or nil, in the estimation of some; but if we fail to properly care for our veteran ministers it may dampen ardor at the recruiting station and thereby impair our aggressiveness.

Let it be known that some conferences in the Methodist Protestant church provide well for its veteran ministers, while some others do not, this will surely have a favorable effect in the one case, and an unfavorable effect in the other. This cannot be denied.

Our last conference (the North Carolina), inaugurated a plan to increase our permanent fund $5,000. This if raised, will make our Endowment Fund $8,500. This invested at six per cent. will bring in $510 per year, being less than the amount paid by some conferences to one claimant per year. This is some advance in the right direction. But are we going to raise this relatively small amount? Suppose we get a Bond from each charge, this will give us less than $4,000.

Soon after the adjournment of our last conference there seemed to be considerable interest manifested for a while, but for the last six months we have heard practically nothing about this interest. Is the work finished, or is the leaven working slowly and silently, or is the matter largely forgotten? We trust the last supposition is not true—we can not believe it is. We've heard much about the million dollar drive, the college, the Children's Home, pastor's salary, etc.—all laudable and good—but not one word about this interest. Of course we've seen something in the Herald from time to time, but—nothing from the living voice.

On page 38 of Conference Minutes for 1917, the Committee on Superannuates says, among other things, "We feel that the claim of superannuates is one among the most important among all general assessments." And on page 49 of Annual Conference Journal for 1918, we find this as part of the report of the Committee in Superannuates: "Your committee feel that every claim of the church is of great importance, else there would be no such claim. Yet we feel these pressing needs of our spiritual fathers are not being emphasized by our ministers from time to time as they should be. Therefore we recommend that the pastors present this claim at each church throughout the Conference District."

I seems that we as a conference have never been fully awakened to the importance of this claim. We have an invested fund of $3,500 at present, and the effort to raise an additional $5,000, if successful, will make it $8,500. This investeed at six per cent. will yield $510, less than the amount some Conferences pay one claimant.

One of our sister conferences, having about 50 per cent. more members than we have, has an invested fund of $125,000, and is making an effort to add $100,000 to this fund. If we had a fund in the same proportion to our membership, instead of having $5,000 to $8,000, we would have $75,000 or $80,000. So while we are doing more than we once did, we are far behind the needs, and far behind the provision made by some other Conferences. The truth is, we've never been fully awakened as to the importance of this claim. One good, big-hearted layman said, soon afteer conference, that we ought to have made an effort to raise not less than $15,000. This added to what we already have, would have yielded us an income of $1,000 or more, and this added to our yearly collections, would have given us something approximating our needs. The largest appropriation made to any one claimant by us to the present is $300. Five years ago $150, or $125 would have been worth as much. So those who receive comfortable salaries have no conception of the straits and embarrassments of some of our superannuates.

Are we going to let the effort to raise $5,000 fall short of that amount? Surely not. But we must bestir ourselves. Had the amount been several times larger, in all probability we would have raised it as easily or easier. But being so small, we do not feel that need of special effort, and may thereby fall short of the goal, May it not be. Let us awake and make the necessary effort, and having succeeded, the way will be clear for still further advances.

A STATEMENT AND RECOMMENDATIONS ON THE PRESENT RACIAL CRISIS.

The recent race conflicts in some of our cities challenge the attention of the churches of Jesus Christ to their responsibility respecting an amicable and fair adjustment of race relations in America.

In the fellowship of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America are included 3,989,852 members of the Negro churches. In speaking, therefore, at this time for humanity and justice we voice the mind and conscience of both races. The present situation is a challenge to the churches charged with the promotion of the brotherhood of man, which look upon all men as entitled to a footing of equality of opportunity. This calls for preaching the duty of economic and community justice for the Negro, thus securing peace and goodwill between the races. Beyond all else the present situation calls for confession on the part of Christian men and women of failure to live up to the standard of universal brotherhood as taught by Jesus Christ.

In the adjustment of race relations our country has in this crisis not only its own conscience to satisfy, but also to justify itself as a nation before the enlightened opinion of mankind. As a foremost exponent of the ideals of democratic government, the United States has been lifted to the full view of the world. Our present settlement, therefore, of race relations will influence in a very large measure, the settlement of race relations in other parts of the world.

We must face frankly the fact that a most dangerous inter-racial situation now threatens our country. The problems growing out of the presence of two races in America are clearly seen to be nation-wide and the adjustments must necessarily be made on the basis of national responsibility. The migration of thousands of Negroes to the North emphasizes this fact. The outbreaks in several cities and the persistence of the anarchy and treason of lynch-law imperil our democracy.

The actual practice of the principles of the brotherhood of Christ can prevent such conflicts and nothing else will. The church must offer the ideals, the program and the leadership in this crisis. The church must meet its obligations, or leadership will pass not only to secular agencies, economic or socialistic, but to forces that are destructive of civilization.

We must confess that the church and its ministry as related to the welfare of the Negro has been too little inspired by the fundamental principles and ideals of Jesus Christ. Communities that have expressed horror over atrocities abroad, have seen, almost unmoved, and silent, men beaten, hanged and also burned by the mob.

The Negro has ever shown profound faith in God and has always looked to the church for leadership, for counsel and for guidance. The church which for fifty years has a record of almost unmatched service in the education and betterment of the race will now be recreant to her trust and lose her birth-right of service if she does not meet this confidence with a full sense of responsibility and a full measure of service for injustice, peace and good-will. To this end we therefore urge upon the church, her ministry and membership this constructive program:

A Constructive Program for Just Inter-Racial Relations.

1. The Government, local, state and national, should impartially guarantee to all classes security of life and of property. Mob violence is becoming a crowd habit. When life and property are ruthlessly taken, when men and women are lynched with no protection from officers or courts, law and order are trampled under foot. We call upon the pulpit, the press and all good people to create a public sentiment that will support necessary legislation for the enforcement of existing laws, that life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness may be equally assured to all classes.

2. The Negro should have economic justice, equal opportunity to get and hold work on the same terms as other men, with equal pay for equal work, and with fair working and living conditions. The entrance of large numbers of Negroes into the various industries emphasizes the necessity of an immediate amicable adjustment of relations with white employers and fellow-workers.

3. We call upon men and women everywhere to protect the sanctity of home and womanhood. We record with satisfaction the growing enlistment of Negro leaders in a program of education and Christianization such as tends to prevent crimes that provoke mob violence. The home of the Negro should receive the same measure of respect and protection as that of other Americans, and the sanctity of his home relations should be safeguarded in every possible way. Swift and impartial action of the law should strike the violator of the sanctity of any home, white or black.

4. We recognize as fundamental to the welfare and efficiency of society that adequate recreational provisions be made available for Negro citizens,

5. We strongly endorse the plea of the Negro for equal traveling accommodations for equal charges.

6. Adequate educational facilities for Negro children and youth should be provided not only as a national obligation but also as a necessity for national welfare. We emphasize the urgency of giving to the Negro his full share of local and national funds.

7. Qualifications for franchise should be tered irrespective of race, creed or

LOUIS BOTHA.

The death of General Botha calls up recollections of a time and a world which, though less than two decades have since gone by, bear little resemblance to the present. The right of self-determination was yet to be invented, and British imperialism, being rampant then, trampled upon the freedom of the two Boer Republics. Lloyd George was in the opposition and attacked the Government and the jingo spirit it played upon with so much fierceness that he narrowly escaped stoning by an incensed London mob. Botha stood in the "veldt" at the head of his brave little army, winning by a successful though hopeless guerrilla war against the "Rooineks" (Rednecks), the admiration of the world, which was not yet aware of his abilities in the field of political action. And President Kruger had gone to Europe, in hope of moving the cabinets of the great Continental Powers to joint intercession with the Government in London on behalf of the two Republics in agony. His chief confidence was fixed upon Wilhelm von Hohenzollern, whose sensational telegraphic message to him justified those sanguine expectations.

Paris gave the President a generous, sympathetic reception, regardless of the impression which such a welcome might create on the other side of the Channel. Berlin came next on the President's program. On his way hither Cologne received him with a spontaneous outburst of feeling for him and his suffering people. But there and then his progress came to a sudden end: a telegram from Berlin requested him to quit the country and not to insist on an interview with the Kaiser. "Deutsche Treue" forsook the South-African "Stammgenossen" in their hour of direst need. General Botha was forced to give up a struggle which had become hopeless. Kruger remained an exile in Holland, and the Kaiser-Koenig in Potsdam made it his boast that he himself had suggested to the British Government the plan of campaign which brought the South-African War to a successful end.

And now Holland harbors again a famous exile, though not with the homage and love which she gave to "Oom Paul." The proud Emperor who requested old Kruger to quit the country has quitted it himself in deeper disgrace than his dismissal of the President could attach to the latter's departure from Cologne. Lloyd George is Prime Minister in London, and Botha, the defeated enemy of seventeen years ago, dies premier of the South African Union, not long after returning from Versailles, where he sat as one of the British Empire's councillors in judgment over the Kaiser's Germany.

It is fruitless to speculate on what the world might have been if that ominous telegram had never been sent to Cologne, and if the Emperor had dared, at that time, to draw the sword in defense of a just cause. "Gottes Muehlen mahlen langsam aber sicher," God's mills grind slow but sure, runs the German proverb. By fearing to do in defense of the oppressed what he afterwards dared do to oppress the defenseless, he dug his own inglorious grave.

But the grave into which, last week, the remains of General Botha were lowered will be a famous landmark for all time to come. It will be honored not only by South Africa, which indeed owed him the greatest debt, but by the gratitude and remembrance of the world. For his championship of freedom did not limit itself to the cause of his own people. Rising above the bitter memories of his own defeat, he gave his support wholeheartedly to the victor when the latter rose in arms to defend Belgium and the freedom of the world. The General's tomb will be a momument not only to himself but also to the wisdom and generosity of British rule, which made such a miraculous change possible. Botha had, it is true, his opponents among the Boers, who did not approve of his siding with the Briton. Hertzog's party, the nationalists, considered him a traitor to the injured cause of the Dutch in South Africa, which in their eyes, could be righted only by the restoration of the independent Boer Republics. Botha, however, like his friend and colleague Jannie Smuts, scanned farther horizons than fall within the scope of party politicians concerned with the immediate future. His leadership pointed the way towards a greater South Africa, an Anglo-Dutch dominion where under Dutch Roman law, the two white races would gradually unite into one Africander nation, a development which the war has precipitated beyond calculation or hope. The Dutch element is not in danger of decline in this fusion of the two races. On the contrary, there are unmistakable signs of a strong revival and extension of Africander Dutch all over South Africa. The speech of the Boer, no less simple in structure than the English, is gaining ground and bids fair to become the ruling language of the Dominion. Its rich vocabulary is proving its capacity for the expression of high thought and deep emotion. Botha, the hero and statesman, will survive himself in the verse of the poets who will sing his praise in his own Africander Dutch. —The Review.

—The War Department announces that 10,000 men are being held in France to care for approximately 40,000 German prisoners taken by the American army. This force will be retained until the prisoners of war are finally repatriated. The support of these Germans is costing the United States $1,000,000 a month.

—Dr. Paul S. Reinsch, American minister to China, has resigned his post. While it is intimated that ill health was the cause of his action, it is an open secret in Washington that disapproval of the Administration's policy toward China was the direct cause. Dr. Reinsch was the agency through which the American government induced China to declare war against Germany and Austria, and the minister has felt that his position, since the completion of the German Treaty, has been impossible.

—From far-away Oregon our good sister, Mrs. M. S. Ray, sends her subscription for the Herald as regularly as the years roll round. She is a sister to the late Rev. C. A. Pickens.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER

SEVEN GOALS FOR 1919.

A revival in every church.

A family altar in every home.

A Sunday school in every church.

Every school contributing to the Home.

A Church paper in every M. P. family.

Every cent of every claim paid by Nov. 12th.

One superannuate bond to every charge.

THAT MILLION DOLLAR CAMPAIGN—

Graham and Haw River Charge and Vance Circuit report "gone over" this week. These charges had been over for quite awhile, but the reports had not gotten in just right. That still leaves the following charges from which we have no reports: Bess Chapel, Cabarrus, Davidson, Flat Rock, Guilford, Haw River Charge, Mecklenburg, Midland, Oak Ridge Charge, Pensacola, Pinnacle Charge, Randolph, Rockingham, Shelby, Staniy, Thomasville and W. Forsyth Charges. I am confident many of these have done something on the drive but have failed to report progress. Will not some one on these charges see that we have a report in the Herald next week so we can know what yet needs to be done in order to finish up this campaign.

PASTORS' REPORTS ANALYZED, PART ..IV.—

Alamance Charge paid 40 per cent. on pastor's salary; paid 75 per cent. on conference claims during the quarter; 30 accessions to the church.

Midland Charge: About 35 per cent. paid on pastor's salary; $9.00 paid on general interests during the quarter; 17 professions; pastor reports 18 visits made.

Vance Charge reports 38 professions with 30 accessions during the quarter, about 35 per cent. of claims met.

Graham-Haw River Charge: All claims met to date.; 20 professions, with 10 accessions, new church at Glen Raven nearing completion.

This is the largest number of reports received this quarter, the largest received during any quarter during my administration. Some of the brethren have reported large numbers of professions and it looks like we ought to have a substantial gain in membership this year.

INFORMATION DESIRED FOR MY ANNUAL REPORT—

I shall soon mail out to all pastors a blank form for the report to me, taking the place of the fourth quarterly conference report. This will call for such facts as the amount pledged in the Million Dollar Drive; the amount collected; the amount raised in church debts and improvements; total amount raised for all purposes; number of professions and accessions during the year; number of families on your charge that have a family altar (approximately); the number of Superannuate Bonds taken; number of church papers taken; approximately, number families who do not take the paper. These facts will be needed in making out my report to Conference.

BE FRANK—

In less than two months there will be many pastoral changes made. In order that no harm be done, it would be a wise thing for both pastor and people to be fair and frank with each other. If the pastor has decided that he ought to move let him tell his official members so at the fourth quarterly conference. And if the official members feel it will be for the best interest of the charge to change pastors be frank to tell the pastor so. It will help to do this.

DAVIDSON CHARGE, Rev. J. W. Hulin, Pastor.

I visited the Chapel Hill camp meeting and saw more of the members of the churches of the charge than I did last year by visiting most of he churches. There was a large, unwieldy crowd present; but it was an orderly crowd. They listened attentively to the preaching and although I told them about the Million Dollar Drive, I did not get an opportunity to take any pledges. I regret this, as I have made this a part of my work of recent months.. But the pastor expects to present this claim to his people and get their pledge before Conference, if possible.

Davidson Charge has improved quite a good deal in recent years. The pastor expects to raise all claims this year. One or two churches were entitled to be on the honor roll last year. They should make the pastor's salary for next year not less than one thousand dollars. They are fully able to do this and we are expecting them to make an honest trial to do it.

This is Bro. Hulin's twelfth year and he is very popular with the people; they seem to think he ought to return for another year.

NOTICE.

The regular fall meeting of the Board of Education of the Methodist Protestant Church will be held in the Book Rooms, Pittsburgh, Pa., at 10 a. m., Thursday, October 9. It is expected that every member of the Board will be present at this meeting and anyone interested in the cause of Christian Education having any suggestions to offer to this Board will please mail them to the office of the Secretary, 507 Pittsburgh Life Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa., on or before October 8.

THE DISCREET ANSWER.

A somewhat whimsical rich man once called to him a servant who was noted for his contented disposition and genial humor. "John," he said, "you've been working for me a long time and never have received more than your board and clothes. Now how would you like to trade places with me?"

"I don't think I should like it," was the unexpected reply. "You have all the work and worry of your great property, yet you don't get anything more than your board and clothes out of it, either."

John was right. No one realizes so keenly the limitations of merely material things to broaden and enlarge one's life as he who gives his entire life to them. The saddest slaves are those who are bound to the revolving wheels of golden chariots, the wheels of which are forever turning but never going anywhere.—Selected.

HOW EDUCATION PAYS.

Boys and girls who go to work at the end of grammar school rarely get good jobs. The work they find to do is usually unskilled: it offers little training or chance for advancement. When they are older they find that they are still untrained for the skilled work which offers a future.

Many boys and girls when they leave school find work that offers a high wage for a beginner. But these wages seldom grow, because the work requires no training.

A position with a future and steadily increasing wages requires school training.

A table prepared by the United States Bureau of Education compares the wages of a group of children who left school at 14 years of age with another group who left at 18 years of age.

At 25 years of age the average boy who had remained in school until 18 had received over $2,000 more salary than the average boy who left at 14 and was then receiving over $900 a year more.

This is equivalent to an investment of $18,000 at 5 per cent. Can a boy increase his capital as fast any other way?—The Christian Herald.

No longer is the world a great expanse. It has been made small by modern communications which are so easy and rapid that within a very short period of time information can be sent around the entire globe. Even now the most remote nations are nearer than the adjoining tribes of only a few centuries past. So then the once great world has been changed into a mere family by modern conveniences.

The nations of the world being brought into nearness to each other can understand somewhat the needs that exist. Because of the needs of the people nations become interdependent. As in case of the individual who comes into constant contact with his neighbor and becomes [illegible] particularly true of the nations of the earth. The Samaritan saw the need of the Jew who had fallen by the way and this need became the means of helpfulness. Need constitutes a medium by which nations are made to feel their interdependence. The world was in need of a Savior, so Jesus came.

Need only presents the opportunity while service accomplishes the requirements for brotherhood. The road to brotherhood is service. Service is neighborliness and neighborliness constitutes brotherhood. After Jesus had related the parable of the good Samaritan he referred the lawyer's question back to him for answer and he said: "He that showed mercy on him." In this case service was the object of brotherliness. Jesus' sole mission on earth was to serve His Father—"about my Father's business." He administered to those who had physical ailments, comforted those in mental anguish and was the Savior of the world. In the service rendered there must not be any prejudice or else the brotherhood will not be complete. All fear and suspicion must vanish if true results follow.

Too, we must not expect anything for service. The recompense often mars the spirit of true service. In this age we often forget to practice the golden rule. To give an example of this kind of service, take the United States in the world war. As the spirit of brotherhood has been manifest in the great war, so may it be with reference to world brotherhood for Christianity. It seems that this idea of world brotherhood is growing and to my mind in accordance with the plan in which Jesus intended. Then with Burns:

"Then let us pray that come it may
(As come it will for a' that)
That sense and worth o'er a' the earth
Shall bear the gree an' a' that,
For a' that, an' a' that,
It's comin' yet for a' that,
That man to man the world o'er
Shall brithers be for a' that."

MORE ABOUT CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

I appreciate the response to my request for volunteers to organize new Christian Endeavor societies during the month of October, as well as the request for assistance in organizing societies where they are needed. But the response has not been so large as it should have been. Some of our best Christian Endeavor societies have not been heard from. How about it? Here is a chance to render a splendid service. Let me hear from you immediately, please.

The good work has already begun. The Reidsville Christian Endeavor society went out to Mizpah church Sunday night, the 14th, and held a service and then organized a new society. The young folks are going to Bethany the first Sunday night in October to hold a service and try to organize there. I hear of the Burlington and Graham societies going out and organizing. Please report all newly organized societies to me. I want the report to help me in the work.

Pastors of churches where there are no Christian Endeavor societies, please give us the privilege of coming and helping your work.

If any newly organized society is in need of supplies, write The Methodist Protestant Book Concern, 316 North Charles Street, Baltimore, Md., and Bro. Reiner will take pleasure in furnishing you what you need. Write me about the work. I will FIND time to help you if I can.

Altogether now for the young people and the kingdom of Christ! Sincerely yours,

L. W. Gerringer,
President Young People's Union.

Yarborough Christian Endeavor.

Our society held their regular meeting last Sunday afternoon at six o'clock. The topic for this meeting was "Truthfulness.". The meeting was conducted by Mr. Ashmore Donaway. This was a very good meeting. Every one did his part well. We had a splendid talk by Rev. N. M. Harrison as usual. He always adds much interest and help to the meetings when he is present.

There were 22 members present Sunday afternoon, and we also received four new members. This gives us an enrollment of 38 members in our society. I think this is a good record, but hope we can add and keep on adding new members to our roll. Our society is doing a great work, but hope we may do a greater work.

We are planning to pick cotton Saturday afternoon before the first Sunday in October The money we earn by picking cotton we expect to give to some good cause, we haven't fully decided yet, but may we give of our time and means to just what God world have us give. We will miss the following members that have left us to enter college: Miss Agnes Patton has gone to Columbia college, S. C.; Miss Margarette Dillard has gone to Winthrop College, Rock Hill, S. C.; Mr. Nat Yarborough has gone to Wofford College, Spartanburg, S. C.; and one of our members, Mr. Claude Jackson, has gone to Western Maryland to study for the ministry. Our prayers go with them all. With best wishes to the Christian Endeavor societies and their members.

A LOST LAMB.

An English minister who was spending the summer in Switzerland, gives an interesting account of a Swiss shepherd, one of whose lambs had wandered away from the flock, and was lost.

The shepherd went after it to try to find it. He wandered away off into a wild part of the mountains, where there was no beaten path. Then he looked around in every direction. He called aloud to the lamb, and then listened to hear an answer to his call. After calling many times he thought he heard a faint sound. And again he called and listened. He heard the sound again. It was the bleating of a lamb. It seemed to come from a distance, far below where he stood.

He went to the edge of a rock, and looked carefully over a steep precipice down into the valley, or chasm that opened beneath. There, far below, he saw the lamb on a little ledge, projecting from the steep side of the mountain. There was no path leading to it, either from above or below. After studying awhile and if he could only get [illegible] felt sure he could haul it up with a rope.

Then he went home and got some ropes, and took some friends along with him. On returning to the place, he fastened one of the ropes under his arms, and taking another rope in his hand, was lowered down over the edge of the precipice by his friends. There he was, for a while hanging by that rope, over the awful depth that lay beneath him. Gently they lowered him down, farther and farther. At last he reached the ledge, and landed safely on it.

Then he was about twenty feet above the lamb. It was impossible for him to get any nearer to it. Then he took the rope he had brought with him, and making a slip-knot, or noose, in the end of it he lowered it down, and tried to get it over the head of the lamb, that, in this way, he might draw it up. But the lamb shook its head every time the rope came near it, and was not willing to be caught in the noose. But the shepherd kept on trying, and finally the noose slipped over the lamb's head, and in a moment, before he could be much hurt, he was drawn up to the ledge where the shepherd was. Then taking the poor lamb in his arms, the shepherd signalled to his friends above.

They drew him safely up, and so the lost lamb was found and brought back in safety to the fold.—Pulpit Illustrator.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS

Rev F C Klein, Sec.

GETTING READY.

Our church, in common with all others of Protestantism, is called upon in these unparalleled times to meet the growing demands of the Kingdom.

To the kingdom, more than to any other organization, is assigned the high mission of ministering to humanity's greatest needs, and to impart its noblest agencies for the world's regeneration in the truest sense.

To rulers and statesmen is allotted the task of recasting, developing, governmental affairs, building up and enlarging industries, commerce, and all the great interests vital to the expanding life of the nations, and their policies and plans are formed to meet conditions as they are, and as they conceive they will become, and not as conditions were a few years ago.

The church is exactly in the same relation to the work of the Kingdom that knows no boundaries, no racial distinctions, but only those great human needs it alone can supply, and it must look forward, not backward, as it now lays its plans to serve monkind.

It is indeed gratifying that our church, through the action of the General Conference in authorizing the Million Dollar Campaign, had a vision of what we ought to be doing to rightly perform our share in giving the Gospel to the world.

This was based upon the tremendous need in all non-Christian lands, a need that can never be met from inside sources where false faiths shackle the people to superstition and grievous evils, but must be supplied in God's indicated way.

It was based also upon a realization of the limited work being done by our church as compared with the ability of our people to measure up to all requirements of Christian discipleship.

The time had come to arouse our people to the consciousness that gifts for foreign missions, and the other general interests of the church, ten or twenty years ago were not to be taken any longer as the standard of giving at the present time.

Our church membeers generally had shared in the general prosperity of the nation, their standard of comfort had risen, better homes were being built and better churches for themselves, and the call was for larger things in plans and gifts in doing the work of our church.

In many places it was deemed impossible for such a sum of money to be secured from our people, but the reasonableness of the proposition, the need of making a success of it, the added strength and power that would come to our institutions and boards and insure greater returns, the authority of the appeal—from the Christ to His disciples for the work of His church, the world's greatest need, and the efficiency of leaders everywhere and the loyalty of our members to Christ and the church brought us in sight of the goal and the end seems aassured.

Our board feels the responsibility laid upon it by the coming, in the near future, of its share of the campaign receipts, and for some time has been seriously considering plans for the wisest possible expenditure of such funds as will be set aside for purchase of land, erection of church and school buildings, hospital work, etc,, besides the 40 per cent. of the receipts which are to be placed in the Permanent Fund.

Now that it has added Rev. Mr. Heininger and the established work in China, by transfer from our Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, to its missions in Japan and India, the requirements are varied and pressing, and we covet the prayers of the church.

WHY THE INCREASE?

A Camouflage Propaganda; Good People Badly Deceived.

In proportion as the saloon has lost, tobacco has gained.

Why?

Because the country has been taken off its guard and does not realize the danger in this foe, especially cigarettes.

The Trust did not wish to see its profit lessened. It is capitalized at $131,000,000; its dividends last year were $14,000,000. That sum must be increased rather than lessened. In normal years one-third of our crop is exported. The war stopped this foreign trade. Something must be done, and was done.

The Trust started an advertising campaign among the greatest in the history of the world. Millions of money were used in buying pages of our magazines and papers. Alluring and artistic advertisements came into our homes; just enough of patriotic feeling was inserted to break down the barriers that otherwise would have been raised. The habit was not only not criticized—it was excused, condoned, encouraged.

Churches and schools and various organizations, not many, but too many, were deceived; unwittingly they loaned themselves to the Trust program. "Funds" were started everywhere. The cigarette was popularized. It was sent to the boys in the training camp and trench, though many preferred candy or chocolate. The Trust was not interested in that. It was wiser than the children of light. That is how our consumption has grown to more than 100,000,000 a day!—Presbyterian Board of Temperance, Tract.

LAST CALL FOR RALLY DAY

My dear Sunday School Workers:—This is our last call for orders for Rally Day programs this fall. If you wish the programs sent to your address please let us have your order as soon as possible. The day is almost upon us now when the Rally Day services should be held, and you will feel the loss of it throughout the entire winter's work if you do not hold some kind of a get-together day in your Sunday school this fall. Whether you have ordered the programs or not, be sure to hold some kind of Rally Service for your Sunday school forces.

We wish to express our very great thanks to the goodly number of Superintendents who have ordered the program, and to express the hope that you will have the best ever Rally Day.

The Board's Needs and Your Needs.

The prospects are the brightest this time they have ever been for good returns from the Rally Day services. About 10,000 more programs have been mailed out this fall than in any other one season, and all those who have gotten the programs are going to give their schools the privilege of making a free-will offering to the Board of Young People's Work. The Board is dependent upon this help to enable it to do its work, and each Sunday school needs to give its own Board this much help that all of us may feel that we are doing a mutual work for the Master among the young people of the Methodist Protestant Church.

If every Sunday school in the entire denomination will just give one Sunday's offering to this Board then the Board will be put on safe footing for its year's work. For this reason we are asking you to hold a Rally Day service, or a get-togethehr service of some kind, and on that Sunday speak of the work of your Young People's Board and give your school the opportunity of giving for its support.

Just as soon as you have taken the offering please send it the very next day to Rev. C. H. Beck, D.D., 507 Pittsburgh Life Building, Pittsburgh, Pa. and tell him it is your Rally Day money and he will do the rest. If you send it to me I must forward to Dr. Beck anyway.

With most sincere thanks to all who are going to help in this great work, and hoping you will have a fine Rally Day, I am,

Yours in the Master's service,

A. G. Dixon.

—Rev. W. A. Ledford's new address is Monkton, Md. He has been in Ohio for several years.

—Mrs. Kate Kime has already gone to Florida for the winter. She went early that her grandson, who accompanies her, might enter school at the beginning of the term.

—Prof. D. T. Surratt is principal of Fulkerson High School, Hilton's, Va. His school year runs nine months. He seems pleased with his position.

he never lost his hold upon the congregation from the beginning.

Our third quarterly conference was well attended, every church on the charge being represented. Quite a number of interesting things were discussed and we may be able to tell you more about this by next meeting. Bro. J. R. Dickens was found to be elected delegate to represent this charge in the next Annual Conference. The following good people have remembered us with things useful since our last report: N. M. Harrison, lithia tablets, turnip seed, and a pair of shoes for the baby boy. Mrs. F. M. Taylor, 10 pounds sugar, apples and butter beans. Mrs. Madge Parker nice lot of apples. Joe Aycock, green corn for the table. Mrs. Sam Hammill, green corn and cabbage. Aunt Peggy Lee, six big young chickens and apples a number of times. Mrs. Thos. Taylor, apples. Mrs. J. C. Edward, corn, string beans, tomatoes and five pounds sugar. J. W. Hardee, fresh fish. Mrs. Charlie Avant, corn. Jesse Neal, five pounds sugar, Irish potatoes and grapes. Westry Harris, a big box of grapes. W. W. Knight, a bucket of home-made lard. Mrs. Willie Aycock, green peas and corn a number of times. Mrs. Irene Harris, a box of fancy soap. Mrs. Frank Avant, catsup and variety pickles. Mrs N. M. Harrison, suit of clothes for the baby. Rev. E. V. Neville, $2 in cash. Thank you, friends, these things help us lots and the spirit of the givers is worth more than the goods to us.

Our meeting at Harmony began yesterday with two services and we are expecting Bro. Suits in to-day to help there and at Ringwood next week. Please pray for us in these efforts for there is much to be done yet.

Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

Prinkleyville, Sept. 22.

Uwharrie Circuit—Piney Grove.—We began our special meeting here with the drive toward a million. Canvassers had been at work, and had secured in pledges $152.50. Bros. Garrett, Idol and Shaw made their appeals on the afternoon of the beginning of our special meeting, and $60 additional were pledged.

We had a great meeting at Piney Grove from the beginning. Bro. A. Ridge was our help and did splendid work. There were seventeen conversions, and eight accessions, besides a general revival of the church. During the week of the meeting $28 was given to Bro. Ridge, and the pastor was paid $36 on salary.

Dr. Whitaker was our help at Mt. Pleasant, and Bro. Abernethy at Cid. Each did excellent work and won the esteem of all who heard them. There were three reclamations at Mt. Pleasant. Both churches were revived.

The president visited this work on Saturday and Sunday, and delivered helpful sermons at each church.

As Bro. Andrews wrote last week, this charge needs much assistance. It may be that God would like for some high salaried brother to step down and take this charge and supplement his salary with the savings of former years. Would God be displeased? I think not. Wm. H. Neese.

Mechanic, N. C., Sept. 22.

Piney Grove, Uwharrie Circuit.—Our special meeting has just closed. We had a good revival. There were 15 brought back to fold of safety, and eight joined the church, while there were some that could not be reached; we hope that they will turn before it is too late.

Bro. Ridge did some good preaching and earnest pleading, and the purse that was given of $27 shows the high appreciation of his work with us.

We were also glad to have Bros. Trogdon and Morgan with us, and Bro. Trogdon, former pastor, preach for us on Tuesday morning. Our president preached for us on Sunday night at the close of the meeting and gave us a good soul-stirring sermon.

Bro. Neese filled his regular appointment at Piney Grove last Sunday, but owing to the protracted meetings there were not very many out. But we hope that the Sunday school may increase every Sunday as it has started and that every parent and child in the community may attend Sunday school and church service regularly, and then we'll see a live church and Sunday/school.

We were glad to have Mr. G. C. Scott, of Ramseur, spend a night in our home last week; he has just returned from over sea, has been in the army for twenty-seven months and in service seventeen and did not receive a scratch. He made a splendid record as a school teacheer at Piney Grove and as a soldier over sea.

With best wishes to Herald and many readers I close. Mrs. J. C. Delk.

Orange Chapel, Saxapahaw Circuit.—Am glad to report that yesterday was a real good day for us. Bro. Williams opened the doors of the church before preaching. Mr. Murphy Thomas joined the church; we are so glad to see him step out on the Lord's side, and come into the church. That is the greatest step anyone has ever taken, just to step out on our dear Savior's side and follow in his footsteps. Bro. William preached a good, interesting sermon. His text was, "Follow me, I'll make you fishers of men." I'm sure all that were there enjoyed it. After the sermon we had the Lord's supper; a large number partook. Our Sunday school isn't as good as it should be, though it is better than it was last year this time; that is some encouragement.

Our fourth quarterly conference is to be held at Orange Chapel church Saturday before the third Sunday at two o'clock. We hope the churches will be well represented.

Bro Williams told us yesterday that Sister Williams has been ill for three weeks. We are awfully sorry; we sincerely hope she will soon be restored to health. Reporter.

September 22, 1919.

New Hope, Vance Circuit.—It has been some time since I had a report in our paper. I had so much to report and such little time to report I did not report anything, and will not say much this time, but I want to say we commenced our revival meeting the first Sunday in September. Bro Powell filled his place in the morning and after the morning service Bro. Fred Paschall preached the remainder of the week. And I want to say he gave us some good talks. I am sure we had a splendid meeting. I think the church was revived as much as I have seen it for some time, and I hope great and lasting good was done. When the meeting closed we had made up a little purse of $132 to give him. Not because he needed it so much, but because we feel interested in him. Fred is a good boy and deserves everything we can do for him. I am sure it takes a true soldier of the cross to start out to preach the gospel at this day and time when preachers' salaries are less than they can live on and then some of them not get all that. I want to ask that all the readers of this paper remember him in their prayers. I am sure he will appreciate it. He is leaving tonight for Westminster, Md., where he will re-enter school. May God's loving arms be round and about him until he comes back to us.

Our Sunday school is getting on very well, but it ought to be better, and we can make it better if we try.

I will try not to wait so long the next time.

Reporter.

Philadelphia, Greensville Circuit.—We held our special meeting last week with Rev. H. L. Powell as pulpit help. Bro. Powell was with us until Thursday night and then our pastor, Bro. Morgan, continued night service until last night. We were sorry that Bro. Powell couldn't stay with us longer as everybody seems to have enjoyed his sermons. There were several conversions during the meeting. In appreciation of having Bro. Powell with us, the church presented him with about $40.

There will be prayer meeting next Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, sun-time. We will also reorganize Sunday school next Sunday afternoon; we hope to have a large number out next Sunday. Best wishes to the Herald.

Carrie Chambliss, Reporter.

Spring Church Circuit—Our pastor, Bro. O'Briant, was with us again Sunday night and gave us another good sermon. Those who do not go to church are surely missing something. We hope that our services and Sunday school will soon be better attended as nearly all the special meetings are over and there will not be so many places to attract the crowds. We hold prayer services every Sunday night except the third Sundays, and have preaching then. We are expecting to hold our rally service next Sunday night. The children are busy practicing their songs and recitations.

Mrs. T. B. Vassar is visiting our old friend and neighbor, Mrs. T. F. McCulloch, in Greensboro.

Right many from here attended the burial of Mrs Meadie Dimick at Spring Church Sunday evening. We extend our sympathy to the family. Mrs. W. L. Alston, Reporter.

—Bro. Powell writes: "They are pounding me with ham again. Bro. Hugh Paschall fell in on me with one and it is not strange to say that made us feel profoundly grateful. The Lord bless him abundantly for this kind act."

CHILDREN'S CORNER

THE WORTZFORD STRANGER.

There was great excitement in Wortzford, a little village so far away from here, among the mountains, that no record of it has ever been made upon the map.

That morning the king's herald passed through the principal street of the town, crying with a loud, piercing voice a newly-issued proclamation of the king.

"To my worthy subjects in Wortzford," announced the herald, "greetings. Whatever young man of your village shall perform, during the next two months, a great deed each day, will be admitted free of charge at the royal university. And, furthermore, after his graduation he will be appointed to a life position in his majesty's service."

"But how will the king know who does the great deeds; who will act as judge?" a citizen remarked, quizzically; standing before a small group of eager men and women.

"Leave that to him," replied Lizette Brahung, quickly.

"A king who is so wise as ours will find a way, never you mind."

That forenoon many of the young men of the village, boys you would call them, laid plans to accomplish some great deed each day of the two months mentioned in the king's proclamation. Such a chance as that was worth striving for: a course in the royal university, and then a life appointment in the king's service. It seemed almost too good to be true!

In but one small cottage that night was there disappointment. That was in the home of Fritz Bezac, a poor cottage nestling at the foot of an overhanging mountain, at the farthest end from the village.

"I'm afraid my chances for winning are gone already," said Fritz, gloomily, laying down beside the hearth an armful of logs for the evening fire. "I had to go and shovel out Granny Rolfin's paths, and then go to the forest to chop her some wood to keep her from freezing, and so I had no chance to do anything great. When I got her work done I was almost too tired to get home."

"Never mind, Fritz," replied his mother encouragingly. "Perhaps the king didn't mean for the contest for the great things to be begun today. Tomorrow probably—"

"But all the other boys did something great today," interrupted Fritz, soberly, "all of them."

An expression of doubt on the mother's face quickly passed away. "I think the king will understand. He is very wise, they say."

From then on Fritz tried to do something great, and again and again he came home at night disappointeed. Hardly a day passed but that some duty, trifling, many would call it, prevented him from accomplishing what he had planned to do.

"It's no use trying any longer," he finally concluded, when a work he had in mind had been done by Theobald Fosin. "Before I could do what I had hoped today one of the other boys did it," he said, laying his mittens on the hearth to dry.

"Granther Edmund wanted me to help him mend his sled so he could get to work tomorrow, and it took twice as long as we imagined."

"But you did a good deed, son, if it wasn't a great one," replied Fritz's mother, proudly.

"But I've so wished to attend the university," and there was in the boy's voice a tone of intense longing. "It's been the ambition of my life."

"The opportunity may yet come," said the mother, gently. "You are young yet, Fritz; there are long years before you. And who knows what blessings they hold for my boy!"

The days of the two months following the king's proclamation slipped rapidly by. And the excitement caused by the royal herald's appearance in the streets of Wortzford began to give way [illegible] eager expectancy.

"I wonder who will win," was heard on every side.

"It will be Theobald!"

"I think Throda Woned stands the best chance!"

Every one of the simple villagers had his favorite, but no one thought to mention Fritz Bezac.

Finally the two months specified in the royal proclamation came to an end. One, two, three days came and yet no message was brought announcing the name of the fortunate winner. Expressions of doubt were heard by many of the citizens.

"I guess 'twas all a joke!" declared Theobald Fosin, dismally. "And I did so many splendid things! Now, I fear, the time I spent in doing them was wasted. I might rather have used it for my own pleasure."

"He was just fooling us," and Throda turned from the little group and walked disappointedly away. "That's all the good it does, trying to do things noble."

On the fifth day after the passing of the two months there appeared in Wortzford a stranger looking for work. He was poorly clad; yet in spite of his tatters and rags there was an air about him that caused the villagers to wonder.

In going from house to house he would linger for a chat with the good-natured inmates. In this way he became, it seemed, personally acquainted with every man, woman and child in the village.

A few odd jobs were given the stranger by the more well-to-do neighbors, and this out of pity for the man, rather than because they couldn't otherwise have the work done.

Finally, as quietly and as he had come, the queer-appearing stranger left the village. No one knew where he went, nor had any interest in inquiring.

Three days after his departure again the royal herald was announced to be nearing the village.

"He's coming to tell who won!" was heard on every side. There had never been such excitement in the peasant community.

The royal herald pursued his way, uninfluenced by the crowds on either side of the street, until he reached the unassuming town hall. Here he halted his tired horse.

"Citizens," he said, "I come to bring the greetings of his majesty, and to announce who of your youth met the conditions of the proclamation I brought on my former visit. Fritz Bezac received the royal favor, having more than accomplished a great deed each day of the past two months."

The silence was broken only by the low murmurs that went from mouth to mouth.

"Fritz Bezac! I never would have dreamed—"

"The stranger," continued the herald, "who came to your village but a few days since, was no other than the king himself. And he made personal note of the many deeds, humble, though great in the highest sense, unselfishly performed by the boy, Fritz Bezac. Among them I may mention shoveling the paths for Granny Rolfin and getting her wood to keep her from freezing; caring each night for a whole week for Edia Thorzin, who was so ill that he couldn't move from his bed; taking food to Wolfwin orphan children; helping to mend the sled of Granther Edmund. These humble deeds the king regards as among the greatest things a man can do."

"To think I should be the winner of the royal bounty," exclaimed Fritz, when he once more returned to the humble cottage at the foot of the mountain. "I regarded those things as simple duties."

"But what can be greater, Fritz," replied his mother, drawing her son toward her, "than to do each day, uncomplainingly, one's duty!"

"Nothing, I guess," returned Fritz. "But I never saw it in that light before."—Gertrude Hockridge in Congregatioonalist.

THE OLD SELFISHNESS TREE.

Donald's mother was ashamed of her boy because he didn't want to give away his old red sweater after his grandmother knit him a new gray one.

"It hasn't any holes in it yet," argued Donald, "and it is good and warm! I can wear it to school for two months yet! Maybe there'll be half a dozen sweaters for boys my size sent by other folks to the place where the clothes are going that you are all giving away!"

Donald's mother was so ashamed, especially as Donald took off the gray sweater and put on the red one before he reached for his skates, that she did just as she used to when he was a little boy.

"Will you please sit down, Donald," she said. "I wish to tell you a story."

Donald had no time to listen to stories but he was polite, and besides that, he understood that a request from the queen is equal to a command, so down he sat on the edge of a chair and watched his pretty mother knit. This is the story he was obliged to hear:

"Once upon a time there was a tree in the forest much like our maple trees. One autumn its leaves were far more beautiful than usual when they changed from gold to crimson. Said the tree:

"'I shall keep these leaves for another season. I may never have any as beautiful as these again. If I keep them for myself, my green leaves will look all the prettier another summer with these lovely colors fluttering beside them on the same stem!'

‘‘Came the East Wind and the West Wind and the North Wind and the South Wind and tried to shake the leaves from the gold and crimson tree.

‘‘ ‘Why, tree!’ said the West Wind, ‘something is wrong. I fear you will not be able to get rid of your old leaves; I’ve huffed and I’ve puffed but I cannot blow your leaves off!’

‘‘ ‘I intend to save them!’ answered the tree.. ‘That is why you cannot blow them off! I shall keep my beautiful leaves!’

‘‘The tree told the same thing to the East Wind and the North Wind and the South Wind. They told Mother Nature. Mother Nature sent the West Wind back with a message.

‘‘ ‘Tell the tree that it shall have beautiful new leaves as usual when all the trees appear in their spring beauty; but now, let the tree remember that others need the old leaves that the tree is keeping for herself. Tell the tree of the violets and all the little wildwood flowers that should be covered with a blanket of old leaves under the snow. Tell the tree of the many little creatures that need her leaves for their winter beds. Tell her that the brown earth needs the leaves, and mayhap she will listen!’

‘‘But the tree would not listen. She said she intended to save her leaves! She might need them sometime and wish she had not given them away!

‘‘At last, because she couldn’t understand. Mother Nature visited the tree, but argued with her in vain; the tree would not consent to part with her leaves.

‘‘ ‘They are mine,’ she insisted, ‘I unpacked and unfolded them carefully myself this spring. They have no holes in them and they are still too good to give away!’’

‘‘ ‘What is your name?’ inquired Mother Nature, who saw at once that the tree was no child of hers.

‘‘ ‘They call me old Selfishness,’ was the answer, but Mother Nature had fled.

‘‘In the springtime, all the trees of the forest unpacked and unfolded beautiful little new leaves; and when the South Wind came to flutter them, he saw that old Selfishness had no pretty new leaves, and no banners of crimson and gold. Only little dried-up old rags of leaves covered her as with a dingy, tattered garment. The South Wind was sorry, but down came the North Wind into the spring sunshine, frightening the trees with their little new leaves. But these he passed right by, and made straight for old Selfishness, howling as he came, ‘Her heart was bad all the time! Her heart was bad!’ And without any huffing or puffing, he blew her right over.

‘‘And in all the forests of all the world. the old Selfishness tree has nevermore been seen.’’

Mother was bending over her knitting when she finished, and she didn’t see Donald slip off the red sweater. Neither did she see him put on the gray one, because, laughing as he spoke, he wrappeed the old red sweater around his mother’s head, face and all, as he said, ‘‘Take it, Ma, take it!’’ Then away he went, whistling.

When big sister Maud came in from skating she laughed as she said to her mother, ‘‘Donald owned up to us out on the ice that he gave you his sweater for our box. We asked him how he ever came to part with it and he said, trying to be funny, ‘Forsooth the maple tree giveth up her leaves in the autumn, and observing her manner of life, I bethought me that it were wisdom to flutter off mine well beloved sweater, that, sorsooth, it may keep some little kid warm because, while it hath no holes, it is whole!’ Now, mother, own up! There is something back of all this nonsense. What is it?’’

Answered the mother with shining eyes. ‘‘Of course there is something back of it! That something is Donald’s kind heart!’’—Frances Margaret Fox, in Continent.

WHEN BILLY WAS TARDY.

This is the story of the way a nail in the fence of Billy Allen’s garden kept the fourth grade room in the Lincoln School from winning the beautiful flag that the teacher and pupils had set their hearts on. It really was not the fault of the nail, as you shall see, for the nail had its own work to do and would rather have been doing it than making trouble for the fourth grade room.

The story of that nail goes back to last summer, when Billy was helping his father fasten some boards that had worked loose in the garden fence. ‘‘I can drive nails, father; let me hammer some of them,’’ he suggested.

His father handed him the hammer, and Billy did very well indeed—for a time. But after he had driven three or four nails he sudenly tired of his task and dropped the hammer to chase a butterfly that was hovering near. It did not seem important to Billy that he had left one nail driven only halfway in, and his father did not notice the half-driven nail when he picked up the hammer and went on with the work.

That was last summer, as I said before. Since school began there have been weekly contests between the rooms of the Lincoln School, which Billy attends, for a beautiful silk American flag. The room that does not have a single tardy mark for the week holds the flag for the following week. Some weeks no room earns the flag, and then it remains locked up in a closet. Billy’s room, the fourth grade room, has not yet had the flag once; but there was one week when it looked as if that room were surely going to win. When Friday came, it was the only room in the big building that had no tardy marks.

Billy lives very near the school house, and he had not been late all the term. It was no fault of his that the room had not won the flag long before. Of course he would not be the one to fail it now.

But on Friday morning he slept a little later than usual. When he dressed, the buttons would not stay buttoned and there seemed to be more of them than usual. Then he wanted an extra slice of toast and had to wait while his mother prepared it. By the time he was ready to start it lacked only four minutes of nine.

‘‘Lots of time,’’ he cried, when he kissed his mother and put on his cap. ‘‘I’ll go through the garden; it’s a short cut.’’

Billy ran down the garden walk and climbed to the top of the fence. The school yard lay just beyond. The pupils were watching, and they clapped their hands when they saw Billy coming. But Billy did not jump off the fence. He sat there and acted as if he were trying to take something out of the pocket of his trousers.

His mother ran to the door. ‘‘Billy, do hurry,’’ she urged. ‘‘It’s already nine.’’

The teacher in the fourth grade room came to the window and called sharply: ‘‘William Allen, do not sit on that fence an instant longer. The last bell will ring in a minute, and you will be tardy.’’

Still Billy sat on the fence, although it was plain now that he was trying to climb down. His mother saw that something was wrong and ran down the garden path. Billy began to struggle harder. There was a sound of tearing and Billy fell to the ground with a big hole in his trousers. Just then the bell rang. Billy’s room had lost the flag.

‘‘It was an old nail,’’ complained Billy, crying bitterly, as he climbed back over the fence and walked to the house to have his trousers mended before he went to school. ‘‘It had no business there, anyway.’’

But later, when he and his father talked it over, he remembered about the nail that he had left half driven; and the lesson that Billy learned is one that he is not likely to forget.—Youth’s Companion.

IN MEMORIAM.

McAdams.

On Monday, September 1, 1919, Mrs. L. H. McAdams was called up higher by the angel of death. The death of this noble woman was a very sad and sudden shock to her friends and loved ones.

Early in life Mrs. McAdams professed faith in Christ, and united with Hebron Methodist Protestant church, of which she remained a member until the day of her death, when she was taken by her heavenly Father from the church militant to the church triumphant.

All that loving hands could do failed to stay the icy clasp of death. Why was she taken? God alone can answer. This clime was too severe for a flower so frail; hence she has been transplanted into that garden where she can bloom eternally. She was the light and joy of her home; the comfort and consolation of a devoted companion, a loving and devoted mother to her children. She leaves a little babe only two weeks old, which we trust will soon help to fill the vacancy that has been made, and help to heal the broken hearts. Her cheerful face and loving salutations will greet us no more; but she has only preceded us into the blessed haven; there to bask in the sunlight of a loving Savior; never more to feel the pangs of sickness, the sorrow of partings, and above all, there is no death.

Besides a sorrowful husband, eight devoted children, two sisters and one brother, there are a host of friends to mourn the departure of Mrs. McAdams. The funeral service were conducted at Hebron church on Monday afternoon, by Revs. Bingham and Kennett. The large number of people that attended her funeral, and the many beautiful flowers that covered her grave, gave sufficient testimony of her Christian character.

Mother dear, yes, thou art gone,
  But sweet is thy memory still;
Thy task, though great, was nobly done,
  No other could thy task fulfill.

There is no doubt, we have no fear,
  But thou art now an angel bright;
Although we pause and drop a tear,
  We'll murmur not, for God was right.

We'll ne'er forget your parting hour,
  And the warning to us given;
And often pray for heavenly power
  To meet thee safe, at last, in heaven.

A Friend, M. S.

Samuel F. Coe was born March 21, 1841, died August 19, 1919, aged 78 years, four months and 28 days. On February 23, 1870, he was married to Mary A, Staley, who survives him. To this union were born four boys, J. Claude, Charles F., Samuel S. and Jesse N. Coe, and three girls, Mrs. Vesta Medearis and Misses Alma and Herati Coe: all of whom are still living. He also leaves nine grandchildren. He was a confederate veteran, having served through the entire war, and being slightly wounded several times. He was converted and joined Moriah Methodist Protestant church early in life and remained a member till his death. It was his grandfather, Rev. John Coe, who presided over the first meeting of Moriah church, which is the second oldest Methodist Protestant church in North Carolina.

In the death of Samuel F. Coe we have sustained a great loss.

Resolved, therefore, Since he was a veteran of the war of the sixties, he was also a veteran of the cross of Jesus Christ, a veteran of the Methodist Protestant Church, of her polity, of doctrine.

Resolved, That because of this we will miss his council, his example, his influence.

Resolved, That we hereby express our sincere sympathy for the bereaved family and relatives.

Resolved, That while his wife and children are passing through a great sorrow, that we as a church have been made sad.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be kept on record, and and a copy be sent to the bereaved family.

A. L. Plunkett.

De Marcus Elijah Witty, born February 16, 1869, died August 17, 1919, after an illness of over two weeks, aged 50 years, six months and one day.

He has been one of Moriah's leading members for 30 years. He accepted Christ as his Savior and united with the church when quite young. He was loved by all who knew him. He is survived by his mother, wife and one son. We know his life has been one of service to his God and fellowmen, and has made for him a host of loving friends who will miss him and his kind and cheerful way, but know he is at rest with God and believe we will meet him soon.

Since death has removed from us our Bro. Witty,

Resolved, That the church has lost one of its best members.

Resolved, That the community has lost one of its best citizens and neighbors.

Resolved, That we extend to the bereaved family, mother, wife and son, our deepest sympathy.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be kept on record, and a copy sent to his family.

J. C. Coe,
Mrs. A. L. Moore,
J. L. Lewis.

Mr. E. M. Witty.

In the passing of Mr. Mark Witty on August 17, 1919, at Dr. Long's hospital, Greensboro, N. C., Moriah church has lost one of its best members, the Woman's Home Missionary Society one of its supporters and members, his neighbors a true friend. He was one that believed in doing things well. Liberal of his means to give to every good cause, ready in sickness to help in every way possible; and his cheerful disposition and kind manner made him a blessing in the sick room. In his community his good deeds and loving kindness will never die. His encouragement, cheerful, loving helpfulness will be sadly missed in the community and church. Those who knew him best loved him most.

Resolved, First, That we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well, feeling that while the church and our Woman's Home Missionary Society has sustained a loss, it is his eternal gain.

Resolved, Second, That we extend to his wife and aged mother our deepest sympathies.

Resolve, Third, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our society, a copy sent to the family, and a copy sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication.

Mrs. J. L. Lewis,
Mrs. J. A. Kirkman,
Mrs. A. L. Moore.

Resolutions of Respect.

In the death of Mrs. Annie Yow, which occurred at her home on July the second, our church and Sunday school feels the loss of a loyal, valued member, one whose friendship was greatly enjoyed and appreciated by her associates.

May it not also be truly said that her sweet Christian disposition was ever in evidence?

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to the One who doeth all things well, yet may we not give expression to the love and high esteem in which Sister Yow was held, not only by the members of our church, but by all with whom she came in contact?

Resolved, That to the son and wife and children who are bereft of a loving grandmother, and to all of the other relatives we extend a heartfelt sympathy, with the added assurance that the members of Fairfield church and Sunday school share in the loss sustained by the removal from earth to heaven of a good Christian woman, whose life was worthy of imitation. May God's hand direct and his blessings ever abide with all the sorrowing ones.

Mrs. J. A. Gray,
Mrs. J. T. Suits.
Mrs. D. C. Marsh.

Hunter.

Emily Eudora Hunter departed this life September 8, 1919, age 53 years, six months, six days.

Mrs. Hunter had been in bad health since in the early summer. She was out on the porch when death struck her and she lived only about thirty minutes. All was done that could be done, but the Lord saw fit to take her from our midst.

She was a good wife and true and loving mother. She was one of sweetest spirited ladies I ever knew, and she will be missed so much.

She was married to C. A. Hunter 30 years ago. She was the mother of 11 children, eight of whom survive her.

Her remains were laid to rest to await the resurrection morn in Bethel cemetery, Alamance circuit. The floral tribute was very pretty. The services were conducted by T. A. Williams.

May the Lord bless the husband and children and help them so to live that they can say, I long to go and be at rest with our dear one gone before.

"We weep for her, no tenderer wife
E'er made man's fireside bright;
No more devoted mother love
E'er kept home altar fires alight.
And she is with the angel host,
With sinless heart and stainless hand,
Waiting to meet the friends to come
To that bright and happy land."

Written by one that loved her,
Mrs. T. A. Williams.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, our merciful Heavenly Father has seen fit in his providence to remove from labor to reward, after one year and nine months of suffering, our esteemed and beloved sister, Mrs. Emma White Cummings, wife of Mr. J. R. Cummings, therefore be it

Resolved by the Ladies' Aid Society of the Winston Methodist Protestant Church that we have lost a faithful member and co-worker; one who was ever ready with heart and hand to do all she could for the cause of the Lord and the advancement of her church.

That we shall miss her wise counsel in our society and that we are profoundly grateful to our Heavenly Father that we ever had her with us, and while she is gone, we shall cherish her memory.

That a character so pure and a life so full of Christian virtues cannot but leave a lasting impression for good upon all who were so fortunate as to know her.

That we extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family and that these resolutions be spread on our minutes, a copy be sent to the Methodist Protestant Herald for publication, and a copy to the family.

Mrs. H. O. Sapp,
Mrs. O. W. Hanner,
Mrs. J. D. Williams.

Resolutions of Respect.

Whereas, God in his all-wise providence has seen fit to remove by death one of our highly esteemed members, Mrs. John C. Murphy, and therefore bringing sorrow and sadness to the society and to her grief-stricken family, therefore be it

That we shall miss the inspiration of her presence and her cheerful disposition.

That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and pray that our Heavenly Father may be very near the husband and motherless children.

We are most grateful to Dr. Forlines and the young people of the Ohio Young People's Summer Conference for a No. 15 DeLaval cream separator. Dr. Forlines represented the Home and made the suggestion that this gift be made and the conference responded gladly.

We are also glad to announce that the Woman's Home Missionary Society, Brown Summit, has decided to clothe two children here and the Junior Philatheas of Mebane have already sent in one payment toward clothing one.

We can't understand why our report did not appear in last week's issue when it was mailed on Monday morning. We thought it a good one. H. A. Garrett.

I have not sent in report for some time. Bro. Smith's contribution from far-off Seattle was received some time ago, also Miss Whitaker's. I am very glad to report the $600 from the estate of the late Bro. W. J. Teague of Asheboro, N. C. He remembered the Children's Home in his will, which shows very plainly that he loved the Home and wanted part of his estate to help this grand cause after his death. We hope many more will remember the "little one" when their wills are made.

Wishing you all the best success, I am,

OFF TO COLLEGE!

By Rev. Percy E. Lindley.

This month is imprinting itself upon the souls of the young generation. This very autumn season will never fade from the memory of many a hardy lad and well deserving maiden. Parents, too, throughout the land are possessed of a peculiar consciousness these days. A sacred feeling, solemn, yet of pride, abides in their hearts. These hours are crucial. These days are extraordinary. They are the beginning of college days. September marks a specific occurrence, a point of turning, in the career of thousands. This is the time that boys and girls speak a farewell on the door-steps of home and embark for college. There be those of the number thus departing who will not see home again; others will return to find vacant chairs; while nearly all coming back will notice companions gone and school mates married.

True, it is serious, parents. The occasion reveals to us life in its earnestness. But unquestionably you desire, above all else, that your sons and daughters come to appreciate the proper significance of life. Now the college student can obtain such a view of life. When your boy reaches the college campus he has begun a new epoch in his course. He has turned a new page on which are pictured the richest paintings of his life. College spirit and association is the most wholesome, desirable, and refining that a young person can be placed in. It is just what he needs. Home has planted the seed of love and eminence, but it cannot nurture them there into full fruitage. A girl is of an ideal family, comforts, luxuries, pleasures and plenty, but she can never know the complexity of human problems until classed with a companion of hardships and want in the great quest for knowledge. While a boy "of sorrow and acquainted with grief", cast down and disfavored, will rejoice to find himself on equal showing with all men in the pursuit of education.

Of course when the last recitation is over, the valedictory given and the happiest bonds of friendship broken, the graduate, prizing his diploma, will not know it all. He will not have tried to learn everything. But by means of books and study he has let his talents grow, his powers unfold,—outlook upon life is broadened. His tools are sharpened with which to do the world's work. He has grown to be a leader among men, a servant of society, a living product of his father's rule and a token of his mother's love.

MARRIED.

Mr. Sam Varner and Miss Agnes Nance were married by the writer yesterday. The new bride is a member of our church at Piney Grove. Wm. H. Neese.

HOW TERRY USED HIS CHANCES.

Terry Dempster and a good many of the other boys were on their way to school. They passed the first fruit-stall at the corner. Terry said good-morning to the woman who kept it. He was glad Will Mace stopped to buy bananas, because he liked to look at her. Her eyes and her hair were so black and her cheeks so red, and she wore such big gold hoops in her ears.

She gave Will the bananas, and while he was putting them into his book-bag she held out his change. Terry took it for him. One of the pennies he shoved back across the counter.

"She was giving you a cent too much," he explained to Will, as he handed him the others.

"You are good at arithmetic, sonny," said Will. "A penny isn't very much of a mistake."

"Not if you are an Italian, anyway," agreed Terry, "and aren't used to changing money in English."

A big red apple had rolled off the stall and along the street until it had turned the corner. Terry picked it up and ran back with it.

"You might have taken that with you." said Will. "Nobody would have seen."

Terry laughed. He did not seem to think that Will expected any other answer.

Two or three days later Terry was playing croquet at recess. The game was getting very exciting. Terry's ball was in a bad position

"You can move it out from the hedge, Terry," said one of the boys who was looking on "Wait. Let me show you."

"Not so far as that I cannot," cried Terry. "That is very far!"

"Oh, yes, you can," said the big boy, easily. "You're all right now. Go ahead."

"It's more than a mallet's length," said Terry, measuring. "I was sure it was."

He moved the ball back six inches, and tried for his wicket. He missed it. He lost the game.

"Isn't it a pity," said the big boy, "that you can't cheat a little at croquet just for sport?"

"I don't think it is," said Terry. "It wouldn't be any fun if it wasn't fair."

"Don't you like to win?"

"Yes, when it's real," said Terry.

One day when school was out, Terry had got almost to the corner where the fruit-stand was. Suddenly he stopped short in dismay.

"Oh, dear! I'll have to go back! I left my copy-book. Miss Stone said I was to copy over at home the pages I blotted so much."

"Tell her you forgot it," said Bobby Price.

"But only for half a block," said Terry. "That wouldn't satisfy her, I guess."

"I guess not," said Bobby. And he didn't say another word.

The weeks and the months went by until the first school term was over and the second had begun. One Saturday afternoon Mrs. Dempster came home from downtown and hunted through the house for Terry.

"What do you think Miss Stone told me?"

"What?" aske Terry, who regarded Miss Stone as the most beautiful and delightful young lady in all the town.

"She said she liked to have my boy for a pupil. She thought the other boys were learning from him to be more honorable."

"I guess Miss Stone didn't mean me," he said. "I don't see how she could have meant me, because I can't remember ever being honorable before the other boys. I haven't had any chance."—Sunday School Times.

"I DID MY DUTY FIRST."

An advance was ordered on a stretch of front occupied by the Canadians. Following a heavy barrage fire these soldiers went over the top, and despite great sacrifice took possession of their objective. As the men went forward one of the officers came upon a Canadian lieutenant with a ragged hole in his chest. With a great effort the wounded man spoke to the officer as he bent over his body, "Tell the colonel I tried not to fall down on him. Tell him I think all the trenches are taken and that I did my best not to fall down on him." And then, drawing in another breath, with a final effort he added, after giving the name and address of one who was waiting for him across the sea, "Tell her I thought of her at the last, but tell her I did my duty first."—Front Rank.

A FORGED LETTER ASCRIBED TO CHRIST.

Three persons at considerable intervals within the last fifteen years have each sent us a copy of a letter purporting to have been written by Jesus Christ, and requested us to publish it in the Herald. The last request came a few days ago.

With all due respect to the person making the request, we must again decline to publish the letter. It is a fraud on the face of it, and we would feel that we were dishonoring Christ to publish this letter and ascirbe it to Him.

It is said to have been written by Jesus "just after his crucifixion," and signed by the angel Gabriel 99 years later and deposited under the stone at the foot of the cross.

What a collection of absurdities!

The letter contains threats against those who refuse to publish it, and promises "good luck" to those who keep a copy of it in their houses. We presume this explains why so many people go through the labor of copying all its eight pages. But it can appeal only to the superstitious.

It is true it encourages Sabbath observance and industry and plain living, but it contains much that in letter and spirit is very unlike the teachings of the Jesus of the Gospels.

The next time you run across the letter in your secular paper, pay as little attention to it as possible.

EDUCATIONAL DAY.

The Denominational Executive Committee has given permission to the Board of Education to issue its Educational Day program this year as a Christmas program. It is requested that the Sunday schools and churches, as far as possible, use this program on the Sunday preceding Christmas Day, December 21.

This is a new special day in the calendar of our church life, but it is one of great importance to the character of the church itself. Christian Education is one of the most important phases of church activity. The purpose of this program is to bring to the attention of the young people of our denomination the importance of education itself, the meaning of Christian education and the opportunity that is afforded them in our own institutions.

Great care has been taken to prepare a program this year that will be suitable to be used in the observance of Christmas. If it is not convenient to use it on Sunday it would be very suitable for exercises on Christmas Day itself. This program is featured with special songs, prepared by Prof. Charles H Gabriel. Christmas recitations and exercises of the highest order and at the same time has information concerning the great question of Christian Education in our denomination. Some of the conferences have planned to use this program in the interest of a particular institution. It is hoped that in addition to the proceeds realized in this way enough money will come into the treasury of the Board of Education to enable this Board to establish a new professorship in our Seminary at Westminster, Maryland. Perhaps the greatest lack in the Christian church today, in our own denomination as well as in others, is that of a sufficient leadership. More men for the ministry, more men and women for the missionary field is the need of every denomination. These men and women come from the Christian colleges and our interest in this vital matter should lead us to co-operate in every movement that has to do with the strengthening of these institutions that produce these leaders.

Remember that Educational Day is Sunday, December 21; that the Board of Education will send free to every church and Sunday school the Christmas programs to be used in observance of this day. Send in your order now or send for samples and begin to look forward to one day in our church given to the consideration of the great matter of Christian Education.

George H. Miller, Secretary.

CHILREN'S SAYINGS.

Rev. T. M. Johnson sends the following: "Some time ago our children went with me in the Ford to Weaverville, where I was helping Bro. Lindley in a meeting. When we arrived at the church Bro. Lindley had the congregation singing vigorously. On our return home our five-year-old told her mother that they were all singing in high gear when we went into the church."

—The Italian chamber of deputies has passed a resolution demanding that Fiume be made an Italian city.

—Last Sunday was a red letter day at West End church, being the second anniversary. Four new members were received into the church, making a total of 41, who have been received since the present pastor took charge.

—Revs. A. O. Lindley and R. A. Hunter will exchange pulpits next Sunday, Bro. Lindley preaching at West End morning and evening, and Bro. Hunter at Pine Grove in the morning and at Oak Ridge at night.

—President Wilson broke down on his speaking tour and had to cancel a number of his engagements. He is now back in Washington under treatment. He is still very "nervous" and restless. The task he undertook was too great for his physical powers. It is said he had the influenza while in France and has not wholly recovered from it.

—Bro. Morgan writes: "I am glad to say that conference has not asked Greensville circuit to do a thing since I have been over here, but what it has been done. The Herald is due right much credit for it.

"We are going to sell Ebenezer church today, and start on a new one right away."

New York Sun.—As to the union plan for "nationalizing" the railroads, nobody need lose a wink of sleep over the possibility of such a visitation falling upon this country while the national brain is not a vacuum and the national soul is not a disease. Nobody need think that it will be seriously considered in congress committee or on the floor. Nobody need doubt that the already abused and outraged American people now sweating traffic rates and taxes to pay railway wages would pulverize any government, any party, any organization that trled to press this soviet committee railroad program to action. But everybody may well grieve, everybody may be sick with shame, that at such a time as this, when the eyes of the world are turned to America for clear political light, for shining economic sanity and for sound business vision; when the eyes of the world are turned to America for honest, manly endeavor, for guiding moral example, brazen politics should spatter that bolshevist blot upon the legislative branch of the United States government.

A MOVEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE TO CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

There is another new movement on in the religious world of North America that is challenging the attention of all the Christian forces of America, and which must not be ignored by any denomination. This new enterprise of the kingdom is named "The Interchurch World Movement of North America."

No one has given a complete definition of the purpose and scope of this movement, but there are certain things that are plain to all. The name itself indicates the main purpose of this organization. In the name we see the suggestion that all the churches of North America are to discover the world task of all the Christian forces of the world. That in itself brings a great challenge to the united church. It is a challenge to face the truth, and it may well be asked—is the church ready to face the full truth about its task? No single denomination has machinery with which to discover for itself the full truth about the world's religious needs. It is doubtful, too, whether any single denomination would have the courage to face this truth, in all its significance, when once this truth is known. What no single denomination can do by itself, and that which no single denomination would have the courage to face if known, all the churches together can do if they feel the dominant impulse of the faith which they confess and realize the strength of him who, knowing the world's needs, giving them the assurance that all power was his and that he would be with them even unto the end of the world.

The first thing, then, that the Interchurch World Movement of North America proposes to do is to make a survey of the world's missionary and educational needs. It means to so visualize the missionary fields of the world that the church will be able to determine just how many missionaries are needed and just how much money must be provided to evangelize the whole world. In other words, to bring to the churches of America for the first time the full knowledge of just what their missionary task is. This, of course, is an ambitious undertaking. It would be supposed, however, that the churches that have just joined all their forces together in order to win a world war, giving their resources, both of man power and of money, would not hesitate to face the truth about their great spiritual responsibilities, and even venture to dare the accomplishment of that task in the name of their great Leader. It must always be remembered also that war at its best is a destructive program; that every dollar invested in war is for the purpose of killing men, and that every life given is for this same dire purpose. All this may be necessary, but all will be waste if it does not lead to a great constructive program that has for its purpose the saving of men—a program that is meant to make effective in the affairs of the world the great spiritual forces in the kingdom of God.

The need of such a survey as touching the foreign missionary field is apparent. It is true that every denomination knows something of its particular missionary field, and that every denomination has a somewhat definite missionary program, but no denomination knows all about the whole missionary field, and is therefore unable to comprehend the task of world evangelization. Moreoveer, it is probably true that no single denomination has an adequate knowledge of its own missionoary task, growing out of its own missionary field. As an illustration—who in the Methodist Protestant Church really knows what the missionary opportunity and responsibility is that rests upon our denomination in the fields given for our spiritual cultivation in China, Japan and India? It is true that our consecrated missionary secretary, Dr. Klein, has been trying to tell us through the years, but it is doubtful, even with all his earnestness, whether he knows the field in all the range of its opportunities and responsibilities. Our faithful missionaries also have been writing and speaking and undertaking to give us the information. Yet our missionary fields remain uncharted and unappreciated. What is true of us is true of every denomination: and, furthermore, no single denomination could completely and faithfully chart its own field. No denomination lives to itself in this missionary task of the world. Every denomination is obedient to a common missionary command, and all its work is toward the realization of a common purpose for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God in the life of the world. For these reasons the missionary task of every denomination is related to the missionary task of every denomination, and no true survey that will reveal all the facts can be made save by the whole church. It is significant of a better day and of the coming of the kingdom that the whole church, through a common movement, can unite in making this survey.

The united church of America not only has a foreign mission task, but it has a home mission task as well. In the field of home endeavor the Interchurch Movement has for its purpose the confronting of the church as a whole with the facts—all the facts—of the home field. Here again no single denomination is able by itself to discover all the truth about the home field, nor even all the truth about its own particular field of service. In America there are both many overchurched communities and many underchurched communities. This alone demands that all the churches face the facts concerning the work to be done in the home field. There are many other things in the social life of America that emphasize the fact that the united church has a task that is immediate in time and importance. This must be known and faced, and the forces, in terms of money and men, must be furnished in the interest of a Christian civilization, as well as in the interest of the church itself.

This Inerchurch World Movement of North America had its inception with the associated foreign missionary boards of the several denominations, but the movement had not proceeded far until it was clearly seen that the missionary task of the church was one, and was only separated into home and foreign departments for the convenience of administration: so the home boards were associated with the foreign boards in the work of discovering the truth and then of facing the truth with the purpose of meeting the needs of the world. Here a new discovery was made. It soon became evident that the world's Christian needs, if known, could only be met if Christian leadership was provided. It was already known that in America, with an ever-increasing church membership, there was an accompanying decrease in the number of young men giving themselves to the the ministry, and in the number of young women, as well as young men, looking toward a life of service in the missionary fields of the world. Always, from the very beginning of Christian missions, it has been difficult to secure missionaries enough to adequately man the mission fields of the various denominations. Where, then, is the human force to be found to meet the need of the home field and the foreign field, when once that need is faced in its entirety? The very purpose of the movement, therefore, and the need of the world as it was frankly faced, made it imperative that the educational institutions of America should have a place in this world survey and in this proposed world program. Education of the right sort is a missionary enterprise also and is a part of the Christian program for the world's civilization. This Interchurch World Movement therefore proposes to discover where the Christian leaders come from and to strengthen the forces of education in the interest of an adequate Christian leadership. This comprehensive survey, therefore, will include the educational institutions, having this main idea of discovering the coontribution that these institutions make to the moral and religious forces of the world, and of their financial needs in order that a greater number of leaders, thoroughly prepared, may be furnished for the realizing of a Christian program, world-wide in its extent.

This Interchurch World Movement of North America reflects the temper of the day in which we are living. This generation prefers to knows the facts, whether they are pleasant or unpleasant. It wishes to face the problems of life as they really are, however difficult of solution they may be. It wishes to know all the difficulties, however many of them there may be in the way. It wishes to know all the weaknesses as well as all the strength of the institutions and agencies with which it is working. No doubt the church will discover, and every denomination as well will discover, many things about itself that it would rather not face; and, on the other hand, will discover many resources of strength and many opportunities for service of which heretofore it has never dreamed.

This movement reflects, too, one of the most hopeful facts about the religious temper of our day. The church is sensing its real purpose. Its real purpose has always been the same, but sometimes that purpose has been obscure and almost entirely forgotten. The one purpose of the church of Christ is to build up the kingdom of God. In the light of that purpose, friction is wicked waste and must be eliminated. In the light of that purpose, it may be discovered that the very wealth and strength of the church has been concealing failure and neglect; and if that be true, there must be repentance. In the light of that great purpose, co-operation is inevitable.

One can not go far into the outlines of this Interchurch World Movement without appreciating the gigantic and overwhelming task that confronts the world. More than eight hundred million of the world's population are unconscious today of the spiritual power of the Christian faith. There is a materialistic spirit that has placed its deadening hand upon the very nations that have known most of Christian truth and power. There is a drouth of Christian leadership in comparison with the world's spiritual needs, and the change that has come about in the educational world in the last fifty years has made it increasingly difficult for the schools that give most emphasis to spiritual truth While the greatness of this task may overwhelm the church when once it is faced, it will lead to a new appreciation of the invisible spiritual forces of the kingdom of God and the new realization of the leadership and power of Jesus Christ. Eleven men faced an unevangelized world and went forth with faith and courage to their task. Paul had the ambitious purpose of bringing the gospel message to the whole Gentile world, and almost realized his purpose. It will be well worth while, in making this survey, if it brings to the church a new sense of humility and a new appreciation of its absolute dependince upon the spiritual forces of the kingdom, and a new consecration of its wealth of money and of manhood to the saving of the world. George H. Miller.

THE CHURCH AND WHAT IT IS, OR SHOULD BE.

No doubt you have heard people say, "If that fellow over there belongs to your church, I don't want to belong to it, for I am as good as he is and a great deal better." Now this may all be true; we will grant that it is. Was that what Christ said? Did he say he had come to save the saints? No, he said he had come to call sinners to repentance; so if Christ came to call sinners to repentance is it not the church's duty to continue this call?

Let us make a little comparison. Suppose this same man should become very sick, to such a point that an operation was necessary and he was carried to the hospital and on arriving at the hospital should find this same man was being treated at this same institution and possibly by the same surgeon. Would he say: "No, if you treat such a man as he here, I am going back home"? Or would he go on and have the operation performed like a sensible man.

The church is like the hospital in a great many respects, viz.: At the hospital under the skilled hand of the surgeon all those old sores are cut out and new skin grafted in, and that old poison blood removed and pure blood infused in its place and while you are weak from this operation you are watched over by those skilled nurses who know what you need better than you do yourself.

The church is none other than the hospital of God for the treatment and cure of all sin-sick souls. The worst cases need skilled and patient nurses to nurse them after the great physician Jesus has applied his own precious blood to the heart of the penitent to take out all the sores of sin; after the operation he is weak in faith and has to have faithful nursing lest he should have a backset and relapse into sin again. Even then sometimes he has fever in trying circumstances. It is our aim and purpose to cure these sin-sick souls, and there is but one way to do so, and that is to live right ourselves and teach them the way of salvation by every act and deed of our life, and then give them fellowship in our churches and throw the best possible influence about him that he may not be drawn back into the world and sin. The Great Physician says to bring them to him, for he can cure all manner of diseases.

So in the future let us be more patient with these sin-sick souls who come and join us, and let us apply the treatment Christ left for us to use; brotherly love, long suffering, patience, kindness, charity, and do not be too hasty in pronouncing the case an incurable one, for all things are possible with God if we only believe. Besides, we cannot know the inmost regions of the heart, therefore we must not be our brother's judge.

Peter, the most staunch of all the disciples, said he would never deny the Master, but he did deny him and cursed and swore and said he never knew him. Yet Jesus forgave him and made him leader of the little flock when he himself had finished his mission here on earth.

The church is the place in which to prepare ourselves and help others to prepare to meet the Judge of all judges, the Christ our Lord

INCREASE CAMPAIGN.

The Executive Committee at its annual meeting in July approved the proposed Increase Campaign and the Forward Movement Commission was strengthened for its work in connection with this campaign by the addition of the secretaries of the four general boards of the church.

An outline of the plan which will be followed in the conduct of this campaign is here given. The same stress that was put upon the Million Dollar Campaign will be placed upon this and the same active co-operation is sought of every church and pastor. The issues involved are just as fundamental to the life and work of the church, for both money and folks are essential to the progress of the kingdom. Now men are needed for scores of vacant pulpits, and for the mission fields at home and abroad. Future leaders must be found and trained for the work of the church Prayer lies at the foundation of the task before us. A day of universal prayer will be announced and all praying people enjoined to pray definitely for specific needs now so pressing and daily prayer is invoked for the success of the campaign in all its phases. The outline follows:

The Increase Campaign.

I. The program for the local church.
II. Its promotion.
III. Checking up the results.

I. The Program.

1. Prayer—League of Intercessors in each church—family altar promoted.
2. Survey of local church records to discover prospective converts.
3. Personal workers trained and with definite work assigned.
4. Increase of attendance on all church services. (Every-Member month.)
5. Evangelistic meetings in each church under pastoral leadership. Effort to provide help where needed.
6. Enlistment Day—day for presenting the claims of Christ upon young people for life service. This day the day of prayer for colleges, in February. Definite goals assigned.
7. Stewardship Day—to impress the doctrine of Christian stewardship and enroll new members in the Tithers' Legion.
8. The first Sunday of each month appointed for the reception of new members, with special attention to the young culminating in a great Ingathering Day on Easter, April 4, 1920.

II. How Promoted.

1. Conference Forward Movement Commissions; grouping churches into districts and placing chairman over each.
2. Meeting of Conference committee and district chairmen to plan the schedule and program for rallies in each district to discuss the whole program and get pastors and churches in readiness.
3. Local church committee in each church to assist the pastor and the Annual and General Conference commissions in working the program.
4. Literature and helps. Publicity through church papers, leaflets and tracts, some for sale, some for free distribution; Christian service flag; "God's Minute" for family altars.
5. Securing a list of pastors who will be willing to give ten days or two weeks, for expenses, to assist other pastors in evangelistic meetings.

III. Checking up the Results.

1. Pastor's co-operation card, pledging co-operation.
2. Results reported monthly on cards provided for the purpose.
3. Final and complete report to be made following Easter and tabulated in a report to the General Conference.

A JOKE ON "DOC".

The Red Cross doctor was examining a doughboy who had been badly wounded in both hands.

The boy surveyed his injured members ruefully.

"Do you think I'll be able to play the piano when I get well?" he asked.

"Certainly you'll be able to play the piano," said the doctor emphatically.

"That's funny," remarked the soldier, "I never could play one before."

"HOW TO MAKE YOUR PASTOR SUCCEED"—

Recently I saw Bishop Fowler's prescription for making the pastor succeed, and I am passing it on to the readers of the Herald as being well worth your serious thought. I omit the comment on each topic, am just giving the ten things he mentions. First, Hear your pastor; second, Back him; third, Pray for him; fourth, Pay him; fifth, Use him; sixth, Give him air; seventh, Support him; eighth, Encourage him; ninth, Recommend him; and tenth, Illustrate his gospel.

How important all these points are, none but the preacher knows. Many a sermon failed because the people would not hear it, so has many a pastor failed because the people would not back him and pray for him and pay him. And there are some preachers who are classed as mediocre men for no other reason than that their people have never really given them a fair chance to demonstrate their all-round ability. It is wise, proper and right to do all that we are herein exhorted to do, and we might add some few other things which could be done to the great profit of the preacher.

But the majority of the folks are not out on the business of making the pastor a success. They have other things on the brain. Too full of their own affairs to hear the preacher oftentimes; do not even pray for themselves, much less the pastor. And these folks need the pastor. They need the religion the pastor has, need to know the Christ whom the pastor knows, need to have the hope in their hearts he has. So the pastor who waits for the people to "hang" on his words may never get an opportunity to preach a sermon. He must be able to so preach that the people will want to hear him, to so live and act that the people will stand "back of him," will so grip their hearts that they remember him at the throne of grace. And as to paying him, the preacher who makes his worth known to a people usually receives his "wages"; i.e., he who serves faithfully, patiently his flock, will hardly be forgotten at the throne of grace when the members of his congregation pray, nor will they enjoy the "fat of the land" without inquiring into the state of the preacher's larder. It is well, all right and proper to emphasize these things to the best members of our churches, but the majority of our people will not think of doing these things, or hardly do them if reminded that they should be done. Nevertheless, the preacher must preach the truth, live his life, serve the people of his day, give his life up for the uplift of the fallen regardle s of whetheer he is appreciated or not. It is a dangerous practice for us preachers to fall into, that of expecting our people to make it easy for us to preach the gospel. Some will do it, and we will praise God for them, but we must do our best in spite of their neglect, their apathy, their failure to support us. The cause of some failures in the ministry today may be traced to the disposition of the preacher to wait for the convenient season to visit, to work and to preach his best sermons. So while we do recommend Bishop Fowler's prescription to our people they are ten good points—but to us preachers, I would say, do not wait for any of them to be done. It won't do to wait; you may never get started at all, if you wait. "Preach the word" whether they hear or don't hear, whether they "back you" or not, whether they seem to pray for you or not, whether they pay or don't pay. If you faithfully do this, your day will come. God will not forget you, and there will surely come a time when you shall see your reward.

LOOK OUT FOR THOSE REPORT BLANKS—

Before this is printed I will have sent through the mails a roll with report blanks, a letter form, etc., for the use of the pastors. Please look for it, it ought to be there now. Use those letters wisely as directed by my letter, keep the blank form until November the 10th or 11th, then fill it out and mail it to me. Be sure not to hide this blank where you can't find it.

BURLINGTON CHURCH BLAZES THE WAY—

Our Burlington pastor and people are wide awake. What has been accomplished there is really wonderful. The increase in church membership, the increase in their contributions to all causes, the increase of pastor's salary, putting this church in the same class with our Henderson, Greensboro and High Point churches in the amounts paid the pastor is a feat they can justly feel proud of. We congratulate them in this splendid progress and shall keep our eyes on Burlington for yet greater things in the near future.

FALLSTON CHARGE, Rev. J. C. Edwards, Pastor.

This charge is having the first year's experience in the present group. At last conference Fallston Charge and Lincoln Charge were put together, making a rather large and unwieldy charge for the pastor to handle. Pastor Edwards is to be congratulated upon the way he has served the work, preaching three times on Sunday, he is giving all the churches splendid service. He could not do this without an automobile, however, but even with this, it is quite hard work for him. This charge has done splendidly in pledging for the Million Dollar Campaign. They went over their quota more than four hundred dollars, about one-fourth of this has already been paid; most of the pledges are due in December.

And after getting a taste of the joy of giving, Knob Creek church decided to sell the old house and to build a modern structure. The frame of this building is already up and greater progress would have been made but for the fact the work is held up now waiting for the "milled material" before they can do more. About $2,200 in funds and material have already been raised, the building is to cost about $3,000. Those of our pastors who knew Knob Creek church would not recognize the place hardly, now. We congratulate pastor and people on this sign of progress and generosity.

More than $800 have been pledged on the new church at Hebron. They are badly in need of a new church here. We hope to hear that they have completed this work and may be ready to rejoice with others who rejoice. There have been 92 professions on this work during the year, with 55 accessions and some others yet expected to join. The pastor held all his meetings except one, I believe. More than 30 subscribers were added to the church papers this year.

Fallston Charge, as it now stands, is doubtless as strong, financially, as any rural charge we have. They will do much more than formerly. The pastor's salary ought to be increased for next year to at least fifteen hundred dollars and we are expecting this to be done.

Sunday there was a circuit rally held at Fallston with possibly 800 or 1,000 people present; three Sunday schools or churches had the choirs present and the afternoon was devoted to singing. It was a service the people seemed to enjoy heartily and such services can be conducive of great good.

The people gave splendid attention to the word preached unto them and we hope that the service proved to be worth while in the good accomplished by our visit there.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE MEETING.

The second executive meeting of the North Carolina Branch was held at the home of the president, Mrs. Geo. R. Brown. The attendance was good. Many things were discussed.

The "missionary share plan" will be used again. This will be explained when the literature is sent.

The societies will use a quilt plan for Miss Steele's salary.

The long promised leaflets are about ready. It is the intention of the committee to put one into the hands of every member of the branch. Please keep them and study them.

The new mission study book, "The Crusade of Compassion," should be ordered and programs made for the year. Would be glad to make programs for any auxiliaries. Can be bought from our publishing house in Baltimore.

The treasurer tells me we are very much behind.

Last, all money should be sent in monthly.

RULING THE ROOST.

In the Methodist Recorder recently the Rev. Arthus Hoyle pays his respects in kindly but truthful fashion to the type of men who are ever trying to "rule the roost." He says: "I once had a colleague who could not bear contradiction. He ruled the roost, as we may say. In meetings he was ever the chairman, even when I was in the chair. He had a lordly habit, very impressive, and a temper not too accommodating. He rode over us with all his banners flying, even when we stood up against him. I got into the way of beating the cymbals to enjoy his prancing. Dear, good fellow he was, save for that one quality; we would have lovely times together when he was in his right mind." And as we read Brother Hoyle's shrewdly humorous remarks we thought we recognized the man, for we have all met him, in Conference, in district meeting, in the official board, and even in the home, the man who could not be content unless he was "monarch of all he surveyed." And yet the writer declared he was "a dear, good fellow," and he had a lovely time with him "when he was in his right mind."

But then Mr. Hoyle goes on to explain this idiosyncracy. In the case referred to the man had been a missionary, and Mr. Hoyle says, "I can see it is not good for a man to deal only with those of a lower race and a rudimentary civilization; the more he has a will to lift and aid his humble flock the more his will asserts itself. He has to will for ten thousand folk, and the will becomes mighty. There is no will but his; that will meets no resistance, and anon it will not brook any." But the writer then bethinks him that he has noticed the same thing in school-masters "There is only one will in any school, and the school would not be a school were there two, or if the wills clashed." And so the school-master also becomes an autocrat, and aims to lord it over everyone, whether inside or outside the school.

And under the old-fashioned methods of running a big business, where one man's will is the sole law for hundreds, or thousands, of men, the same imperious disposition manifests itself, and outside the business the man aims to do exactly the same thing. He aims to be "boss" wherever he is.

And this spirit, whatever its source, is certain to arouse antagonism and to cause trouble both for the individual himself and for those who are compelled to associate with him. The dictator has had his day, and now when in church, or business, or state, he attempts to "boss" men, he is met by a spirit of rebellion which is certain sooner or later to break out into most vigorous opposition. The difficulty is that even when the dictator is right he is apt to meet defeat, simply because people resent his dictatorship, and many a good man has had the bitter mortification of being defeated in a most wise and laudable endeavor, and of afterwards seeing that same scheme carried to a successful conclusion by some one who knew better how to handle men. The day of the "boss" has gone and every wise man should recognize it.

There should be no "bosses." The world doesn't need them, and no man, be he missionary, schoolmaster, or business manager, need develop this objectionable characteristic. The fact is, that of two men working side by side and at similar tasks, one will develop this defect, while the other, although even more successful, will not develop it. It is never a strength, but a defect. The trouble lies not in the strong will, which can never be too strong, but in the failure to recognize the brotherhood and equality of those with whom we deal; in short, the lack of the spirit of Christ.

There is an error in the minds of many which confuses Christian activity with the spirit of Christ, forgetting that a man may preach like Apollos, pray like a saint, give all he has in alms, and even surrender his body to be burned, and yet be lacking in the spirit of Christ.—The Christian Guardian.

THE VALUE OF TREES.

Everyone knows how valuable trees are nowadays from a commercial standpoint for their lumber and other products enter into the construction of our houses and other buildings and are used for the manufacture of hundreds of things which we all need and use every day. The demand for timber is so great that prices are very high and have been for several years. This of course stimulates cutting and marketing logs and as a result the great forests that originally covered our domains are disappearing with alarming repidity.

The problems of where the future supply of wood for lumber, paper pulp and numerous other indispensable products is to come from are causing thorghtful men much concern. This matter of forest conservation is one that affects everyone of us for trees serve many useful purposes besides furnishing wood and other indispensable materials.

There is hardly anything more beautiful than fine graceful trees. Remove them from the landscape and usually only bleak ugliness remains. Their green colors rest eyes and birds and squirrels find shelter in their branches. They temper the sun's ardent rays making life more comfortable for man and other animals in the hot summer days and permitting the growth of beautiful delicate plants on the ground underneath them which otherwise could not survive. They break the fierce chilling winds of winter and help to make the climate equable throughout the year.

The roots of trees bind the soil of hillsides so that rains and floods cannot cut them into deep, unsightly gullies and carry off valuable plant-food to the sea. Trees lessen the damage of disastrous floods by preventing the sudden melting of large accumulations of snow on the first warm days of spring. Their roots absorb and hold the water from heavy rains at all seasons allowing the excess to flow off gradually. Thus the soil is kept in a condition favorable to the growth of vegetation and the danger of prolonged drouths is reduced.

Throughout the growing season the roots of trees are constantly pumping moisture out of the soil and forcing it up through trunks, branches, twigs and leaves from which considerable is finally evaporated. -Experts tell us that a grove of 500 beech trees in an ordinary season will take from the ground and dissipate in the air in this manner something like 20,000 barrels of water. It is evident, therefore, that forests are very important factors in the distribution and equalization of water in the earth and atmosphere.

The work of conserving existing forests and of providing new growths for the future has been undertaken by the federal government and by the individual states, but it should be be given a great deal more attention than it has received so far. In older lands than ours the cutting of trees is regulated by strict laws. In many cases no one is permitted to remove one until it is mature and ripe for cutting and even then he is required to plant a young tree to take its place.

Farmers and other landowners in America should be encouraged to study forestry in order that they may better appreciate the value of wooded lands and understand how to care for them. Everyone—even the boys and girls— who can do so should plant trees.

If we had our way most of the public land not specially adapted to or needed for agriculture—especially that from which the timber has lately been removed—would be reforested. When all our trees are gone we may find satisfactory substitutes for their lumber and other products, but no substitute will ever do from an esthetic standpoint and nothing of the kind can possibly take their place so far as conserving moisture and preventing floods are concerned.—The Pathfinder.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 12.

Training in Citizenship. 1 Peter 2: 11-20.

(Citizenship Day.)

Daily Readings.

Mon. Wise judgment rewarded. Prov. 24: 23-26.
Tues. Must work to excel. Prov. 24: 27-34.
Wed. Paying tribute. Matt. 17: 24-27.
Thurs. In subjection to authority. Rom. 13: 1-7.
Fri. Gentleness advocated. Titus 3: 1-8.
Sat. A prayer for Sodom. Gen. 18: 20-33.

Trained men and women are in great demand. Never before has there been such a call. Men and women who have been trained to do something, a definite work, are called for. It has been said "that there is plenty of room at the top," while, however, it seems that an innumerable host content themselves never to attain the top. Conditions make it necessary now for efficiency. Very seldom do you see an untrained man or woman accepted for a position of responsibility. If a physician is needed you call one who is skilled and in whom you have a reasonable amount of confidence. Likewise the child is sent to the school where competent instructors are employed in order that the child may be correctly instructed. The business man is sought also, who has a respectable reputation. And by all means a minister ought to be or rather must be informed concerning religious affairs, and he should possess a true vision.

Mediums for Training in Citizenship.

What is said in favor of the well trained professional man can be certainly said of him as a citizen. Good citizenship consists of well trained citizens, and citizens are men and women, boys and girls under the protection of a commonweaalth or nation. Some mediums through which this training in citizenship may be directed are:

(1) It seems to me that the home is the first place to begin this training. Whatever is taught the children at an early age generally clings through life. How true is it then, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." The instruction given at home is of greatest value.

(2) Schools are established for the purpose of imparting instruction. Through experts knowledge is given in the various fields of thought. Class-room drills and lectures are used to direct the eager seeker.

(3) Another means for the training in citizenship is by social life or society. The influence brought to bear upon the young life through existing conditions is great. Often the surroundings determine the course of individuals. Either the young man or woman is fashioned after his or her companions, or their associates are made to believe them.

(4) A very vital force is the training received through the church. The church stands for the moral and religious life of the community. The church is an index to the spiritual life. Wherever there is no church and Christianity is not taught heathenism flourishes. True citizenship consists not only of being a citizen of a certain nation but of being the right kind of citizen, having the good of all people at heart. Let Jesus be the true type of citizen and his acts be the true acts of citizenship.

Some Things That Mar.

(1) Unsanitary conditions hinder right training. Unhealthy surroundings have their impress upon the physical being. These conditions should be removed in order that the body may enjoy the pure air and sunshine.

(2) Impure politics are a menace to the young who are to replace the older leaders. Right principles and good motives should be exercised in politics, in other words, let politics be christianized. Read Isa. 1: 10-17.

(3) Race prejudice injures largely in a country where there are several nationalities represented. Due to this condition foreigners are sadly neglected, the proper training, and hence there are little groups of aliens not caring to advance the interests of the nation, but on the other hand become a nuisance.

(4) Lack of education in civic and moral affairs hinders the proper training. Too little is being taught concerning the functions of the state. Many times laws are neglected which carry a moral influence. Prohibition is an excellent piece of fine training in citizenship.

Begin Now.

It is said that "a nation's greatest asset is its young life," so it should behoove every young person to get as much training as possible in order to be of the greatest benefit to their own country and to their Maker. James Russell Lowell has something to say about training for the great deeds.

"In life's small things be resolute and great.
To keep thy muscle trained; knowest thou
when Fate
Thy measure takes, or when she'll say to thee,
'I find thee worthy; do this deed for me'?"

MARIA'S THANK OFFERING.

"Lady, lady, come back! She want you!" The weary Red Cross motor driver, just about to mount to her seat and hurry home after her long day of service, turned at the shrill cry to see the old Italian woman whom she had just left slowly descending the three rickety front steps of her rear wooden tenement, assisted by the neighbor of the loud voice. Her left hand was held as though to safeguard a treasure, and in it was a small package wrapped in a bit of newspaper.

Her bright brown eyes shone from the toil-scarred face, now alight with pleasure in what she was about to do. "You come!" She beckoned with a bony arm. She squirmed free from the neighbor's careful clutches as the worker reached her side. Holding in both hands the precious package, she laid it in those of the ambulance girl. "Me give you. You so good, so good to my man. Red Cross so good. You please take?" And, patting the girl with her worn, old hands, she looked pleadingly into her face.

"Oh, thanks, but"—began the girl. The neighbor whispered fiercely, "Take 'em, lady, or you make her feel somethin' awful!" Instantly the worker saw she must not refuse to accept what she knew must have been a sacrificial gift, and, opening the precious package, she disclosed three new-laid eggs. She was told, with much play of the eyes and hands and ill-concealed pride in such a gift, that the eggs had been produced by what she felt must be most obliging hens in the three-by-three hen-house standing in the scrap of a back yard that separated a dingy, forlorn, front tenement from the still dingier and more dilapidated rear, also that they formed the principal food of the bed-ridden husband—he to whom the worker had been "so good."

The origin of her "goodness" lay in the fact that the man was the father of a sailor in the U. S. Navy, who, when his son enlisted, had been quite able to support himself and his wife, but sickness in the form of spinal trouble had come upon him, and the boy, far away and distressed beyond measure by the news, had wisely sought the aid of the Home Service Section of the Red Cross. This seeking had resulted in instructions given the driver of the Red Cross ambulance: "Go up to the Bronx, get Tony's father, take him down town to the hospital and wait until his spine has been X-rayed." This had been accomplished after a tremendous struggle, in which the aid of a man in a nearby shop was invoked, to assist in transporting the invalid, throned in an old chair and smothered in quilts, down three flights of dark, sharp-turning rickety stairs and into the ambulance. Maria, the wife, had stood by, terrified by his removal from home, but reassured when the motor girl told her that the Red Cross would make Tony well.

The trip had been most successfully accomplished, and Tony Senior carefully replaced in his top-floor bed. The worker, in whose long day this had been but one of a series of such incidents, had been hurrying downstairs, intent on her home trip, when recalled to receive Maria's thank offering of three fresh eggs. These were given, she felt, not alone to herself as a "good lady," but through her to that great organization whose interest was to make son Tony a better, because a happier, sailor in the U. S. Navy.

ONE TOUCH OF NATURE.

Down the street came a wagon, loaded with meat and drawn by a well-rounded, well-fed little mare. Her steps became slower and slower, and finally, in the middle of the car tracks, she stopped.

"Git ap," said the driver, git ap, Jenny!"

But Jenny only turned appealing eyes toward the man on the seat. Behind him came the shouts and oaths of other drivers.

"Poor Jenny, poor little horse!" said the big, dirty man. "Is she all tired out?"

At the sound of his voice the little horse sighed a sigh of tired appreciation.

"Never mind," he went on soothingly, as he scrambled down off the seat and took her by the bridle. "We'll go right out to the side here and rest a bit." And he led her away from the crowd and stood patting her well-curried sides while she rubbed her nose against his face.

The other drivers moved on, then turned and looked. Some of them smiled. Others replaced the whips which had been taken from their sockets to hurry their own horses after the delay.—New York Times.

THREEFOLD DESIRES.

A man asked a student what three things he most desired. "Give me books, health, and quiet and I care for nothing more." He asked a miser the same question. "Money, money, money!" He next asked a pauper: and his answer was, "Bread, bread, bread!" Next he asked a drunkard, and his reply was, "Drink, drink, drink!" He asked a multitude of people whom he met on his way, and the varied answers were, Wealth, Fame, Pleasure! Then he asked a poor man who had long borne the reputation of being a true follower of the Christ, and his answer was, "I greatly desire three things: first, that I may be found in Christ; second, that I may become like Christ; third, that I may be with Christ."—Christian Union Herald.

HAVE YE RECEIVED?

The temptation to depend on machinery and plans and devices as ends in themselves and as having inherent value, has proved irresistible to many good men. But the church will never have world-witnessing life until it has Pentecostal gifts.

Those gifts are wholly at its disposal when it will claim them, or when it will yield to them. Its vitality does not turn on its organization, for that needs to be vitalized or it becomes a drag on its life, as a limb through which the life-blood does not flow becomes a menace to life itself.

Nor are the church's creeds vital in themselves. They become grave clothes binding it to a dead past unless they are vitalized by the presence of the Holy Spirit, whose function is to guide into all the truth. A living church can never be without a sense of the Holy Spirit of God, and the life of the church drags today because of the dim sense of His presence and directing power.

On the one side are earnest men whose thought of the guidance of the Holy Spirit is impersonal and vague; on the other are earnest men whose thought of that guidance is narrow and limited. Neither those who leave Him out nor those who refuse to see His working outside the limits which they have set can be the leaders in the church. The ultimate hope must be in those who yield themselves to His control, knowing in Him one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and accounting the administration of all their several gifts the working of that One Spirit.

A renewed sense of the Holy Spirit is needed for the empowering of the church. It is not simply the life of the church that depends on His presence; it is also the power of the church that depends on Him. Disclosure of the magnitude of the task now before the church is shutting thoughtful men up to rediscovery of the sources of power.—London Sunday School Times.

HIS CHURCH.

"The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him." How close this brings the Lord to us! He, too, has his secrets. Not every one is taken into his confidence. We reveal our personal and important matters only to those who love us and whose love has been tried and proved. It is just so—be it said in all reverence—with God. Why should we expect Him to take us into His inner sanctuary and unveil to us the deep things of His nature and work, unless we have learned already something of what dutiful, tender intimacy with Him means? And if we have thus learned, in some measure, is not such a revelation of Himself the very thing which is natural for Him as well as most precious to us?—S. F. Day.

WHAT FOR?

"I am tired of it all," said a girl to her pastor. She had been working hard to keep her young people's society together, and had found many obstacles. Now she was resigning her post, and telling her reasons for so doing: "The Lookout Committee doesn't seem to care whether we get new members or lose old members, and it has to be followed up all the time. And the secretary doesn't attend half the meetings, so the work falls on me. I am employed all the week, having only my evenings and Saturday afternoons free. I just can't keep up this double work, and I'm going to be asked to be released from office."

"What are you doing the work for, anyway?" was the unexpected question.

"Why—why—because I want to do something, of course."

"What for?" The girl paused and thought before she answered slowly.

"For my church and for what the church stands for—Christ." She paused again and thought a minute. "It makes a big difference, doesn't it, to remember that?"

"If it were for anything less," said her pastor, I would accept your resignation. But now when you think it over, do you really want me to?"

"No, I don't, now," said the girl. "I was so busy struggling under the burden that I forgot for Whom I was carrying it. I shall not forget again. Perhaps, too, I didn't make the others feel that the work they had to do was for Christ's Kingdom."

This young woman had grasped the central thought of Christian achievement, the fundamental reason why the thing she was doing should be done. As some one has expressed it, she had "learned to connect the universal with the particular." Her particular task was not a thing by itself; it was part of the Saviour's work for the world, His world. From being an enterprise in which only a handful of young people were interested and for which they were responsible, the work of the society became a world-wide concern, the interests of which extend to heaven's own border land.

Remembering the great purpose of any task is the only way to see it in its true light. The young man who is set to keeping books or to superintending a gang of workmen will soon find his work drudgery. But if he keeps the reason for his task before his mind and sees the big business that lies behind the figures or the task, his listlessness will change to enthusiasm.

"What for?" is a vital question. If a worker is bent only on being applauded or seeking petty power, he has no reason for keeping on when obstacles and discouragement come. His motives do not supply sufficient working force. It would seem that hard places test the Christian by probing beyond the job. Coming face to face with difficulties, the self-seeker turns back; but he who seeks only to serve God struggles on indomitably.

Most of our daily duties are tedious and commonplace. It is only when we view them as part of a well-rounded day that they take on a new meaning. Washing dishes and scrubbing floors are tiresome enough in themselves, until they are connected with the thought of making a home. Then the homely task is seen in a different light. "What for?" is a keyword to every life that is worth while. It reveals proportions; it relates values, and adjusts the whole to the proper scale.—Selected.

HOW TO TELL.

A lady advertised for a man to work in her garden and two men applied for the job. While she was interviewing them on the lawn she noticed that her mother on the piazza was making signs to her to choose the shorter of the two men, which she finally did. When the ladies were alone the daughter said:

"Why did you signal me to choose the shorter man, mother? The other one had a much better face."

"Face!" returned the old lady. "When you are picking out a man to work in your garden you want to go by his overalls. If they're patched on his knees, you want him, but if they're patched on the seat you don't."

Fifty-one dollars from Pageland! If we could repeat this a few times we would soon be holding services in our new church; we knew Pageland would help us, because Bro Quick was here with us some time ago and knows how bad we need a church, and what is better, we know that this is not all they are going to help.

What we want now is about three thousand dollars more pledged, and those who have pledged to let us have it soon as convenient. We expect all of our brick to arrive within the next ten days, and they will have to be paid for, so good brother, if you have the money idle, let us have it, as we can use it now.

Also we are still looking for your Sunday school collection.

Yours, in Christ, Atlas Ridge.

Rockingham Circuit.—Melton's Grove.—Sunday, 21st, 10 o'clock a. m., Bro. W. O. Capel and Miss Lizzie Sasser were baptized in Little River near Little's Mill. They are two of our new members here at Melton's Grove. After the baptizing we went to the church, where the Lord's Supper was administered.

This church has just bought a new organ for $129 and we are expecting a lot of repairing on the church before conference.

Pee Dee.—Our people here are looking forward for a great revival in October. Bro. Hulin is expected to do the preaching.

We have got our new carpet on the floor, which adds much to the church. The trustees have just had the church insured for $1250 for three years. We are hoping to have some better reports soon. James H. Troliner.

Saxapahaw, Saxapahaw Circuit. — Since our last report we have had the honor of receiving into our ranks six new members. We are indeed glad to welcome these new recruits into the army of Christian service, and congratulate them on the wise step which they have taken.

The Well Committee is now at work and we hope soon to have for our devoted pastor and family a real well of clear, pure water, which will be free from an offensive odor.

Our pastor, Rev. T. A. Williams, and family are spending the week in Orange county, visiting relatives and friends and attending the series of meetings which is in progress at the Ridge. Reporter.

Friendship, Fallston Circuit.—For several weeks we had been looking forward to the fourth Sunday in September, as that was Circuit Rally Day at our church. We were glad to see some present from all the churches on the charge. Three different choirs were represented, Hebron, Laurel Hill, and Friendship. The choirs assembled at ten o'clock and the service was opened by singing the song. "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name." The congregation joined the choirs in singing this gospel hymn. Following this we had two songs from each choir before the sermon, which was delivered by Rev. R. M. Andrews, president of the Methodist Protestant Conference. Our president's sermons are always good, but we feel that this was one of the best we have ever heard. If the people who heard him would put into practice the thoughts of his sermon the churches would be greatly strengthened. We are sorry that there was not room enough in the church for all present to come in and hear this wonderful message.

Dinner was served on the ground, after which the choirs again assembled. Each choir did good singing, which seemed to be enjoyed by all.

Since our last report, we have had some excellent sermons by our pastor.

Fairview, Cabarrus Circuit.—I was with this people last week. We had a glorious meeting. We were unable to be with them the first week, as we had planned, sickness preventing us. Rev. Mr. Wilson of Concord did the preaching from Sunday until Friday night, and we reached there Saturday; there had been about 27 professions when I went, and we continued the meeting until Sunday night. It was the best meeting I ever have witnessed. There were about 154 professions, with 28 accessions to the church. There were three things that happened in this meeting that it has never been our privilege to witness before. One of them was that on Sunday night of the 21st there was not room to accommodate all the penitents at the altar, a number of them having to return to their seats to bow. The second one, on the night of the 23rd when the invitation was closed, there was not one left behind, there being eight at the altar. The third was that the mill shut down during the preaching hours Friday night. Among the accessions were Bro. Ballard, superintendent of the mill, and son, Bro. J. C. P. Cochran and wife and their son, Bro Mack Cochran, overseer of the card room at night, and many others who will be a great help to our church there. I will say that I have never been among a bigger-hearted people than these are. Their hospitality can not be surpassed. They gave me a nice purse of $15 20 for our short stay among them. May God restore unto them fourfold, in this life and life eternal in the world to come, is our prayer. J. T. Sisk.

Gibsonville. —Our special meeting closed Sunday night with nine additions to church membership. Rev. R. S. Troxler, in eagerness and sincerity for the growth of the kingdom, preached the gospel in "truth and soberness." We are indebted to our friends for their spirit of helpfulness. The meeting was interesting. Music was good. The zeal and enthusiasm here exhibited we expect to carry over for coming service. May God's presence lead these young lives that were dedicated to him.

Next Sunday is regular church service. Miss Toshio Sato, a native of Japan, now a senior at Elon College, will speak at our church Sunday evening at 7:45. P. E. Lindley.

Stanly. –Had a good service at Porter Sunday. It was pleasing to see the large per cent. of the congregation who partook of the sacrament. This church has a bright future.

Elmer and Ruby Marbry are attending Bro. Reynolds' school at Midland. We miss them so much in the Sunday school and church services. We especially miss Miss Ruby at the organ However, Sister Fultz, who is always ready and willing to do, took her place and we are moving on without a hitch. Bro. Marbry, the new superintendent, is putting pep into the Sunday school.

We missed Bro. J. H. Snotherly the third Sunday in Sunday school, but we are glad to have a missionary in our number whom we can send out occasionally on other fields to do mission work. Few churches have a more faithful superintendent.

The expression of appreciation continues to come in upon us Mrs. Lucy Hatley continues to pound us with her fine fruits—the finest in the community. Also, Mrs. Chas. Hatley, Mrs. M. M. Furr, Mrs. Zeno Lowder and Mrs. Thos Hatley, with corn and potatoes; Mrs Chas. Harkey with a big lot of honey; Mrs. Wesley Hatley, Mrs. John Mason, Mrs. D. W. Sides and perhaps others whom we do not recall now, for a variety of good things for the table—I thank you all.

And now conference will soon be here and we are expecting to go up with a clean sheet. But I wonder if many of us won't feel a little embarrassed and just a wee bit jealous to go up there withour time-worn suits and be thrown in company with Bro. Alexander with his fine suit given by the good people of Love's Grove, and we wonder if he won't feel just a little vain? But no wonder, it is like those good folks to do things. And now for a good conference. W. D. Reed.

—Superintendent H. A Garrett of the Methodist Protestant Children's Home, High Point, N. C., was a pleasant caller at The Sun office this week. Brother Garrett is to speak before the North Carolina Conference this fall. Our people will be pleased with him.—The Christian Sun.

—The Albemarle cotton mills resumed work Monday after a cessation of eight weeks on account of labor troubles. An amicable agreement has been reached and it is hoped there will be smooth going in the future. Strikes rarely pay anybody.

Graham used a novel plan to increase its offering by asking each person to bring a penny for each year of their age. Many did not do it, but the offering was splendid, as you can see. If you want a little inspiration, visit Graham.

As we will be crowded for space I'll only duplicate the financial report.

In connection with my report I told of LeRoy Sykes's return from France and that he had been fortunate to secure a position with the Vick Chemical Co., Greensboro, that we had been honored by the presence of Hall and Ethel Brown and Bessie Clouse, who were the first children to go to Denton. It was a reunion of the four; sorry that it was not possible for the other three to be present.

We told of our delightful trip to Flat Rock on Bro. Hutton's field and of the jolly crowd from the Hebron Sunday school who picniced here and shared a sumptuaus dinner with us. They went back home and increased their monthly contribution.

Bro. J. W. Cartner brought his family on a visit and was so well pleased that he told us to put him down for $50 on the boys' building.

IN MEMORIAM.

Death of Rev. Henry Martin Neese.

Henry Martin Neese was born May 5th, 1876, and died September 26th, 1919. He was forty-three years and four months and twenty-one days old. In the teens he was converted to Christ and joined Bellemount Methodist Protestant church and from this time to the day of his death he was faithful to his church vows.

In his early Christian life he felt the call to the ministry and he did his best to equip himself for that work. He found many obstacles in the way, so that he was never able to complete his education. One of these was an aged mother whom he felt bound to care for. This made his work almost entirely of a local nature. In this field he served his Master well. His greatest work was done in the Sunday school. For a number of years he was chairman of his township Sunday school convention. In this he took great delight.

At the time of his death he was serving under a license as a local elder in the Methodist Protestant Church.

He was a member and a leader of the Junior Christian Endeavor Society of his church. He was also a member of the Junior Order. This order participated in his funeral service.

At his burial were Drs. Harper and Amick of Elon College and Prof. Riddle, editor of the Christian Sun, and Rev. H. S. B. Thompson. These men all spoke of Bro. Neese in the highest of terms. The esteem in which he was held was attested by something like two thousand people who came to pay tribute to the worth of his life.

His love for his mother and his home, his love for humanity, his belief in the dignity of man, his sincerity of purpose in all that he did, his ambition to be pure and good, his faithfulness to the church, the tragic circumstances of his death all these intensify the pain caused by his departure. May the sustaining grace of God be with his aged mother and the saddened home left behind.

His funeral service was conducted by the writer from the steps of Bellemount church on the afternoon of the 28th of September, and his remains laid to rest in the nearby cemetery. J. A. Burgess.

—Bro. H. M. Neese was killed on September 26 by the running of his horses attached to a hay-rake which he was driving. He was formerly a student at Westminster, Md., and at Elon, and was a local preacher in our church. He showed himself friendly and made many friends, who were shocked to hear of his sudden taking away. Bro. Riddle, editor of the Christian Sun, sends us the following account of the funeral:

"The funeral was conducted yesterday afternoon from Belmont Methodist Protestant church. Nearly an hour before the body was carried from the home about 500 people were unable to get seats in the church. So large was the crowd by the time the corpse reached the church that it was found impossible to hold the service on the inside, and so the pastor, Rev. J. A. Burgess, conducted the funeral from the church steps, an audience estimated at 2,500 standing in the church yard. The pastor was assisted by Dr. T. C. Amick of Elon College, Rev. H. S. B. Thompson and the writer. The pastor paid a very fitting and appropriate tribute to Bro. Neese. President W. A. Harper spoke of Neese as a student in Elon College. Dr. Amick spoke of him as a loyal and devoted friend of humanity and the writer spoke of him as a schoolmate, as a personal friend, and as a Sunday school worker. Rev. H. S. B. Thompson spoke kindly and affectionately of the life that Brother Neese had lived.

"It was the largest gathering that I have ever witnessed at a funeral and I doubt if placing the estimate at 3,000 would be unjust. Brother Neese's community showed the keen sense of a great loss by tears that flowed freely from both young and old. Indeed the people had gathered to bury a friend, and in the language of so many, "one of the best men in all the community." The Jr. O. U. A. M. had charge of placing the body in the cemetery. The floral offering was beautiful."

September 29.

AN INCIDENT OF THE GREAT WAR.

There had been a sharp engagement in a Belgian village, and the British troops had been hurriedly forced by great masses of the Germans to retire. In the confusion three Scotch privates and a corporal were cut off in the streets, so they backed into the first open door they came to. The occupants had fled, and they made their way up a long staircase, intending to find the roof and watch events from there. But it ended in an empty loft, where there was only a skylight beyond their reach.

"Better lie low for a while," suggested the corporal as they stood listening to the terrible sounds outside. The Germans were evidently burning, looting and killing. Now and again they heard screams and the discharge of rifles; sometimes an explosion would shake the building; while the smell of burning wood penetrated to their retreat. This went on for hours. The soldiers knew they would be discovered sooner or later, and expected no mercy.

Suddenly the corporal said: "Lads, it's time for church parade; let's hae a wee bit service here; it may be oor last." The soldiers looked a little astonished, but they piled their rifles in a corner and came and stood at attention. The corporal took out a small Testament from his breast pocket and turned over the pages. "Canna we sing something first? Try ye're hand at the 23rd Psalm. Quiet, noo—very quiet."

"Yea, though I walk in death's dark vale,
Yet will I fear no ill;
For thou art with me; and Thy rod
And staff me comfort still."

There wasn't much melody about the tune, but the words came from the heart.

Then the corporal began:

"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell, Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Fear not, therefore, ye are of more value than many sparrows."

As he read there were loud shouts below; doors banged, and glass was smashed. But he read on:

"He that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

He ended, and his grave face took on a wry smile. "I'm no' a gude hand at this job," he said, "but we maun finish it off. Let us pray."

The corporal stood, with the book in his hand, and the others knelt and bowed their heads. A little haltingly, but very simply, he committted their way to God and asked for strength to meet their coming fate like men While he prayed a heavy hand thrust open the door and they heard an exultant exclamation and then a gasp of surprise. Not a man moved, and the corporal went calmly on.

After a pause he began, with great reverence, to repeat the Lord's Prayer. That a German officer or private was standing there they realized; they did not see, but they felt. what was taking place. They heard the click of his heels, and they knew that he also was standing at attention. For a moment the suspense lasted, and then came the soft closing of the door and his footsteps dying away.

The tumult in the house gradually ceased, and soon afterwards the storm of war retreated like the ebb of the tide. At dusk the four men ventured forth, and by making a wide detour worked round the flank of the enemy and reached the British outposts in safety.—From the United Free Church Record.

A GOOD TIME.

It is a mistake to presume that time is to be enjoyed rather than used So many young people make this mistake. Some never outgrow it. Time, in its best sense, is opportunity. But opportunity for what? Is life to be one continuous round of gaiety? Is it to be all work and no play? Is it to be a never-ending game to beat the other fellow?

It all depends upon the point of view. The human butterfly claims to have a good time sipping the nectar of the world's pleasure. The transgressor claims to have a good time enjoying "the pleasures of sin for a season." The miser claims to have a good time laying up wealth just for the satisfaction of having it. The politician claims to have a good time seeking honor and office at the hands of his constituents. And the Christian has a good time in communion with God, and in the service of mankind.

Any good time fostered by selfishness is shortlived. A good time, at the sacrifice of principle, or the rights or happiness of others, is most apt to react in some disorder of body, distress of mind, or accusation of conscience. Much of the so-called good times are not good times at all. They are momentary and occasional fits of auto-intoxication. The senses and desires become abnormally excited. The evil after-effects of many a good time largely overbalance the pleasure that they afford.

The unselfish use of time is by far the best. The self-centered or self-motived life is a lost life. He that would save his life by fostering selfish interests will surely lose it in disappointment, failure and wretchedness. But he that would lose his life in loving sacrifice for others will find a larger, fuller, and sweeter life. The highest and most enduring satisfactioon is to be found in doing good.

There is a higher aspiration than that of having a good time even in the service of mankind. And that is the seeking of a good eternity. Time is opportunity; eternity is the harvest, or fruition, of earthborn opportunity.. The two are linked together as cause and effect. As a man sows in time, so shall he reap in eternity. And the harvest is always greater than the sowing. Many noble-minded men have chosen to have a bad time, from the world's view-point, in order to be guaranteed a glorious eternity. The Savior of souls "for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." The apostles chose to endure great persecution in order that they might win a crown of rejoicing. They had respect to the recompense of reward.

But there is immense satisfaction in suffering for a good cause. Paul and Silas, suffering in the stocks, were so filled with joy that they sang praises to God. Theirs was the joy of a good conscience, the joy of winning souls, and the joy of pleasing God. The servant of Christ is expected to have a good time under all circumstances. For "all things work together for good to them that love God."—The Word of Life.

BOB JONES.

It was the privilege of the editor on a recent Sunday to hear two sermons by the Alabama evangelist, Bob Jones, who is conducting a meeting in Charlotte, N. C. The attendance was large. The interest was great. The meeting was well under way when we heard him.

It is plain in his appearance, his utterance, and his movements that he, like most great men, has come from the ranks of the common people. It is equally plain that he has neither been helped nor hampered by any great measure of theological training. He has none of the arts of the orator except that of intense earnestness.

He does not delve into the depths of divine truth. Nor is he what you may call a superficial preacher. He knows the Bible and he knows men. He has correctly diagnosed the moral corruption of the age. He knows the remedy and how to apply it. He takes the great truths, which lie mostly upon the surface of the Scriptures, and hurls them with telling effect into the consciences of his hearers.

His denunciation of sin is volcanic. He actually explodes the fearful nature and the awful consequences of sin. He reminds you of a pent-up volcano that can't emit its contents fast enough. And yet at times he is as tender as a woman and as persuasive as an apostle. In a word, he is a great power of God, destined, we think, to contribute largely to the moral uplift of the present generation.—The Word of Life.

A New Yorker tells of his sojourn at a certain hotel in the Carolina mountains. At about eight in the morning he was aroused from a sound slumber by a knocking on his door. "What is it?" he shouted. "Telegram fo' you, boss," replied the darky on the other side of the door. "Will you open the door?" The New Yorker was angered by this. "I will not!" he yelled back. "Can't you slip it under the door?" "No, boss," was the response; "it's on a tray.—Lippincott's,

"What's the idea of sitting in the barn here all by yourself?"

"Well," answered Farmer Corntossel, "if the summer boarders aren't playin' jazz on the phonograph they're quarrelin' over the league of nations, so I'm lingerin' out here with the cattle and restin' my mind."—Washington Star.

"How did your husband's gardening turn out?"

"Not well so far," responded the serious woman. "The preliminary outdoor work gave him such an appetite that he ate the potatoes instead of planting them."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

GOD'S CONSTANT CARE.

The fact that God cares for me is a constant comfort. Money cannot buy that fact and that experience. My life is a proof of the promises of God. What a variety of experiences one has on the way from the cradle to the grave, and yet all the way the Lord leads and blesses better than we can plan for ourselves. I survey the future with calm confidence, born of the knowledge of His love and care. "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life."

The Ahava river prayer meeting, led by Ezra, was the finest sort of confession of faith, while the four months' journey, safely ended, proved that faith is the victory. "He is able to deliver." Both Abraham and I can bank on the promise, "I am thy shield, and thy exceeding great reward." Angels and chariots will compass me day and night. The pillar of cloud by day and fire by night is for all the people of God.

Oh, men of the world, you may stumble on, if you will in the darkness of unbelief, but Enoch and I will walk with God, who says, "Fear not, I am with thee all the days of thy life. I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "He that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep." "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee because he trusteth in Thee."—W. H. Jordan, in Banner.

AN INSIDIOUS DANGER.

The insidiousness of the temptation to self-complacency and self-assertion of superior attainments in Christian experience demands prayerful watchfulness and humble diligence on the part of all those upon whom God has so richly poured out his grace. The knowledge that "puffeth up" needs to be repudiated as fatally subversive of the charity that "edifieth." "If any man thinketh that he knoweth anything he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know." Entire sanctification, like humility, is "such a delicate virtue as only to mention it, and it is gone." By his profession and boastful defense of his integrity, Job greatly displeased God, for which offense he afterwards "abhorred himself and repented in dust and ashes." Moses was not permitted to enter the promised land, because he ascribed to himself rather than to God the power to bring water out of the rock. And the chief motive upon which hinged our Lord's temptation was the consciousness of His sonship; and He was urged to assert at once His divine prerogative, by declaring His sovereignty over nature, by establishing universal empire, and by exploiting the goodness and love of the Father, for the purpose of advancing himself before an admiring world.

The following selections from an article published in "Salvation" are apropos:

"The peculiar sort of deadlock to which the higher religious aspirations and experiences seem to obtain may usually be found attended—from the nature of the case—by a peculiar phase of self-consciousness. A soul possessed by a burning desire to realize a perfectly consecrated existence cannot help noticing a contrast between its own endeavor and the lamentable indifference or professed Christians in general. Is it possible for this self-consciousness not to be in some degree self-complacent, or at least self-congratulatory? Again, in such cases one feels, of course, mightily constrained to hold up the standard accepted, and by all means to influence and exhort others to accept the same. The performance of this duty becomes in effect, at least in one's secret consciousness, a holding up of one's own example to be followed. How necessary it must be, then, to shun all mention of self (unless in confession of shortcoming) lest this unfortunate consciousness of contrast with others, which the right-minded Christian strives to suppress and mortify, should rise up instead, even to an impudent swell of spiritual pride! And yet, can it be believed that the serpent who beguiled the sinless pair in Paradise by his subtlety could so insinuate himself, unrecognized, into the very council of the "higher Christian life" as to move and carry a sort of edict in the name of Jesus that every one systematically "testify" and praise the Lord everywhere concerning all that grace has done for him, especially in the attainment of superior holiness! If a word can be found in the Bible in favor of such exploitation of personal grace, let us be careful how we condemn it. But, to "let your light shine" is not to call attention to it, no, not for any purpose whatever; quite the contrary. That only smirches it; and since all profession of holiness or virtue, however derived, is abhorrent to the purest instincts we know and to the whole tenor of Christ's example and teachings, it seems necessary to pronounce this artificial scheme of promoting holiness by proclaiming in our own persons the proof of its attainability, to be a most subtle device of the adversary of holiness to discredit it and to neutralize the very attainment itself. . . . Is not self-unconsciousness the essential of that child-like simplicity in goodness which alone is greatness in the kingdom of heaven? The true humility to which all faith and love and spiritual power are possible is more than modesty and meekness, more than any grace upon which it is possible to congratulate ourselves, or be congratulated, for of such it is possible to be proud; it is childlike unconsciousness; and let no man flatter himself that he has attained true holiness until he has forgotten all about his holiness. We may hope, by prayer and self-discipline thus specially directed, to be enabled to approach nearer, as far as our mental infirmity and unfavorable surroundings here will allow, to this divinely-taught ideal of the grace of God."—The Word of Life.

INCREASE OF LAWLESSNESS.

Within the past week, startling evidences of a spirit of lawlessness in our own land have presented themselves in the pages of the daily papers.

In Omaha, Nebraska, a negro charged with rape was taken from jail and hanged by a mob which also to accomplish its purpose set fire to the courthouse and hanged the mayor of the city. Against the last named atrocity some of the crowd protested and the mayor was soon taken down and hurried to a hospital where his life was saved. The fire loss is said to have been a million and a half dollars.

In Alabama, two negroes were put to death by a mob, although the men had been arrested and were being held for trial.

From Arkansas comes the report that armed negroes met in a church and fired on three men who happened to stop nearby to repair an automobile tire. This brought on a race conflict, the end of which is not yet seen.

All this makes very ugly reading. We report it to show the prevalence of an unchristian and savage spirit that possesses men of different races.

Good citizens should throw all the weight of their influence against lynch law and mob rule. Even when justice is done, it is not done by the constituted authorities and very often a mob wreaks its vengeance upon an innocent party and allows the guilty one to escape.

—Pennsylvania once passed a law declaring owls a nuisance and offering a bounty for their slaughter, but rats and mice increased so prodigiously that the law was rescinded and owls placed under state protection.

—Mrs. Josephine McCracken is the oldest newspaper woman in the United States. At the age of 80 she still gathers news for a daily at Santa Cruz, California. She is called "the savior of the sequoias" for it was by her efforts that the giant redwoods were saved. She also exercised national influence for the protection of birds.

—German soldiers acucsed of crimes while occupying French territory are now arriving at French prisons. Among them is Gen. Zolner, who ordered the deportation of young women at Lille.

—A new form of street car strike has appeared in New Jersey. At Camden, Collingswood and Woodbury, where increased fares and the Zone system were introduced by the traction companies, the public went on strike. Cars ran, but no passengers boarded them. Public meetings pledged whole communities to the boycott.

—A British physician has been fined £25 for giving apples to German prisoners of war at work near his home. His defense was that the war being over he wanted to show a little brotherly love.

—Although the great British figures of the war have all received monetary rewards, varying from $500,000 for Sir Douglas Haig, to $50,000 for Sir W. Robertson, Lloyd George spurned the suggestion that he be rewarded also.

—An English girl has been fined $5 for writing love notes to a German prisoner.

PURPOSEFUL READING OF THE BIBLE.

If we read the Bible aright, we read a book which teaches us to go forth and do the work of the Lord; to do the work of the Lord in the world as we find it; to try to make things better in this world, even if only a little better, because we have lived in it. That kind of work can be done only by the man who is neither a weakling nor a coward; by the man who in the fullest sense of the word is a true Christian, like Great Heart, Bunyan's hero. We plead for a closer and wider and deeper study of the Bible, so that our people may be in fact as well as in theory "doers of the word and not hearers only."—Theodore Roosevelt.

A SONG IN FRANCE.

Zenith McQueen stood looking down into the dismal depth of the river that flowed beneath the window, then away into the gathering darkness.

“Twenty-three,” she murmured, half unconsciously.

“Beg pardon?” said the young officer who was sitting in the rattan chair near by.

“O!” she smiled. “I was just thinking of the weather. It has rained twenty-three days. and the sun hasn’t shone once. I wonder if it’s always that way in France?”

“I guess the winters are all about like that,” smiled the officer. “But don’t forget we’re to have the party tonight. That will be great! And it’s so bright in here with all the windows camouflaged, it quite keeps out the thought of night and rain. Things get real cheerful. You won’t miss it will you? O, by jove! Of course you won’t, for it’s being given in your honor.”

Zenith blushed a bit and smiled her thanks. Then she walked away to another part of the room, and the officer turned again to his magazine.

Once she had seated herself and tried to forget the rain, the passing months came trooping back to depress her. It has been a hard day. Hospitals were always hardest of all for her. She had sung in the hospital in the forenoon, and had shaken hands with every soldier afterward and added a cheerful word for good measure; then she had been rushed off to the “woods camp” to sing for the boys at mess hour. The roads were half muddy and half frozen. The crazy old car which had once been run into a tree and had its steering gear bent, had shot from one side of the road to the other, and had threatened to turn driver and passengers into the ditch. The drizzle of rain had reached the stanch hearts of the soldiers, and they had not responded to the appeal of her songs, as soldiers had been wont to do. And now her mind went back to the months of dreary traveling from post to post. Sleeping on hard beds, traveling in unheated, unlighted cars, often eating what poor hotels and cafes had to offer, she had lived “a hard life.” She had come to France to do her bit for the soldiers, but she felt that her courage was slipping from her; that soon she would be obliged to ask the Association to send her back to America. The soldiers had called her the “American nightingale in France,” but what use is the nightingale if the song is gone from her heart?

And then came to her for the thousandth time the thought of that bitterest disappointment of all: Her brother, Tom, her only brother, must be over here somewhere, and she had so hoped to find him. He had run away four years before; lured by the call of the wild. He was sixteen then, now he was twenty. He had never written home. Perhaps he was ashamed. Who could tell?

And where else would he be but in France? Brave, fearless, headstrong, loyal Tom would be nowhere, if not in the army at a time like this. Her father was dead now, and her mother was heart-broken with neither husband nor son. She had thought she must find him. First, she had sung in the camps eagerly expectant. He would be stepping forth after concert to greet her some of these times. But now she had given up hope. She had sung in almost every camp in France.

She buried her chin in her hands and gazed once more into the dark depth of the river. But someone was speaking to her.

“Beg pardon,” said a gruff young voice, “but are you Miss McQueen?”

A young soldier stood at attention. She arose and smiled faintly as she nodded assent. For the moment her heart was cold. Probably wants you to sing somewhere tonight and miss the party, something was saying to her, don’t you go!

The soldier’s garments were dripping. His shoes were gray and soggy with mud; his captain’s hat drooped like the feathers of a bird in the rain.

“Thanks,” he said awkwardly. “Doc Riddle said you was in here. He said he thought you’d go.”

Zenith shivered. The voice inside of her was right. He wanted her to go somewhere and she was so tired! She wanted so much to pend a cozy evening where the cold and the darkness and damp were all shut out!

“Go? Where to?” She smiled in spite of herself at the soldier’s simple ways.

“Why, you know—you know—” the boy stammered. “You know we thought mebby you’d go out and give us a concert. You see,’ he ran on eagerly, “you see we’ve been in France five months and we haven’t had a concert in all that time. Engineers, you know, keep moving around all the time and there hain’t many of us. Just one company, and we hain’t had a movie or anything, and most of the boys hain’t seen an American lady in all that time. And they thought they’d like to if mebby you’d go out and sing for them. We’re movin’ again in a day or two, and our things are all gone on the trucks, but there’s an empty barracks out there and we’ve sort of rigged out a stage out of some sections of flooring and there ain’t any lights to speak of. But one of the boys rigged out a spot light out of an old truck lamp, and mebby it won’t matter much if you can’t see us, just so we can see you, will it?” The boy paused breathless, looking his concern.

“I don’t know as it will.” The girl smiled frankly now. The boy was so young and so eager! “But how am I to go? Will you take me out?”

The boy grinned oddly, then looked down at his shoes. “I walked. But it’s only about ten miles, and Doc Riddle, I guess that’s what they called him, said he’d bring you out.”

“Doc Riddle!” The girl gasped. Doc Riddle, as the boys fondly called him, was a young clergyman who had left his wife ond children and a devoted parish to come to France to serve the boys for the Association. and because he was an expert at driving “lame duck” cars, he had been driving them sixteen hours a day, and only a half hour ago she had left him eating his supper. He had had no dinner and had been going since dawn. And still he had said he would go out in the rain again!

“If Mr. Riddle will take me, I’ll go,” she said straightening up and drawing a resolute breath.

“O Miss McQueen,” said a voice at her elbow, “you’re not going to miss our party tonight, are you? The fellows would be awfully disappointed.” It was the young officer she had spoken to a few moments before.

For a moment her purpose swerved. Before her flashed the glowing lights and all the gay merriment of a settled camp. But again she saw the boy before her, dripping still with the cold rain, his shoes standing in puddles on the floor, and she saw, too, in a vision the unfurnisheed barracks and the eager faces of men in dull brown khaki—the men who had not had a concert for five months and were always moving, moving. Moving! Did she not know what that meant?

“I’m afraid I’ll have to,” she said apologetically. “You see,” she smiled, it’s one of the ‘ten lost tribes,’ I guess; anyway, they’re engineeres and haven’t had even a movie for five months.”

The young officer showed his disappointment, but like a good soldier, he saluted and stood at attention as she passed him and went on her way to prepare for the journey.

The ride to the engineer’s camp was all that it promised to be. The car skidded from side to side of the road, while the girl on the springless side-seat gripped the side for support till her muscles ached. Twice the hobnails, lost from soldier’s shoes in the road, pierced the tire casing and a tire squashed out, allowing the car to skid about worse than before. These times were followed by work in the dark by “Doc” Riddle and the young soldier. But at last, the car stopped before something that loomed in the dark, and “Doc” Riddle, in a cheerful voice, said, “Here we are!”

A moment later Zenith plunged one foot deep in a half frozen mud-hole and felt the mud ooze in over the tops of her shoes. She gave a little cry of consternation, and sprang to one side only to bury the other foot in a deeper puddle. “Could anything be worse!” she thought to herself! But she had determined to bring a cheerful message to the boys out there by the side of the road, so she made the best of her way to the barracks.

The place, which was not large, was crowded with dusky forms. These moved to one side as they were told that the entertainer had arrived, and the girl passed through their midst toward the improvised platform. Here in one corner she removed her dripping raincoat and smoothed her hair as best she could. Then there was a flash of light from the improvised spot light, and in another moment she stood before them. There was a moment’s hesitation, then the silence of expectancy was rent by the loud cheering of the boys. But before the cheering there had come a gasp from one corner of the room. Only a few heard it. None could locate it in the darkness.

After the cheering there followed a moment so silent that the drip, drip of the rain might be heard. Then, in her rich, clear voice, the girl began to sing:

“O, my laddie!”

The boys crowded close and hung on every word. They had not heard a woman of their own land speak, nor seen her smile for a long five months, and here was one of their very best. They applauded again and again as she sang. They shouted in boyish glee:

"Give us another, Miss! Another! Another!"

But there was one boy who stood a little behind the rest, and if one had had the light to see, he might have caught a tear trickling down his cheek. And at last the moment came. She was singing, "Mother of Mine."

Clear and strong her voice came out, "Mother of mine, Mother of mine." And in it there seemed a note of tenderness such as there had not been in the other songs. The boys were strangely still as she sang. But suddenly, from one corner of the room, a clear, strong tenor voice joined in:

"Mother of mine, Mother of mine."

For a moment the girl's voice wavered. It seemed to those who stood close that she swayed, turned white, and was about to faint, but instantly her voice rang out again clear and strong:

"Mother of mine, Mother of mine!"

Once she had regained her poise there was a wonderful transformation in the face of the girl. Wearied and a bit heart-sick had seemed that face of hers, in spite of all her effort to conceal her feelings. But now as she sang on, with the strong young tenor voice joining hers in perfect time, her face was lighted with a joy no roughest soldier could fail to detect, and in her voice there was a note of peace and joy such as had never before been heard on land or sea.

And if the boys could have known it, she was far, far from them, thousands of miles over the sea, in a little vine-clad cottage where a brook bubbled as it ran on its way and where the great pines murmured unceasingly. There where they had been happy, just four, father, mother, daughter, and son.

But suddenly the song ceased. The boyish tenor voice had wavered at the end, and the song closed with something very like a sob. Then the girl stood there all silent and expectant, and yet with a look half of fear and doubt in her face, as if dreading that the dream might not come true. She might have judged the tenor voice wrongly; there might be a tenor like it somewhere in the world.

But now her eager face lighted, her lips trembled. Someone was crowding his way through the close-packed mass of soldiers. But perhaps, after all, it was just the singer, some singer who was making so bold as to come forward and offer to sing with her. They often did that and they had been welcome, too. But this singer? O, how wonderfully, wonderfully welcome he would be, if only—

But here he was standing up before her. A tall, sturdy, clean-faced, splendid soldier with the insignia of a sergeant on his sleeve. Ah, yes, he had changed, but yes it was Tom! And in an instant she found herself in his arms crying softly:

"O Tom! Tom! Tom!"

And the soldiers? They did not know what kind of a pantomime was being played before them, but they were willing to step aside and see. And when the boy mounted the platform, the boy, their beloved singer Tom, and took the girl in his arms, they still did not understand, but they cheered till it seemed the rough covering would be lifted from their heads, and they would be left to the mercies of the storm.

At last the singer stood before them and told in a simple way that this, their comrade, was her brother whom she had been seeking all over France; how they had sung that song many and many a time together.

"And," she finished with almost a sob, "if I hadn't come!"

"Sing it again! Sing it again!" A dozen voices shouted. So, standing there in the spot light, with the dusky forms gathered around them, the re-united brother and sister sang it all over again:

"Mother of mine, Mother of mine!"

Then they sang other old-time songs that the boys love best of all, till at last they remembered that the hour was late and they were keeping the gallant driver from his sleep.

"I'll come back tomorrow," the girl sang cheerfully, as she threw them all a kiss for good-night.

She did come back. Then when the company moved, Tom was allowed to go an eight-day leave with her to Aix-les-Bains, the beautiful summer resort that had been made into a rest camp for our boys over there.

As they sped toward that coveted goal, Zenith rested back on the wonderful cushions of the first-class coach, and half-closing her eyes said again, "If I hadn't gone!"—Roy J. Snell, in N. W. Christian Advocate.

THE JUBILEE CHRIST.

By Fred S. Boorman.

"Backward, turn backward, O Time in your flight,
Make me a child again, just for tonight!
Backward, flow backward, O tide of the years,
I am so weary of toil and of tears."—Allen.

The universal characteristic longing expressed by the poet is really a mistake of the intellect. This longing to visit the old scenes, to hear again the old familiar voices of former companions and live over again the sweet incidents and scenes of childhood's ideal life that the mental vision presents, all this fails to satisfy because it isn't second childhood that we need and thus a resuming of the old burdens, with the same mistakes in the same old tangled pathway of life. The real longing is a desire of the spirit, often wearied and faint, calling for a chance to try life over again with the old burdens completely removed, forgiven and forgotten. We do not need the old over again, but a new chance, with the birthright of the character of Christ-likeness, which we so carelessly spent along the way, fully restored to us again. We need the strength and wisdom to use our birthright wisely through the companionship and power of the Christ who is "acquainted with all our ways" and "knows us altogether," and is longing for us to take full possession of our birthright—the Christ-likeness which we have lost.

The world's message is that ovportunities once lost or missed are gone forever. But the Jubilee message is that the Christ, who is our Jubilee life, "creates all things new" —both opportunities, and character, our desires, and open life itself—"a new heaven and a new earth." Sin means missing; the Jubilee Christ means restoration, as typified by the Jewish Jubilee year which meant the restoration of property, home, family, deliverance from slavery, rest, and provision for food. It was a long-looked-for year of good news and new opportunities for life's betterment and fellowship with God. Christ is our Jubilee life in proportion to our trust in Him, and the transforming power of His atoning love flows from His Cross for healing and removing the curse and filth of sin, so that we may "look upon Him" in the innumerable revelations and manifestations He has given us of Himself and realize the abiding companionship of the One who is the atoning Savior and the superb lover of each one. All earthly love of father and mother, family and friends, all earthly help and saving, food and comfort are but faint reflections of Jesus Himself dwelling in human life and affairs. As the sun gives life and beauty and color to all things, so also the Son of Righteousness gives beauty and effectiveness to all life and character. Those who are living without Him are living in an artificial light that fast loses its power. Living without Christ is a sad living in the light that has failed. Our Jubilee Christ, as described in the book of Revelation, is "One whose countenance is as the sun shining in his strength," changing the darkness into the joyful and healthful daylight of the Jubilee life. When we face His countenance in faith, love and communion, all shadows of evil and discouragement are cast behind us. His presence creates the power and opportunity to live over again life's lost opportunities, and His countenance colors our earthly way with the spiritual beauty that makes life worth living.

In the Jewish life when the time came for the sounding of the trumpet which was to announce the beginning of the joyous Jubilee year, the multitude of those whose hope, health and comfort and even life itself depended upon Jubilee year must have presented a wonderful picture of excitement and joy, suspense and expectancy which could not be suppressed while the multitude waited for the notes of the Jubilee trumpet and for the High Priest's final prayer of blessing after the last act of atonement had been completed. The High Priest then with outstretched hands announced the Jubilee year to the assembly waiting for the good news of another chance in life and the deliverance, liberty and recovery of past failures and lost opportunities. All of this corresponds exactly to the proclamation of our Great High Priest, Jesus, as He stood up in the synagogue at Nazareth on that autumn Sabbath day at the beginning of the Jewish Jubilee and proclaimed the beginning of the Greater Jubilee life for all people everywhere. He said:

> "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach good tidings to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord. . . . This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears."

Jesus is Himself the greatest news that can be proclaimed; He is Himself good tidings in manifestation and personality. Wherever He is, by His Holy Spirit every circumstance and event is transformed into something better. Evil can not stay in His presence; neither can evil tidings. Hope, deliverance and restoration go out in power from Him to the poor in life, opportunity and spirit; to the broken-hearted from whatever cause; to the captives in innumerable ways in which we are bound and helpless. Jesus is, in His earthly life, the perfection of all human personality—attractive, fascinating and lovable, and in His Divinity the only atoning and satisfying power for human life. Power goes out from Him as we feed upon Him and thus become a part of His wonderful Jubilee life. He is typified by Solomon as the spring flowers of the Rose of Sharon and the lilies of the valley because He brings the springtime renewal into human life, giving beautiy for the dead ashes of remorse and disappointment and placing the garment of praise where the spirit of heaviness overlaid and overweighed.

As our Great High Priest gives the Jubliee invitation, "His voice is as the sound of many waters" (Revelation 1:15), so that His words, "come unto Me," can be heard above the turmoil and traffic of life. Sometimes His voice is gentle as a brook along a wooded landscape, and as wooing as a lover's sweet song. And then again, in times of correction, overwhelming in its convincing and convicting power, like a torrent during a storm, irresistible as the "floods of great waters" which sweep away and destroy everything in their path.

Isaiah has truly said, "who hath believed our report" about the Jubilee Christ? There are multitudes who say of Him, "He hath no form or comeliness that we should look upon Him, nor beauty that we should desire Him." But to those who accept Him in faith "He is abundantly precious"—the Divine atoning Savior in the Son of Man, thus in touch with our earthly life, and proof that our Heavenly Father is "hungry for our companionship." There is no other explanation of our creation and the atoning sacrifice of the cross than that God is longing with an intense love for us and offers to make us a part of Himself by the Spirit of the Christ whose presence is good tidings, healing, deliverance, recovery, liberty and acceptance.

The importance of the Jubilee observance and symbolism is shown by the fact that the people were emphatically commanded to fulfill all the Jubilee requirements. For lack of appreciation of the Jubilee season and blessings, and for failure to fulfill the requirements, the Jewish people suffered a humiliating and severe captivity for the exact length of time they failed to accept the Jubilee blessings. The reason for so severe a punishment is that the Jubilee year is a symbol of Christ redeeming us and of the resurrection. No one can insult the Heavenly Father by rejecting His revelation in the Lord Jesus or any symbolism of Him and get off free.

The Lord had originally planned that the Jewish people should enter the Promised Land on a Jubilee year and day. But the people were afraid of "the giants in the land" and refused to take possession: the consequence was the forty years of wilderness wanderings. There are apparently many "giants in the way" of the Jubilee land today, which causes many of us weary "wilderness wanderings" instead of the Jubilee blessings.

The order of the Jubilee year was first: The trumpet sounded all over the land. On this year only could the trumpet be officially sounded by everyone. This symbolizes the Bible message of Christ. The second event was the crucifixion symbolism on the day of atonement. The gateway into the Jubilee life is under the cross of Jesus as our atoning sacrifice. The "scapegoat" of that day symbolizes the carrying of our sins into the "wilderness of forgetfulness," so that we may start the Jubilee life anew with nothing against us in God's memory. The blood sacrifices of that day typify the "river of the water of life, flowing from the throne of God and the Lamb," with the power of cleansing, refreshing and transforming us into His character likeness. "Behold I make all things new." Rev. 21:5. "In whom we have redemption through His blood, the forgiveness of sins according to the riches of His grace." Eph. 1:7.

John's symbolic vision of Jesus represents Him as clothed with the garment of service for human needs and girdled with the golden girdle of the beauty of holiness, for He is the source of the Christian graces and sympathetic helpfulness. Jesus is also the origin of all the world's abiding wisdom—that which has made the world better and more enjoyable; all other wisdom and learning is brief and passing. John's symbolic picture also presents Jesus with a vision "like a flame of fire," which penetrates all things and separates the true from the false and withers by its power all hypocrisy and Satanic works, thus purging the world of these deadly poisons. Christ's personality is the perfection of culture and refinement and is the only power which has kept the world in a civilized condition; in whatever part of the world "there is no vision of Christ the people perish." Prov. 28:18. There brutality and barbarism thrive like vermin in the dark. Jesus gives out from age to age those Divine messages and messengers which uplift humanity step by step upward to the time when "His kingdown shall come and His will be done on the earth as it is done in Heaven," thus preventing the downward pull of hell. His Word, as given in the Bible, has cut like a "two-edged sword" every poisonous growth and seed-growing of the evil one, and thus keeps the way open for the unimpeded light of Divine Revelation to shine and heal humanity's sickness, sorrows and sins.

The atoning cross and resurrection are the safe pledges of and the only day to the Eter-safe pledges of and the only way to the Eter-
we shall be like our Lord Jesus.

"I must needs go home by the way of the cross.
There is no other way but this;
I shall ne'er get sight of the Gates of Light,
If the way of the cress I miss."

The battlefield of the Marne is now under its close and intensive cultivation as if no war had occurred.

A HELPING HAND FOR THE ARMENIAN PEOPLE.

It is crisis time in Armeniaa. If the remnant of the people are to be saved action must be taken promptly, or between the Turk and the Kurd, backed by the winter, which comes early in mountainous Caucasia, the refugees of that outpost people may perish. The resolution introduced by Senator Williams of Mississippi, which is pending in the Senate, empowers the Government to use the forces and the money of the Republic to safeguard the dangerous infancy of the Armenian nation until the leagued nations can take measures to make its future secure. It is not a permanent measure which is now proposed, but a friendly and urgent act of helpfulness from one people to another. Can the great, generous American people be deaf to the appeal of a gallant and kindred race who only need a breathing time to build their own strength and prosperity as a member of the family of nations?

Great Britain has for some time been policing the territory of the Armenians. But the responsibilities of Great Britain are so great in many quarters of the world and her home conditions at the moment so troubled that she feels compelled to withdraw her forces. There is no other nation that can just now assume this opportunity of helpfulness. Although we are so far away from the land of the Armenians we are bound to them by many ties even more intimate than the duties which a prosperous nation owes to a brother in distress. We have many citizens of Armenian birth and they are among the best and strongest of our recent immigrants. We have sent our sons and daughters to help and teach Armenians under Turkish oppression. Many of them held their posts through the dangers of the war. The Armenians trust us as they trust no other people. We are their only hope. We can help them to organize and prepare for needed self-defense. We can put them in the way of a secure and ordered freedom. It is a temporary loan they ask—a shelter against the storm until the skies begin to clear. There should be no doubt at all about our privilege in holding out a hand to help them on their feet and secure the assistance of their high qualities in the future brotherhood of the peoples.—Congregationalist and Advance.

MARRIED.

On the twenty-fourth of September at the home of the bride, Miss Maud Lee Cullor and Dr. Murry of Burlington were united in matrimony, the writer officiating. Miss Cullor is a member of our church at Friendship and one of Alamance's most successful public school teachers. Mr. Murry is a member of the Lutheran church and of the Friendship community and is now successfully practicing dentistry in Burlington. We esteem them highly and wish for them a successful voyage.

should be done by the Anti-Saloon League forces during the next few years."

There are seven strategic points on which dry forces expect to concentrate in the immediate future, it is announced. These places are:

Scotland, Mexico, New Zealand, South Africa, the Scandinavian countries, Russia and Japan. W. E. Johnson is at work in Scotland; Dr. David Ostlund has just arrived in the Scandinavian countries; others are ready to go at once to the other countries.

Prohibition efforts already have been made there which the League believes may easily be fanned into flames. Two states in Mexico already are dry, and complete Prohibition. in the minds of the drys, would have tremendous effect on all the other Latin-American countries.

Scotland votes next ytar, and the drys believe that if it adopts Prohibition the whole British empire will follow.

In the Scandinavian countries there has been tremendous Prohibition advance. Success of Prohibition at the New Zealand polls is held to be insurance that Australia will go dry. Adoption of local option in South Africa would, dry leaders say, pave the way for Prohibition all over the continent. Russia is under Prohibition, and its continuance and enforcement would affect the Balkans favorably. A successful fight against the liquor traffic in Japan, would, League men assert, set a standard shortly to be adopted by the entire Orient.

THE LEAGUE OF INTERCESSORS IN THE INCREASE CAMPAIGN.

During the Million Dollar Campaign much emphasis was laid upon prayer, and a League of Intercessors was formed and promoted throughout the churches. The Campaign was regarded as a spiritual enterprise, the results of which would be gauged by the volume and energy of prayer. Three hundred and three churches responded to the appeal and enrolled a total of 4,753 members. This list is growing from day to day. Continuing the League of Intercessors as a valuable asset in the Increase Campaign that is now on, an appeal is addressed to all pastors and churches to seek earnestly the promotion of intercessory prayer through the enlistment of intercessors who will give their names to our League of Intercessors on the cards which we will gladly furnish to all applicants.

The following is a list of the number of churches that have a League of Intercessors and the number enrolled in each, by conferences:

Conference	No. churches having Intercessors	Total enrollment

Pastors are asked to preach upon the possibilities of prayer in connection with the Increase Campaign, and to seek further enrollment of those who will help by prayer. Make this your earnest daily prayer throughout the campaign: O Lord, send a revival and begin in me, for Jesus' sake. Amen. Promises to plead: Jer. 29:12-13; Hab. 3:2; Matt. 26:44. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers." Ps. 37:4; Ps. 114:1. And with Thanksgiving, Ps. 103.

NOW IS THE TIME.

Rallies have been held in our churches throughout the land, and the efforts of pastors and people are being redoubled in all departments of the work. The great evangelistic campaign has gotten under way, and excellent plans are being used to create interest, secure helpers, and reap a great harvest of souls.

One important department of special interest to the younger members of our churches needs also to be pushed at this time, and that is mission study classes.

The pastor may say, "I'm too bury," but you are just the man for the work of organizing one or more classes. The teacher of a class of young people in the Sunday school can easily organize them and have them meet once a week, and read one of the interesting books of non-Christian lands.

It will give them much knowledge of peoples, their customs, religions, etc., and will cause them to appreciate more the blessings of this great country, and inspire them to be helpers in the work of making a better, happier world.

One hour a week can well be spent in this profitable way, and the outcome will be a better informed, more enthusiastic corps of young people to co-operate in the work of the local church.

The books this year are very interesting, and suited to the age of any in our churches, and can be secured from our Book Concern, but, of course, the books dealing with other countries can be selected if desired.

It will help you to get close to the young people, and by helping them in this way you are really helping to make a better church in the future by training them to share in this service He expects of His followers.

A pamphlet, "How to Organize and Conduct a Mission Study Class," sent free.

What We Are Doing.

In our foreign missionary work we are acknowledging that we owe our great heritage and wonderful development to the Bible which centuries ago was taken to our pagan ancestors.

And the Bible still transforms cannibals and savages into intelligent, developing people with assurance of ultimately attaining equal standing with foremost nations.

Gladstone well understood it when he said, "My only hope of the race is to bring the human mind into touch with the divine revelation."

There can be no real hope for humanity without the Bible, and there can be no hope for Christianity, in the largest sense, unless its followers work at God's plan—preach the Gospel to every creature.

The highest spiritual realizations, the uttermost sweep of faith, and the farthermost service to men have only been attained when Christians, the churches, were aflame with the passion to save souls, save the world, in God's way and by His agencies.

How perilous to the soul, how deadening to the church, how arrogantly rebellious is the indifference, inaction, opposition of those who neither favor nor help foreign missions—God's own plan for His church.

It behooves every one of us to strive to be in accord with His will, and to do the things He would like to have us do in bringing the world under His sway. Fred C. Klein.

THE CHILD'S PRAYER.

Into her chamber went
A little girl one day,
And by a chair she knelt,
And thus began to pray:
"Jesus, my eyes I close,
Thy form I cannot see:
If Thou art near me, Lord,
I pray Thee, speak to me."
A still small voice she heard within her soul:
"What is it, child? I hear thee; tell the whole."

"I pray thee, Lord," she said,
"That Thou wilt condescend
To tarry in my heart and ever be my friend.
The path of life is dark,
I would not go astray;
O, let me have thy hand
To lead me in the way."
"Fear not! I will not leave thee, child, alone."
She thought she felt a soft hand press her own.

"They tell me, Lord, that all
The living pass away;
The aged soon must die,
And even children may.
O, let my parents live
Till I a woman grow!
For if they die, what can
A little orphan do?"
"Fear not, my child; whatever ill may come
I'll not forsake thee till I bring thee home."
Her little prayer was said,
And from her chamber now
She passed forth with the light
Of heaven upon her brow.
"Mother, I've seen the Lord,
His hand in mine I felt,
And O, I heard him say,
As by my chair I knelt:—
'Fear not, my child; whaever ill may come,
I'll not forsake thee till I bring thee home'."

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Mt. Hermon Church, Creswell Circuit—This will inform you that we are neither lost, strayed, nor stolen, but still on the job. While we have not written to the Herald for about three months, we have intended to do so, but I was away and we didn't have any report.

On last first Sunday our ear pastor, Rev. R. L. Hethcox, was away helping in a series of meetings; although we had services conducted by the Christian Endeavor. Sunday was our regular preaching day, though we didn't have any services at our church on account of the association at the Baptist church, but we had services on Friday and Saturday nights. We all enjoyed two good sermons.

It seems that everywhere our preacher goes the people who hear him preach want to hire him, but we cannot let him go.

We have organizeed a Ladies' Aid society and we are planning to do good work. Pray for us. Callie Barnes, Reporter.

North Davidson Circuit, Friendship.—We always look forward to the first Sunday, when our faithful pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil, fills his appointment. He comes filled with the Spirit. He preached a grand sermon Sunday, among the best. "Servants of God," the end of the year is drawing near, but we hope he will return to us. $24.36 on budget, $2.08 for Children's Home, $200 for the million dollar campaign. Our church claims are paid. We are having a right good Sunday school.

Reporter.

Stallings, Mecklenburg Circuit.—Last Sunday services were held at 11:30 a. m. and 8:30 p. m. Bro. Ridge preached both times; every one enjoyed his services, as he had not preached for us since August. Glad to have him back.

We organized our Sunday school last Sunday; the officers are as follows: Mr. R. S. Irby, superintendent; Etta Belle Stallings, secretary; Mr. H. B. Furr, teacher class one; Mr. M. L. Stallings, teacher class two; Mr. Ray Dry, class three; Mrs. Noles, class four; Mrs. M. L. Stallings, class five.

Stallings Sunday school is doing great work. Bro. Ridge was at Sunday schiol last Sunday. Total present, 56; collection, $2.73, which went to the Children's Home.

The Ladies' Aid Society has done great work in helping raise money toward building back our church.

All of the ladies on the charge are invited to meet with the ladies of Stallings next Sunday in their society.

We have got the most of our lumber hauled for framing, but are still waiting for our brick to come. Hope it will soon be here so we can build our church. Pray for us, that we will soon get to start our church and it will not take long to finish. A Member.

Burlington.—Last Sunday was a great day for Burlington church and Sunday school. There were 250 present in the Sunday school. The pastor requested that the children and any others be asked to make decisions for Christ. The invitation was given after the study of the lesson, and 29 boys and girls, ranging in age from six to 12 years, responded to the invitation without persuasion. It was a beautiful scene to behold. The 29 boys and girls of our Sunday school who had been given religious instruction by our consecrated teachers from Sunday to Sunday around the altar rail and consecrated their young and precious lives to Christ and the service of the church. Bro. Pritchard, being a man deeply interested in the children of his church, was overjoyed with the results.

Our revival services began on Sunday, Oct. 5, and a service was held each night during last week. The congregations were fairly large, considering the other attractions of a worldly nature, one of which was a carnival holding forth during the week. Bro. Pritchard remarked repeatedly that the one thing noticeable about the congregations was that they were made up almost entirely of Christian people, and the unsaved people were not there. In these unusual and abnormal times in our present age there is a lacking on the part of people in general to take hold of spiritual things. The tendency is to seek the pleasures of the world and neglect the most important things of life—the salvation of the soul and development of a Christian character. Bro. Pritchard did very earnest and faithful preaching during the revival services, proclaiming the glad tidings of the gospel and endeavoring to convince the sinner of his lost condition without hope and Christ in the world.

The election of church and Sunday school officers was held at the conclusion of the morning church services last Sunday. Following is a list of the officers elected: Miss Swannie Patterson, church conference secretary; J. G. Rogers, chairman board of stewards; G. L. Amick, choir master; T. T. Stafford, church treasurer and chief collector; J. E. Moore, treasurer building fund; Miss Lula Riddle, church pianist; Miss Allene Amick, assistant church pianist; J. E. Brown, chief church usher; C. B. Way, press agent; O. N. McPherson, L. R. Pickard, H. E. Isley, J. Ed Moore and D. B. Moore, church trustees; R. F. Williams, T. A. Smith, T. J. Hargrove, J. C. Foster, C. M. Coble, M. A. Coble and J. L. Kennedy, parsonage trustees; R. F. Williams, P. E. Moran, A. B. Holt, Miss Ila Stafford, Chas. F. Foster, O. N. McPherson, Mrs. C. A. Albright, C. P. Paul, Chas. B. Amick, Mrs. Ollie Moser, W. E. Crutchfield and Miss Paulette Rogers, stewards; Mrs. S. M. Hornaday, John Shay, T. R. Glenn, J. A. Riddle, G. R. Bennett, W. A. An installation service will be held next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock at which time the new officers of the church and Sunday school will be installed by the pastor. Every officer is requested to be present.

We will give a list of the new members received as a result of the revival services in our report next week. Seven boys and two girls joined at the service last Sunday morning. That brings the number of new members received into the church during the present pastorate to 211. An opportunity will be given next Sunday morning for others to join.

The Sunday school, the Christian Endeavor society and the church are very glad to have Bro. Lon Braxton back in the services again after an absence of about two months. Bro. Braxton completed a course at Edwards college at High Point recently and has become book-keeper in the office of the branch store of W. I. Anderson and Company which opened here a few weeks ago.

The announcement was made in the Sunday school last Sunday that Herbert W. Wade, who left Burlington during the war and entered the service of Uncle Sam in bringing peace to the world, has landed in America and is expected to arrive in Burlington soon. The nominating committee had no difficulty in reaching a decision to place his name on the list for secretary and treasurer of the Sunday school for the coming year, and the statement was made that Bro. Wade is the best secretary our Sunday school has ever had. We will be especially proud when Bro. Wade returns and takes up the work again.

We are very fortunate to have as a member of the Baraca class and Sunday school Prof. C. W. Davis, a member of the graded school faculty here this year. Bro. Davis is a Methodist Protestant and will prove a valuable member of our Sunday school during his stay among us. We were also glad to have Bro. C. D. Curl with us in the services last Sunday. He has been elected principal of the school at Altamahaw and that school opened on Monday of this week. Bro. Curl was a member of our Sunday school last year.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cheek of Chapel Hill worshiped with us last Sunday morning. They spent from Saturday till Monday with Mrs. Cheek's sisters, Mrs. J. R. Foster and Misses Ila and Susie Stafford.

There was no church service last Sunday night on account of the rain. Rain began falling about six o'clock and continued to fall during the night and all day Monday. The junior and senior Christian Endeavor societies held their meeting as usual. The revival service for Monday night was suspended in order that the pastor might have a rest. Services were announced for Tuesday and Wednesday nights.

Next Sunday morning we will have the usual Sunday school and church service. An opportunity will be given for people to unite with the church. In the evening, beginning at 7:30 o'clock we will have a service in honor of the returned soldiers of our church and Sunday school. All ex-service men will be given special recognition and a special sermon will be delivered by our pastor. Every man who responded to the call of Uncle Sam in the world-war who went from our church or Sunday school is especially invited to attend the service. C. B. Way, Reporter.

Thomasville.—Our fall meeting will begin next Sunday morning. After Sunday our pulpit help will be Rev. C. H. Whitaker. During the week we will have an afternoon and night service J. H. Abernethy.

Mt. Carmel.—It was my privilege to assist Rev. C. H. Whitaker at Mt. Carmel, Forsyth Charge, in the meeting which began the fourth Sunday morning in September and closed the following Friday night. On Sunday we had three services and dinner on the ground and good congregations. The congregations were not large during the week as it was a busy time with the farmers. Those who attended were attentive and interested. It was a pleasure to preach in this meeting because I felt that pastor and people were with me in prayer and desire. I helped in a meeting there three years ago and knew most of the people. This is Bro. Whitaker's third year on this charge and he has been working faithfully for better and higher things. Nearly all the male members of Mt. Carmel will pray and talk in public. We have good people there and progressive ideas prevail in doing religious work. We had one reclamation, but no accessions. The church was revived, and preacher and people were benefited by the meeting. Bro. Clark Patterson came after me in his car and Bro. Austin Evans brought me home. Bro. J. E. Faw was unwell and could not attend the meeting. We all missed his presence very much, as he is so faithful and prompt in attending when well.

I received $28.44 and after preaching Friday night went 'possum hunting with Bro. Austin Evans and Charley Cooper and we caught a nice opossum.

Many thanks to all for their kindness.
J. H. Abernethy.

Guilford Circuit—We have held three meetings resulting in 80 professions and sixty-one accessions. First meeting was held at Fairfield church; results 22 professions; second, Mitchell's Grove; results, 30 professions; third, Hickory Grove with 28 professions.

Rev. J. W. Hulin and Rev. C. A. Cecil and Rev. J. W. Quick were our help in these three meetings. Each one of these noble preachers worked hard and preached the gospel with great power.

People at Hickory Grove rejoiced to have Rev. C. A. Cecil with us in the meeting. He was pastor of said church some 20 years ago.

Our meeting for Shady Grove will begin next Sunday, the 19th. We hope to have the editor of the Methodist Protestant Herald to preach for us next Sunday. We hope also to have Rev. R. M. Andrews with us. We will perhaps not be able to dedicate the new church at this time as we had hoped to do, but this will be our first service at the new church and we would be real glad to have these brethren with us at the first service.

The faithful people at Shady Grove have done well in building their church. They have raised more than $2500 on this church. It is a credit to them and the county in which they live. The spiritual condition of Guilford circuit is very good at this time. And the financial condition is fine. The circuit will pay every cent this year. Mitchell's Grove reports $100 on the million dollar campaign and are going after another hundred.

Each church has raised some, but we are not ready to report just at this time, but will report soon.

Hickory Grove gave us a pounding since our last report. Bro. Jesse Hassell and wife brought us a supply of potatoes and pumpkins; Bro. W. M. Jones, lot of things; Bro. A. L. Jones, molasses, and fodder for the horse, and other things; Bro. J. F. Hassell, corn. Some of our good people of Fairveld also pounded us last week, among the list we note Brother and Sister J. A. Gray gave us one dozen chickens. May the Lord richly bless all. Yours in His name.
A. M. Hamilton.

Whitaker's Chapel, Roanoke Circuit.—Pastor Stubbins gave us two of his best sermoss first Sunday in October, the beginning of our meeting. Dinner was served on the ground to everybody, and a pleasant hour was spent before the afternoon service, meeting and talking with friends who had come, some from a distance, to be with us.

Rev. D. R. Williams came on Monday morning and gave us a sermon morning and evening for four days. If they were not his best we didn't know any better. To say we enjoyed and felt benefited by them is saying little. Am sure the railroad lost a fine conductor, but glad our church gained a good preacher.

Very glad to have Mr. Bethea from Halifax work with us a few days. His bright face and glad song was a great inspiration. Wish we could have him to help us often in our singing.

Also glad to have Mrs. Williams with us part of the week.

Five joined the church and we feel sure many were strengthened for life's duties.

Sorry to say Mrs. Washington is no better. She has our prayers and sympathy.

October 13, 1919.

Concord.—Our usual services were held Sunday with good attendance at all services. Two hundred fifty-four present at S. S. There were 130 present in the Baraca class. Our school was favored with a visit from Mrs. N. Buckner, General Secretary of Baraca-Philathea work. Mrs. Buckner made a short talk to the Baraca and Philathea classes in their rooms, and then to the whole school. It was indeed a pleasure to have Mrs. Buckner with us. A meeting of all the organized classes of the city was held Sunday afternoon at the central school auditorium, at which time the officers were elected for the city Baraca-Philathea union. Mrs. Buckner was the chief speaker for the evening, and we also had some of the district officers speak to us.

We held our Rally Day services the fourth Sunday in September and a very good program was carried out.

We are sorry to note that Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk, Mrs. J. L. Potts and Mrs. Lottie Brown are all sick at this writing. We wish for all them a speedy recovery. Reporter.

Union Grove, Orange Circuit.—We had 25 in Sunday school Sunday; have had the best attendance this fall we have ever had, and we are hoping for better in the future.

We were delighted to have Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett and five of the children from our Children's Home with us the first Sunday. We certainly did enjoy the music by our boys and girls and the good words by Mr. Garrett, and we hope Mrs. Cecil will bring them again soon.

Our good pastor gave us a good sermon on Joseph, Gen. 39. He always gives us good sermons and is doing a great work among us and we hope Conference will send him back, as he has learned the work and can do more and better work in the future.

We hope to have all our finances up by Conference.

We were glad to have Prof. T. O. Pender and others from Chestnut Ridge worship with us one Sabbath.

With best wishes to the Herald and its readers. N. B. L.

October 13, 1919.

Mt. Hermon Charge.—Special meeting season on this charge is over. We began at Cedar Cliff on the second Sunday of August with Rev. A. D. Shelton as help. From here we went to Mt. Hermon for the third Sunday in August with Rev. W. F. Kennett as help. Then we had a rest till the first Sunday in September when we began our meeting at Friendship with Rev. G. F. Millaway as help. Then we had another rest till the fourth Sunday in September, when we began our meeting at Bellemount with Rev. J. H. Bowman as help. At the four churches there was a faithful sowing of the Word, though the results were not what we desired. In all there were sixteen conversions and eleven accessions. J. A. Burgess.

Orange Circuit.—Chestnut Ridge's reporter has kindly asked me to report for her this week as she is busy with her outdoor work, and wants to get it done before cold weather sets in.

Our special revival meeting closed last week. Rev. J. D. Williams came on Tuesday and stayed until the meeting closed on Friday evening. He preached with great power and his sermons were touching to all who heard him. There were about 37 converted; 22 united with the church. There are more yet to give up their ways of sin and draw nearer to Jesus Christ. The congregations were good all through the week. Prof. T. O. Pender had charge of the singing; he was somewhat surprised when collection was taken up for him.

We had with us during part of the meeting Bro. T. A. Williams and family; it looked real good to see them some more. Wish they could have stayed during all the meeting.

Yours in his name, Annie C. Squires.

P. S.—Yesterday was another good day for us at Chestnut Ridge. There was a good congregation present, and our pastor delivered a most excellent sermon. It was communion day with us, and a good many took part in it. May the Lord bless and comfort those trying to follow Jesus Christ.

Those that want to unite with this church should be present the fourth Sunday in October.

A. C. S.

Buncombe Circuit.—We, of Buncombe, are still busy trying to put on some worthy programs that will help the work of the kingdom.

The members of the active Ladies' Aid of Weaverville deserve great credit for the much needed repair work which they had done on their church last week. They are always busy in church activities.

The writer has recently organized a Christian Endeavor society at Clark's, which it is believed will greatly strengthen the forces among the young people there.

The Baracas and Philatheas of Clark's Chapel, together with the pastor, are to spend tomorrow in the mountains gathering chestnuts.

Our fourth quarterly conference will convene at Clark's Chapel on Saturday afternoon before the fourth Sunday in this month.

We gladly welcome President Andrews to our work next Saturday and Sunday.

C. C. Lindley, Pastor.

Shelby, Shelby Circuit.—We are very glad indeed of the interest in our Sunday school. There were over a hundred present several Sundays in the past quarter; hope the attendance will increase.

Our Ladies' Aid is still trying to do its bit for the advancement of God's kingdom.

Though we may not speak like angels nor yet preach like Paul, we can tell the love of Jesus, we can say He died for all.

Bro. Fogleman preached last night to a very attentive congregation. We enjoyed his sermon. We hope that the Annual Conference will send Bro. Fogleman back to us.

Several new members have joined our church since the third quarterly conference.

We are indeed glad to report that little Jack Ramsey, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Ramsey, is improving. He was seriously ill five weeks.

Miss Vangie Ramsey left the 4th for Valdese, N. C., to teach school at that place.

Harmony's Christian Endeavor.—It has been two weeks since I made my report of our society. Last Sunday was a real interesting meeting. The boys took charge of the meeting. Mr. Henry Balentine was leader. The topic was, "The Road to Brotherhood." The program was carried out by the boys. We are glad to know that they are interested in the work. Sunday Mr. Homer Taylor was leader. The topic was, "Training Citizenship." Rev. N. M. Harrison was with us. He made an inspiring talk on the topic. We always look forward for the second and fourth Sunday afternoon. We are so glad to have him with us, for we always hear something good on our topic, which helps us out very much. And I am quite sure everybody enjoys hearing him very much.

We were glad to have some of the Cross Anchor Endeavorers over Sunday afternoon. We are sorry that we didn't have a very good program. They surprised us, which we are going to do them some Sunday afternoon.

Our society has planned to pick cotton Friday evening; the proceeds will be for some good purpose; have not decided what we will do with it; hope we will have good luck and pick a bale. Best wishes to all Christian Endeavorers.

Mamie Reeves, Reporter.

High Point.—Last Sunday was a red letter day for our church. After a splendid sermon, Dr. Brown received 20 new members into the church as a result of the Culpepper revival, which closed a week ago. Some of these new members are heads of families, several are young ladies, and a number are young boys and girls. We are indeed happy to welcome this large number of new members.

Yesterday the Ladies' Aid society motored out to the new home of Mrs. S. P. Montgomery near the Children's Home, and held the regular October meeting, which had been postponed on account of the Culpepper meeting at Wesley Memorial. Miss Millie Bowman, Mrs. H. A. Garrett, and Mrs. Montgomery were joint hostesses. We were pleased to have one new member, Mrs. Anman, join the society. In spite of the very disagreeable weather, we had a good attendance, there being 18 present, and the meeting was very enjoyable.

Mr. A. M. Idol attended the Reunion of the United Confederate Veterans at Atlanta last week, and enjoyed the trip immensely. There were 8,000 "Boys in Gray" who marched in the parade, though the ranks grow thinner with each passing year. These old heroes are full worthy of all the honor and good times that we can possibly bestow on them.

Little Alfred Moffitt, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Moffitt, who has been suffering from a slight attack of diphtheria, is improving.

Stanly.—Our fourth quarterly conference will convene at Plyler on Saturday before the second Sunday in November.

We missed much the presence of Uncle Sol Mabry and wife at Porter Sunday, who were kept at home on account of the illness of their son. Bro. Durant Shankle and wife, too, were kept away on account of the serious illness of Sister Shankle; we hope for her a speedy recovery.

We were delighted on visiting hospital at Salisbury, to find Sister Wm. Snotherly recovering so rapidly from the effect of a serious operation. We were, also, delighted to be entertained in the beautiful home of Bro. Lawsen Furr and wife of East Salisbury. We were so glad to find Sister Furr, who is a woman of suffering and acquainted with the surgeon's knife, so much improved in health, and so bright and cheerful. She is an example in patience and few could have stood so much suffering. Bro. Furr still manifests his staunch loyalty to his church. In addition to his financial burdens of doctor bills, he has decided to lay aside each month $5 for the Lord. He sent his assessment to his church and added, "If that is not enough, let me know." He also made a pledge of $50 on a new parsonage building. No wonder there is sunshine in his home.

Since last report Miss Ollie Almond has remembered us with a fine lot of tomatoes and apples. Bro. Charley Harkey, a jug of new molasses. Bro. Filmore Hatley, a lot of his fine potatoes. Mrs. D. Walter Sides, a variety of good things. Thank you.

W. D. Reed.

Yarborough Christian Endeavor.—I have not given a report of our Christian Endeavor since September 21. Although we have not been idle, I feel that we have not been doing as good a work as we could have done.

The following ones have conducted the meetings since the last report: September 28, "The Christian Athlete and His Training,"—Mr. Newell Patton was supposed to take charge of this meeting, but he being absent, Miss Clara Jackson led in his place. October 5, "Our Relation to Others: Toward World Brotherhood,"—Bro. Boyd Bobo was supposed to take charge of this meeting, but he also being absent, Miss Clara Jackson led in his place. Our meeting of October 12, "Training in Citizenship," was held last Friday night; our leader for this meeting was Mr. Eddie Hipps. This was a very good meeting. Mr. Hipps gave us a very interesting program. Each one did his part well. Rev. N. M. Harrison gave us a splendid talk on the topic, which added much good and interest.

At this meeting the recording secretary, Miss Clara Jackson, read the names of the different members, and the parts they are to explain in organizing a Christian Endeavor when they go to Anderson charge to organize a society; she also gave the division of the society as divided into red, white and blue groups to bring new members into our society. This plan was suggested in order to see which group could bring in more members.

Our entire society made something over $9 picking cotton.

Our society met Friday night in order that we might visit Harmony Christian Endeavor, but only nine of the members were able to get a way to go. We certainly did enjoy being with the people at Harmony. We were received with a warm welcome. Harmony church is made up of a kind-hearted, friendly people. They have a splendid Christian Endeavor, and a number of members who seem to take much interest in Christian Endeavor work. I was one among the number that had an opportunity of visiting their society, which I am very thankful for. I feel that we all enjoyed and received a blessing from both their Christian Endeavor and their church service, which was conducted by their pastor, Rev. N. M. Harrison. We would be glad indeed to have the Harmony Christian Endeavor or any other Christian Endeavor society come and visit us.

NORTH CAROLINA'S THREE TAXATION PLANS.

An Explanation of (1) The System of Revaluation and Tax Rate Reduction Now Begun, (2) The $300 Exemption to Begin Next Year, and (3) The Income Tax Amendment to be Voted on in 1920.

All over North Carolina there is much interest in the State's new taxation policy and many inquiries as to just what is proposed.

The matter has already been explained in The Progressive Farmer, but since that was several months ago, it seems well to explain the matter afresh to our farmers who are now reporting on their land values.

I. The $300 Tax Exemption.

The new taxation policy of the State aims at three things:

(1) Honesty in assessments.

(2) A reduction in tax rate to correspond to the increase in assessed values.

(3) Provision for lightening the burdens of poverty and industry, and putting a larger share of the burdens of taxation on men with large incomes.

With regard to the latter point, we may note in the outset that the recent Legislature was the first one to take advantage of the authority given it by the Constitution to provide a $300 exemption for tax-payers, this provision of the new law reading as follows:

''From and after the year 1919 there shall be allowed an exemption for each person of wearing apparel, arms for muster, household and kitchen furniture, the mechanical and agricultural instruments of mechanics and farmers, laborers and scientific instruments, and provisions, not exceeding a total value of three hundred dollars.''

II The Revaluation Plan.

Now about the plans for securing just assessments. In the past everybody understood that he was permitted to list property for something less than its real value; and the result was that the more pliable a man's conscience, the lower the rate he named; and this thing had grown worse and worse year after year until it has amounted to a state disgrace. For a man to list his property at its real value meant that he would have to pay practically twice as much tax as he ought to pay. Such a system encouraged lying, and corrupted public morals at the fountain head. If the sworn officials of the state set the example of assessing real estate at 33 1-3 per cent. of its value, how could the state expect the individual taxpayer to list his personal property at 100 per cent.?

Now all this is to be changed. Hereafter every property owner in the state is expected to list every cent's worth of property he owns—and list it at 100 per cent. of its value; list it at what it would bring if offered for sale under favorable condition, and not merely at its probable selling price at a forced sale.

Now if this plan for revaluing property for taxation were offered without assurance that the tax rate would be correspondingly cut, of course this plan would largely fail. It specifically provides, however, that as assessed values increase, the tax rate must decrease. It is provided that the amount of tax collected by the state or by any county, city, town, or special tax districts shall not exceed a 10 per cent. increase in the amount now raised by taxation. Consequently if assessed values are increased 200 per cent., as they probably will be, the tax rate per $100 worth of property will be proportionately reduced, plus the nominal 10 per cent. increase. Mr. A. J. Maxwell, who is the state's foremost tax authority, expresses the positive opinion, in fact, that under this revaluation plan, the average tax rates will be reduced to about one-fourth the present rates.

The state tax commission will superivse assessments and valuations through a scientifically designed system so that the man who voluntarily lists his property at full value may be sure that his neighbor is going to be compelled to do the same thing. This new valuation recently began, and it will take about a year to get this monumental task done for the whole state. Then the Legislature will be called together and the tax rate per $100 for state, county, special tax district and municipal purposes will be cut just in proportion as valuations have been increased.

III. The Income Tax Constitutional Amendment.

But some one may say, ''While the Legislature forbade an immediate increase exceeding one-tenth in amount of taxes collected, will not this soon be increased as a result of revaluation?''

We think not, and for a very important reason.

The big purpose of this revaluation of property is not to increase the amount of taxes to secure justice and equality in assessment. Then in order to provide larger revenues for the state and give us the necessary money for the many important tasks which an advancing civilization placees on the commonwealth—better schools, betters roads, better health, better care of the unfortunate, etc.—the legislature submits to the people another important plan. At the election in November. 1920, the people will vote on a constitutional amendment authorizing the state to tax the income of the wealthy, without regard to whether any particular income is derived from invested wealth or otherwise.

We hope every Progressive Farmer reader will make up his mind to vote for this amendment and urge others to do so. Heretofore we have had a shameful system in North Carolina. Incomes derived from labor have been taxable, while incomes derived from invested capital have been exempt from taxation, under constitutional provisions. Thus it is said that a famous tobacco manufacturer of this state had an income of about a half million dollars a year from his property, and was not required to pay one cent. of income tax on it, while his stenographer or clerk getting $1,250 a year or more was required to pay an income tax. In England for years it has been the plan to put a heavier tax on ''unearned incomes,'' that is to say, on those derived from invested capital—than on ''earned incomes,'' that is to say, on those derived from one's labor or profession. Our North Carolina plan has been on the other extreme, and the voters of the state ought to pile up 100,000 majority for changing it, just as they did for changing the constitution so as to provide a six-month's school term.

A great part of the state's wealth is concentrated in the hands of a comparatively few wealthy persons, and it is only fair that they bear a larger share of the burdens of taxation. This is all the proposed income tax amendment means.—Progressive Farmer.

HEALTH DECALOGUE—HOW TO LIVE 100 YEARS.

A Famous Little Health Classic.

1. Use only plain food, only about half as much of it and chew it twice as long. Eat nothing between meals.

2. Move outdoors, or move the outdoors indoors. Pure air is better than a whole drug store.

*3. By all means use the diaphragm in breathing, thus keeping the abdomen in constant motion.

4. Avoid tight waists. Suspend all clothing from the shoulders. Never sit in a cramped position. Hold the chest high.

5. Shun such poisons as tobacco, coffee, tea, chocolate, cocoa, Coca Cola, headache medicines and painkillers.

6. Avoid putrid poisons in the colon, by using eggs, meat and beans in very small amounts and never fried.

7. Regulate the bowels by fruit, green vegetables, coarse bread, much water, exercise, abdominal breathing, regular habits.

8. Discard condiments, pastry, fresh bread, hot breads and breads not thoroughly baked.

9. Do some open air work or walking each day and exercise all unused muscles by special exercises each night. Avoid overwork and exhausting passions and emotions.

10. Renounce the sin of selfish habits: ''Whether therefore ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, do all for the glory of God.''—1 Cor. 10:31. (For service, not for pleasure.)

*If, by the use of belts, etc , and by sitting in a cramped position, you have lost this normal habit of breathing then your heart, lungs, liver, kidneys and all your digestive organs must suffer daily until you regain the habit. Constipation is but one of the bad results. Practice little and often, especially when lying on your back. See that the abdomen rises with each breath. Maintain an equal pause before and after each inspiration. Breathe very slowly. Hereafter be certain to wear very loose clothing about the waist and sit erect.—Dr. Elmer Fowler in ''Good Health.''

SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

Not long ago a radical orator in New York told his audience that there were more people in the British Isles who believed in the doctrines of Karl Marx than there were who believed in the gospel of Jesus Christ. We have no idea that he was even within measurable distance of the truth, but at least he recognized the fundamental opposition between the prophet of socialism and the founder of Christianity.

Many people know little of what Marx actually preached except the ''collective ownership of the means of production'' and the ''class war'' between the ''bourgeois,'' or employing, class and the proletariat, engaged in industrial labor; but there are many other points in his doctrine, less economic than moral in their application, that are rarely discussed in public, but that must become conspicuous whenever, as in Russia, an attempt is made to establish socialism as the national or the world order.

First of all, he taught, and pretended to have discovered, the "materialistic conception of history." He denied that there was any divine purpose in the affairs of mankind and held that history only recounted the struggle of the different classes for the greatest share of the material wealth of the earth. Is any greater contrast possible than that between this view of life and that of Jesus?

Naturally, he went on to deny every form of restraint that society has adopted to save itself from degradation and dissolution. "Law, morality, religion are to him (the workingman) so many 'bourgeois' prejudices, behind which lurk so many "bourgeois' interests," says the Communist Manifesto; and Marx always taught that there was no real right and wrong, and that morality was never anything but a code made by the ruling class to suit its own convenience and minister to its own interests.

Violence he preached as the only means of accomplishing real social progress. Love of country and love of your fellow men he found absurd. "The 'bourgeois' family will vanish as a matter of course," says the Communist Manifesto. "We replace home edrcation by social education. 'Bourgeois' marriage is in reality a system of wives in common; the most that communists can be reproached with is that they desire to introduce an openly legalized community of women in place of such a system hypocritically concealed." If the Bolsheviki did here and there practice the community of women, they did no more than Karl Marx taught.

A good many persons who call themselves socialists and who talk reverentially of Marx conveniently forget much that he stood for boldly; but if socialism ever establishes itself, we may expect that the doctrines that would be put into effect would be those of the founder rather than those of selected and denatured principles that his less adventurous disciples profess. Those doctrines deny Christianity at every vital point. If the anti-Christ of Scripture has yet appeared on earth, Marx has a good claim to the title.—The Youth's Companion.

A MISSIONARY HERO.

When you have passed through the Red sea on the voyage from England to India you come to Aden, a hot, desolate place with bare rocky hills and long stretches of sand. There is not much to see at Aden, but in this desolate quarter shining white in the sunlight, between blue sky and yellow sand, are the houses and hospital where God's servants are seeking to lift up Christ to the Arabs, to show them the beauty of his character and his power to save them from sin.

Most people are glad enough to leave Aden. How is it, you ask, that any people should choose to stay there?

The missionary work at Aden was started by the Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer, third son of the late Earl of Kintore, a young man, the son of a Scotch nobleman, whose talents would have given him honor anywhere. He was one of those heroes who seek the hard places. In 1885 he went out, and in 1886 he returned with a fully qualified medical man to assist him, but before he could do much more than settle down, and make his plans, he died, and his place was taken by others.

The mission he founded is now called by his name.

"Keith-Falconer as a boy at school was ambitious to excel in athletics. He gave himself to his ambition until he had won the bicycle championship in England. Not satisfied with this he became interested in shorthand, and devoted himself to his pursuit until he was pronounced the best shorthand writer in Britain. Still not satisfied, he took up the study of Arabic, aiming to excel as the best scholar in this department, until he was called to the chair of Arabic at the University. But even this failed to satisfy him as God's highest choice for his life. He saw that infinitely higher than mere personal attainment was the Godlike vocation of uplifting one's fellow men, that selfish ambition was despicable compared with self-sacrificing love, that a mission was far greater than a career. And following in the footsteps of Him who left heaven to do God's will on earth, he went to lay down his life on a mission to the Mohammedans, using his training and education 'that they might be saved.'

"To do the will of God is the secret of a life of happiness. For it is the secret of heaven. 'Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.' And the light and joy of heaven will break into our lives in just the proportion that we do the will of God."—Bombay Guardian.

LIVING IN THE TOP STORY.

Above the walls of old Granada rises the great palace of the Alhambra. Europe contains few more picturesque buildings than this ancient relic of the glory of the Moors. As described by many writers, we learn the general plan of the historic pile. In the lower stories are the kitchens, servants' quarters, rooms devoted to menial uses. Above them are the living apartments, guest chambers, and halls where the former kingly inhabitants gave audience to envoys and friends. But far above all rises the great tower to which devout Moslems might ascend to look upward at the stars and to meditate in quietness on the greatness and the goodness of God.

Each one of us lives in a three-story house. The lower story is the physical nature. Here we eat and sleep and care for the body. Some of us live here practically all the time.

The secand story represents our intellectual departmant, where the outlook is wider and the light more abundant. Here are found the joys of thought and friendship. Many of us ascend to this story frequently.

Highest of all is the third story, the realm of the spirit. The finest prospect and the best air and light may be enjoyed here. The noise of the kitchen, the chatter of the drawing room are lost in the great silence wherein God speaks to us. What a pity that we ascend to the watchtower so seldom! Only with grievous loss can we pass all our days in the basement or the parlor, forgetting the heights where we may dwell with God, and amid a heavenly fellowship.—Forward.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

WHY MINNIE COULD NOT SLEEP.

She sat up in bed. The curtain was drawn up and she saw the moon, and it looked as if it were laughing at her.

"You need not look at me, moon," she said, "You don't know about it; you can't see in the daytime. Besides, I'm going to sleep."

She lay down and tried to go to sleep. Her clock on the mantel went "ticy-tock, tick-tock." She generally liked to hear it, but tonight it sounded just as if it said, "I know, I know, I know."

"You don't know, either," said Minnie, opening her eyes wide. "You weren't there, you old thing! You were upstairs."

Her loud voice awoke the parrot. He took his head from under his wing and cried out, "Polly did!"

"That's a wicked story, you naughty bird," said Minnie. "You were in grandma's room; so now!"

Then Minnie tried to go to sleep again. She lay down and counted white sheep, just as grandma said she did when she couldn't sleep. "Oh, I wish I hadn't."

Pretty soon there came a very soft patter of four feet, and her pussy jumped upon the bed, kissed Minnie's cheek, and then began to "Pur-r-r-r, pur-r-r-r." It was very queer, but that, too, sounded as if pussy said, "I know, I know."

"Yes, you do know, kitty," said Minnie, and then she threw her arms around kitty's neck and cried bitterly. "And—I guess—I want—to—see—my—mamma!"

Mamma opened her arms when she saw the little weeping girl coming, and then Minnie told her miserable story.

"I was awful naughty, mamma, but I did want the custard pie so bad, and so I ate it up, 'most a whole pie, and then—I—I—O, I don't want to tell, but I 'spect I must; I shut kitty in the pantry to make you think she did it. But I'm truly sorry, mamma."

Then mamma told Minnie that she had known all about it. But she had hoped that the little daughter would be brave enough to tell her all about it herself.

"But, mamma," she asked, "how did you know it wasn't kitty?"

"Because kitty would never have left a spoon in the pie," replied mamma, smiling.—The Young Evangelist.

UNCLE PHIL'S STORY.

"Tell us a story, Uncle Phil," said Rob and Archie, running to him.

"What about?" said Uncle Phil, as Rob climbed on his right knee and Archie on his left.

"Oh, about something that happened to you," said Rob.

PRESIDENT'S LETTEK

OUR GOALS—

There has stood at the head of these letters for most of the conference year seven goals. They were, a revival in every church, a family altar in every home, a Sunday school in every church, every Sunday school contributing to the Children's Home, a church paper in every Methodist Protestant family, every cent of every assessment paid by Nov. 10, and one Superannuate Bond to every charge.

This has been a program worthy of the best efforts of our church. Many of our pastors and members have taken it seriously and have accomplished a great deal. Others have adopted one or two items in it and they have done well with that part of the program which they adopted. What has been accomplished is only prophetic of what can be accomplished when a company of earnest people set their heads and their hands to a task that is worth while.

Without question every family should have an altar in the home. No home can be a real vital power in the kingdom of God that has no family altar in it. To attempt to rear a family without Christ and God in the home is attempting the impossible, if the purpose of the parents is to do the best for their children that they can do. In like manner, it is one of the most difficult tasks to live a Christian life in that home where no family altar exists. If prayer is the Christian's "vital breath," that man or woman who attempts to live the Christian life without it dies, and it is needed to keep the family in the proper frame of mind and disposition; to keep their purposes in line with the great purposes of our Christ. The need of the revival is so apparent, so keenly felt by all Christian people that I hardly need to emphasize its importance; we rejoice that many of our churches have had gracious revivals in them. The Sunday school is the church teaching; that church that teaches well here receives back to itself great benefit in the form of intelligent, consecrated young men and young women. Some churches do not attempt to keep the schools going more than six months of the year; it is a shame, a serious reflection upon the religious life of the church that becomes more interested in visiting on Sunday than it does in teaching the word of God. This practice in many communities of visiting around the churches where revival services are held has become a most dissipating practice. Young and old people have fallen victims to it; it is hardly more than a Sunday picnic with them. Girls and boys stay out in the groves, or ride the public roads during divine services, many of the men spend the time in talking farming, politics, community gossip, etc. It world be a hundred times more profitable for all concerned to stay at home and keep the Sunday school going.

The church paper has a real place in the homes of church people. It is a medium of communication between the churches, a sort of "news service" without which our churches would be very poor. It is a means of instruction, also. Through the church paper our leaders communicate with us their plans, programs, their wishes. We keep in touch with the head of our denomination, know what the denomination stands for, what it is trying to do at home and abroad. The church paper is also a means of grace to us. By it our spirits are cultured, our desires are cleansed, our purposes are attuned to the great purpose of the head of our church. We need to take and to read the church paper.

We must support our church. It is made our duty to support the pastor and the benevolent enterprises of the church. No one can be true to our church without doing this, or without doing the best they can towards it. A church that refuses to do this has violated its obligation as a church, if convicted of such an offense is subject to expulsion from the denomination. And since we are obligated to support our church, it should be done wisely and well. We should do it gladly and generously as we are prospered from year to year. No less than every cent of every assessment should be the goal of any church, and we believe we will do something this year never done before in the history of conference along this line.

The Children's Home must be remembered. Our goal, every Sunday school giving one offering a month to the support of the Home. Nothing less than this, brother, sister, is worthy of us.

The Superannuate Bond is but a slight token of our love and esteem of these men of God who have given unstintedly of their lives to the church and to Christ. Let us not forget them now.

WHY NOT CHARGE, Rev. W. M. Pike, Pastor.

I visited four of the churches on this charge and held the fourth quarterly conference. We were in the neighborhood of the fifth church when the rain came, so did not hold the services.

Last year two of the churches, Lovejoy and Macedonia, were detached from this charge and put with Davidson charge; with the present arrangement this is not hard to serve.

There was a parsonage on the work several years ago. This was sold; the money for same was deposited in the bank, but it was a small amount compared to what it will now cost to buy or to build; but the charge needs a parsonage very badly.

There ought to have been built a church at Seagrove, and still there is room for us there. Another denomination has built there, really has built up with our people. Another case where our people were "left". It would be harder now to build there than a few years ago, but as our habit have got the "habit" of waiting until a thing is very hard to do before they attempt it, I suppose we will finally build there.

The situation at Starr is fluctuating. We have a most loyal band of workers there, few in number, but liberal in spirit and loyal of soul. They set the pace in the Million Dollar Drive and have done a great deal more, without such church home and without even religious services, than some of our churches with a church home out of debt and with preaching statedly. Another illustration of "Where there's a will, there's a way."

Altogether there has been pledged and paid about $359 on the million dollar campaign to date. This has practically been pledged and paid by the Why Not church and our people at Starr. It is not a question of ability with our people here. They are able to pay their allotment without hurt to themselces. It is a question of interest in the church. There is a zone wihin our conference where there are churches that either do not know what denominational loyalty is or they will have none of it; some of the people appear to live within it on this charge. This drive has revealed what sort of folks we have in our church. The revelation has not always been comforting, but we are thankful that in the majority of instances it has so proven. We are anxious that all of our people will fall in line with the program of our church to extend her activities and to do more for the kingdom of our Lord and of his church, but if some insist upon remaining out of it, they will be the greatest sufferers.

I expect all the churches on Why Not charge to pay up all claims; some were almost out at the quarterly conference and others were making an effort to go out right away; we shall look for all the churches on this charge to be on the Conference Honor Roll.

R. M. Andrews.

Hawkins Chapel, Littleton Circuit.—Our pastor last Sunday preached another of his good sermons to a large and attentive congregation. We are always looking forward for our preaching days to come. Bro. Loy has one more appointment before Conference.

We hope the Conference will see fit to send Bro. Loy back to be with us in the coming year; all are well pleased with Bro. Loy, think he is a good man and in the right place. After preaching service the church book was revised and church officers were elected for the coming year. Vannah Shearin, Reporter.

Mrs. O. R. Fox Dead.

Mrs. Fox died in the High Point hospital Sunday morning, October 5, following an operation from which she never rallied. She had been in feeble health for some time and was a very patient sufferer.

Mrs. Fox was a good woman and will be missed. She will be missed most in the home where she leaves a devoted husband and an affectionate daughter, Mary. She is also survived by two married daughters, Mrs. N. M. Cranford and Mrs. M. H. Allred, both of Asheboro, and a son, Ledolph Fox, of Rockingham. They will always find a sad vacancy when they go home.

The members of the Methodist Protestant church will miss Mrs. Fox, for she was very faithful to her church and always in her pew when able.

On Monday afternnon at four o'clock, the funeral services were condected in the Methodist Protestant church by her pastor, Rev. C. L. Whitaker.

A Friend.

Miss Lura Jones of Asheboro and Mr. John Lilly of Raleigh, N. C., were united in marriage by Rev. C. L. Whitaker at the home of the bride on Sunday, September 28. They expect to make their home in Raleigh.

China has been called the "sleeping giant" nation and well can this be applied to it. Along almost every line of progress and advancement has this been true. Ignorance and superstition have kept China from awaking to its rightful place in the world's affairs. One of the most disparaging sights is the low health conditions of China. This condition, however, s a natural consequence, or is associated with the lack of progress. Unhealthful surroundings will naturally breed disease which causes a high death rate.

Actual Conditions.

1. Superstition has greatly kept China backward. Because of this belief certain things have been omitted and other things refrained from. Think, if you will of crooked streets and houses built with neither doors nor windows opposite, because they think evil spirits go in straight courses. Not until recent years has this idea of superstition become clear as a drawback to healthful conditions, especially in china.

2. Unsanitation is prevalent in China. Poor facilities for the proper drainage and ventilation of the unsanitary places have caused an enormous amount of sickness and a high death toll each year. Even the bodies of the dead are placed under their temples and churches with only the floor between them. Is there any wonder for such precarious conditions?

3. Native or quack doctors add still to the seriousness of the situation. These claim-to-be doctors really increase the suffering of the people who are sick. I once heard a native who had prepared herself in the United States and had established a hospital in China relate how a quack doctor treated a patient for headache by boring a hole in the temple of the head, and for a person having toothache by applying a hot iron to the side of the face, thus making a severe sore. Such and many other practices are done by the native physicians among the Chinese.

4. Such diseases as small-pox, leprosy, ophthalmia, bubonic plague, diphtheria, Asiatic cholera, tuberculosis and even the scourge of opium which has, it seems, become a disease, infest the inhabitants of China for which there must be some alleviation. Dense population leads to rapid spread of disease.

5. Much of these sad conditions of China is due to the lack of knowledge. Ignorance in respect to the laws of health with other things have caused such deplorable conditions. Enemies of the right circulate false stories about the missionaries and the natives are led to believe until they are actually convinced otherwise.

The Part of Christianity.

1. In Old Testament times the priests who performed religious ceremonies also acted as the health officers for the tribe or nation. It was in the time of Moses that certain laws with reference to sanitation were drawn up for the benefit of the children of Israel. It seems that wherever Christianity has gone that intelligence and conservation of health have also followed. So it is clear that these things go together.

2. It has been said that "China has been opened for missions at the point of the lancet." It was a very serious and difficult undertaking at first to take the gospel to China, however through Christian physicians the door is opening wide for our religion too. Christ found disease and felt called upon to alleviate pain and suffering. Important it is, then, that those who carry the gospel of glad tidings be accompanied by a consecrated physician or at least know something about the laws of health.

3. Jesus was the Good Physician. He ministereed to the human needs, thus bringing man to a place where he could listen to his soul's need. A chaplain approached a dying soldier once, who was very thirsty. He would have read to him, but he insisted on the chaplain for a drink of water, and after his thirst was quenched he quietly turned to the minister and said that he would now hear him read from his book. Why not relieve the faint in order that his eternal welfare may have access to the living waters flowing from the fountain of God.

4. The church is the agent of Christianity, founded upon Jesus Christ, and His followers are commissioned to "go and preach the gospel to every creature." Now will the church turn a deaf ear to the call? The need is evident and there comes the call. Concerted action on the part of the church must come if the mission is fully carried out. Some people seem to be contented under their own "vine and fig-tree" and never give any consideration of others. To this class God will require an answer at the day of judgment.

5. It will require patience and perseverance to do the work in China. The Chinese are right much "set in their ways," which will call for heroic service. Men's lives are given to work a remedy. What, after all, is this life, but to give life that the cause we represent may live? A life is not lived in a day, but the right kind of life is being consistent until the end. Let us pray that our missionaries may exercise patience and diligence that the work begun may become more successful. In directing the crusade against evil as well as any other enterprise, it requires perseverance—and patience.

"Teach me Thy patience; still with thee
In closer, dearer company;
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong;
In trust that triumphs over wrong;
In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way;
In peace that only Thou canst give—
With Thee, O Master, let me live!"

COST OF WORLD-WIDE PROHIBITION.

Illiteracy of foreign countries will be one of the chief obstacles to be overcome by the Anti-Saloon League and the World League Against Alcoholism in their efforts to make the world dry.

Not only will it be the chief obstacle, but the most costly one, in the opinion of dry leaders, and one of the prime objects the Anti-Saloon League has in mind in its drive for $50,000,000 in addition to its regular income, is education of the people in the lands where existing temperance organizations will co-operate in a campaign for Prohibition, according to Ernest H. Cherrington, secretary of executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League and executive secretary of the World League.

Mr. Cherrington points out that it has taken 25 years of League effort, on top of countless years of other efforts preceding the formation of the Anti-Saloon League, and $50,000,000 in money to make the United States dry. It will take additional funds to bring Prohibition enforcement up to the highest state of efficiency, he says.

In face of such facts the League believes the sum it is asking is very small for the needs. The illiteracy of the United States is but seven per cent., while that of the Balkan states is more than 60 per cent.; the average in South and Central America is 65 per cent.; in Mexico it is more than 80 per cent.; in India it is 92 per cent.; in Egypt, 93 per cent.; in China, 95 per cent.

"The world task would seem well nigh hopeless but for the important redeeming fact that in the very beginning of our world missionary project we havt the advantage of a great progressive nation with 100,000,000 population," says Mr. Cherrington, "including people of every country of the world, and toward which, in a peculiar sense, the eyes of the world are now turned, which is to present to all the results of a great experiment in National Prohibition.

"This fact which in the very nature of the case is bound to be known and recognized by the peoples of every country, will be worth more in most countries in propaganda for world Phohibition than probably all other factors in the early stages of the movement. To see that the world understands and appreciates what Prohibition is doing in the United States and that the leaders of temperance movements in foreign countriees understand the methods and plans by which results have been obtained here, constitute an important part of the foreign missionary work which

"Something when you was a little boy," said Archie.

"Once, when I was a little boy," said Uncle Phil, "I asked my mother to let Roy and myself go and play by the river."

"Was Roy your brother?" asked Rob.

"No; but he was very fond of playing with me. My mother said 'Yes,' so we went and had a good deal of sport.

"After awhile I took a shingle for a boat and sailed it along the bank. At last it began to get into deep water, where I couldn't reach it with a stick. I told Roy to go and bring it to me. He almost always did what I told him, but this time he did not. I began scolding him, and he ran towards home. Then I was angry. I picked up a stone and threw it at him as hard as I could."

"O Uncle Phil!" said Archie.

"Just then Roy turned his head and it struck him right over his eye."

"O Uncle Phil!" cried Rob.

"Yes, it made him stagger. He gave a little cry and lay down on the ground. But I was still angry with him. I did not go to him, but waded into the water for my boat. But it was deeper than I thought. Before I knew it I was in a strong current. I screamed as it carried me down the stream; but no men were near to help me. But, as I went down under the deep waters, something took hold of me and dragged me toward the shore. And when I was safely landed on the bank I saw it was Roy. He had saved mylife."

"Good fellow! was he your cousin?" asked Rob.

"No," replied Uncle Phil.

"What did you say to him?" asked Archie.

"I put my arms around the dear fellow's neck and cried, and asked him to forgive me."

"What did he say?" asked Rob.

"He said, 'Bow, wow, wow!' "

"Why, who was Roy, anyway?" asked Archie in great astonishment.

"He was my dog," said Uncle Phil—"the best dog I ever saw. I have never been unkind to a dog or any other animal since, and I hope you never will be."

This was Uncle Phil's story. Roy evidently knew more about dangerous currents than his master did. Perhaps some other boy may learn a lesson of wisdom from Uncle Phil's experience.—Selected.

THE MISSING BUTTON.

Tilly's mother had a bad pain in her head one day. She could not see to sew; so she asked Tilly to look after Bobby's shirt waists. The buttons had a way of coming off in the wash. Tilly was only nine years old, but she could sew on buttons very well.

She said, "Why yes, poor mamma, of course I will do that for you."

But when Ann brought up the clean clothes that afternnon, Tilly was busy reading a new story-book. She looked at the basket, and said to herself, "Yes, by and by. As soon as I finish this story."

But when she had finished that story the next one looked so nice she thought she would read just that one more. Just as she had done reading that, Tilly's little friend, Bessie Moore, came to see her. They went out into the yard to swing, and Tilly forgot all about the buttons.

The next morning when Bobby put on a clean shirt waist, Tilly had to fasten it for him with a pin. But her mother did not know it.

When Ann was washing the next Monday, she gave a loud cry. A pin had run into her hand and torn it badly. The blood came, and the hand was red and swollen. Ann came running upstairs. She was very angry. "Just see my hand!" she said. "It was a pin left in Bobby's shirt waist. It hurts so I can't wash any more. What am I going to do?"

Tilly's mother looked at her sadly.

"O Ann, I am sorry!" said the little girl.

"Ah, but being sorry won't cure my hand."

"I hope it will cure her fault," said Tilly's mother. "Bring me the salve and some old linen from the closet, and let me tie up your poor hurt hand. See how red and swollen it is! I hope, Tilly, you will learn some day to do things at the right time."

And Tilly promised she would try.—Selected.

NAILS THAT HELD.

The sound of a lively tattoo, played apparently by a hammer, caused Uncle Jack to lay aside his paper and stroll out to the back yard, from which the noise seemed to come. There he found Harry at work, nailing a loose board on the fence.

"Carpentering, eh?" said Uncle Jack. "Well, I like to see a boy who's handy with his tools. Look here, though, Harry. Here's a nail that I'm afraid won't hold." He pointed to a nail which had been driven in close to the surrounding surface of the post, and which was half exposed.

"Oh, that won't make any difference, Uncle Jack," Harry said, lightly. "It's put in well enough for this kind of work."

But his uncle did not seem to agree in this. "I hope you don't intend to drive all your nails that way," he said, gravely.

"Why, Uncle Jack, you talk as though I expected to be a carpenter! I won't have many nails to drive if I study to be a lawyer!"

"I don't believe you understand what I mean, Harry," Uncle Jack said, with a smile. "I shall have to tell you about a friend of mine and the nails he has been driving.

"His name doesn't count in the story, though perhaps you might recognize it if I told you. He came over from Germany several years ago, a young fellow of eighteen or twenty, who was anxious to get a start in America. He had no business training; he was an artist to his finger tips, and had done some work in drawing and painting before he left the old country. When he landed in New York, he did not know what he should do to make a living, but he found work before he had been in the country twelve hours. A man at the docks heard him say that he was a painter, and offered him the job of painting a small schooner that lay at anchor not far away. It wasn't the sort of painting that Albrecht meant or wanted, but he answered promptly that he would do it."

"Good for him!" Harry interrupted.

"That was what I said, when he told me about his experiences. Well, he did such a good piece of work on the schooner that he soon got other work of the same kind. The first nail that he drove held, you see.

"He wasn't satisfied with work of that sort, though. You couldn't expect that he would be. So he got ready to drive another nail. Out of his small earnings, he managed to pay for a course of evening lessons at a New York art school, and before long he was doing illustrating for some of the daily papers. His work was good and growing better all the time, and he had little trouble in disposing of it. The second nail held.

"You might have thought that he would be satisfied with this. It was a work he liked, and it brought him a good income, which he could depend upon. But no! He felt that he could do a still better and higher class of work. He had been studying and experimenting and practising, and at last he surprised all his friends by giving up his illustrating, and putting in his whole time at portrait painting. A good many of his friends—and I'll own that I was one of them—thought it a foolish move, for he had a good, safe line of work, and the portrait painting was bound to be more or less of an uncertainty."

"How did he come out?" Harry asked, full of interest in the subject and the boy.

"We might have known what the reesult would be," Uncle Jack went on. "Well, you know, Albrecht was a boy who drove his nails to hold, and his third one was no exception. He proveed to have a wonderful knack for getting delicate flesh tints, and it wasn't long before his portraits were in as great demand as his illustrations had been. Now his reputation has traveled across the ocean. It's a great thing to drive your nails so they hold."—Unknown.

"I DID MY DUTY FIRST."

An advance was ordered on a stretch of front occupied by the Canadians. Following a heavy barrage fire these soldiers went over the top, and despite great sacrifice took possession of their objective. As the men went forward one of the officers came upon a Canadian lieutenant with a ragged hole in his chest. With a great effort the wounded man spoke to the officer as he bent over his body, "Tell the colonel I tried not to fall down on him. Tell him I think all the trenches are taken and that I did my best not to fall down on him." And then, drawing in another breath, with a final effort he added, after giving the name and address of one who was waiting for him across the sea, "Tell her I thought of her at the last, but tell her I did my duty first."—Front Rank.

IN MEMORIAM.

Martha Ann Elizabeth Glasgow Morris was born the 8th of September, 1840, and departed this life the second of October, 1919. She was married to George W. Morris in 1889, who lived only a short time after they were married.

She was converted when only 14 years old, and joined the Methodist Protestant church at Corinth, where she remained a member, and lived a consistent Christian life until death.

She was one among the sweetest-spirited women I have ever known, although she was greatly afflicted for three years, with spinal affection, and she suffered a great deal for about fourteen days. Nevertheless, she bore her suffering with Christian fortitude and about the last words that she was heard to say were as follows: "Lord Jesus, come and take me now." So after Brother G. L. Barnes, his wife, and daughter, Miss Fannie Barnes, had done all that loving hands could do to help her, death came and put an end to her suffering.

She had lived with her sister, Mrs. G. L. Barnes, and family for several years, and was there at the time of her death.

She leaves four brothers and three sisters with a host of relatives and friends to mourn their loss; but their loss is her eternal gain.

She was laid to rest the 9th of October in Corinth cemetery. The floral decoration on the grave was beautiful. The funeral services were conducted by the writer.

Peace be to her ashes. D. M. Loy.

Arthur Sharpe.

When a useful man passes it is natural that we think of his usefulness and what it was in his life that made him useful. As a farmer, Arthur Sharpe was intelligent, progressive, energetic, industrious, hence successful; as a church-member, Christian, he was intelligent, progressive, energetic, industrious, hence useful. He was interested in his farming and worked at it; he was interested in his church and gave it attention. He lived in a progressive community and he contributed to the spirit of progress in his community; when a new church building was needed the same spirit of progress was active in his life, toward its erection. As a steward he was unsurpassed. His regularity in church attendance was an encouragement to his pastor and a good example to others. His home was a pleasant place to visit because of his own generous hospitality, and that of his kind wife. As a neighbor he was accommodating. He was devoted to his parents, as also to his own home and his own family. While the loss of this useful man is felt most keenly by his own family and loved ones, the loss is felt keenly by all who knew him as a neighbor, as a fellow church member, as a friend, as farmer and parishioner. He was of even temper, cheerful, hopeful. While he with his faithful companion were preparing an earthly home of comfort and conveniences, the preparation for the larger life beyond was also carefully looked after. When the summons came, he was ready, hence we sorrow not as those who have no hope. This comforting assurance is the thought that lingers in the soul of each who feels the loss so keenly.

Daniel Franklin Bennett.

Daniel Franklin Bennett was born at Pleasant Garden, Guilford County, N. C., June 1, 1844! departed this life October 4, 1919.

He was twice married. His first marriage was to Miss Nancy Harriett Coble, Oct. 4, 1866: to this union were born five children. His second marriage was to Miss Frankie J. Layton, July 19, 1914. He leaves to mourn their loss a faithful wife, three children: Mr. William H. Bennett, Mrs. Lula Shoffner, Mrs. Maggie Tucker; and two brothers, Mr. David Bennett of Pleasant Garden, and Mr. H. H. Bennett of California, and a host of friends, who mourn the loss of a true friend and neighbor.

Brother Bennett professed faith in Jesus Christ about forty years ago, and united with Mt. Pleasant Methodist Protestant church, It was in this church he spent the greater part of his life. The last conversation he had with his wife, and that was a few hours before his death, was concerning the church.

The funeral was conducted in Mt. Pleasant church, Sunday, October 5th, by the writer, assisted by Rev. A. D. Shelton. The large auditorium of the church was full and many people in the yard who could not be seated in the church.

May our heavenly Father comfort the bereaved ones and grant that somewhere and some time they may all meet and greet each other where separations will be no more.

J. D. Williams.

Curl

Once again the grim Harvester hath been in our midst; another golden sheaf has been gathered into the garner in the sky; another soul has been summoned into the presence of its Maker. A vacant chair is left in the home, traces of sorrow are left on the torn and bleeding hearts of a wife, children, brothers and sisters. A community has suffered the irreparable loss of a kind neighbor and a faithful citizen.

Alvis Johnson Curl was born July 3, 1861, and was called to his reward on the afternoon of Sept. 27, 1919. He was married to Miss Sarah A. May July 2, 1882. He is survied by his wife, one daughter, Mrs. Thos. Carroll, and five sons, Robert, Clifford, Clay, Clarence and James. Five grandchildren, two sisters, and three brothers also survice, together with a host of neighbors and friends.

It was such a shock when the sad news came, that on Wednesday night Mr. Alvis had been fatally stricken with paralysis. Everything that loving hands and willing hearts could do to relieve his suffering was done, but human efforts could not stay the icy hand of Death. God in His infinite wisdom said, "It is enough; come home."

It seems so sad that he was not permitted to speak a farewell to his loved ones, as he was unconscious until his death. But it is a great consolation to know that he is waiting for them in that land "where we'll never say good-by."

The funeral service was held Sunday afternoon at Center church, of which he had been a faithful member for twenty-five years. His pastor, Rev. G. W. Holmes, being absent, Rev. T. A. Williams was called to conduct the service. That he was much respected by the people among whom he lived was made manifest by the countless number of friends that assembled to pay this last tribute to him. There in the cemetery, amid the tears and sighs of loved ones, the body was laid to rest until the resurrection morning.

Mr. Alvis always did his Christian duties in a quiet, unassuming manner. He will be missed in the church, the community and most of all, in his home. He was kind and hospitable and took a great pleasure in having his relatives and neighbors visit him.

We cannot understand why he was called away. Why was the wife robbed of her dear companion, and the children of a loving and indulgent father? Alas, we do not know, but some day we'll understand. God is too wise to make a mistake and too good to be unkind.

Would you call him back to this world of sorrow? No; for he is "Safe in the arms of Jesus,

Safe from corroding care;
Free from the world's temptations,
Sin cannot harm him there."

Let your lives be a living monument to his memory. Trust the God whom he loved and served and in a short while the family shall be reunited and your weeping will be changed into shouts of joy.

"Farewell, dear one, farewell,
'Tis hard from thee to part;
Although the Lord hath called thee home,
It almost breaks our heart.

"Farewell, dear one, farewell,
Thou'rt only gone before;
In heaven we shall meet again,
Where partings come no more."

Iola Braxton.

We still need about two thousand dollars, not only do we need it but we must have it before we can finish our church. We are still looking for those Sunday school collections. What about it, Sunday school superintendent? Are you going to help us? We are going to raise this two thousand and finish our church: do you want in on this work of God? Or would you rather not help. We have made appeal after appeal and you have not responded: this is the last to YOU. "Whatsoever you would that men should do unto you do ye likewise unto them." This is the law and the prophets: have you fulfilled it? If so, we are thankful, if not, it is with you.

A Friend.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE TROUBLE.

Do you know what happened the night before Gabrielle d'Annunzio picked himself for a second Caesar and stole Fiume? This is what happened: Said one Italian officer to another: We ought to have Fiume. It is Italian.

Said the other: Yes, but the League of Nations won't permit it. Everything will go before the tribunal and—

Said the first: Ssh! Haven't you heard the news from America? There isn't going to be any League. Let's take a chance!

So they did.

Do you know what happened when a band of Turks started a miniature massacre and attendant atrocities in Armenia, AFTER the armistice? This is what happened:

Said one Turk to another, Those Armenian dogs should still be our slaves, to kill, to beat, to starve, or to shame.

Said the other: Five years ago, yes. But today the League of Nations will have something to say and—

Said the first: Ssh! Haven't you heard the news from America? There isn't going to be any League. Let's take a chance.

So they did.

Do you know what happened in Arabia, when the King of Hedjaz started out to include several other persons' territory within his new state? This is what happened:

Said the king to the British: I want to be lord of all Arabia, from sea to sea.

Said the British: All right. Behave and remember your friends and we'll help you get it.

Said the king: But I understand the League of Nations is giving France a share of—

Said the British: Ssh! Haven't you heard the news from America? There isn't going to be any League.

And so it went.

Now this isn't hot air. Get this idea straight. It is worth remembering:

Every international crisis that has arisen since the Peace Conference and existing today has arisen and is existing solely because of the delay in ratifying the Treaty of Peace and the League of Nations.

Read it over again. It is the greatest indictment ever written, for it means that ignorance and false pride are trying to tear down the greatest structure ever raised by men. The Treaty is as much your business as your dinner, and the League should mean as much to you as your children do, for the League may save their lives some day. Therefore it is your business to know this: that wherever there is trouble, it is your fault. Your fault? Yes, your fault. Who are these men who with pitiful lack of common humanity, and garbed in the degradation of petty political artifice, are trying to wreck the Treaty and the League. You ought to know: you elect them; you pay their salaries; you picked them out of their law offices and up from their desks and make them legislators for the nation. And you are the nation.

Of course it is your fault. You can shut the mouth of any legislator in the country within twelve hours if you want to. You may not be able to put the fear of God in their hearts, but you can put the fear of public repudiation and a lost job.

Great Britain and France never would have started to squabble over Asia Minor, and they are squabbling under cover, if the word hadn't been passed among the old-time diplomats that the League of Nations was doomed. Doomed by whom? By the Turks, the Italians, the Japanese? No, indeed! Doomed by the United States, who fought for it!

You know what is in your mind about the whole business. You think this: There was probably a good deal of monkey business about the treaty-making, and probably a lot of persons think they've got an edge some way or the other. Maybe they have. Some say President Wilson was outmaneuvered. Perhaps he was; I'd sooner have him outmaneuvered and stay honest than win every trick on the political table. If the others won things not on the face of the Treaty, they cheated. I believe that, with all his mistakes, President Wilson is fundamentally honest; nor do I believe that he is anyone's fool. If he says that this Treaty is the very best that could be got, I believe him. If he says the League of Nations Covenant is just what it appears to be, and bears the interpretation he gives it, I believe him. Sign it, and let's get busy. The country has got a man's job ahead, and I've got part of it. Let's get busy.

That is what in your heart you are thinking, now, isn't it? Forgetting all the political tum-twiddle and balderdash, you believe the job is over and you want it over, and you want it over quickly, the sooner the better. Moreover you know that, Treaty or no Treaty, Covenant or no Covenant, no one is going to steal the United States from under you while you sleep.

Then, that being so, you can't afford to say: All right, I want it signed; when it comes to a showdown, of course it will be ratified; we'll see to that. As you say, it is only political tum-twiddle and balder-dash. Let 'em have their game. You can't afford to say that because their "game" is costing good red blood in Europe today and is likely if the "game" goes too far, to shed some of your good red blood and your boy's, as well.

You didn't know where Sarajevo was, did you, when that Bosnian boy shot an archduke of whom you'd never heard? Yet it buried American boys along two hundred miles of French battlefields. Then, just because Thrace is a long way off, or Armenia, or Fiume, don't think it a "game" to let them fester and foment. If you do, sooner or later, you'll be in it.

Omitting reference to Russia and its several issues, because they are the heritage of the war itself, these issues following are distinctly the result, not of the war, but of the aftermath, the dilly-dallying over ratification of the Treaty:

The Greek difficulty in Thrace.

The Italian trouble in Fiume.

The Anglo-French trouble in Asia Minor.

The helpless stagnation of Austria.

The instability of Serbia and other Balkan peoples.

GREENSBORO LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY

In every case, the trouble was quiescent at the moment the Peace Treaty was signed, because there was the air of general attention to the Treaty and to the League which, it was confidently expected, would take charge immediately of issues in dispute. Good faith was to be the keynote of the League's success: for the moment every nation put itself in the mood for an exhibition of good faith.

The moment passed, and instead of the League, so carefully planned, coming straightway into existence and clinching the receptive attitude of the Powers at that moment, it has been diverted to fulfil a quite selfish purpose of political hide-and-go-seek in the United States of America. That is the precise situation.

The ablest case presented to the Peace Conference was that of Greece; Eleutherios Venizelos knew what to say and how to say it. The Conference did not feel able to go the whole length on the matter of self-determination, and asked Venizelos to take part of what was justly due, and leave the rest to be made all right by the League of Nations. Venizelos wisely and honorably said he was so confident in the justice of the Greek claim to Thrace that he was quite willing to leave it to the League of Nations. He acted in good faith. But the existence of the League is threatened; and Venizelos asks who is to make good to Greece in the matter of Thrace. If there is to be no League to adjudicate, are the Greeks to be left to measure their strength with their neighbors, and look after their own justice?

There is a consistent Greek population in all of Thrace; in some parts there are many Turks, and some Bulgars; but the decrease in the Greek population is due more to careful "elimination" by the Turks than any relinquishment of their traditional homeland by the Greeks themselves.

Opposed to a Greek entrance on the Black sea and to any enlargement of Greek ideas at all is Italy, who is inclined to see an enemy in every swelling shadow anywhere in Southern Europe. As with Fiume, so possibly with Thrace; the only thing checking the several interests is the possibility of the League coming like a gigantic policeman to tap with its billy any obstreperous nationalities. But if there is to be no League, and Europe, absorbing the declamatory oratory of the United States, has been inclined to believe there will not be, then—let the fireworks begin!

So it is also in Asia Minor, where the ambitions of the kingdom of Hedjaz and its Mohammedan subjects in Syria desire to win the whole peninsula for Hussain and Emir Feisul and British protection; against them are the Syrians of Mount Lebanon who want the protection of France. If the League of Nations decides it and issues a mandate, very well, but if not—!

It is the same all the world over; follow the news for yourself; increasing doubt of the League's success sends the European to the grindstone, with his knife in his hand and his pistol in the belt. He knows full well that, without the League, it is literally a matter of who can shoot first and straightest; in fact the great war might as well not have been fought; American boys might as well not have died; sacrifices might as well not have been made.

They know it over there. They know it is the League and careful international behavior or no League and a bloody free-for-all for the swag.

What are you going to do about it? And how do you like the frog-politics that is trying to make campaign dodgers out of the graves in France?

When we went into the war it was because we wanted to end all war, because we hoped that out of the great sacrifice would come a policy that would do away with the old order of things, the old order that grabs the gun and regrets afterward.

The League of Nations is the one step forward, it points to the right way. It says stop and think before you go to war. For the sake of your children and your children's children urge your Senators to take that step. —Hugh Woodstock, in The Dearborn Independent.

BY AND BY.

What will it matter by and by
Whether my path below was bright,
Whether it wound through dark or light,
Under a gray or golden sky,
When I look back on it, by and by?

What will it matter by and by
Whether, unhelped, I toiled alone,
Dashing my foot against a stone,
Missing the charge of the angel nigh,
Bidding me think of the by and by?

What will it matter? Naught, if I
Only am sure the way I've trod,
Gloomy or gladdened, leads to God,
Questioning not the how, or why,
If I but reach him by and by.

What will I care for the unshared sigh,
If in my fear of lapse or fall,
Close I have clung to Christ through all,
Mindless how rough the road might lie,
Sure he will smooth it by and by.

What will it matter by and by?
Nothing but this: that joy or pain
Lifted me skyward—helped me to gain,
Whether through rack, or smile, or sigh,
Heaven, home, all in all by and by.

A MODERN MIRACLE.

Dr. Clarence D. Ussher, a medical missionary in Turkey for years until he was driven out by the Turks in the present war, spoke in Greensboro and other places a few months ago, appealing for help for the suffering Armenians. In his address he told about being miraculously healed and said we might find a fuller account in his book, ''An American Physician in Turkey.''

We have this book before us and will give our readers the story just as he gives it. He had had typhus fever and his wife had died of it before he was driven away from Van, Turkey. He had not recovered sufficiently to sit up when he was warned by the Russian general to flee with the Armenians from the oncoming Turkish army. He was carried on a litter between horses for days in this flight into Russia. There were many thousands of people in the fleeing company, struggling along on foot, many of them, and they were fired upon by Turkish soldiers from mountain heights. ''More than a year later, in that long, narrow valley through which we had raced so madly, were found the whitening skeletons of about seven thousand men, women and children who had come to their death by the hand of the Turk that day,'' he says. Dr. Ussher was not hit by bullets, though some passed through his clothes. But he was made worse by taking a drink of water from a polluted spring. He reached Tiflis deathly sick. Here comes his report of the miracle:

''Consul Smith secured a room in a privite hospital for Mrs. Raynolds and did everything in his power to make things easier for us throughout our stay. We had been half-starved during the journey. The children succumbed to the prevailing dysentery; all were more or less ill. I had the disease in its worst form; for four days I could take no nourishment, medicines had no effect, and the doctors gave me up to die.

''Among the few things saved had been my Bible. Taking it now I prayed that God would guide me to the message He wished me to have. Then, almost too weak to hold up the little book, I let it fall open of itself on my chest, placed my finger on it and turned it up to see what the message might be.

''I found I had placed my finger on the eighth verse of the twenty-eighth chapter of the Book of Acts, and I read: 'And it was so, that the father of Publius lay sick of fever and dysentery: unto whom Paul entered in, and prayed, and laying his hands on him healed him.' I must confess that I had not known that the word 'dystentery' was in the English translation of the Scriptures, and as I read this from the American Standard Revised Bible it came as a surprise. I said to myself: 'What does this mean? I asked God to give me the message He wished me to have and I must believe that He has. Does it mean that He wants me to claim my healing from Him? Lord, I cannot. I am too weak; I have not faith to lay hold.' The answer came back with perfect clearness: 'It is not your faith, but the faith of Jesus Christ that saves and that heals.' Instantly there came to mind the scene in a classroom twenty-five years ago when I was studying Greek under Professor Max Mueller and we were reading Galatians 2:20, 'The life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God.' I asked the Professor, 'Could that not be translated ''faith in the Son of God'' instead of "the faith of the Son of God''?' His reply was 'No, not literally, for it is Genitive case (Possessive), and means Jesus Christ's faith.' This came so vividly to me that it seemed a reply to my professed lack of faith; so I said, 'Then, Lord Jesus, Thou must do it all; the faith must be Thine and the works Thine; I can do nothing; I leave it to Thee.'

''A few minutes later there was another twinge of agony, and as I reached for the bell to call the nurse the thought came to me, 'This is a test. You said you would leave it to Jesus. Why don't you?' Drawing back my hand from the bell I said, 'I will.' That was the extent of my act of faith. I did not even pray to be healed, but from that hour I was healed.

''Some may think that the thing to emphasize in this experience is the healing, but miraculous as that was, it is not what appeals most to me. The healing might be a unique experience for me and not for a thousand others. The striking thing to me is that God was cognizant of the needs of an individual and spoke to him in this twentieth century. Jesus Messiah, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, wrought as He did on the shores of Galilee, and fulfilled his promise, 'Lo, I am with you all the days, even unto the end of the age.'

''It has grown upon me since that there is a tremendous depth of meaning in that phrase, 'The faith of the Son of God.' It seems to explain what had long puzzled me—'If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed.' We all know we have some faith, and yet we don't remove the mountain nor the tree. At least, I don't. God's power is not given us to play with, but all the faith I need to claim anything that is within the will of God is the belief that Jesus Christ, my Saviour and Lord, has faith enough to claim anything for me. I may question the power of my faith, but who questions the power of His faith!''

Millaway to Shady Grove in the forenoon and to Moriah in the afternoon, finding an interesting Sunday school at each of these churches. The interest at Moriah seemed especially good. Bro. A STORY OF YE OLDEN TIME.

A way back yonder more than a hundred years ago, when it was considered the greatest possible honor to entertain any noted character, a woman, very prominent in the church, was making vast preparation for an expected visit from the bishop. The house was in spotless order, and she was hurrying over the last cooking before he was due to arrive that evening, and the sun was nearly down. A hesitating tap on the kitchen door arrested her attention and she hurriedly turned to open it, with a frown on her face. What she saw was a plainly dressed man with a small bundle on a stick over his shoulder. ‘‘What do you want?’’ she demanded curtly.

‘‘I have walked a long distance, and would be very glad to get lodging for the night.’’

For a moment she thought there was nothing to do but refuse to take him in, but her conscience got the better of her and she very ungraciously bade him come in. She placed a chair in the corner near the fireplace for him, and resumed her work. The supper table, with its spotless cloth of home-made linen, was laden with every kind of appetizing food, and when the last dish was added she turned to the kitchen table where she had left some things not considered nice enough for the bishop to see. Taking a dingy, cracked plate she piled the different things on it and wiped off the corner of the table and set the plate down, and invited the wayfarer to sit up and eat, which he proceeded to do. Before he commenced eating he whispered a blessing, which did not escape her notice, and she asked him if he were a Christian, ‘‘I try to be, madam.’’

‘‘Can you read?’’

‘‘Yes, madam.’’

“Do you ever read the Bible?”

‘‘Sometimes, madam.’’

‘‘Do you know how many commandments there are?’’

‘‘There are eleven, madam.’’

‘‘O, such ignorance! If you read the Bible at all you ought to know there are only ten commendments.’’

Her husband came in and they waited supper till long after dark, but still no bishop arrived. She finally sent the traveler up to the attic where in his extreme weariness he slept the sleep of the just, but no one occupied the superb bed that had been prepared for the bishop.

The next morning the wayfarer went on his way, and the family repaired to the church where the bishop had his appointment to preach. A few moments after the lady took her seat her lodger came slowly up the aisle, and went up into the pulpit. With horrified ejaculation she caught her husband’s arm and bade him go and tell that crazy idiot to come down out of that pulpit. He went up to him and asked him what he meant by taking that seat. He whispered back a few words and the man turned and came back, but he did not stop at his seat, or speak to his wife—just kept on out of doors. In a moment the occupant of the pulpit arose, stepped up to the stand, opened the Bible and read: ‘‘A new commandment give I unto you that ye love one another.’’ The horror and amazement of the woman was beyond description when she remembered the scorched bread, the bony chicken, and the dreggy coffee with which she had fed a real live bishop, and the hard bed that had been his resting place, but she never forgot that there are more than ten commandments. Ruth Fletcher.

MORE QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION.

Rip Van Winkle slept for many years, and was surprised when he awoke that all the rest of the people had not slept the same length of time.

We have people today that are equally surprised when told that language has changed with the times.

In our parsing exercise we were asked to parse sentences, not criticise the syntax of the sentence. The obscurity and contradictions in ancient writings may be explained upon many grounds, and may be discussed without impugning the good faith and insight of the author.

A writer may use different terms to mean the same thing, in order to avoid a monotonous repetition of the same word; and sometimes a writer sacrifices perfect accuracy in the interest of a clear general statement. Poetical, figurative language is often obscure and vague, as pointed out by one of the writers last week.

I admit all writings belonging to this class are to be read with full freedom to criticise, and with no obligation to accept unquestioningly, otherwise the way would be blocked to all discussion, and posterity be deprived of the excellent intellectual exercise of debating difficult questions of language and presentation. It is by no means fruitless to be doubtful on particular points, for by doubting we come to examine, and by examining we reach the truth. Therefore I say that as the sentence reads ‘‘Whom do men say I am,’’ is objective in form.

I ask the following questions for that:

Can God be resisted, or no?

Was Adam saved, or no?

Do we some times sin unwillingly, or no?

Does God punish the same sin both here and in the future, or no?

I thank those that have replied to our parsing exercise. ‘‘Keep the camp fire burning.’’ Robt. Turner.

PASTORAL EVANGELISM.

Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler was distinguished more as a preacher, pastor, author and writer than a revivalist. Pastoral evangelism was his great power. Witnessing the triumphant death of one of his members, he said to a friend, ‘‘Oh, it makes me preach like a lion when I see how my people can die.’’ He treated his flock as he would his own family, faithfully attending to all possible needs. His motto was, ‘‘Study God’s Word in the morning, door-plates in the afternoon.’’

Dr. Cuyler says: ‘‘Once I spent an evening in vain endeavoring to bring a man to a decision for Christ. Before I left he took me upstairs to the nursery and showed me his beautiful children in their cribs. I said to him tenderly, ‘Do you mean that these sweet children shall never have any help from their father to get to heaven?’ He was deeply moved. In a month that man became an active member of my church.’’

‘‘On a cold winter evening I made a call on a wealthy merchant in New York. As I left his door, and the piercing gale swept in, I said, ‘What an awful night for the poor!’ He went back and bringing to me a roll of bank bills, he said: ‘Please hand these, for me, to the poorest people you know of.’ After a few days I wrote him, sending him the grateful thanks of the poor whose poverty he had relieved, and added: ‘How is it that a man who is so kind to his fellow creatures has always been so unkind to his Saviour as to refuse Him his heart?’ That sentence touched him to the core. He sent for me immediately to come and converse with him. He speedily gave his heart to Christ and became a useful member of our church. He remarked afterwards that I was the first person who had spoken to him about his spiritual welfare in twenty years.’’

Dr. Cuyler certainly was following the example of Christ who was a personal preacher to individuals, as well as to great congregations.

A clergyman of New York City recently said to a friend, ‘‘I have adopted a new feature in my pastoral work. I ask the question everywhere I meet a person in their homes, on the cars or in the store where there is opportunity for conversation. 'What does Christ mean to you?' I have never received an uncivil or discourteous reply.'' He said it was a great cross at times to turn the conversation into the Christ channel. He did not refer to Christ theologically, but what does Christ mean to you in your church life, your home life, your civil life, your sorrows, joys and soul experience. If clergymen in general would adopt this idea, how the conversational atmosphere would change from the prevailing topics of the weather, war, business, social pleasures and amusements to that of the culture of the soul in Christ. If all Christians should practise this idea, the moral environment of the world would become transformed.—Edwin Whittier Caswell, in Intelligencer.

BEGINNING RIGHT.

Sometimes I hear mothers asking what to do with a child who has a serious fault of one kind or another. Now we all know that no mother can make a child perfect, but I have often wondered if we could not do better by beginning right at the beginning of things. It seems hard to be severe with a tiny child, but even if severity is necessary, is not a little bit of it at the right time better than a great deal of it later, or better than a great deal of fault in the child? Just firmness will often do in the beginning what severity will not accomplish later.

A lady I know very well would now and then spank her baby daughter, and justified herself with this argument:—''If I get her into the habit of obeying me before she is two years old, she'll have the habit, but she won't remember the spankings, for I mean to get past them before she is old enough to remember. It will save no end of friction in the future.'' Results proved her wisdom, too, for though her daughter was not a marvel of perfection, she was manageable all the way along, and was not unendurable because of a prominent fault.

Another mother who was too tender-hearted and somewhat careless withal, was often heard saying of her six-year-old son, ''I cannot keep him at home half the time. He will go where he pleases, and I never know whether I'll find him.'' When that son first began to run about the piazza and yard the mother would sit absorbed in a book or conversation, not knowing where her baby was; he often wandered entirely out of sight. When she awoke to the situation there was a hunt, a great to-do, but nothing more. Now, it seems to me if that mother had been more vigilant and known where the child was and what he was doing, and had been ready to arrest him with a positive ''No, no,'' and turned him back every time he reached the boundary line at the first, he would have formed the habit of obedience and of accepting limits.

In a certain family is a girl who never of herself gets ready in time for breakfast, for school, for doing an errand. Because of this habit she is a constant storm center, a very cyclone brewer in the family. She is really a normal child, and I am sure that if the mother had begun with her as soon as she saw signs of that special failing and given thorough treatment, the girl would have been saved from having the habit so fixed, and would have been spared some very unpleasant experiences.

I think this way about beginning well: though it may seem a little hard for a tender baby, yet it's like putting a straight-jacket on a crooked ankle—not so pleasant at first, but useful for future results. A right beginning is like sowing a little wisdom and thought and vigilance now that will bring forth many fold in the way of right habits and peace in days to come. "As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined,'' the old-fashioned people say. Straighten the twig now, when it can be done without a serious wrench, and the tree will grow straight. —Correspondence, in the Mother's Magazine.

THE WILL OF GOD.

The maximum achievement of any man's life, after it is all over, is to have done the will of God. No man or woman can do any more with a life; no Luther, no Spurgeon, no Wesley, no Melancthon, can have done any more with their lives, and a dairy-maid or a scavenegr can do as much. Therefore, the supreme principle upon which we have to run our lives is to adhere, through good report and ill, through temptation and prosperity and adversity, to the will of God, wherever that may lead us.—Henry Drummond.

A MOTHER'S WAY.

A county newspaper prints a pretty story of a mother and her five children traveling from their former home in Illinois to where the husband and father had taken a claim in the West for their future home. The mother looked worn and tired, yet interested in her family—all clean and neat, though plainly dressed When bedtime arrived, and the youngest—a boy of about four years—was beginning to nod, the next older began tugging at him to keep him awake, and looked appealingly at her mother. The others began whispering among themselves, and then to the mother, and the passengers' attention was attracted. ''Quietly, without ostentation or display, yes, even timidly, the mother and her children knelt together . . while the evening prayers were said.''

Just a moment, but traveling men, politicians, business men and newspaper men all "paid a silent but mighty tribute to the greatest civilizing agent of all ages, the Christian religion.''—Ex.

ENCOURAGERS.

A cheery word of encouragement helps men over many a difficult place in human life. Psychologists have always recognized this truth as well as the truth of the fact that discouraging words and attitudes hinder and retard any great undertaking. A story is told that at the siege of Ladysmith a citizen was arrested, court-martialed and sentenced to a year's imprisonment. The charge against him was that he was a discourager. It was his habit to go along the lines and speak discouraging words to the men on duty. He struck no blow for the enemy: he was not disloyal to his country; he was simply a discourager—and that in a critical tme. The fortunes of the garrison and the town hung in the balance. The judges before whom he was brought for trial adjudged it a crime to speak disheartening words in such an hour. This story finds its counterpart every day in the history of some person's life. What this world needs more than all else is the man who can cheer and encourage. It has no need for the discourager and the disheartener.—Selected.

FOUR QUESTIONS WITH MYSELF.

1. How long would it take to make my community really Christian if every other follower of Christ worked at it and prayed about it just as I do?

2. How long would it take to make my whole nation really Christian if all Christians gave their prayers and efforts and money toward it just as I am doing?

3. How long would it take to make disciples of all the nations if all other Christians were to give this great program of Christ the place in their lives that it has in mine?

4. Have I any moral right to expect or demand of other Christians or even of preachers and missionaries, any service or sacrifice for Christ that I am willing to give myself?

The work of winning the world to Christ is my work as really and fully as it is the work of anyone else. Let me not avoid it nor shirk it.—J. Campbell White.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

THE QUARTERLY REPORTS.

If those pastors who send in reports to the president will kindly observe the following I shall esteem it a favor.

Report the net gain in membership during the quarter, then total gain or loss during the half year.

Report the amounts contributed to pastor's support worked out in percentage—amount due, 50 per cent., so much paid; so much during half year.

Report the amount paid on A. C. Budget for the quarter worked out in percentage: so much due, so much paid; then give the total amount paid during the half year.

Report the percentage paid to General Conference Budget during quarter; then the percentage during the half-year.

Report number of revival services held, number of conversions, number of accessions; this report might cover the entire six months.

State if the S. S.'s have held Easter service and the money is sent to Treas. Beck.

Give number of the S. S.'s on your charge which contribute monthly to the Children's Home.

Give total amount of money raised for all other purposes than those already indicated.

Report any repairing or building of church or parsonage property in operation or in immediate future.

I shall be glad to have all other information as to the real condition of the work the pastors will include in their reports, but certainly DESIRE the aforementioned items of information.

BE SURE to mail your report not later than the first day of June. While our conference really ends on or about the 20th of November, making the quarters to end on the twentieth of the month, for convenience' sake I am using the last of the month as the time of the closing of the quarters.

AND ALSO while you write me stating that your work is getting on well, etc., please to also give the facts upon which such a conclusion is reached. If there is benefit in publicity, let's get it out by reporting the real facts as indicating the condition of the work. If our people do well, it should be known; if they do not well, the reasons for said failure should be given, and the evils might the better be corrected.

Mt. Hermon Charge, Rev. J. A. Burgess, Pastor.

This is one of the well known charges, upon which there are some of the wealthiest rural churches we have in the North Carolina Conference. There is a large membership of prosperous people, with a group of four churches sufficiently close together to make it an easy charge to serve from a geographical standpoint.

There are many signs of growth and development apparent to a visitor there; among them is the fact that the pastor's salary has been raised each year for the past three and is now at one thousand dollar mark.

While this does not represent all that this kind people can do for their pastor, it does represent in a substantial manner their appreciation of his efforts among them. And since the budget system has been adopted the Conference claims have all been paid—another sign of awakening interest. We believe this charge will yet take her rightful place as the leading charge of our conference, it can do it in its contributions to all the causes and to all the enterprises of our church.

A more liberal patronage of our church papers is sure to come from such a people in the course of time, and with it, a sure hold they will have upon the people who are growing up in this pastoral charge. A correct knowledge of our church, of her activities and her program for future growth is sure to beget in our young and the old ones too, a deeper love for the church and a more unstinted devotion to her causes.

Brother Burgess is deservedly popular, he is a good mixer with the people, he is a good pastor and preaches exceptionally well, so there is no reason he should not be popular with a people who know a good thing when they get it.

We enjoyed our stay with this kind people, visiting all the churches on the charge. Had good congregations, good attention wherever I went.

This is a splendid report. If you will notice a number of the Sunday schools have increased their monthly offering and you also notice some churches and schools that have not been appearing regularly.

We hope our churches will arrange for their pastors to attend the Summer Conference. It will afford a splendid opportunity to give your pastor a helpful rest and at the same time improve his usefulness. H. A. Garrett.

A CORRECTION.

My attention has just been called to the fact that the Journal does not show any finances for Midland Circuit. The proof passed through three hands, but in spite of that the error occurred. I hasten to make the correction, as far as it is now possible, by publishing the items in the Herald. They are as follows:

Promised pastor	$550.00
Paid pastor	550.00
Gen. Conf. Budget	69.00
An. Conf. Budget	45.00
Children's Home	58.11
Children's Day	10.41
Faster Offering	6.00
Old People's Home	3.00
Current Expenses	100.00
Journal Fund	3.00
Total	$844.52

I regret the omission of these figures from the Statistical Table, not only because it is a serious error so far as correctness is concerned,—and my ambition is to have the Journal correct in every detail,—but because it deprives the circuit of its rightful credit in the Journal. But I regret most of all that the error was not brought to my attention earlier in the Conference year. For the lateness of this correction I am in no wise to blame.

And again I ask that the brethren call my attention to any errors of fact they may find in the Journal. It is to all our interests to have it correct. Look it over before you come to Summer Conference, let me know of the errors; and tell me where the Journal, in your opinion, can be improved. C. W. Bates, Publisher.

Chestnut Ridge, Orange Ct.—Sunday morning was another pleasant time at church. Third Convention of Orange Co. Baraca and Philathea Union was held at our church with a large congregation present.

Mr. Curtis F. Crissman, president, presiding, Prof. T. O. Pender, choir leader. Address of welcome by Supt., Mr. G. F. Crutchfield; one-minute class reports were all good. Miss Lola Long, former Philathea president, Mr. R. E. Price, Mr. Allan Browning and Prof. Allan made an address which was enjoyed by all. Mr. Curtis F. Crissman has done great work in this convention. He will leave for camp soon; hope for him a safe return. The next convention will be held at Cane Creek Baptist church. Offering amountd to $8.67.

I think all counties should have a county union so that the classes could co-operate. We find it very interesting. The following officers were elected: Mr. J. B. Bagger, president; Miss Liellie Newman, first vice president; Mr. Carey Cates, second vice president; Miss Lallie Canmade, secretary and treasurer; Mr. C. M. Andrews, assistant secretary and treasurer. Mr. Marvin Hobbs, reporter.

Morgan—On Sunday, April 14th, God called from the earth George William Morgan.

He was born Feb. 2, 1861. At the age of sixteen years, he joined Calvary M. E. church, where he remained a faithful member until his death.

About thirty years ago, he was married to Miss Sallie King and to them were born six children, two of whom are dead. He leaves a wife, three daughters, one son, two sisters, one brother, besides other relatives and many friends to mourn his loss.

Mr. Morgan was a devoted husband and father. May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones. May they realize that their loss is his eternal gain. May they strive to live always true to Christ, so that when they, too, are called, they may meet Mr. Morgan in that land where there are no sorrows and no tears.

His funeral was conducted at his home, by Rev. W. E. Swain, pastor of Hawkins Chapel M. P. church; then in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, his remains were quietly laid to rest to await the last call.

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep.
A calm and undisturbed repose.
Unbroken by the last of foes.

Paul E. Hawkins.

NOTES.

—The General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, voted to grant full lay privileges to women in the church, but the bishops vetoed; also to change "holy Catholic Church" to "Christ's holy church," in the ritual, which was also vetoed. A paper favoring uniform divorce laws throughout the nation was passed. The annual conferences by a two-thirds vote may override the bishops' veto. The question of women's privileges will be carried to the annual conferences, it is said, and women are confident of winning there. Let us hope they are right.

—Mrs. J. F. McCulloch left Monday night for Lansing, Mich., to attend the annual meeting of the Executive Board of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

—Anarchists and Bolsheviki are said to be fighting in the streets of Moscow, while Germany continues to make encroachments. Poor Russia!

—Rev. G. L. Whitely has been installed as pastor of Bethel Presbyterian Church.

—Next Sunday President Andrews is to preach the commencement sermon at Denton.

—Bro. E. S. Wills is in charge of the campaign to raise $25,000 in Greensboro for the Red Cross as part of the hundred million asked from the country.

David Livingstone, the most famous of all who ever sought the secrets of the Dark Continent, died upon his knees.

So, too, when they found the body of Horace Tracy Pitkin after the fury of the boxer had passed, his hands were not bound, but clasped in prayer.

Prayer is the first and chief method of helping to solve the missionary problem. Among all the methods that have been prepared, none is more proctical and more fruitful than this. If we could get a definite group of people at home into the habit of supporting by prayer each missionary in the thick of the fight, by this simple method alone the efficiency of the present missionary force could probably be doubled without adding a single new missionary. J. Campbell White.

The word "service" has taken on new meanings in this age of power. Skill and strength are in demand. Many inspiring avenues of service to the community, the notion, the world are open to Christian leadership. Among them all not one reaches so far, not one releases such influence, not one changes the direction and spirit of all other lives of activity as does a prayer life of great reality.

"Those of you who have ever stood by the slips under the keel of a liner before she is launched will recall how the enormous hull which towers above simply overwhelms the mind with a sense of its intolerable greatness and weight. To move it would be like the moving of a mountain. Yet there before us was such a liner moving like thistledown on the face of the waters, across which she was driving to her appointed haven.

"It came as a picture of the living, experimental truth that, when by intercession we float the burden of our awful responsibility in world missions on the ocean of God's sufficiency, he will carry it with just such effort and no more than the ocean exerts in carrying the great liner. And, what is more, it is only when the mighty burden rests on the ocean of God's love that man can do his own part; that man can drive and guide the great enterprise to its appointed harbor of fulfillment."—Chronicle.

STATISTICAL REPORT OF THE METHODIST PROTESTANT CHURCH, FROM THE 1918 YEAR BOOK

Showing 1479 Ministers and Preachers and 185,204 lay members; total, 186,683. Seventy-seven charges in all the conferences failed to report. If the missing figures were supplied, the total membership would probably reach in the neighborhood of 190,000.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES OF WESTMINSTER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

On May 5-7 were held the exercises of the thirty-fifth commencement of The Westminster Theological Seminary. The Baccalaureate Sermon was, as usual, preached by President H. L. Elderdice. His subject was Unity Lost and Regained. The early unity of the Christian church was pictured, how this unity was lost was described, the way to reunion was revealed, and a strong appeal was made for concert of action on the part of Christianity. The Alumni Sermon was preached by Rev. S. W. Rosenberger, of Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Rosenberger was graduated from the Seminary in the class of 1902 and is now President of the Muskingum Conference, Methodist Protestant Church. His subject was The Supreme Decision. The message was timely and inspiring.

On Monday evening The Stockton Literary Society observed its thirty-fourth anniversary. The music, readings, orations, class history and class prophecy were of a high order and were well rendered. Especially was the reading of Miss Dorothy Elderdice enjoyed.

The Address to the Graduating Class was delivered by Rev. J. E. Gill, D. D., Pastor of West Baltimore Methodist Protestant Church. His subject was A God-Made Ministry. Dr. Gill impressed upon the graduates the fact that the schools cannot make ministers, that true ministers may be trained in the schools, but that no training can take the place of the divine call and the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The Class Oration was delivered by H. F. Fogleman. His subject was The Mission of the Master. The oration was strong in thought and forceful in delivery.

Doplomas were given to the following: Walter Louis Angelo, Bridgeton, N. J.; Chester Allen Arthur, Middletown, Ohio; Leslie Joseph Ebner, Bridgeton N. J.; Joseph Samuel Eddins, Georgianna, Ala.; Henry Floyd Fogleman, Greensboro, N. C.; Arthur LaRoy Peterson, South Amboy, N. J.; Gilbert Sylvester Ross, Hallwood, Va.; Ora Elton Vice, Middletown, Ohio; and Harriet Free Surratt, Denton, N. C.

The exercises were well attended, interesting, and inspiring. In spite of the war, the year was one of the most successful. The student body was larger than usual. Financially the year was also a success. The prospects for next year are bright. C. E. Forlines.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

By Geo. R. Brown, D. D.

May 26.—Topic: "Doing His Will." John 15: 8-14. (Union meeting with Juniors and Intermediates.)

Daily Readings:—

M. Christ and God's will. John 9:4.
T. The motive—love. John 14: 23, 24.
W. The command to shine. Matt. 5: 14-16.
T. The command to go. Matt. 28: 16-20.
F. The command to trust. John 14: 1-3.
S. The command to serve. John 13: 4-17.

By the steering wheel of an automobile the course of the machine is determined. The machine always goes in the direction the wheel is turned. Even so the will of man determines his course in life. As the will is bent—turned—the direction of the life of the individual is determined. If he wills to disregard the laws of nature, he does so—he can't help doing so if he wills it—and his whole physical being is affected thereby. On the other hand, if his will is turned toward the right, his life will follow in the way that leads to peace and happiness and everlasting life.

God Can Do Nothing when the will is wrong. He will not coerce men; he will not break down the door of a stubborn will and force himself into our hearts and lives. He does stand on the outside, however, and knock at the door, but he will not come in until we will it—open the door for him.

What an Awful Thing it is to live when men take their own lives in their own hands and refuse to surrender them to the only being in heaven or on earth who can bless them and prosper them and save them! The surrendered will is the saved will. The great agonizing prayer of our hearts, as it was of the heart of Jesus Christ, must be, "Not our will, O Lord, but thine be done!" Every will must be subdued, chastened, made to feel that there are other wills in operation, and that peace can only come by mutual understanding and concession. While we are young is the time of all times, "before the evil days come," for us to surrender our wills to the regenerating powers of the Holy Ghost.

The Bible Contains a revelation of God's Will concerning us. The things made plain there for us to do—made so plain that any rational being may understand them—are so many that, if we do them, we shall be kept busy all of our days. If we do what we know he wants us to do, we shall have no time to become discouraged and dissatisfied.

Learn This.

"Not in dumb resignation we lift our hands on high;
Not like the nerveless fatalist, content to do and die.
Our faith springs like the eagle's who soars to meet the sun,
And cries exulting unto Thee, 'O Lord, thy will be done.'"

THE PRAYER HABIT.

The Psalmist declares, "I will give myself unto prayer." Prayer is a mighty dynamic in the life of a Christian. Deterioration in spirituality is as a rule traceable to the neglect of private prayer, the breaking of the prayer-habit. We might as well expect to gain in bodily strength by neglecting to take nourishing food daily as to expect to be spiritually strong without prayer and personal fellowship with Christ. The prayer-habit is essential in the building up of Christian character and in coping with our constantly alert foe. The prayer-habit is like any other good habit, it grows by use. Christ admonishes us "To enter into our closets and shut the door and pray to the Father in secret, who will reward us openly." We must get away from the din of the world, from our daily occupations (even if but for a few minutes) for a personal talk with Jesus. The trysting place can be found everywhere. But be sure that the door is shut, leaving cares and tasks behind for an uplifting interview with Him who is the source of our spritual power.

The spirit of prayer will greatly aid in performing the tasks of the day. It infuses hope and cheer. It kindles enthusiasm for Christ's kingdom becoming contagious in its influence on others.

"When morning's beams awake me,
To scenes of life once more,
To seek my Father's guidance,
And aid divine implore.
"When evening draws her curtains,
And veils the light of day,
Amid the quiet shadows
I steal away to pray."

The prayer-habit should become so thoroughly interwoven into our moral character and daily life, that we will almost instinctively turn to our trysting place and refreshed in the inner man we can go on our way rejoicing all day long because we walk in the light of His countenance continually. O blessed privilege, wonderful power in the life of a Christian!—The Evangelical Messenger.

FOUR KINDS OF CLOCKS.

The new year reminds us of Time. Time reminds us of clocks. Clocks do not make time, but they help us to measure time. They also have other uses. It was once charged that clocks made in a certain factory were chiefly valuable as paperweights and mantel ornaments. The purchaser of one such clock returned it to the factory and complained that it could not be depended upon to keep time. He was told it was not intended to keep time. "Why, then, did you make it?" the irate customer inquired. "We made it to sell," was the candid reply.

For the purposes of this argument, clocks are valuable as illustrations.

A Reliable Clock.

A good Christian is like a good clock: He runs right, keeps correct time, and can be depended upon; he tells the truth, and works faithfully; his hands arrive.

A Clock Without a Dial.

One who is a Christian secretly, one who has faith as a moral motive, but makes no profession of it, is like a clock that runs well, but does not tell the time, having no dial. The works are true, the hands move, but there is no "open confession."

A Clock That Needs Repairs.

The man who professes to be a Christian, but is not, is like a clock which has dial and hands, but does not keep the right time. Such a clock deceives no one long. Such a "Christian" is soon discovered and appraised at his true worth—or lack of worth. He is a living lie.

A Clock That Needs Cleaning.

He who neither professes nor possesses Christian character is like a clock with neither dial nor hands, and whose movement is without a mainspring. He is a mere shell of a man. His heart is not right. It needs cleaning. And he needs moral power to qualify him for worthy manhood.

Mainspring and Regulator.

Religion is to life what both mainspring and regulator are to a clock. Christianity furnishes an adequate motive for life's constant endeavor. That motive is Love. Christianity furnishes also a regulating power which is nothing less than the Spirit of God, dwelling in our human life, restraining us to justice, constraining us to virtue, comforting us in sorrow and guiding us in perplexity.

May the new year be guded by Him who is "Creator of the rolling spheres and Potentate of Time."—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

BOBBY'S PRAYER: “THE OTHER BOY.”

Dear Father, there's the other boy to-night,
Who's praying to a god that's made of wood.
He asks it to take care of him till light,
And love him—but it won't do any good.

He is so far I cannot make him hear;
I'd call to him and tell him, if I could,
That you'll take care of him, that you are near
And love him—for his god is made of wood.

I know he'd ask you, if he only knew;
I know he'd love to know you if he could.
Dear God, take care of him, and love him too—
The other boy, whose god is made of wood.

TESSIE'S TWO CLOUDS.

Did you ever see a little real live cloud? Well, I have. Tessie was one this morning. She was a little shiny, white cloud till her mother told her she couldn't go over and play in Gertrude's swing. Then, O my! What a black little cloud gathered on Tessie's face. You have seen those fat black clouds up in the sky when it is getting ready to rain or for a thunderstorm. They are ugly-looking things, aren't they? Well, so was this little black cloud on Tessie's face, and it grumbled and rumbled like the cloud in the sky, too. Only the cloud on her face thundered in words. “I don't see why you won't let me go,” it said. “I just don't want to stay here and play on this gallery.” And I am sorry to say it, but this little cloud made a big storm.

You know clouds—the black ones—rain after they thunder a while, and so did this little cloud on Tessie's face. Only this little cloud cried tears instead of raindrops. O, it was a regular little thundershower that was on Tessie's face then. “What an ugly, ugly storm!” I said. “Where?” asked Tessie, forgetting to cry for a moment. And then I told her about the two kinds of clouds she had been and showed her a little fluffy, white one, sailing by, 'way high up in the sky.

“Don't you think that is a much prettier cloud than the one on your face?” I asked her.

“It looks just like a plate of ice cream,” she exclaimed. And it did. “Black clouds are ugly, and I won't be one; I'd rather be like a pile of ice cream, anyway,” she said, laughing. And away rolled that black cloud.

Don't you think she was a wise little girl to prefer a soft white cloud to a “thundery” black one? We carry the sunshine of good temper in us; and if we only let it shine, it will chase away those black clouds every time. Try it and see. —Exchange.

LUCK.

“Some people are born lucky, that's all!” grumbled Dick. “Look at Tommy Andrew's new bicycle. I've been wanting one for a whole year, too. It's nice to be lucky!”

Ruth looked up from her paper dolls, and added a sigh to Dick's grumble.

“Alice Matthews is lucky, too. She's head of the class again, and I'm sixth. It is nice to be lucky.”

Little Polly sighed now, thinking of her chum, Patty.

“Patty found a quarter in the gutter,” said Polly; “she could not find the owner, so she kept it, and now she has the best rubber ball of any of us.”

“The rest of you needn't talk about luck,” cried Robert, looking from one to the other with a scowl on his face. “Look at Max Webster if you want to see luck! He's been asked to recite for the School Club this month, and everybody knows I can recite better than he can.”

Robert's books went down on the table with a loud bang, and mother put down her pen, and pushed aside the letter she was trying to write.

“Well! Well!” she said. “My four-leaf clover is certainly in trouble. Surely a four-leaf clover ought to be lucky. Let's talk over this wonderful luck which seems to come to Tommy and Alice and Patty and Max. Tommy's bicycle is a beauty, Dick. I do not wonder that you want one like it. Do you remember how hot it was last summer.”

“Yes,” answered Dick, gloomily, “but that has nothing to do with Tommy's bicycle.”

“Hasn't it?” said mother. “It was very hot, yet Tommy worked all summer long selling papers. He earned that bicycle himself. This spring he is enjoying his wheel—but he is also selling more papers, for now he is working for a football. He told me so yesterday. L-U-C-K spells”—

“Luck!” said all the children, except Dick. He was silent save for a long-drawn-out “O-oo!”

“Now, it's Ruth's turn,” said mother, picking up one of the pretty paper dolls which Ruth delighted in dressing. “Ruth stood sixth in her class, and Alice stood first, yet one little girl is just as bright as the other.”

“See—it's luck!” cried Ruth. “That's what I said.”

“Wait a minute,” advised mother. “Does Alice like paper dolls, too?”

“She loves them!” answered Ruth. “Don't you remember what beautiful dresses she made when she was over here last Saturday?”

“When?” asked mother.

“On Saturday,” repeated Ruth, looking puzzled.

“Oh, she plays with paper dolls on Saturday, does she?”

“Yes; on Saturday and on Friday night. The rest of the time she is too busy with her”—

Ruth stopped suddenly, and mother smiled.

“L-U-C-K spells”—

“Luck!” said Polly and Robert, but Ruth and Dick were silent.

“Robert is next,” continued mother.

“Mother, you know I can recite better than Max,” urged Robert, eagerly. “I stood head in my class, and they ought to have let me recite this month. I deserved it.”

Mother had hard work to keep from smiling as she asked,—

“How often does the School Club meet?”

“Every week.”

“How often did you go last month?”

“I didn't go at all, but I was too”—

“Wait a minute,” said mother. “How often did Max go?”

“Every time,”' answered Robert, slowly.

“The teacher depends on Max. He never seems to fail her. What did Max say to you the last time you recited?”

“He said I did ‘dandy good work,’ ” Robert said, more slowly still.

“What did you say to Max when you heard he was going to recite?”

“I didn't say anything. I was too mad.”

Max has improved wonderfully lately,” mother continued. “Every one is noticing that. And, Robert, I am sorry to tell you, but you didn't recite as well last time as you did”—

Mother did not finish her sentence Instead she asked,—

“L-U-C-K spells”—

There was dead silence in the room, and after a few moments mother said,—

“Does Polly want her turn?”

“No, no, mother!” cried Polly. “I was worst of all. I spent two hours hunting a quarter in the gutter, after Patty found hers, and I could have earnel one easily, for father said he'd give me a quarter if I picked the weeds out of the path this week. Don't say anything about me, please!"

"All right," laughed mother; "but I'd like to ask my four-leaf clover again,—

"L-U-C-K spells"—

"Work!" shouted the children, all except Robert; Robert had disappeared. The front door slammed, and mother picked up her pen smiling. She knew, and the rest knew also, that Robert was running down the street at full speed toward the house where Max lived. She knew, and they knew, that "lucky" days were beginning for the four-leaf clover.—Anne Spottswood Young, in Christian Register.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Home.

Text: "Let them learn first to shew piety at home." 1 Tim. 5: 4.

Let us read the entire verse: "But if any widow have children or nephews, let them learn first to show piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that is good and acceptable before God." The message of the text is addressed to the children or young people in the home. They are expected and required to be a blessing to the home as well as to receive benefits from the home. There is a character to build in the home, and sacred duties to be performed by each member of the family circle. I am afraid that many young people care little about what they might do to make their respective homes what they should be. They are content to eat and drink, wear nice clothes, and have a good time. The burdens of their keep, education, and moral training weigh heavily upon their parents. All children should strive to make these burdens as light and delightful as possible. Now, my young friends, the text tells how you can do this, how you can help to make the home a most delightful place in which to live, and how you can make your parents' care of you an inexpressible joy. Just four things are required, harmony, kindness, worship, and work.

Harmony in the Home.

First of all, be agreeable. There can be no harmony without mutual agreement. "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" Some spoil the harmony of the home by fault-finding. Now finding faults is the easiest thing in the world. We all have them, more or less. They are plain to 'most everybody. But to speak of them, to parade them before others, and to be always throwing them up against their owners is not the proper thing to do. This will create bad feeling, and do no good. Besides no one has a right to criticise another harshly, who is faulty himself. It is the case of the pot calling the kettle black. Therefore avoid fault-finding and help to promote agreeableness in the home.

Others spoil the harmony of the home by insisting each upon having his own way. Everybody can't have his own way, if each one's way is different and opposed. God has given the parents authority in the home. Let their will be respected and obeyed. No child, or young person, has any right to impose his will upon either father or mother. There is one condition, however, in which every one can have his own way, and that is the condition of each one choosing the right way. Because there is only one right way, while there are many wrong ways. Put away selfishness, and thereby help make your home pleastnt and delightful.

Kindness in the Home.

In the margin the word "kindness" is given in the place of the word "piety" in the text. So the text reads, "Let them learn first to show kindness at home." Home is a realm of kind, loyal, loving hearts, in which it is each member's chief business to dispense various lovingkindnesses. A heartless home, or an unloving home is a misnomer. Such a home is not a real home at all. There can be a dwelling-place without love, but there can be no home without love.

Show kindness by being respectful and polite, especially to your elders, in the home. For politeness is kindness of manner and speech. Be polite also to each other. Have a regard for another's rights and feelings. Strive to make others feel easy, cheerful, and pleased in your presence.

Show kindness by sympathetic, helpful, and encouraging speech. All have more or less trouble, difficulty and hardship in life. Some have heavy burdens to bear. Not a few find the road of life stony, thorny, and steep. And they are severely tested every step of the way. Many give up in face of such discouraging conditions. For such be an angel of kindness. Let your kind words bring cheer and comfort. Let thou inspire hope and fresh endeavor. "A word spoken in due season, how good is it!" Many a burden has been lifted by a word spoken at the right time. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

And show kindness by deeds. The mother is usually overburdened with the household tasks. The father is 'most always weighed down with anxiety. Brothers and sisters must tackle hard lessons and need help to understand them. There is something each can do in the home to help some one else. Let these little kindnesses be cheerfully performed, and thereby be happier yourself by making others happy.

Worship in the Home.

No home is complete without the private and social worship of God. For the home is one of the best institutions that God ever organized. And not to recognize the Author of the home is to be ungrateful, to say the least. Closet and family prayer are both necessary in the home life. For no home can be what it should be without help from above. And such help is much needed. The grace of forbearance is indispensable. The mantle of charity is a most needful article of investiture. And the disposition to be uniformly cheerful and kind should be cultivated through prayer.

The Lord Jesus has said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I one in the midst." The family consists of at least two or three. This is therefore a most precious promise to the home. Let every home be organized in the name of Christ, and maintain its life and perform its service in His name, and it can rejoice in His presence always. And the abiding presence of the Lord of glory will be an inexpressible contribution to

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Pinnacle and Mt. Zion.—Dear Herald: It has been several months since we claimed any of your valuable space, so you will please excuse us for asking for a little at this time in which to inform your readers that we are not all asleep all the time. Our Sunday schools that are not evergreen have sprouted out and are growing in interest and numbers. When the clouds are not weeping too bad the congregations seem to be increasing while attention to the word is good. Mrs. J. W. Spainhower has returned from Richmond, Va., where she underwent a successful operation for cancer and is at this writing recovering from an attack of appendicitis. Mrs. Levi Watson who has been indisposed for some time is also improving. Bro. V. G. and Mrs. Watson have returned from Florida where they spent the winter months in comfort while we were so near the pole. Bro. W. H. Hauser who has been confined to his bed with rheumatism for several months, is improving, we are glad to learn. Bro. H. L. Stone, of Winston-Salem, presented his church here at Pinnacle with an individual communion set for which he has the thanks of the congregation and pastor. He and Mrs. Stone are regular attendants when the weather will admit. We have received many evidences of good will since we have been here for which we are very thankful. If you will allow further intrusion we will mention a few as we think of them. Wood, hauling, milk, butter, sausage, canned meat, canned cherries, etc. Last mentioned but not least is car rides to appointments and funerals when the distance was too great to make for the time given, also when ice was on the ground making it dangerous to drive our head, tail and set of long legs out of which we hope to make a horse some day. Again thank you, dear brethren and sisters. Your gifts are valuable, but your goodwill is far better. We must close, otherwise the gate may. W. C. L.

Philadelphia, Greensville Ct.—Yesterday was a good day for us. Bro. Morgan preached a most excellent sermon to a large congregation. We were glad to see some out that haven't been attending church as often as they should. We hope that they may continue to attend preaching and also Sunday school.

I am glad to say that I think we are having a better Sunday school now than we had in the last year; more of the older people are taking interest in it. I feel that that is what we need in our Sunday school—more older people.

Bro. Morgan will preach for us again the 3rd Sunday night at 8 o'clock. We hope to have a large congregation out to hear him, for he always has something good to tell us.

He have now set aside one Sunday in each month to take up collection for the Children's Home, which will be the first Sunday in each month, and I hope that the ones who are present on that day will be liberal enough to help a good cause.

May we not forget to pray for the boys, the friends, and loved ones who are in the service of our country. May God be with them till we meet again.

Carrie Chambliss, Rep.

Oak Grove, Cleveland Ct.—Just a few words to let you know we are still in the fight. On account of bad weather last winter we did not have very good attendance at church. But spring's paint brush has painted everything anew, and that makes us rejoice. He have organized Sunday school and have a good superintendent and good teachers, and we now have a large attendance, and all go with willing hearts and hands. On every third Sunday we have class meeting. On the second and fourth Sundays we have preaching by our pastor, Rev. J. H. Stowe.

Memorial services will be held here on the fourth Sunday in May, and we hope that the program will be successfully carried out.

We hope to be very successful at Oak Grove this year. With best wishes to the Herald and its readers,

Willie Mae Gettys, Rep.

Wesley's Chapel, Greensville Ct—Dear Editor: I am a new subscriber to the Herald. I enjoy it very much, especially reading the reports from different charges. Perhaps some one will enjoy hearing from us, as we have been keeping very quiet. We have a splendid Sunday school; but the attendance is not as regular at the present as it has been. Mr. J. J. Phillips is our superintendent; he is an aged father and has been faithful to this good work for a number of years. Our school would be more of a success if all the older people would take the interest he does: Our pastor, Rev. J. M. Morgan, filled his appointment here Sunday night and preached an excellent sermon with good attendance.

I close with best wishes. L. M. Balmer.
May 7th.

Matthew's Chapel Greensville Ct—I suppose the readers of the Herald think it 'most time to hear from Matthew's again. We have not been idle—we are still moving. Bro. Morgan was with us Sunday afternoon with a good message, as usual. We had the largest congregation in quite a while. We did not have any services the third Sunday morning, as rain prevented us.

Our Sunday school is gradually improving, attendance Sunday afternoon was 67. More came after Sunday school to hear our pastor's message. Some who have not been in almost two years have commenced again; we were glad to welcome them back again.

Our special meeting will begin the 4th Sunday in July; let us try to make this the best meeting yet. We may not expect to accomplish any thing unless we try.

Bro. Morgan is planning to have the Circuit Rally the 1st Sunday in July at Matthews, which we hope will be a success. We were glad to have our pastor with us after services.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Lottie Edwards, Rep.

Macedonia Church, Lincoln Ct.—Dear Editor: Our Sunday school at Macedonia is progressing nicely. We are having the best school we have ever had; more in attendance and better interest, but we are still calling to all that will to "come over to Macedonia and help us." The following officers who have served for numbers of years were re-elcted: Mr. A. Houser, superintendent; Mr. Jerry Hoyle, senior quarterly teacher; Mrs. N. E. Cline, card teacher; Mr. Horace Sain, Sec. and Treas; and Mrs. Katie Boyles was elected our children's teacher. We are proud of the interest the young men are taking in Sunday school. I hope much good may be done for all. The officers have all served faithfully. I trust the good work may go on.

Our pastor, Rev. J. W. Self, preached an able sermon second Sunday; he certainly has been faithful even in extremely rough weather. We know to look for him, for I think his motto must be, "I'll be there." Bro. Self is a man worthy of praise. Listen! How many ever give their pastor a word of cheer? Why not encourage our preachers, for they need encouragement; let them know you appreciate their efforts for good by telling them so.

Let us hear from more of the churches. I would like to hear how you are getting along. Three cheers for Macedonia, the Herald, and its readers.

Pearl (Hoyle) Barnes, Rep.

(The Herald thanks our Macedonia reporter for the optimistic and benevolent spirit of her letter.)

Oak Grove, Cleveland Ct.—Some of the good readers of the "Herald" are probably thinking that we have denied the faith, or so near frozen to death after such a cold winter that we have nothing worth reporting, but the warm days of March thawed up the frozen spirit of our Sunday school and prayer meeting, and we reorganized and elected new officers and teachers, and we are now having an excellent Sunday school and prayer meeting; with an attendance of about ninety-five.

We have had the pleasure of listening to some very beautiful sermons during the past two months by our pastor, Rev. J. H. Stowe; Brother Stowe is doing much good in this work.

Oak Grove, and I believe the whole charge is moving forward with more success than for some time in the past.

We will have Memorial Day exercises here the fourth Sunday of this month, with a sermon at 11:00 A. M. by the pastor; dinner on the grounds and speaking in the evening. Everybody is cordially invited.

With best wishes to the "Herald" and its many readers, I am, yours for success in church work, A Member.

Concord Church.—Our S. S. attendance yesterday was 234. Our pastor preached two more of his good sermons yesterday, every one seems to get better. At the morning service, three new members were received into the church, and five children were baptized. Mr. and Mrs. Lowdermilk are doing great good here, and all seem to be pleased with them, and we feel sure we will accomplish much good under their leadership.

Our Jr. C. E. society is growing in number and interest. Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk is the Supt. and the children all like her and they are working to make their society better. They have begun a contest, using the red and blue C. E. pins, also the senior society is starting a contest, too.

The usual services will be held next Sunday. Reporter.

Zoar, Mecklenburg Ct.—We are getting along nicely with our Sunday school at Zoar. The general average is more than it was some time ago. A prayer meeting was held at Mr. T. J. Ogburn's Sunday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, new time, conducted by Mr. W. H. Jones. The congregation was not very large, owing to a special meeting at another church. Suppose the next one will be at Mr. J. D. Adkins', conducted by Mr. Thomas Adkins. We hope to have a large congregation and that the young man will be upheld by the older people, as it is his first time to attempt to conduct a prayer meeting.

Mr. J. A. Walker and Mr. Thomas Adkins returned yesterday from conference at Antioch, which was held on Sat., the 11th of May, at 2:30 o'clock. The next one will be at Zoar. Hope one of the official members from each church can be present. Ruth Jones.

Beulah, Mecklenburg Ct.—Our pastor, Rev. A. Ridge, preached a most interesting and soul-stirring sermon the second Sunday evening in May. We are always glad for his regular time to come around, for he always gives us some good thoughts. Our Sunday school is increasing right along. We have good attendance every Sunday, and we are planning to have Children's Day service some time in June.

We organized the Epworth league on last Sunday night with 10 members and with Mr. R. M. Phifer president and Miss Lelia Harkey secretary and treasurer. Hope to make a success. Pray for us, that we may. With best wishes to the Herald, Lillie Phifer, Reporter.

Halifax.—The second quarterly conference for this charge convened at Ringwood church Friday afternoon, May 10th. Four of the churches represented. Bros. Richard Hunter of Bethesda and Eli Bellamy of Eden were nominated for delegate to Annual Conference.

Financial report for the quarter good. The conference voted to have needed repairs made at parsonage and to build a smoke house. This will be very much appreciated by the pastor's family, for it is a much needed addition. Different matters of interest to the charge were discussed. One of the things of most interest at this particular time is the circuit rally to be held at Hollister the 5th Sunday in June.

Our special meetings will have begun before the next quarterly conference and we have our arrangements made now for pulpit help as follows: Eden, first week in August, Dr. George R. Brown; second week in August, Union, J. B. O'Briant; Hollister, fourth week in August to 8th of September, Charlie Tillman, the singing evangelist; second week in September, Bethesda, C. W. Bates; third in September, Harmony, L. W. Gerringer; fourth in September, Ringwood, H. L. Powell. We are calling special attention to these special efforts and will appreciate your prayers, gentle reader, if you will pray for our meetings to be revivals of power.

We thank Misses Blanche and Lossie Hardee for 14 cans of nice tomatoes and string beans. Also Bro. J. W. Hardee for enough of fresh water fish for two meals for the whole parsonage crew. Bro. John Vinson keeps us supplied with a horse to work the garden free of charge and that comes in good as the one that we make our appointments in has not been broken to the plough yet.

Our work is encouraging and we are hoping to wind up the other half of the year with a good report as the folks are co-operating in all that they are asked to do. Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

Brinkleyville, May 11.

Rehoboth, Granville Ct.—Last first Sunday we asked for $146 to pay for an acre of the new land at our Children's Home and the people responded so heartily that $176 was soon subscribed.

While working on this amount we were told that if it ran over enough for an acre, we would use it on the foreign missions collection, so we have $30 of the $100 which we hope to raise for our new $2,000 campaign, you remember, our Young People's Convention voted to raise $2,000 for our China work within thirty days. We have been delayed in getting this started, but you will surely get your notice, giving you an opportunity to contribute. Please enter into this with zeal and enthusiasm. Our Young People's Association must mean more than meeting annually for a good time socially!

Everybody seemed to enjoy the Greensboro convention and the people there were hospitable. The trip to the Children's Home was great. The children show that they have careful training. Much praise was given Mr. and Mrs. Garrett and their co-workers.

Our S. S. Supt., Mr. E. C. Kittrell, is working up the music among our young people We have a junior choir, along with the older ones and the promise of two young men as violinists. These boys are our own talent, too!

Miss Crystal Bobbitt and Mrs. James Floyd are training the children for the Children's Day the first Sunday morning in June.

Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Harris of the State Highway Commission visited us recently. Mr. Harris is the son of Mr. E. C. Harris and was married to Miss Byrd Campbell of Morristown, Tenn., April 1st.

Hattie Harris, Rep.

Winston.—Our special meeting that Mr. Williams told about last week was a spiritual uplift to the church. A bountiful harvest was gathered into the garner, but there are other fields of golden grain white unto harvest that must be reaped ere they go to waste.

Everybody enjoyed having Mr and Mrs. Kennett and Mr. Pender with us.

The pastor, Mr. Hopper and Miss Ruby Sapp reported a splendid program at the Young People's Convention held in Greensboro, Apr. 18-19.

Our C. E. Society gave a social Monday night, May 13th, in honor of our previous president, Mr. Watson Weatherman, who is returned to us for a short time from Uncle Sam's training camp at Paris Island, S. C. Mr. Weatherman told us about C. E. work in the camps and we're so glad that the same God that protects our boys back home keeps and protects them away. In spite of the pouring rain we had a large representation and all enjoyed the program, especially the refreshing part of it. Reporter.

Buncombe.—While Bro. Fogleman has been finishing his Seminary course I have been, in addition to my own work, serving as a sort of supply on that field, going out one to three times a month to preach Sunday afternoons, also spending a Saturday with them, preaching at 11 o'clock and holding the first quarterly conference in the afternoon, the good old way.

Each church was represented. It was an interesting conference because of the interest the members manifested in the work. They arranged for a substantial amount on pastor's salary to be forwarded to their pastor while he was yet at the Seminary, thinking "it might help" just at that time, each church joining in. They also arranged through the Sunday-schools to surprise and please their beloved young pastor by having presented to him a bouquet of choice flowers on the occasion of his delivering the class oration at commencement.

They appointed the chairman of a committee at each church on the every-member canvass, with the expectation that this committee proceed with its work even before the pastor arrives.

Each church has its Sunday-school going. Clarke's Chapel school did not miss a Sunday even during the severe weather.

It has given me pleasure to worship with the faithful people, and to see the congregations increase in size and interest as more and more of the people learned we were having preaching services. T. M. Johnson.

Asheville.—Sunday, Mothers' Day, was a glad day with us. Brother E. L. Douglas, superintendent of the Sunday school, supplied carnations enough and more than enough for each attendant at Sunday school and at church service to have one. It was a pretty view from the pulpit to see every man, woman and child in the congregation wearing the flower so fittingly emblematical of the purity and the beauty of mother's love. The idea of Mother's Day, the beauty and fragrance of the carnations, the very atmosphere, the spirit of the occasion, the music, the Scripture lesson, the apparent thought of the people, the emotion of soul, all harmonized. The surplus carnations used for decoration at the morning service were pinned on the visitors and others at the evening service, thus rounding out the idea for the day. The audience was good morning and evening, and attentive. The music at each service was sweet.

The second quarterly conference has been beld. Z. M. Wilson and G. P. Younginer were selected as nominees for delegate to the Annual Conference. The conference voted to make a contribution of fifty dollars to the support of the Good Samaritan Mission instead of the twelve dollars formerly pledged and already overpaid.

At a recent meeting of our Sunday school workers some re-arrangement of teachrs and classes was made. It was also decided to extend the use of the graded lessons to other classes. The attendance is steadily increasing.

The programs for Children's Day service have been ordered. This is church literature month with us. The Committee is adding new subscriptions to the list and will endeavor to induce each family, not already subscribers, to subscribe.

It still feels good to be living in the parsonage, in reality the longer the better, a settling down to a sort of they-shall-walk-and-not-faint experience—the first flush of it past but an abiding experience of joy.

As pastor of the church I wish to commend the faithfulness of the members of our choir who are making such untiring, unselfish endeavor to improve our church music and to maintain a high standard. Their labors are bearing fruit.

T. M. Johnson.

High Point.—President Andrews' recent visit to High Point was greatly enjoyed by both pastor and people. On this occasion his message was not in the nature of a set sermon, but more of a general review of the work of the church, which proved to be most interesting.

Dr. Geo. R. Brown left last Friday for Liberty, where he is assisting Rev. Paul S. Kennett in a series of meetings. Consequently there was no service at the 11 o'clock hour on Sunday morning. A large number of the congregation took this opportunity to hear Rev. Dr. Wicker at the First Baptist church, where he has been conducting a revival for the past two weeks. There have been nearly 100 conversions, and the meeting will continue several days longer.

The ladies of High Point have united in a War Prayer Union, which meets every Tuesday afternoon in the different churches to conduct special prayer for our soldiers and sailors in camp and on the firing line. This Prayer Union met in our church last Tuesday afternoon, and a very beautiful, solemn, and impressive service of song and prayer was held under the leadership of Mrs. Geo. R. Brown Dr. Brown made a very impressive talk, being all the more feeling owing to the fact that his eldest son is now at Fort Oglethorpe and expects to be sent to France sometime this summer.

Rev. A. G. Dixon's family left High Point last Tuesday, he having preceded them by two weeks. They will first visit relatives in Baltimore, and then Mrs. Dixon will attend the Board meeting in Pttsburgh. This excellent family has lived in our midst for nine years, and we became much attached to them. They leave many warm friends in High Point, whose prayers and good wishes will follow them to the end of their lives. During their residence here Vista has grown from a little tot of 5 to a tall young girl of 14, and we suspect that she will always think of High Point as Home. The church here will always claim Mr. Dixon as her own with peculiar pride—not that she made him the great preacher and leader that he is, but she gave him his opportunity, and he was wise enough to see and grasp it. On the other hand, under his leadership, the church grew to be one of the very strongest and most influential in the N. C. Conference. May Heaven's richest blessings be theirs, and we trust that they will remember "That the gate to our castle swings inward,

And the latch-string always hangs out."

At a recent meeting of the Woman's Club of High Point, Mrs. J. R. Reitzel was elected a delegate to the State Federation which meets in Raleigh, May 28-31.

Mr. W. P. Pickett has caught the "automobile fever," and he and family are now enjoying a handsome Lexington car.

Lebanon Church, Lebanon Ct.—Mr. Suits preached an excellent sermon to the young people yesterday morning. He met his appointment last night. The writer was not present. We were glad to have some members of the First Methodist church, High Point, worshipping with us yesterday.

Miss Loula Thacker, who was our representative at the Young People's Convention, brought back to our people such a good report that we feel encouraged to be up and doing more and better things in the Master's work. We hope to organize a Junior Christian Endeavor in Lebanon church soon. And we are getting the children together for that children's choir that we've needed so long and didn't have. Beginning today, the writer will conduct a children's singing school in Lebanon church, every Monday and Thursday from 5 to 7 P. M. These ten lessons in music will be given free of charge to all the primary and intermediate boys and girls. The children are expected to buy their own books which cost 15 cts. each. Parents, if the visiting committee have failed to get around to invite your children to attend these singings, please do not feel slighted. Send the children. We want them. The bigger our children's choir grows the better it will be.

Children's Literature has been received and a part of the program given out to the children. Our Children's Day will come in June. Will announce the exact date later.

The stewards are very desirous to see several of our church members whom they haven't seen very frequently this year. Church member, come to the services regularly and get your supply of envelopes. Please turn them in promptly and regularly. Don't wait for the steward to hunt you up. We're trying the weekly payment plan this year and because of some failing to pay the pastor's salary is getting in arrears. This ought not to be. Let's co-operate with the stewards; they are busy people and need your best help.

The Philathea Class held its monthly business meeting on the 1st Monday night in May with Mrs. O. L. Hethcox. The class expects to study the Year Book by topics using one subject at each business meeting. At the next meeting which will be held with Mrs. J. W. Thacker on the 1st Monday night in June we shall study, "The M. P. Children's Home."

I am glad to report that Miss Mabel Crouch, who underwent an operation at the H. P. Hospital on May 6th, for appendicitis, is improving rapidly and is expected home soon.

Bro. J. H. Long has been very sick for several days. He is reported no better at this writing. Let's pray for his recovery if it be in accordance with Divine Will.

Mrs. J. W. Thacker, Rep.

High Point, May 13.

Porter.—In my feeble way I will again try to present a few words to the Herald. As I said before we haven't so much to report about except our good pastor's work. Mr. Hamilton had his good family with him Sunday which very much pleased us all. They sang beautiful songs which rang sweet in our ears and sank deep in our hearts. We thank them so much and want them to come again, for we love to hear sweet music as we can not make much ourselves.

I hope our little church will grow stronger as we people need to grow stronger. Let us throw off the armour of darkness and put on the armour of light, for it is getting high time for each and everybody to awake to a sense of duty and keep at duties as we ought. Maybe times would be better and we would be made happier, like that good old song,

"Help somebody today,
Somebody along life's way,
Let sorrow be ended, the friendless befriended,
O, help somebody today."

Mrs. C. L. Fultz, Reporter.

Haw River.—For some new S. S. scholars we are very thankful. But let's not stop here, but go out and bring more people into Sunday school and church. Our attendance Sunday was 102; our collection was $3.71, for the Children's Home. We are glad to give this offering one Sunday in each month.

This was our preaching day. We had a much larger congregation than usual. This being Mothers' Day, our pastor said he would make it family day. He preached a wonderful sermon to both father and mother. He took for his text, "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord."

Ten new members were taken into the church, who accepted Christ as their Saviour in a revival meeting now going on in the M. E. church of this town. We hope that they will prove a blessing to the church and the church a blessing to them. We are glad to have these new members unite with our church.

Our Ladies' Aid Society has ordered about seventy-five yards carpet to put in the aisles of our church and pulpit which will add very much to the looks of our church and add some comfort.

D. I. Garner, Reporter.

Concord, Saxapahow Ct.—Bro. J. C. Auman filled his regular appointment at this church the first Sunday. He preached, as usual, an excellent sermon to a very good congregation. His thought was made so clear that anyone could understand it. We appreciate each of his sermons more and more.

Our Sunday school attendance is increasing and we hope to have the largest and most interesting one this year that we have ever had.

We are planning to have a memorial service the first Sunday in June. We extend to all a cordial invitation and hope that you will come with flowers to show a tribute of respect to our departed ones.

One of our aged members, Mrs. W. H. Guthrie, is very sick, but we hope that she may soon be better.

Mrs. J. C. Guthrie is also sick and we wish for her a speedy recovery, as we miss her in our Sunday school.

Best wishes to the Herald and its readers. Lizzie Lewis.

Thomasville.—Our second quarterly conference will be held at Mt. Pleasant Thursday, May 23. We are expecting Pres. Andrews to be with us. Preaching at 11 A. M., dinner on the ground. Conference will be held in the evening.

Our table is still being enriched by the fruits of Mrs. Dickens', Homer Richie's, and Bro. D. R. Connell's gardens. We appreciate very much the variety of vegetables and especially the fine strawberries from each garden.

Spent last fourth Sunday night in the home of Grandfather Berrier. He, like his boys, seems to think that it is a part of the program to load the preacher's buggy with the substantials of life that would make glad the heart of any preacher.

W. D. Reed.

Mt. Pleasant, Mt. Pleasant Ct.—There was a very large attendance at S. S. and prayer service last Sunday. We were glad to have with us Bro. J. L. Amick, superintendent of the S. S. at Graham. Our superintendent, Bro. Stafford, was absent—a very unusual occurrence.

We wish to thank Miss Lucile Hardin for her suggestion—"One Hundred Grains of Corn." Our "Class in the Corner" boys have adopted this plan; that is, part of them have. Will tell more about it later on.

We are very glad that Mrs. Shelton can come to S. S. We are also glad to have her mother, who is visiting her.

Mt. Zion Baptist church very kindly extended an invitation to Mt. Pleasant to be present and participate in an all-day song service the 4th Sunday in May. We appreciate the privilege thus given us.

We are duly grateful for the rain which is falling just now. Truly, it is "showers of blessings." Will close before I wear out my welcome. I might want to come again some time. Floyd Amick, Rep.

MARRIED.

At the home of Miss Jewel Whitaker on Sunday, May 4th, six o'clock P. M., Miss Nina Vinson and Mr. Hubert Whitaker, the writer officiating.

Mr. Whitaker is a son of the late Wilson Whitaker and a nephew of Revs. C. L. and C. H. Whitaker. He is now stationed at Camp Sevier where he is an officer. He returned to camp Sunday night. The bride, Miss Nina, as she was familiarly known, is a daughter of John H. Vinson, a merchant here in Brinkleyville. She is on the board of stewards of Bethesda church and is one of our best collectors. She will be missed by this church as she was identified with all of its activities.

We have not learned yet of the plans of this happy pair for the future, but are hoping that the young wife will remain with us while the husband serves his country under the colors.

The best wishes of all acquaintances go with these bright young people, especially from the communities where they have lived heretofore. May the blessings of our heavenly Father go with them and may life's way be as pleasant for them as the bright May day in which they began their journey together.

N. G. Bethea.

Wm. H. Hill and Mercie Lee Bruce were married by the writer at the parsonage in Brown Summit, May 8, 1918. Mrs. Hill is from Reidsville, Mr. Hill from near Mizpah church. We are glad they will locate near Mizpah church, where Mr. Hill is a prominent leader in church work. B. M. Williams.

By the undersigned at the home of H. E. Here, Cedar Falls, on the eve of May 9, Mr. James A. Ferree and Miss Pearl Here. We wish for them a happy journey through life. G. A. Laughlin.

DIED.

Resolutions of Respect of Miss Thelma Elizabeth Renn.

Inasmuch as it has pleased our heavenly Father to take out of our midst a faithful member of our class,

Resolved—That we bow in humble submission to our heavenly Father who doth all things well to those that love and serve Him.

That we extend to the bereaved family our heart-felt sympathy in the loss of the loved one who has been taken from their midst.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family and a copy to our church paper for publication and a copy spread upon the minutes of our record.

—A kind-hearted old gentleman came upon a small, whimpering urchin.

"What's the matter, my little man?" he asked sympathetically, placing his hand on the youngster's head.

"I'm lost. Boohoo!"

"Lost? Nonsense! We mustn't give up hope so soon. Where do you live?"

"I d-don't know, sir," whined the youngster. "W-we've moved and I can't remember the address."

"Well, what's your name?"

"D-dont know, sir."

"Don't know!" exclaimed the old gentleman.

"No," sobbed the urchin. "M-mother got married again this morning."—The Youth's Companion.

WORSHIP.

True worship is not so much concerned about going to church, as about what you do when you get there. There is danger that a man may make church attendance a fetich. If there is no real drawing near to God, no opening the gate of the soul to the inflow of holy influences, no yielding of the will to the domination of Jesus, no resolves to make the life a mirror to reflect the character of God before the world, we may have been to church, but we have not engaged in worship.—The Methodist Protestant.

the happiness and efficiency of the home life. But don't let Him be an unrecognized Guest. Speak to Him, commune with Him and live your daily life in constant touch with Him. Let there be the intimacy of valued and appreciated friendship.

And let there be daily reading of the Word of God in the home. For the Bible is the priceless luminary of life. Its light will chase away the darkness of gloom and despondency. It will clear up doubts and make the path of duty plain. It will also supply strength for the hard tasks that every one must meet. And don't read the Bible merely for information, like you read any other book. Read it as the message of God to your heart and life. God is speaking to you out of His Word. As you read therefore, give ear to the living voice of the living God.

Work in the Home.

The home is a little busy world in itself. There is always something to do. The work of the home is never entirely finished. One task follows upon the heels of another. And it is best that the home be a place for busy hands and busy feet. For idleness is a great curse. It is a breeder of much want and unhappiness. The indolent are a dead weight upon society. They make heavier the burdens of others.

Let there be manual toil in and about the home. Housekeeping, dressmaking, and gardening are most honorable employments. Run a small poultry business. Let the boys and girls have a part in it all. Let them take a pride in performing their allotted tasks well. For what is worth doing at all is worth doing well.

Let there be also intellectual toil. Let home be dedicated to the reading and study of books. Let the young people especially prepare their lessons at home. The school-rrom is becoming more and more a place for recitation. Besides more quiet can usually be secured in the home for study than in the school-room. Make use of all the spare minutes to improve and enrich the mind.

Bear in mind that this service in the home is of first importance. Place emphasis upon the word "first" in the text. "Let them learn first to shew piety at home." Some think, it seems, that home is the last place in the world to be good and sweet and helpful. Some are very nice, polite and accommodating away from home and are perfect bears of displeasure at home. God's Word says that home is the first and most important place in which to manifest the good qualities of mind and heart and life. For there can be little sincerity in being good abroad unless you are good also at home. Home is a place of reality. Parents and children are most apt to be their real selves within the home circle. Therefore be really good and kind and pleasant and helpful in the home. Be good there first, and then you will find it easy to be good everywhere else.

Let home be the little sanctuary that God intended it to be. Let the home altar never be without its offering. May your home be an Eden regained.

—From the Word of Life.

—"Mormonism Under the Searchlight" is an especially interesting little work published by the Glad Tidings Publishing Co., of Chicago, which they sell for 15 cents per copy. It was written by Evangelist William Edward Biederwolt, who in a thorough-going way shows up the monstrous system, and points out the great harm it is doing, and warns people against it. He says it has nearly 5,000 missionaries scattered all over this land and claims to have visited more than 3,000,000 Christian homes during the past year. It is time to wake up as to the menace of Mormonism, and Dr. Biederwolf's book will awaken you if you will read it. It gives the origin, history, and teaching of Mormonism in a most interesting way and would be well worth reading if it dealt with a matter about which we have no practical concern. But it deals with a subject regarding which the American people cannot afford to live in ignorance. We have gone to war to save our country and others from the domination of militarism. In Mormonism is a menace nearer to us and in some respects more dreadful than Prussian militarism.

A SERMON AND A SONG.

In the morning we heard a sermon. In the evening we heard a song. The sermon was by a preacher great and strong. The song was by a woman weak and frail.

The preached dwelt upon the conditions of discipleship as laid down by our Lord—the giving up of self, the bearing of the painful cross, the toilsome following.

When the sermon was ended, the feeling was—How hard it is to be a Christian!

The singer simply sang the words of our Saviour—"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest."

When the song was ended, the heart was soothed; the feeling was—How restful and delightful a thing it is to be a Christian!

CHARLES WAGNER ON THE WAR.

Charles Wagner, the author of "The Simple Life," made some statements regarding the war which will receive respectful consideration. Here are some extracts from them: "There are religious and moral reasons which compel us not only to fight, but to go on in this war with unshakable determination, until liberty and right are victorious. . . It is in the name of God and under the guise of His elected servants the enemies are squandering all the patrimony of humanity, of right, and of international agreements which have been slowly established by civilization. What we have to face now is a fearful attempt to reduct mankind to slavery by usurping divine power itself. . . The militarists who violated the treaties they themselves had signed . . need peace now in order to profit by their booty. . . The whole treasure of our democratic and Christian convictions is in the balance. Iron fetters are ready to enchain liberty in body and spirit. Peace under these conditions means acceptance of the Prussian military system in trade, industry, education, in the language we speak and in the prayers we utter. . . . Is it for this the Pilgrim Fathers left everything? Is it for this that Washington and Lincoln fought the good fight? . . No, a thousand times no! This is a solemn hour. No more dramatic hour has ever struck in the history of time. Let this hour find us ready and strong, determined to follow the Chief who is marching ahead, and who did not die on Calvary to doom His disciples to bondage, but to bring them forth to liberty."

BRO. TURNER'S QUESTIONS.

As no one has answered these questions, we wil ltry to answer them briefly.

1. "Can God be resisted?" Yes, in a moral way. "Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost." Acts 7: 51. In a physical sense, the power of God may well be conceived to be irresistible.

2. "Was Adam saved?" We have no means of knowing. We trust that he repented and believed and found pardon and salvation.

3. "Do we sometimes sin unwillingly?" No doubt we often sin unwittingly; that is, we do wrong acts without being conscious of it, and in this sense sin unwillingly. But the essence of sin is a wrong disposition of will, and the bad deeds we do without meaning to do wrong are mere grievous mistakes. We may be culpable for them, however, if we have not made due effort to inform ourselves as to what is right and wrong in the case.

4. "Does God punish the same sin both here and in the future?" I believe that God punishes the sinner rather than the sin and that as long as one is a sinner he must be a sufferer. In fact, we may say that God has so made the world that every sinner punishes himself and will continue to punish himself as long as he continues to sin. The evil effects of sin persist even after the sin has been repented of and pardoned.

JUDGING OTHERS.

"I think that Mrs. Marengo is the very stingiest woman I know!" said pretty Jessie Potter, as she threw herself into a chair.

Mrs. Potter looked up from her book.

"How often have I asked you, daughter, not to judge people in such an impulsive manner? It grieves me more than I can say."

"But, mother, you have always taught me to tell the truth, and that certainly is true."

"I never thought Mrs. Marengo was stingy. Indeed, she has always seemed very kind and generous to me."

"Well, she is. You know, mother, we girls wanted to make a beautiful wreath of white flowers to take to poor Mrs. Jones for Bessie. She was in our class and they are poor, and we thought it might help to comfort her. Our own flowers have scarcely any white blossoms, as you know, and Mrs. Marengo has the most beautiful white petunia, a large double one, so I stopped and asked her for some, and she would not give me even one. I should think anyone would give flowers for a funeral."

"Why did she say she could not give them?"

"She just said she was sorry to disappoint me, but she could not spare any, as there were no more than she wanted herself. Now was not that mean?"

"It was strange, but still I am sure she had some good reason for refusing. Never judge a person until you know the motive for the act, for your judgment may be altogether unjust."

"I cannot think like you do, mother dear. I am sure you would not judge any one, even if you were certain she deserved it. I think a person should have the credit of bad as well as good deeds.

Mrs. Potter sighed. She knew there was no use to argue with her daughter.

"At least promise me to defer your judgment for one week," she asked.

"I promise not to talk about it, if you wish, mother, but my mind is already made up."

Soon the school girls of her Sunday-school class came, bringing what flowers they were able to collect. One girl brought a tin cross her father had made for her, saying that she thought if there were enough flowers it would be nice to fill that also.

"If we only could," said Jessie, but I am afraid there'll not be flowers enough."

"May I make a suggestion?" asked Mrs. Potter. "I know Bessie loved flowers dearly, not only white, but all kinds. Now why not fill your cross with your choice white kinds, then for the wreath not try to have all white? You have plenty of myrtle and sweet alyssum, then mix in a few colored flowers, pink or some pale shades. Those geraniums and the pink fuchsia would be pretty, and there are a few of those delicate bowers left. I believe Mrs. Jones would be just as well pleased with those."

The girls liked the idea very much and it was at once carried out.

"They look beautiful without the petunias," said Jessie.

"They will be valued for the kindness that prompted the giving," answered her mother.

Nothing carries so much peace to an aching heart as flowers, and Mrs. Jones was comforted when she saw the beautiful offering of Bessie's young friends. But there was also another pretty flower piece, an anchor filled with petunias, that lay on the casket.

Did you see those flowers, mother? I wonder who could have sent them."

Mrs. Potter answered gently, "Mrs. Marengo."

"Mrs. Marengo?"

"Yes. She took them over last night, because she had been a mother and had lost her child. The anchor was sent for from the city when Grace died. So she filled it and took it to this sorrowing mother, and it took every flower she had, although she had treasured them to take to Grace's grave."

Jessie's face was scarlet. "How was I to know? Why did she not say what she was going to do with them?"

"You were not supposed to know, my dear. Mrs. Marengo evidently did not think it necessary to go into details and explain her affairs to you. I hope, Jessie, this may prove a lesson to you never to judge a person's actions if you cannot look behind the outside. God knows and sees. He and He only can judge rightly."—California Christian Advocate.

"AND THE ANGELS OF GOD MET HIM."

The angels of God are always waiting along the path of a good man's life. Fears may be in the way; darkness may be ahead —there may be confusion of judgment and a wavering of the will, but when God leads on He has His messengers at hand. His "troop" stands at attention. When He marks out the line of duty, however difficult, He has His ministering spirits under order; removing the difficulties, gathering out the stones, bridging the deep waters, making the way plain. "I am the way." There need be no doubting that statement. "Without Me ye can do nothing." Neither need we question that declaration. We know that the "path of the just shall be as the shining light," and it is a shining path because the Light of the World is on it; and it will remain there to shine more and more unto the perfect day.

How often have God's children started out on some great mission, like Abram of old, "not knowing whither they went." They felt the pressure of an impelling call and they yielded to the pressure just as truly as Abram. They saw not the land of their dreams nor the triumph of their hopes. They knew not what God intended with them, nor where He would bring them. They had their longing and they pressed forward. The path led into the mist and vanished in the mist. But, following what they conceived to be the desire of God, they went forward unresistingly, and the mist receded as they advanced as if some unseen hand were mysteriously withdrawing the veil. "God's host" moved on before, making plain the path with every forward step. Although the mist seemed to be always ahead, they never reached it. But they found their Mahanaim, where their hearts grew strong to grapple with the dangers that were yet to come.

Do the duty that is next. That is God's order, and provision will be found for responsibilities of the future. There is always a guiding angel somewhere beyond the bend in the road. It is that unseen place about which we are anxious; and we fear it because we know not what God has for us beyond the shoulder of the hill. We may not feel equal to the responsibility before us. But let us not forget the experience of Jacob: "He went on his way and the angels of God met him." They always do. That is a way the angels have. God provides His "messenger" for the "heir of salvation;" but He will also furnish a place of wrestling for the home-coming pilgrim. Jabbok lies across the path of our journey. It cuts at right-angle the most important purposes of life. If we think we can get home without "wrestling" there are some surprises awaiting us. But our wrestling, as in the case of Jacob, is with the Angel of the Way. The result of such a contest need not be questioned. But with the victory there must come a "crippling." Our poor human strength must give way. We must yield to the divine Wrestler, submit ourselves to the controlling impulse of God. We win by yielding. Victory comes through surrender. Jacob "limped upon his thigh," but he won out. He went up from Jabbok with a changed name and a changed life Jacob no longer, but Israel henceforth. God give us ability and willingness to trust Him and go right ahead. If we keep going God will keep blessing.—United Presbyterian.

NOT GUILTY.

John had been a member of the church about six months. He was fourteen years old, and from an irreligious family. At the close of a recent Sabbath morning service he surprised his pastor by asking, "Say, is Mr. Jones a tight wad?" "Why, no, John. He is one of the most generous payers in the church. But why do you ask?" "Well, last Sabbath morning our corner was full before I came in and I was put into Mr. Jones' seat. When the collection basket passed I put in my envelope, but he did not put in any. I thought possibly he had forgotten his, for I did that the Sabbath before myself. But I kept my eye on him today when the basket was passed, and he put none in again. I concluded he must be a tight wad and was playing the hypocrite to beat the band. Facts are, I did not think of much else during the service." "No, John, Mr. Jones is not a hypocrite; he is a worker in the church, and supports it liberally with his money; but he is a busy man and does not like to be bothered with getting the change, and putting it in the envelope every Sabbath. He pays the first of every month to the treasurer, both to mission and to local expenses." John went out with a beaming face, glad that his fears about Mr. Jones were not true. As that pastor later thought upon the incident, he wondered what would have happened had John not been intimate enough with his pastor to ask for the explanation. Would he soon have quit his envelope? Lost his interest in the church services; drifted out and away from God? Many times a small misunderstanding has caused such a disaster. Then that pastor thought, "Are there any other boys or men Mr. Jones' example has hurt? Is his influence in this matter the cause of the drifting of those young men whom I cannot reach, who are always pleading hypocrites in the church? I must see Mr. Jones about this. He can't afford, for the sake of a little forethought and bother, to be a stumbling block to others." Some churches have a good many people like Mr. Jones in them. Are you guilty?—Selected.

THE HEART'S STORY.

I will not doubt, though all my ships at sea
Come drifting home with broken masts and sails,
I will believe the Hand that never fails:
From seeming evil worketh good for me;
And though I weep because those sails are tattered,
Still will I cry while my best hopes are shattered,
"I trust in Thee."

I will not doubt, though all my prayers return
Unanswered from the still white realm above;
I will believe it is an all-wise love
Which has refused these things for which I yearn;
And though at times I cannot keep from grieving,
Yet the pure ardor of my fixed believing
Undimmed shall burn.

I will not doubt, though sorrows fall like rain,
And troubles swarm like bees about the hive,
I will believe it is an all-wise love
And only reached by anguish and by pain,
And, though I groan and writhe beneath my crosses
I yet shall see through my severest losses
The greater gain.

I will not doubt. Well anchored in this faith,
Like some staunch ship, my soul braves every gale;
So strong, its courage will not quail
To breast the mighty unknown sea of death.
Oh may I cry, though body parts with spirit,
"I do not doubt," so listening worlds may hear it,
With my last breath.

THE OLD PEOPLE'S HOME.

The Executive Committee of the Methodist Protestant Church has taken over the former West Lafayette College property in the name of the denomination to be used for an Old People's Home.

This was authorized by the General Conference in Zanesville, Ohio, in 1916.

The debt on the property was apportioned to the Annual Conferences for payment.

Action of the General Conference.

The Annual Conferences with great unanimity have accepted the apportionment made by the Executive Committee and a number of them have borrowed the amount of their apportionment and enabled the Board of Education to apply the same to the original indebtedness until at this time the Board of Education has not only paid all interest due, and satisfied all creditors but has also so adjusted the entire indebtedness that only two obligations remain to be settled by the Board, amounting to a little less than $7,000.00.

Board of Managers.

The Board of Education feeling that the management of an Aged Folks' Home was no part of its business requested that a Board of Managers be appointed. This was done and the men appointed met soon after for the organization of the Board with the following officers and members.

President, J. C. Broomfield, D. D., Fairmont, W. Va.; Secretary, Rev. M. R. Stover, Columbus, Ohio; Treasurer, Mr. H. A. Sicker, West Lafayette, Ohio; Rev. C. E. Sheppard, Dresden, Ohio, Rev. W. C. Harger, Detroit, Mich.; Rev. E. T. Howe, Frankfort, Indiana; Mr. John Pierpont, Harrisville, W. Va.

The management of the Home is now in the hands of these men. The Board of Education will finish the task of adjusting the debt situation.

It is the desire of the Board of Education that the entire Methodist Protestant Church will be familiar with every step taken by this Board in the handling of this property and settling of the problem given to it by the last General Conference.

A few months ago an inquiry was made by the County Commissioners of Coshocton County as to whether the main building, Orchard Hall, might be purchased to be used for a Children's Home. After consulting with a number of the men long connected with the college and by the advice of the Executive Committee of Board of Education, the Secretary submitted a price for Orchard Hall and campus to the County Commissioners of Coshocton County. Nothing further has been heard concerning the matter. The sale of Orchard Hall would not, in any way, interfere with the administration of an Old People's Home inasmuch as there would be a sufficient number of buildings and plenty of ground for such a Home after the sale of Orchard Hall. It was the judgment of the Board of Education that if this building could be sold and the sum received therefrom applied to the $10,000 note signed by the President and Secretary of the General Conference, that such a sale would be of a real service to the church. We have heard that in some quarters of the church a suggestion had been made that the property was to be sold and the proceeds from the sale given to Adrian College. The Board of Education has had no other thought than that of paying the debt at West Lafayette and conserving all interests of the church. This problem was given us by the General Conference and this is the task to which we have set ourselves. If this property is sold—and there is no assurance that it will be—every penny received therefrom will be applied to the indebtedness. Because we felt that this information was due the entire church we are asking our denominational papers to kindly publish this article.

George H. Miller,
Secretary of the Board of Education.

(North Carolina's part of the debt apportioned was $1,000.00.—Editor.)

THE WONDERLAND OF MEMORY.

What a mysterious, wonderful power is memory! How strangely, at times, do experiences, events, scenes, which seem to have faded into absolute oblivion, flash that no man can unravel, we are bound to into luminous consciousness! By threads that no man can unravel, we are bound to the past. Everything leaves its record within us, becomes a part of ourselves henceforth. It is something we can never escape, can never shake off. It makes us thereafter what we were not before. The incidents of the inner world of memory have more to do with our happiness and peace than what we are apt to call, so incorrectly, the real facts of the outer life. Memory makes and furnishes an apartment in which we spend more of our time than we do in our sitting-rooms, and with which we are more familiar than we are with our bedchambers.

Somehow, the memory of our own personal past keeps with us; it runs clear back to the beginning of our personal consciousness. How we love often to rest ourselves in the days that lie in the mellow atmosphere of our childhood! We go back and live over those days. Again we are bathed in the brightness of the summer mornings when the heavens seem so very close down to the earth; the air is trembling with the music of insect and bird, and life is so intense that we almost imagine we can hear the grasses growing. We are lying on our back upon a grassy slope, under a clump of trees. The leaves over our head rustle as if they would sing us a lullaby. We watch the white clouds like ships, as they sail across the upper sea, while our fancy freights them as it will, and muses of their far-off harbor in some magic island toward the sunset.

We have but to turn our head, and we see our childhood's stream gliding by so noiselessly that it seems perfectly still, and looks like a sheet of glass as its water is glinting beneath the touches of the sun's rays. The shadow of our clouds is in its depths, and the trees on its banks lean over to look at the reflection of their branches. We climb the hilltop that is so familiar to us, and that stands more clear and distinct in our vision than any mountain we have seen since. We search the mysteries of the woods, loving to note the ways of animals and birds. As memory brings these childhood scenes before us, our playmates come back, we catch the echo of voices we shall hear no more. Life's burdens and cares fall off, and we are once more the little boy who lived a careless eternity in one summer afternoon. So it is that memory keeps as treasures all our childhood experiences, and makes them as real to us as the things of the present.

Because of memory, the vanished years are not dead, and they never will be; they are all alive. How strange that by our will we can call up the past, its experiences, its scenes, its figures, and make them a part of the sorrow and gladness of life! Where do we keep our yesterdays, the world of things that we remember? Somewhere stored up within us. But where is the record? It is not in the same brain that we had in our youth; for there is not a particle of our youthful brain within our head today, there is not a particle perhaps of the brain which we had a few years ago. Somewhere memory keeps its record. Can any one tell us where? It is through memory that we keep our self-conscious individuality, that we keep our identity. Our wonder increases when we know that our brain is in perpetual flux and change, as truly as is a waterfall; when we know that our brain is like Niagara in that it keeps its form year after year, while its constituent particles are in continual flow.

Have we traveled in other lands? How does memory keep for us all the scenes we have looked upon in our journeys! Again we are on the ocean when the setting sun, grown larger as we see it through the dense air, touches with its fire the edge of the sea, and a ship sails by, cutting every mast and every rope against the red of the sun. We gaze upon the ruins of old palaces and convents whose crumbling stones and clinging ivy are redolent of romantic history. We catch through the breaking mists in the Highlands of Scotland a peep at some beautiful landscape of heather and tarn. We are in the cathedral of St. Peter's, not only awed by the splendor of the architecture that has heaved such a dome into the air, but listening to the monotonous chant of the priests or the grand swelling of the organ music and the sweetness of the choral voices. We sit on the circuit of the Colosseum, and dream of the scenes enacted in the arena and of that civilization of an age that exists now only in its record. We climb the Alps, crowned by Mont Blanc; see the lake at our feet and the snow peaks against that wonderful never-to-be-forgotten blue. We walk through the world's great galleries, amid marvelous works of art, pictures and statuary. Thus it is that memory keeps for us all our journeys, so that they are alive with us and in us.

What is the nature of this magnificent faculty by which we remember all the places and scenes of our foreign travels, so that they remain as real to us as the objects now around us? Nobody can tell, it is utterly incomprehensible. The human mind is as unfathomable and inexplicable as is the Infinite Mind itself, and there is nothing more marvelous about the human mind than its chambers of memory. How poor, how empty, how stripped and bare our life would be, if everything that we have experienced were suddenly blotted out of existence! If we will pause to think what our life would be, if a day as soon as gone were a blank, we will see how much of the beauty, the blessings, the glory of our life, is made up of memory.

Memory plays the part of a warning in our daily lives. Were it not for this faculty our life would be utterly disorganized. Morality would be impossible did we not remember the things that serve as a lesson of guidance. The mariner sailing through an untried sea observes that here is deep and open sailing; that on this side is a hidden shoal, on that a rock, which is covered at high tide but bare at low tide; that in another place is a strong ocean current that, if he wish to keep straight his course, must be taken account of; that on such a part of the globe the prevailing wind is from one quarter, and in another part from another quarter. He sets these things down on his chart, thus making a paper memory that any intelligent seaman thereafter can use as a practical guide for his course. So we learn to navigate the future because we remember the experiences that are behind us. We learn, by the record of the past, the principles by which we guide ourselves in the present; without this, we should be all at sea.

How great are the pleasures of memory! How many sweet, bright, sunny hours come to us through this process of remembrance! Blessed are they who are comforted and made strong as they walk thru remembered fields, under remembered skies, in remembered sunshine! It is only a small part of the world we really live in that is made up of that which day by day passes before our eyes. As the vista of the past stretches longer and longer behind us, we find that this same past becomes ever a larger part of the life of today. How many have memories that are like well-springs of water, sources of refreshment and comfort, life-giving and hope-reviving! The best motive force and the noblest inspiration of today are rooted in the remembered experiences of the past. The mainspring of many who are doing their finest and noblest and best is the memory of a father, a mother, a child, a companion—some loved one who has vanished into the sunrise of the immortal life. They are seeking to live as if that departed loved one were at their side urging them to consecrated devotion, to noble self-sacrifice.

There is nothing in the world we are so sure of as we are of the happiness-making memories of the past. The gladness we have had, the friends we have prized, the loves we have cherished, the joyous experiences through which we have passed—these, so long as we are ourself, are ours more really than any hoped-for future. What shall be—whether our bright dreams shall come true, whether any of the bird-like hopes that sing to us, and lure us on in pursuit, shall be realized—these things who can tell? In reference to our future we plant flowers; will they blossom? Some of them. Some will be bright, and will fill our homes and lives with fragrance. Some of them will grow for a little while and gladden us with anticipation of what is coming; and then in spite of all our care, a worm will gnaw their root and frost will blight them, the leaves will turn black and fall off, and only the withered, dead stalk remain in our hands. But the memories of our past are unchangeable. What has been is forever. The memories of friendship and love and right living are eternal treasures.

The child has no past. Its life is all in the present or on the future—a dream of beauty and glory to be. What a contrast to that world in the past which memories create for the aged—a world peopled with those that used to walk by their side, to look into their eyes, to clasp their hands in tenderness and love! Old age is retrospective. When a man has climbed a mountain side he naturally sits down and looks back over the way he has come. When one's life-path is mainly traveled he naturally looks over the exciting and absorbing incidents through which he has passed. In the evening shadows he reviews the events of the day.

Sometimes the aged live almost wholly in this land of memory. Their real world is the remembered one; in this, which has no boundaries, is the larger and grander and sweeter part of their lives. To them, the future means little, the present means still less, and the past means almost all. How often do their eyes have in them a far-away look which means that they are in the realms of retrospection; that they are revisiting scenes precious to them in other days; that they are talking with some old-time friend who has faded into the blue. They remember the days when their bright-eyed children were growing up about their knees; they listen to their prattle, look into their sweet faces, watch the sunlight floating across their hair, and live over again all the joys of the time when they were young parents, with the little children playing around their feet. Those the aged meet and talk with every day are few compared with those who come to them from out the past. They see long-loved faces that years ago went out of their homes, like stars that die and leave blank spaces in heaven itself; they stand again by the side of loved ones, no longer visible to them; hear their voices once more; and experience again the loves, no longer a part of the living world, moving them to say in the words of Longfellow:

"Then the forms of the departed
Enter at the open door;
The beloved, the true-hearted,
Come to visit us once more."

How glad and thankful the aged are for the imperishable memories of dear ones who have gone over into the great silence! The remembered sweetness of their presence gives thm back fragrant hours that will not return again.

Never should we forget that our life is being written, day by day, as on a manuscript that we must read in the years to come; and, if we do not like the story, it will then be too late to change the plot or assign a new destiny to the characters. How many are they who carry secret burdens on their hearts, who walk in shadow, and sigh when they are alone, and all because of things that ought not to have been? How much they would give if they could wipe out something they said or did yesterday or in the years agone! Some of the saddest memories of the past have to do with wrongs one may have done, with harsh words one may have unnecessarily spoken, with tender words called for but not uttered to the hungry hearts by one's side, thirsting for a little appreciation which they never get. These things are most sad, because they are remediless.

One of the most pathetic pictures in literature is the figure of the old Carlyle as he sits in his study after his wife's death. He reads over her letters, recalls her life and the relations in which he stood to her. He, a great strong, rough giant, has this frail, gifted, beautiful, poetic, appreciative woman at his side through life, and never dreams what she is until death takes her from him. And then he sits broken-hearted over the past, and wails with a sorrow that cannot be appeased because he cannot speak to her and tell her now what he has learned concerning her. He says, "Oh, if I had only spoken what was really in my heart while she could hear it, but it is too late, too late now! O God, if I could have her back with me five minutes to tell her what I think of her now, but it cannot be!" This picture of Carlyle recalls Whittier's lines:

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these: 'It might have been.'"

The record of our personal experiences made by memory is not to be effaced. The word, when it has passed into an echo, cannot be unsaid. An act, when it is once behind us, cannot be grasped and annihilated. The universe never wipes out anything that is a fact. Omnipotence itself cannot undo that which is done. Blessed are they who see to it that they do not speak the words that they wish blotted out, that they do not commit the deeds that they would not like to recall!

If a man started to travel through Europe for the purpose of gathering up a series of pictures to be hung in his room when he returned home, and to be the scenes on which he must gaze through all the rest of his life, how careful he would be in the selection made! What serious thought he would give to the matter from the very outset! We are like such a man in that we are gathering pictures that we shall have to look at with regret and shame or with interest and joy. Thrice blessed are they who, when they unlock the doors and enter the picture galleries of memory, take comfort and peace in what they find therein! As our past makes the memories of our present, so our present is storing away the memories of our future. Our present thinking, loving, doing, for good or ill, are adding to what shall be our remembrance tomorrow. Our every passing year is only a sparkle and a dash of foam as the flood of time bears us on; and we should seek to put into each year what will be pleasant to look at in the sunlight of the future life. We are now weaving the mysterious stuff out of which the garment of our coming eternity is made. If our life in this world be good and pure, loving and Christlike, it will help to make, as memory recalls it, the by-and-by of the forever bright and glad and sweet.—John Reid Shannon, in Zion's Herald.

A DUTY BEFORE US.

Thursday, May 30th, is the time set for fasting and prayer; a time that should be observed by the people of the United States. The order is to fast and pray—both. We are commanded to be of one mind, one heart, and we should be one in this. People differ on some things, and often they can't help but differ, in a way; but in the case before us all can agree—and all should agree.

All Christians can agree in full, and this is a time to try the faith of all the people of God.

Some people will say that they can't pray, but they can fast, and they can groan—and all can respect the house of prayer. Some do not think as much of the efforts of war as others, but all should agree on the trying to respect the great national day of the 30th of May. A man went to the special meeting and became convicted, but said that he could not pray. At once the class leader, Mr. Schaub, told him to groan if he could not pray; but he did not want to get down on his knees, nor did he want to groan—he did not want to repent. The lack of worship and repentance was the trouble in the case of that man—as with many others. The carnal mind hates self-denial, and don't want to worship God, because if we worship God we must have self-denial.

All people can bow to God, and confess and groan and humble themselves, in a way—and all can fast. The thing that should be urged by those of especial responsibility and influence, is that all should go as far in the act of obedience as possible. All who have the righteousness of God can obey in full, and all others can fast and humble themselves and groan—and all can try to confess.

The people of this nation should obligate to continue to fast and pray—and the nation officially has great need to promise that forever after we will have a fixed national day for humble worship by faithful praying, and literal fasting.

As it now seems it should be urged that we promise God that we will continue to observe such a day of great self-denial, however the future. We have no right to propose terms to God, but our part is to obligate to continue in the most humble way of obedience whether we succeed in gaining our ends or not.

We can't confess for our enemies (while we know that they are very dangerous), but we have serious confession of sins to make, and the national day is set for this very confession.

Such a national day as has been set should have been observed in the past, and this we now confess; and now while we have it we should cherish it and hold on to it for all the future. This May 30th ought to be one of the greatest days that this nation has ever seen.

There is no risk in this venture; only in the direction of salvation and deliverance, and success, by the grace of God. Mordecai and Esther, the Jews, had a severe venture to make. See Esther, fourth. The day's venture for this nation will be in the way of life and health and peace. The order of their day was to ‘‘neither eat nor drink three days, night or day’’and is a serious problem for us to think on. Let all take up the Bible, at once, and look up the references of fasting, and let us eat accordingly—and this also ‘‘by the grace of God.’’ One of the most important days for fasting is near. ‘‘And then shall they fast in those days.’’ Mark 2: 20. ‘‘The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.’’

UNVEILING OF TABLET TO THE MEMORY OF CHARLES HUBBELL.

By Rev. A. G. Dixon.

The Charles Henry Hubbell memorial tablet was unveiled on May 1, in the historic Plymouth Methodist Protestant Church, Adrian, Mich., at 11 A. M. The tablet was presented to the church by Rev. A. G. Dixon, in behalf of the Board of Young People's Work, and also in behalf of the thousands of young people throughout the denomination. Rev. F. A. Perry, pastor of the church, in a few well-chosen words, accepted the tablet for the church. Rev. H. L. Feeman, president of Adrian College, and the former secretary of the Board of Young People's Work, then read a historical sketch, which is published with this article.

Rev. George H. Miller, secretary of the Board of Education, and Rev. Lyman E. Davis, president of the General Conference, both spoke briefly, but so appropriately of the memory of our fallen comrade, brother and friend. The service closed with the singing of ‘‘O Master, Let Me Walk with Thee,’’ and repeating together the Mizpah benediction.

Historical Address by Doctor Feeman.

We see at this stage of world progress the best and the worst in human nature rising to the surface from the hidden life of men, like the contents of a boiling cauldron. These two possibilities of human kind are always present, but not in so sharp contrast as in this hour of world crisis. We who love truth and the good should be thankful, that always in these mad hours of the world's sweep onward there are those who climb to the highlands and, as Charles Kingsley wrote:

“Do noble things, and so make life, death, and that vast forever,
One grand sweet song.’’

It is a happy reflection also that not all of the best in our human race must wait the dark hour in the world's day, that it may shine with noble and courageous deed. Brave manhood is not the spark of an instant fanned into radiance of being by occasion. It is a thing of blood and spirit that, like pure gold, can do naught else but shine in the course of life, whether that course be ‘‘across the level causeway of the years’’ or along the path of violent upheaval. There are heroes for every day in the voyage of the human race toward its destiny. Said Thomas Carlyle: ‘‘Brother, thou hast possibility in thee for much; the possibility of writing on the eternal skies the record of a heroic life.’’

We meet at this time to pay tribute to such a life. Whether or not the citizens and neighbors of Dennis Street, this city, ever saw, back in the 80's, this possibility in the lad, the one lad who went in and out the Hubbell home, such possibility was there, and realized as this lad came into manhood and gave himself in service to his fellowmen. His is a record of a heroic life. It was the heroism of unwavering devotion to high resolve.

Charles Henry Hubbell was born in Adrian, Michigan, November 20, 1872. He died on the site of the old home December 26, 1914. He grew up as an Adrian boy, graduating from the high school in the class of '90, and from Adrian College in the class of '93, taking an additional degree the following year. He united with the Plymouth Methodist Protestant Church in 1892, where he began his brilliant and unique career of Christian usefulness. Responding to a strong conviction of a call to the Christian ministry, he applied for membership with the Ohio Annual Conference, and was ordained an elder in that body in 1896, being assigned to a charge in Cincinnati. His marriage this same year to Alma Wilcox, an Adrian girl, was the happy culmination of an Adrian friendship in high school, college and church. It was not long before the young people of the Ohio Christian Endeavor Union began to feel the light and warmth of his personality, and in 1898 he was made vice-president of the state union. Three years after, when this organization decided to employ a field secretary, Dr. Hubbell was the choice, and the fruit of his labor was proof that they knew their man. He gave seven years of abounding service in this capacity and led the Ohio State Christian Endeavor Union into the front rank of such organizations throughout the United States. To him has been given the credit by those outside his denomination of making the Ohio organization the strongest of its kind and a model for others. He served as leader of Ohio's young people in Christian Endeavor until 1908, when his own church called him to fill the office of secretary-treasurer of the Board of Young People's Work, which had been created by the General Conference of that year. As in his work with the Ohio Union, this was pioneer work, and he entered upon his duties with the passion of adventure. His name became the sign for enthusiasm, good cheer and sparkling humor from Texas to the Great Lakes, and eastward to the sea. He popularized the cause throughout the church, while his influence and brotherliness reached beyond his own denomination. He was elected to succeed himself at the General Conference of 1912, and worked with his usual ardor for two years and eight months of this quadrennium, laying down his task in the early morning after Christmas Day, 1914, when the arrow of death struck a shining mark.

He will never be forgotten by those who knew him. He was a herald of gladness; a messenger of hope; an apostle of friendship; the apotheosis of service. He did not perform his duties perfunctorily, but in a spirit of affectionate attachment, so that his points of contact with men became sources of happy recollection. He lived as a friend of men. He served as a faithful workman of God. He was a Christian hero of the everyday life.

We lift this bit of inscribed bronze today on the walls of the church of his boyhood and youth, the very walls that have been vibrant with his voice in confession of his Lord. We do this not to perpetuate his life. He has done that more perfectly than we could ever hope to do it. We erect his likeness and leave words of remembrance about him here in order to keep fresh in our own minds, and in the minds of young people in succeeding generations, the sweet attraction and lustrous worth of a life like his. In the language of that seer of the human soul, Robert Browning, he was ''One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward.

Never doubted clouds would break. Never dreamed though right were worsted, wrong would triumph.
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, sleep to wake.''

MR. HOOVER ISSUES STRONG APPEAL.

Mr. Herbert Hoover, United States Food Administrator, has issued a ringing, statement and appeal to the people of America, the appeal to be presented not only thru the press but also thru churches, fraternal orders, women's clubs and other organizations.

''The confidence of the United States Food Administration that the people of the country would respond enthusiastically and whole-heartedly upon presentation of the facts in any necessary requests for reduction in consumption of food has been fully justified. We have demonsstrated our ability not only to think together but to act together. This response of the people is the reason for the present appeal.

''Our work is not yet completed. In spite of the encouraging results of our efforts, in spite of the fact that our exports of foodstuffs are constantly increasing and are approaching the minimum requirements abroad, the need for renewed devotion and effort is pressing. While all of the requirements of the Food Administration should be constantly observed, there are certain matters which I desire to stress at this time.

''In case of meat and meat products the necessities for shipment abroad are very great. Whereas, the Allied consumption has been reduced to an average of about one and one-quarter pounds per person per week, we are today enjoying an average of about three and one-quarter pounds per person per week. This division is inequitable. An understanding of these facts will justify our request that the consumption of all meats, including poultry, as nearly as possible, be reduced to two pounds per week per person over four years of age.

''In the case of sugar we are embarrassed by the necessity of using ships for carrying our soldiers and feeding the Allies and in consequence we must use sugar with great economy. We must emphasize the importance of canning and preserving on a large scale among our people this summer and our available sugar must be conserved for this purpose.

"But the situation with regard to wheat is the most serious in the food supply of the Allied world. If we are to satisfy the minimum wheat requirements of our armies and the Allies and the suffering millions in the Allied countries, our consumption of wheat in the United States until the next harvest must be reduced to approximately one-third of normal. It is inconceivable that we should fail in this crisis. For each of us who can personally contribute to the relief of human suffering it is a privilege, not a sacrifice. All elements of our population cannot bear this burden equally—those engaged in physical labor need a larger bread ration than those in sedentary occupations. Because of the constant daily employment of women and the lack of home baking facilities many households in large urban centers require a food ration already prepared, such as the bakers' standard victory bread loaf. Furthermore we must constantly safeguard the special requirements of children and invalids.

''To meet the situation abroad and to prevent serious suffering at home it is imperative that all those whose circumstances permit shall abstain from wheat and wheat products in any form until the next harvest. It is realized and deeply appreciated that many organizations and some communities have already agreed to follow this plan.

''It is hoped that you will communicate this to your organization and your community, urging those whose circumstances will permit to join with us and take this stand.'' Herbert Hoover.

THE Y. M. C. A. WAR ROLL.

So many inquiries have come to this office as to the work of the Y. M. C. A. and what it is accomplishing in connection with the work in camp that I am submitting this paper for information of those who are interested in this particular line of work. It may be of interest to know that thirty-six names have been reported to this office of the Religious Work Bureau of the Y. M. C. A., and the names of these men with the cards signed presumably have been transmitted to the pastors of the local churches. If the present plans carry these cards hereafter will be forwarded to my office and be sent from here to the pastors of the several churches.

I may say that this work is still in its experimental stage but much is being accomplished and much more will be done as the men on the field become familiar with the duties and opportunities which are presented. May I ask that all of our churches make the spiritual welfare of all these boys a matter of very special prayer, since so many of them are facing unusual temptation and need the intercessory prayers of God's people.

Plans are being made that will suggest that these men, not already church members, be admitted to church fellowship in absentia in order that they may feel that they have had a real church home during their absence in cantonment or trench and that they will feel anxious to get back to church when they return from the front.

The following from the Religious Work Bureau in New York City will give further information as to the plans and methods by which this work is being done.

Charles H. Beck.

The War Roll—The Pledge.

I hereby pledge my allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ as my Saviour and King, and by God's help will fight His battles for the victory of His Kingdom.

This Pledge is signed by the men with the colors. The card on which they sign provides space for their signature, their military and their home addresses, the church of which they are members or their church preference, and the nearest relative and relative's address.

Limited Use of the War Roll.

It is intended that the use of the War Roll card shall be strictly limited. Cards should not be lying around loose on the tables in the camp. The signing of a card should mean specifically one of two things —1. the beginning of a Christian life; 2. the renewing of the Christian life on the part of a "backslider." In the first case the signer indicates his church preference, if he has any; and if he has none, it should be indicated.

In the second case he should indicate the church of which he is, or has been, a member. An entry in this space will indicate that the man considers himself a backslider.

The use of the card will be understood to mean either a definite reconsecration, or the beginning of a Christian life. There is no desire to have great numbers of signatures for census purposes.

The Follow-up.

Camp records of these signers are kept by religious work secretaries in the camp in which the man signs a card, and records are transferred to the camp to which the man goes at any time his company is transferred.

The original card which the man signs is sent to the Religious Work Bureau (124 East 28th St., New York—to be 347 Madison Avenue, New York, beginning March 1, 1918.) Triplicate copies are made at one operation—one for the home pastor, one for the Association secretary nearest the man's home, and one for the New York office record.

The pastor's copy is sent with a printed letter to the pastor of the signer's denominational membership, or preference, in the man's home town, and he is asked to call on the man's family and urged to utilize to the full this opportunity, when the people are thinking of the men who signed the card.

When the information is complete enough the original card is sent to the signer's home folks, either through the local pastor or by direct letter from the Religious Work Bureau, in whichever way seems to promise most certain delivery. This card will surely be cherished by the home folks in the signer's absence, and especially in the event he is called upon to make the supreme sacrifice in France or elsewhere in the service.

The Association Secretary's copy goes direct to the Y. M. C. A. secretary nearest the man's home, in order that he may assist in any way in assuring the fullest results from the opportunity presenting itself.

The office copy is kept on file in the office of the Religious Work Bureau.

The children have done high grade work in every department of the school this year. Three would have finished the 10th grade had Bessie Clouse remained six weeks longer. In order to secure a splendid position she could not remain until our close.

Hall Brown and Robbie Clouse have been promoted to the 11th grade.

Mrs. Minnie Pickett Harrell has completed her third year as teacher in the Home. Her work has been so successful that the Home is to be congratulated for having secured her services for the fourth year. H. A. Garrett.

HOME MISSIONS.

The Annual Meeting of the W. H. M. S. of the M. P. Church was held in Star Church, Baltimore, Md., May 9-11.

The meeting was attended by delegates from a number of the branches and we feel sure that all who attended returned to their homes with new zeal for the work.

Reports from the various departments of the work showed good work done during the year.

The Pittsburgh Mission sent in a splendid report of work done in the slums. The Pittsburgh Branch asked to be allowed to retain dues to start a Day Nursery, but the Board thought best not to cripple work already started to start new work. However we feel sure these good women will find other means and start this work in the near future.

The report from the Children's Home, High Point, N. C., showed 22 girls and 22 boys now being cared for. This completely fills the building. An adjoining farm has been purchased for the Home recently. This makes nearly a hundred acres of land belonging to the Home. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett, superintendent and wife, Miss Bowman, matron, and Mrs. Harrell, teacher form the very efficient corps of workers in the Home.

The Alvin Drew Industrial School at Pine Ridge, Ky., is to continue the services of Mrs. Everett as mountain missionary and have Misses Gertrude Hughes of Pa. and Miss Daisy Osbourne of N. C. as teachers at least during the summer months.

The Texas-Colorado Branch (colored) asked for the moral support of the Board in promoting educational advantages at Lockhart, Texas. The Board decided to start a building fund for them, which is to be held until they have purchased the land on which they wish to build.

Mrs. Eva Robinson did splendid work in several states during the months in which she was employed as Field Secretary. The employment of a Field Secretary for another year was left to the discretion of the Central Committee.

The Board was favored with an address from Miss Dot Emmert in which she very effectively presented the deaconess work.

The following officers were elected for the coming year:

President—Mrs. A. G. Dixon, N. C.
1st V. Pres.—Mrs. T. J. Wilson, D. C.
2d V. Pres.—Mrs. N. Vice, Ind.

A WORD ABOUT SHOT.

Why, asks the Philadelphia Public Ledger, are lead shot made by dropping the molten metal from the top of a high tower? The popular supposition, it goes on to explain, is that they acquire the requisite spherical shape by falling from a great height; but it is not so. The leaden globules are as perfectly spherical when they start from the top of the tower as when they strike the water in a well at the bottom. The stuff is held at the top of the tower in a large iron pan that has a perforated bottom, and the metal drops that fall through are the shot.

In falling they cool, hardening sufficiently to suffer no deformation on striking the water, two hundred feet below. This, indeed, is the reason for the tower—to give the leaden globules time to cool while passing through the air. The use of the water in the well is to furnish a soft cushion for the shot to fall on. Later the shot are scooped out of the well and are put through a series of sieves to sort them into sizes.—Youth's Companion.

LOVE TOWARDS GOD.

If you love God today with all your heart, you will love Him tomorrow with a purer love and a larger heart, and each succeeding day of life will increase your love and deepen your appreciation of God. Then when the evening of life approaches and the eye grows dim and the pulse grows weak, you will be willing and eager to meet God face to face, for He is the God of love.—Alex. C. D. Noe, in Mission Herald.

THE HIDDEN SONG.

Do you know that some birds are taught to sing by having their cages darkened? Then the little things long for the light, and in some way realize that they must make a sound that the master of their night and darkness may hear, so they make a faint note or two. These are always faint at first, but they are always rewarded with a brief space of sun. And at length the small youngster comes to know that if it would live in light it must sing, and soon it finds that the faint notes have grown strong and clear from the continued plea for deliverance, and finally its song is rare and beautiful, and the master is willing it should have much light in return for a little singing.

Are not some of us birds caged in by the limitation of humanity? Is not that cage often darkened by sorrow, disappointment and seeming ill fortune? Yet how is the Master to learn that we love the brighter, better things? And in the first attempt—be it ever so rude and weak—we gain an ear that is yearning to listen, and a hand that is always ready to lift the shadow, at least for awhile, says the author of ''Great Optimist.''

Like the bird, which after many days of darkness and many days of singing itself again into the light, finds its little voice growing strong and sure, we who sing on through our trials and burdening shall some morning find our own voice sweetened and strengthened from the long practice. The wavering notes become steady, the harsh ones gentle, clear. Then do we know that the shadows of this world are sent but to train the weak voices and fit them for their places in the choir invisible.—Ex.

150 MINUS 127.

Two and a half years ago one hundred and fifty Armenians, iivlng in a village near Caesarea, had the temerity to defy Turkish persecution. Ordered to be ready for deportation one week hence, they left the village secretly three days before the appointed time. Then their troubles began.

Of necessity they travelled much by night and along unfrequented byways. The few supplies they were able to take with them soon disappeared. Travel was slow and laborious through the mountains of Asia Minor, and winter was coming on. Then, during the coldest weather, snowed in on the mountains, the first of their number died. Others soon followed. Spring found less than one hundred living. They toiled on, stopping where they dared, to gain a livelihood, but always hurrying along when the Turk threatened.

The second year found the little group toiling across the Arabian Deserts. Heat, thirst and hunger thinned its numbers, and Arabian robbers harrassed the pitiful remnant,—not that there were goods among them of any value, but the persons of Armenians, protected by no nation, can be sold at a fair price.

Two and a half years have passed since the one hundred and fifty left their homes in Asia Minor. Today only twenty-three of them live to tell the tale. These twenty-three reached Port Said in January, 1918, weary and ready to die. But they have reached civilization, safety from the hounding Turk, and Christian Relief found in the help sent from America by the Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, One Madison Avenue, New York City.

NEED FOR BLACK WALNUT CENSUS URGENT.

In connection with the black walnut census which President Wilson has asked the Boy Scouts of America to undertake, Henry S. Graves, the chief of the U. S. Forest Service, has written a letter to the Boy Scouts explaining why the need for the work is urgent.

''The tremendous forest resources of the United States,'' Colonel Graves states in the letter, "will undoubtedly be a very important factor in the winning of the war for the allies. One of the most essential timbers for war purposes, as the President points out, is the black walnut. With the exception of mahogany, which has to be imported and thus burdens the shipping facilities of the country, no other wood is so well adapted for airplane propellers.

''Since four or five propellers are required for each airplane and since black walnut is scarce and only the best grade can be utilized for this purpase, it is important for the Government to know immediately the location of all available supplies. Walnut is also the chief wood used for gun-stocks.

''I believe that the Boy Scouts are performing a most valuable patriotic service in undertaking this work. Let me urge you to impress upon the farmers of the country the importance of properly conserving their forests and especially propagating such valuable species as the black walnut, which has appropriately been called the Liberty Tree.''

—The postmasters of the State are called to meet in conference on June 3rd at 11 o'clock at the War Savings accounting postoffice of their county. This conference is called by Col. Fries, State Director of War Savings.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Burlington.—Our second quarterly conference was held last Tuesday evening. Business transacted as usual. Nominees for delegate to next Annual Conference, Bros. Chas. B. Amick and J. G. Rogers. Either will make a good delegate.

The work of repairing the church progressed rapidly last week and ere long we hope to have our building much more attractive in appearance.

Our Sunday school loses three members today in the persons of W. T. Way, Sidney King and Gurney McPherson, who go to do service for their country. A reception was held in their honor Friday night in the Baraca room.

Our church has recently lost two good members in the moving to Greensboro of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. McIver. We are sorry to lose them and yet we know they did the right thing by taking their church membership with them. Burlington has to give letters occasionally as well as receive them.

Bro. Henry Isley recently remembered the parsonage with a sack of flour and other friends have been bringing cabbage. We thank these good people.

Yesterday we had 250 in S. S. and good congregations in preaching services. Pay up day was observed and a large number of envelopes were turned in.

J. E. Pritchard.

Monday.

Reidsville C. E. Society.—Our C. E. Society met with Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Jones Tuesday evening, May 21, and held its regular monthly meeting. We had reports from the committees, and as it was the time for the election of officers the following were then elected: President, Mr. Chas. J. Roberts; Vice Pres., Mr. J. W. Dixon; Rec. Sec., Miss Sadie Sands; Cor. Sec., Miss Lola McCollum; Treas., Miss Madge Thompson.

We decided to send delegates to the State C. E. Convention to be held at Kinston, June 14, 15 and 16th. We have received one new member, Miss Helen Benson, into our society since our last meeting. We are glad to have her join us.

After the business was disposed of we enjoyed a social hour, during which refreshments were served and victrola music was enjoyed.

We adjourned to meet again at the [illegible] for our Thursday evening service.

Madge Thompson, Rep.

Reidsville, May 25.

Canaan, Uwharrie Ct.—Rev. D. M. Loy filled his appointment at this place the 3d Sunday with a helpful sermon, such as he always gives us. Our S. S. is doing fine. Attendance increasing every Sunday. There were 79 present last Sunday. The older people are coming out more and everybody seems to be taking on new interest. We have prayer meeting the first Sunday in every month with pretty good attendance; still there are more that could come and I think the time has come when everybody should be waking up and taking more interest in the S. S. and prayer meetings and church work in general. We should all do more praying and especially for our soldier boys.

Mrs. J. R. Surratt, Reporter.

May 25.

Yadkin College Circuit.—Our work is moving along slowly. Congregations are very good at most of the appointments. S. S. attendance is increasing, and the interest growing. Having some very interesting prayer meetings in some of the churches; but not as largely attended as they should be. The circulation of our church papers is a shame in our entire Conference with the exception of those fields where they are taken by most of the families on the charge. Many are taking several other papers, but cannot be induced to take the church paper. I have been somewhat disgusted recently to see how slow people are to take hold of the work of the church, and how ready to take hold of other things. I was in court yesterday and heard the clerk call the list of 24 men, and all answered present but one, and his excuse was reported, and it was a good one and accepted. If in our church meetings we could have the presence of our membership like that, how nice it would be, and our church work would move at a rapid rate as to what it does; but I guess I will never see what I want to in this particular.

Some children's day services will be held on the circuit. Our finances are a little bit behind, but will come up in the end, I think.

I am depending upon my local reporters to to do the reporting and some of them are doing fine and I hope all of them will do so in the future.

Thanks to Mrs. Joe Byerly for tomatoes; Mrs. M. E. Pickett, strawberries; Mr. and Mrs. James Jordan for a nice piece of middling meat; Mr. and Mrs. Harper Leonard for cabbage, peas and beans; Mrs. Jeff Berrier for eggs.

Our wreck was not serious. The car skidded and turned over, broke two bows, the wind shield and bent one fender. We turned it up and Mrs. Cecil drove on home the same evening.

C. A. Cecil.

Granville Ct.—Although we have not had a report in the Herald for some time, we have not been entirely idle. Rehoboth has bought one acre of land at the Children's Home. After bringing this matter before the Union Chapel people they too bought an acre. Union has also recently bought three quarters of an acre of land to enlarge the cemetery. Antioch has bought three chairs for the pulpit. Mt. Carmel has a live S. S. and are now giving one collection each month to the Children's Home. A new smokehouse and woodhouse has been completed at the parsonage. We haven't yet gone over the top but are holding the first line of trenches.

D. R. Williams.

Pee Dee Church, Rockingham Ct.—Our revival meeting came to a close last Sunday night; that is, the meeting did, while we trust that the revival shall go on. We had only 40 converts during the meeting, and only 12 so far have joined our church though several more are going to join.

We were expecting Bro. Hulin to do the preaching, though were disappointed, owing to the sickness of his wife. So we had to carry the meeting on until Bro. P. E. Martin came and helped us last week.

We will start a meeting at St. Johns Church the second Sunday in July. Bro. Martin will be with us. Pray that it may be a real revival.

James H. Trolinger, Pastor.

Yarborough.—We held our second quarterly conference last Saturday afternoon. Bro. Andrews, Pres. of the Conference, was present and presided. The conference was held at Harmony Church. We were greatly disappointed in not having any one present from Yarborough Church. The nominees for delegate to the Annual Conference are Charlie D. Yarborough, of Yarborough Church, and L. H. Balentine, of Harmony Church. Either one of these men will make a worthy representative for this charge.

On last Friday afternoon at four o'clock the Missionary Society held the annual public meeting. The attendance was good, and Bro. Andrews delivered the address, which was greatly appreciated by all present. The refreshments were also enjoyed by all.

Sunday morning Bro. Andrews spoke to the people of Harmony Church and Sunday night he spoke at Yarborough Church. I am very sure that his messages will linger in our minds and will help us to go forward in our church work (down here in South Carolina). We were very glad to have him with us at the parsonage Friday night; we love Bro. Andrews and the cause he represents and we hope to have him with us again. Our good friend and brother Lawrence Poole, our church organist at Yarborough Church and reporter to the Herald, has gone to the training camp, Camp Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C. We will miss him very much in our services; he was a real help to us. One by one the stars are being added to our service flag here. May God protect and bless every one of them. O. B. Williams.

Burlington.—There were 250 present in Sunday school last Sunday. Both preaching services were well attended. In the morning service Bro. Pritchard delivered a helpful sermon, using as a subject, "What Humiliation and Repentance Have Wrought," the text being taken from Jonah 3: 10. In the evening service the theme of the discourse was "Sacrifices that Please." These sermons were delivered in order to bring the attention of the people and prepare them for the Day of Prayer which is to be observed on Thursday of this week.

The senior Christian Endeavor society is holding the prayer meetings of the society on Monday nights, and the attendance has been very good since the time of meeting was changed three weeks ago.

Last Friday night the patriotic service was held in the Baraca room in honor of three of our Baraca boys who left on Monday for Camp Jackson. Bro. Pritchard presided over the meeting, and the program consisted of patriotic songs, prayer and a talk by Bro. Pritchard. Refreshments were served, and during this time impromptu speeches were made by some of the Baracas. The young men in whose honor the service was held were William T. Way, Sidney B. King, and Gurney McPherson. Two of these young men were members of the Baraca Class and one was a frequent visitor to the class.

Next Sunday being the first Sunday in June, we will have the regular communion service and the reception of members. At the evening church service the children's day exercises will be held. The children have been meeting each Sunday afternoon for practice, and we expect a very interesting and helpful service. We shall hope for a large attendance in the Sunday school and all the other services of the day. C. B. Way, Reporter.

Bellemont, Mt. Hermon Circuit.—We are very glad to say our Sunday school is holding its own. Our attendance was very good Sunday: 78 were present and 80 were absent. The collection was $6.69. This is encouragaing as the whooping-cough is in our midst. Our pastor, Rev. J. A. Burgess, gave us two good uplifting sermons, Sunday.

The W. H. M. S. met Sunday afternoon. Our pastor and Mr. L. E. Sharpe and Mr. R. L. Sharpe were visitors.

We are going to have all-day service Sunday. Miss Alice McPherson of Burlington will conduct the afternoon service. She is going to bring her Junior Endeavor and speak to the children on the subject of Endeavor Work.

One of our boys, Mr. Albert Isley, left to-day to go to the training camp, and Mr. Johnnie Isley left Saturday to go to the navy. We will miss these boys in our Sunday school. But may they have the protection of our heavenly Father wherever they go.

We are glad to hear of Mrs. V. B. Webster and Mrs. Ordealier Forlines being better. Ramah Shoffner, Rep.

Glen Raven, Graham and Haw River Ct.—Since last report have had our regular services every Sunday and midweek prayer meeting. Our Sunday school is improving some every Sunday. Report for last Sunday: scholars, 71; collection, $1.76.

Brother Troxler was with us and gave us two good helpful sermons. Mr. Joe Glenn and wife united with us by letter.

On fourth Sunday in April we decided to build a new church out on the Macadam road and have bought a lot and are going ahead making preparation to build soon.

Brethren, pray for us and give us your support, for we need your help. C. R. Ephland, Treas. of Building Fund, Burlington, N. C., is anxious to receive any contribution any one from anywhere will send to him. May God bless and prosper His church. Reporter.

Concord Church.—Sunday was another good day with us; our S. S. attendance was 264. At the morning service our pastor preached a most excellent sermon from Psalms 21: 5: "The Lord is thy keeper." This was a special sermon to the young converts, and we feel sure it did us all good. One new member was received into the church. At night our pastor exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Beatty of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Beatty preached a very helpful sermon to us.

Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk is spending the week with her mother near Greensboro, N. C.

Petree.—Ray Grayson Petree, son of Robert P. and Florence L. Petree, was born June 18, 1893, and departed this life April 30, 1918, aged 24 years, 10 mos. and 12 days. He professed faith in Christ early in life and united with the Methodist Protestant Church at Pleasant Hill, Forsyth Ct., where he remained an honored and consistent member till God called him home. He leaves to mourn his departure father, mother, one sister, Mrs. C. Herman Smith, of Winston-Salem, N. C., one brother, Ira M. Petree. of Hopewell, Va., one grandmother, Mrs. J. J. Petree, one aunt, Mrs. W. Lee Richmond, one uncle, Mr. J. D. Anderson, of Tobaccoville, N. C., besides other relatives and a host of friends.

He led a calm and quiet life and when the shadows of death were approaching he was calm and still and told those around him that he was not afraid to die, and with a smile looked up and said, "I know Jesus and He knows me." The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. J. M. Ridenhour, assisted by the writer at Pleasant Hill M. P. Church.

There was more than a house full of people there to sympathize with the sorrowing ones.

Ray was a very popular young man and left a good influence behind. May the memory of his strong manly character be an inspiration to his friends and may the loving kindness of our Heavenly Father comfort those that are bereaved by the taking away of this splendid young man. J. D. Williams.

Harmony Grove, West Forsyth Circuit.—Our pastor, Rev. Mr. Ridenhour, filled his appointment here last Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. He always preaches well and we enjoy every one of his sermons, but the one delivered Sunday was unusually good, and was greatly enjoyed by those present. We were pleased to have Mr. Ridenhour with us at prayer services Sunday night. There was a large crowd out, and had a good meeting, one that we will not forget soon.

If the Lord is willing we are going to have prayer and fast services at the church Thursday, May 30th. We hope to have a large attendance: this is important and the Christian people should come out and pray for peace and prosperity.

On May the 15th at six o'clock, Miss Beulah Sheets and Mr. William Vogler were quietly married by their pastor, Mr. Ridenhour. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Ellen Sheets. Mr. and Mrs. Vogler are for the present making their home with Mr. Vogler's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Vogler.

Best wishes to the Herald.

Bessie Warner.

Lebanon Church, Lebanon Circuit.—Our children's day service will be held on the 2nd Sunday in June beginning at 10 A. M. The program by the children will be given during the forenoon and a program of music and talks by interesting speakers will fill the afternoon time. Come. Bring your noon lunch and stay all day.

Philatheas, please remember the business meeting on Monday night, June 3, at my house. I urge every member to be present.

S. S. attendance last Sunday, 123.

Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Montgomery and family have returned from Columbia, S. C., to live in our community again. We have missed them during the several mos.' absence and are much pleased to have them here again.

Mrs. J. W. Thacker, Rep.

High Point, May 28.

Friendship, Yadkin College Ct.—Our much loved pastor filled his regular appointment Sunday at 11 o'clock with one of the most needed, plain and sweet sermons that we ever heard Bro. Cecil preach. A good congregation was out. We are having a good Sunday school and prayer meeting. The year is half gone; up to this time we have paid $110.18 on the budget. Was glad to have worship with us Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Leonard, of Reedy, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Walser, Mr. and Mrs. Fitzgerald, of Linwood. Rep.

A STRANGE MISSIONARY.

Jonah, no doubt, was the first man sent of God to bear a message to a foreign people. His mission was unusual and anticipatory. It had not yet been clearly revealed to the Hebrew mind that their God was also the God of the whole world. Every nation was expected to have its own deities. And the living God, they thought, was peculiarly and exclusively the God of Israel. This commission to Jonah was a decided wrench to Jewish thought. It also did violence to Jewish patriotism. For Assyria was the enemy's country, and no prophet of God had yet taught that Israel should love their enemies. At any rate the universal love of God shone out most beautifully in this sending of Jonah to Nineveh. Let us note how Jonah met the responsibility.

He was an unwilling missionary. This unwillingness was based upon Jonah's supposition that the proposed mission was unfair, needless, and useless. It was unfair to Israel to grant Nineveh equal privileges with themselves. It was needless to send a warning to a people that deserved nothing but destruction. And it was usless, because God was too merciful to punish a people that gave the least evidence of repentance. Jonah, however, could not rid himself of responsibility by this course of reasoning. He now tried to escape the divine presence and the insistent Voice by leaving the land of Israel. Accordingly at Joppa he engaged passage to the distant country of Tarshish. But he found that there is no escape from the presence of God.

Jonah was a chastened missionary. The omnipotent God has a way of overcoming the unwillingness of men. A violent storm overtook Jonah and the ship crew. The presence of the runaway prophet aboard ship became unendurable. He was reluctantly cast into the raging sea. He became at once the guest of a great fish. For three days and nights Jonah repented and prayed in this most unusual sanctuary. When he became sufficiently penitent for his disobedience the whale dismissed his now humble guest upon dry land. A second commission was welcome. He at once made the journey of some hundreds of miles to Nineveh, probably on foot. For an entire day he proceeded from the suburbs to the heart of the great city proclaiming the message of God, "Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown."

Jonah was a successful missionary. The people believed the message. They at once began to cry to the God of Israel for deliverance. The king vacated his throne and became a penitent in sackcloth and ashes. A day of fasting and prayer was proclaimed. The king's word to his people was urgent. Man and beast must be clothed with sackcloth. They must not taste anything nor drink water. And let every one cry mightily unto God and thereby if possible avert the impending calamity. Their repentance was genuine and thorough. They actually turned from their evil way. And God also turned from the judgment that He had pronounced against that city, and sent it not. This most remarkable turning of a heathen people to God was due, most likely, to the attractiveness of a new found truth, to Jonah's faithfulness in declaring the message, to his faith in the massage, and above all to the presence and power of a divine Personality.

Jonah was an unloving missionary. His interest in the people ceased when his message was delivered. He at once withdrew and abode in a booth outside the city, to await the doomed city's destruction. He would not accept the city's hospitality for fear that he himself might perish in its overthrow. He was even more anxious for his own reputation than he was for the city's preservation. For would he not be accused of being an untrue prophet if the pronounced judgment did not come to pass? And how could God change His declared purpose to destroy the city, and be a consistent God? Jonah was displeased to the point of anger. He was not pleased with the people's repentance. He was not pleased with God's changed purpose not to destroy them. His anger was childish, unreasonable, and wicked. He was angry because God was not narrow, exclusive, and vindictive, like himself. He was angry because God's mercy in sparing Nineveh made him feel like a lying prophet. In his blind and senseless anger Jonah prayed that he might die. He said, "It is better for me to die than to live." He preferred immediate death to living longer in possession of injured feelings and a wounded reputation.

Lastly, Jonah was an inconsistent missionary. God uncovered his inconsistency in a masterly and convincing manner. The leaves of the boughs with which his booth was built soon faded, and gave no longer any protection from the sun. God caused a gourd to come up in a night and cover Jonah's booth with a good shade. He "was exceeding glad of the gourd." The morning of the second day a worm "smote the gourd that it withered." With no protection from the sun's heat or the vehement east wind, in a faint Jonah wished again that he might die. Thereupon God gave to the discouraged prophet in substance this lecture: The gourd represents the city of Nineveh. The repentance of the people pleased me infinitely more than the gourd pleased you. The destruction of Nineveh after their repentance would have grieved me infinitely more than the destruction of the gourd displeased you. "And should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, in which there are more than six score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand; and also much cattle?" You had pity on the gourd; I have had pity on Nineveh. Therefore your displeasure is foolish and inconsistent.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

BETTY'S NEW DOLL.

Betty frowned with all her might the moment Gladys Kaley had gone home. She stood at the nursery window looking after her little friend until a passing wagon hid the stiffly starched white dress from sight. Then Betty sighed and turned a wistful little face toward her mother, putting a clean dress on Baby Ruth.

"I wish I had a doll like that one of Gladys's," she said slowly. "It's a beautiful doll, mamma. I guess her papa paid a lot of money for it. She says her mamma made the loveliest blue silk coat for it that anybody ever saw, and when I go over to her house she is going to show it to me. I wish Gladys had brought her doll this afternoon. I want to see it."

"Why didn't she bring it?" asked mamma.

"She said her mamma wouldn't let her play with it very often 'cause she might break it or muss its clothes," explained Betty. "Her mamma keeps it for her in a big box in the company-room. Oh, dear! I wish I had a doll like hers. Don't you think I might have one, mamma? Mr. Cash has a dear little wax doll in his store window. It's not as big as the one Gladys has, but it is just lovely. O mamma, please let me have that one!" begged Betty.

"How much does Mr. Cash ask for it, dear?" questioned mamma, putting down Baby Ruth and opening her purse. "I can spare only a dollar."

"That's it, mamma, that's 'zactly it!" cried Betty.

"Very well, then," said mamma, handing the money to her, "put on your hat and coat and run down to the store and get it."

"O-oo!" cooed Baby Ruth a short while later when Betty was proudly unwrapping the new doll. "Pitty dolly! P'ease let Baby Ruth p'ay wiv it, Betty. Baby Ruth ain't got any doyy, never. P'ease, Betty!"

Betty snatched the pink-clad doll in her arms and pushed Ruth away. "Don't you dare touch my doll, Ruth Graham!" she cried in such a sharp tone that Baby Ruth's dimpled chin began to quiver. "This is too nice for you to muss, and you're not to play with it ever!" And then she ran from the room, leaving Baby Ruth wailing behind her.

Mamma looked very sober as she took Baby Ruth in her lap and stilled her cries.

Betty stayed playing with her doll until mamma called her to supper. Then she came down looking half-defiant and half-ashamed. Mamma said nothing about her conduct, though, so Betty presently recovered her spirits. When bedtime came, Betty did not feel so well. "Oh, dear!" she sighed softly. Then she sighed a little louder. Mamma looked at her and asked her if she felt ill.

"——just my throat," she quavered, moving restlessly under mamma's gentle eyes. "There's a b-big lump in it."

"I'm sorry, dear," said mamma gravely. "What do you think caused the lump?"

Betty gulped hard. "I—I guess my conscience did, mamma," she said softly. "D-do you s'pose Mr. Cash would take back my new doll and give me two cheaper ones, so Baby Ruth and I could have one each and play all we wanted to with them? Do you s'pose he would, mamma?"

"I think he would, dear," said mamma, with a loving smile. "I will write him a note about it and you may take it to him with the doll tomorrow."

"I feel lots better now," declared Betty. "It isn't a bit of fun being a pig, is it, mamma?"

"Not a bit," answered mamma, as she gave Betty a good-night kiss.—Child's Hour.

—Doris was rather backward in her studies. One day when her father was inquiring into her standing at school she admitted that she was lowest in her class.

"Why, Doris, I am ashamed of you!" her mother exclaimed. "Why don't you study harder and try to get away from the foot of the class?"

"It isn't my fault," Doris replied in tones of injured innocence. "The little girl who has always been at the foot has left school."—Exchange.

—Little Elmer had been for a week the owner of a goat.

"How do you like your new pet, Elmer?" asked his uncle.

"I don't like him at all, Elmer replied, quickly.

"Why not?"

"He—he does too much kicking with his head."—The Continent.

—He was an ingenious and ingenuous small boy. "Mamma," he said, according to Pearsan's Weekly, "will you wash my face?"

"Why, John, can't you do that?"

"Yes, mamma, I can, but I'll have to wet my hands, and they don't need it."

NOTES.

—North Carolina is taking a leading place in the nation in the fight for the control of tuberculosis. The government is now building a sanatorium at Azalea, near Asheville, that will care for more than a thousand patients at the beginning, and which will probably be enlarged later.

—The Recorder of last week had a good picture of Rev. A. G. Dixon on its first page.

—Another big German drive is on this week on the western front, and the Germans are gaining some ground. How much it will be worth to them remains to be seen. It is a time of anxiety, but the confidence of the English people in the armies of the Allies seems unbroken. Let us pray fervently that God will use His mighty power upon the minds and hearts of men to deliver them from this awful bloodshed and strife.

—Joseph Ross of Asheboro attended a meeting of bankers in Raleigh last week.

—Bro. J. M. Stone recently attended a meeting of hardware men in Cleveland, O. He extended his trip over Lake Erie to Niagara Falls and had a very pleasant time.

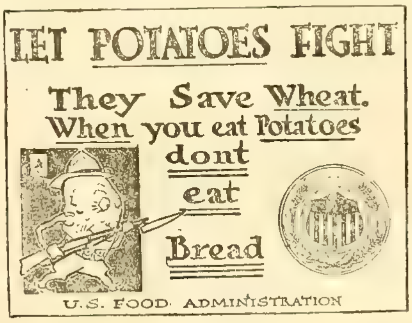
—Rev. C. W. Bates will visit his old home in New York next week and probably be gone two Sundays.

—Bro. J. M. Millikan's real estate company will have a land sale near New York City next month.

—Mr. and Mrs. Webb Peeples, of near Oak Ridge, were badly burned on Monday night by a gasoline explosion. Mrs. Peeples has since died, his recovery is hoped for. The funeral of Mrs. Peeples was conducted by Bro. Lindley at Ai church. A sad accident. Mrs. Peeples was superintendent of our Sunday-school at Ai.

—The following Methodist Protestants are in Elon College's graduating class this year: J. C. Auman, C. C. Lindley, Grady Reed, Lorena Garrett, Lela H. Hayworth.

—Bishop Atkins in his sermon at Elon last Sunday took occasion to advise the women against seeking their rights. He is just from the Atlanta General Conference where the bishops vetoed the recognition of women as having laymen's rights in the church. We wonder if the bishop from training and position has come to feel:—We will look after your rights: don't you worry about the matter.



DECEASED.

Earnheardt.—Edith Frances Earnheardt—daughter of William R. and Mary E. Earnheardt—was born May 16, 1901, and died May 21, 1918.

She was converted at the age of nine years, and joined the Methodist Protestant Church at Concord. To her church and to the Sunday school she was faithful and true, and her life proved her love and devotion to the same.

She had been an efficient secretary of the Sunday school for some time. She was a good, obedient daughter, faithful sister, and had won many friends among both old and young.

Her life was also an evidence that she "looked for a city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is God."

The last time she attended church was 24th of last December at which time she acted well her part in a Christmas exercise.

She was exceedingly patient in her sickness and always answered all cheerfully who inquired about her health. The funeral was conducted by the writer. The large sympathizing congregation that attended the funeral, and the many beautiful floral designs contributed were evidences of the esteem in which the deceased was held. May God greatly bless the father, the mother, the two sisters and all other bereaved relatives and friends and may all so live that each will be permitted with much joy to meet Edith, and her Saviour, who said, "I am the resurrection and the life: whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die."

E. G. Lowdermilk.

In Remembrance of Miss Edith Earnhartt, Who was called from us just in the prime of life. The writer has known her since her childhood. From a mere child she was pure in life, clean in thought and language and faultless in conduct. She was pre-eminent in good works and impressed all who knew her with her high type of Christian character. We can't understand why God in His goodness called her so early in life, for she was one of the most beautiful girls in our community and to know her was to love her. She loved her church and was ever ready to do what she could to help some one. I visited her in her sickness. She was always bright and cheerful, seemingly fearing nothing, not even death itself. When she was well she always seemed to think of others and how she might be a blessing to them. To meet her was to meet a friend. She will be missed in her church which she loved so well. Edith will be missed in her home most of all, for she was always bright and happy. Dear parents, may God bless you for being so kind and faithful in training your daughter for God and His church in the world. I know that you will miss her in many ways. But God in His mercy has called her from labor to reward. We can think of Edith today as being so happy in the land she loved so well. Father and mother, we know that Edith has gone to make heaven brighter and happier and will be waiting to welcome us one by one as we go in the way she has gone. Let us all be true and faithful and not disappoint her, for she will be looking for us to come some day. It looked like we needed Edith so much, for it is so hard to get young people to see the need of working for Christ in His church. The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few, but we know God had a purpose in taking her so early. May the God of love and mercy ever abide with the bereaved ones. May He be more to you than a daughter and sister could ever have been.

A Friend, Mrs. T. F. Robbins.

Resolutions of Respect for Miss Edith Earnhardt.

Whereas, It has pleased God in His wise providence to remove by death from among us our dear sister and co-worker, Miss Edith Earnhardt,,

Therefore, Be it resolved:—

First, That the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society of the Methodist Protestant Church of Concord, North Carolina, has lost one of its faithful members, and while we deeply mourn her loss from our midst, yet we humbly bow to the divine will of Him who doeth all things well.

Scond, That we extend to the grief-stricken family our heart-felt sympathy in the loss of their loved one.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our Society, a copy sent to our church paper for publication, and a copy sent to the bereaved family.

A Good Mother Gone.

Mrs. Emma Guthrie, wife of Mr. W. H. Guthrie, after several months of declining health died at her home near Concord M. P. Church on Saxapahaw Ct. the 15th of May, 1918, at the age of 73. She was a faithful member of Concord Church and left good assurance that she was satisfied, and that all was well with her. When she could not talk, she would point up to let her children know that all was peace with her, pointing them to the God that she loved and served. The funeral was largely attended and was conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. C. Auman, assisted by Rev. H. S. B. Thompson,, a former pastor. She was the mother of eleven children, and a number of grand-children. She tried to do her duty in a scriptural sense in raising her children in the right and proper way. She lived to see them all converted and members of the church, except two that died in infancy. All the living children were married and settled down in life near enough to her home to attend her bedside and give any assistance for her comfort during her sickness, in which they were untiring. They attended the funeral and saw her body laid to rest in the cemetery at Concord, while surviving friends stood around the tomb. The flowers that covered the mound showed the high esteem the neighbors had for her. A visit to the home was a sad one to me: it made me realize what home is without a mother. There was a vacant chair and other things that made me sad.

Dearest mother, you have left us. We surely miss you here. We would not call you back to live life over again.

A Daughter.

Garrett.—Mr. James T. Garrett died very suddenly at Oxford, April 24th. He was about 68 years old. He was one of Antioch's faithful members, kind, thoughtful husband, and a loving father. His home was the preacher's home. He left his home in the early morning feeling well, told his wife goodbye and it was the last words she ever heard him speak. After he was taken ill they hurried a messenger after his wife, but he passed away before she reached Oxford. He leaves a wife and several children, but their loss is his gain. The remains were buried near Gillburg; funeral service by the writer.

D. R. Williams.

Grissom.—Mr. Sammie Grissom died May 24, aged 62. He had been in declining health for years. He was a member of Union Chapel. I was in his home a few days before he passed away and prayed with him. I am sure he was prepared to go. He seemed to be worried a great deal because he hadn't paid his assessment; said it was the first time since he had been a member that he hadn't paid earlier in the year.

Infant Child.—Bessie Mae Beckham, aged 8 months, died May the 11th. Her sickness was of short duration. All that could be done by the doctor and parents could not stay the hand of death. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones and help them to be ready to meet her on the other shore.

D. R. Williams.

—Rev. A. G. Dixon will be at Ligonier, Pa., for a few weeks.

—Rev. Chas. Wagner, French preacher, author of "The Simple Life," died a few days ago, aged sixty-seven years.

—Late hatched chicks often fail to make satisfactory growth because proper shade is not within their range, states Mr. A. G. Oliver, Poultry Club Agent.

—A little girl on her way to school was struck and knocked down by an automobile near our office on Monday morning. The little girl came out from behind a wagon and was not seen in time to avoid hitting her; but fortunately the auto was brought to a stop just as it struck her so that her injury was not great beyond the fright.

—Marion, oldest son of Bro. J. W. Nicholson, of Mebane, was married last Saturday night in Grace Church, Greensboro, Rev. C. W. Bates officiating. The bride is Miss Hazel M. Lambeth, of Guilford College; she has been filling a position in the business office of the Greensboro Daily News. They spent Sunday in Mebane visiting his people. Mr. Nicholson left on Monday for a military camp for training, and Mrs. Nicholson will continue to fill her position with the News.

THAT DREADFUL TREE OF DEATH.

One can easily imagine a dialogue like this between our first parents:

Eve: I could be perfectly happy if it were not for that dreadful Tree of Death. But just think of it! What if we should eat some of its fruit accidentally? It stands there in the midst of the garden quite near to the Tree of Life. It might easily happen that fruit from the two trees would become mingled and one eat of the deadly thing before he is aware.

Adam: There is no need of any anxiety on that point. The fruit of the Tree of Death is not so like any other fruit as not to be readily distinguishable. It has a peculiar shape and peculiar color. I would know it anywhere. I could not be deceived in the darkest night.

Eve: But one does not like to have to be on guard all the time. What was such a tree made for? And why was it allowed to grow in the midst of the garden?

Adam: Hush, dear! You are on the point of murmuring against God. God is perfectly good and all that He has done is perfectly good. We may not know why He has done everything He has done, but He knows why, and doubtless has a good reason for everything. There is some good reason for allowing that Tree of Death to grow, and for allowing it to grow in the midst of the garden, you may be well assured, or it would not be there. Instead of being on the point of complaining because it is there, we should be very thankful to the good God that He has told us of the deadly nature of its fruit and warned us against it.

Eve: At any rate, I would feel more comfortable if it were not there.

And this also:

Serpent to Eve: This is a fine garden in which you are living. What beautiful trees and what exquisitely delicious fruits they bear!

Eve: Yes, the trees are beautiful and the fruits delicious so far as I have tried them. But you know there is one tree whose fruit we dare not touch.

Serpent: What tree is that?

Eve: Why, the Tree of Death in the midst of the garden. Its fruit looks fine, but we are strictly forbidden to eat of it, being told that the most dreadful consequences would speedily ensue.

Serpent: Is this the tree you refer to?

Eve: Yes.

Serpent: Why, there must be some mistake about it. You have probably misunderstood what has been said to you. I have been eating of the fruit of this tree for quite a while, and I have experienced no evil results. On the contrary, I have found myself growing in intelligence until I have become wiser than any other beast of the field. This is the Tree of Wisdom. Eat of it and you will become as wise as God Himself. Surely you have misunderstood, and have been fearing what was really the best fruit in the whole garden.

And Eve ate and gave to Adam and he ate, though he was not deceived, and all their descendants to this day have been eating the terrible fruit of the Tree of Death, while cherubim with flaming swords have guarded the way of the Tree of Life.

But there is a third and brighter chapter in the story of man. St. John was given a splendid vision of man's future. In that vision he saw a glorious city, whose gates are never shut, and whose streets are never darkened,—a city with a crystal river on whose banks grows the Tree of Life, bearing fruit every month of the year, and whose leaves are for the healing of the nations.

Blessed vision! Who would not hasten unto it?

FOR SUFFERING ARMENIANS.

J W Bishop $5.00

Bro. Bishop, notwithstanding his blindness finds means to aid the suffering. That is because he has sympathy. Must we suffer some great calamity before our hearts will be softened to the cry of distress, so keen and many-voiced to-day?

—The teachers of Grace Sunday school had an interesting meeting last night. Supt. Terry Sharp presided and each teacher told of the best things his or her class had done the past year. Here are some of the things reported: Clothed a child in the Children's Home, aided a poor family, attended school unusually well, sent monthly contributions to the suffering Armenians, paid liberally on the church debt, studied the lessons faithfully.

—During the Protestant Episcopal Church convention in Boston recently a proposal to amend the church canons to give women the right to vote on the floor of the diocesan convention was defeated.

—We have not had many cases of father and son as contemporaries in our Annual Conference. There was the case of W. H. Wills and R. H. Wills years ago. We do not recall another until last year when Bro. W. F. Kennett's son Paul came in. Now Bro. A. L. Hunter's son Raleigh makes a third case.

—German submarines are operating on our eastern coasts. They have sunk a number of vessels of smaller size off New Jersey and Virginia. Their work seems to have caused no panic in Washington, where it is declared that they shall cause no halt in sending men and supplies to Europe. But it will help us to realize what has been going on for more than a year in European waters. German frightfulness was meant to intimidate and subdue the world. The effect may be very different—to arouse the world to crush the head of the Prussian dragon.

—Charles W. Fairbanks, vice president of the United States a few years ago (when Roosevelt was president) died recently.

—Last year 6,000 people died from pellagra in the United States. About 125,000 people suffered from the disease.

THE SUPREME BATTLE FRONT.

"Not Western or Eastern," "Neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem," the supreme battle front of this great war is in the hearts of the people.

It is not merely a question of courage, sacrifice and efficiency. "Our wrestling is not against flesh and blood." We might send ten million men to Europe, support them, supply them and see them completely overwhelm the Germans, and then find ourselves defeated by Prussianism in our own hearts.

It is not enough that we resist every suggestion of closing churches, doing without preaching, retrenching or curtailing Christian activities of any sort. All Christian efforts must be redoubled and quadrupled. We have acknowledged this duty and need, and we have responded to the repeated calls for the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross because they are "at the front."

But the supreme front is here, not there. The battle between autocracy and democracy is real and fierce, but underneath it is the age-long and irrepressible conflict between paganism and Christianity.

Christ Over All.

At best Christ has had too little place in our lives. He must be put first in our time—given the first seventh of it absolutely, and as much more of it as he wants, first in our money—paid the first tenth of it faithfully, and as much more as is necessary. "What will your money be worth if we lose the war?"

For the Methodist Protestant Church, the Forward Movement, with its three great comprehensive aims—consecration of life, dedication of money, and universal co-operation directed wisely toward the two goals set for our attainment within the present quadrennium—it is the answer to the call of Christ in this supreme hour.

Not in abstract and subjective terms, but in concrete and objective form, the issue is joined for us. Not remotely and eventually, but here and now the crisis must be met.

The Immediate Crisis.

To reap the sowing of other years in every field at home and abroad, requires enlargement, and yet the mere maintenance of the work has involved every missionary board and benevolent institution in ruinous deficits.

The requirements of Christian education are twice what they were, but nearly all the colleges are crippled by debt, and must have large sums, not merely to meet the doubled demands, but to even live under wartime conditions.

The same thing is true of the Home Missionary work of our denomination. We have waited while Western Maryland College has planned and carried its recent drive to successful completion. We have been deeply interested in the success of the campaign now under way for the new buildings and equipment for the Westminster Theological Seminary. We are hoping and praying that the present efforts for endowment funds both at Tehuacana College, and Kansas City University may be crowned with abundant success. The campaign for increased income which has just been launched by the Board of Foreign Missions with its unique and striking methods deserves the active support of all our people. But while these are being given consideration, it should be remembered that Adrian College must also have financial relief, and the Board of Home Missions must have a larger income than it has ever before even had courage to ask for from the churches.

Problems without number confront our Board of Home Missions. If your Secretary were to attempt to break into the writers' class he would like to write a book entitled something like this: "Around the World in America." All the world problems are here. We are on the firing line on the supreme battle front of the world. "We must save America, not for America's sake alone, but for the world's sake." Even the tragedies of the world war must take second place when compared with the tragedies of the war against vice and ungodliness in America. We shall suggest a further discussion of this proposition next week.

Charles H. Beck, Secretary.

FROM A SERMON.

Thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown!" Ezek. 21:26.

The religion which we profess is the most peaceable, most obedient and most loyal religion in the world. While our whole faith breathes the spirit of submission to all constituted authority, and in confirmation of its requisitions declares that God Himself has ordained the existence of governments and policies on earth. 'Tis true, nations have rights as well as individuals. These rights originate duties that call for constant Christian obedience.

I cannot but believe, brethren; that this is one of the greatest days ever set apart by mortal man—a day in which prayer is to be offered that God in His own good way will bring to bear on man what he is to do toward bringing this great war to a close. The pulse of every nation beats quick with unwonted emotion, God forbid, if that emotion be a warrantable one, that the ministers of Christ should be dead to its impulses. I say, God forbid that we should substitute for Christianity an unchristian stoicism that when other countries are giving of their life's blood for Christianity, we should be insulated from the universal excitement.

The Christian people are God's chosen people that are set as on a light-house in the midst of these waves of battle, to hold out the light of God's eternal truth to France, England, Belgium, Italy and to the uttermost parts of the world, and to hold it out the more strenuously the more the waters rise and roar with the noise of battle. The minister of Christ is the ambassador of a mighty monarch. What then does God think about it all? He is not the special God of America any more than He is of the Germans. He is the God of all the earth. No individual can escape His eye and no nation His judgment. Our young men were not trained to fight; therefore we had to train them after the war had begun. Men and women have been giving of their means and service to help in this great conflict. As we study history and meditate upon its pages, then compare it with our times we find that nothing has happened in the main which must not have happened when an unprepared nation met one which has prepared for the same struggle for forty years. We are proud though that God has never allowed deviltry, lust, and tyranny finally to triumph in His world. Are we to be weapons in God's hand? Are we worthy? Has He hidden us in His quiver? "He has prepared for himself the instruments of death, He has bent His bow, and made it ready." But what if we break in His hand! The day of victory is to dawn, but a greater day is also dawning. The young men who have died so bravely would have died in vain if after the war was over we should go back to our old life again. Have faith in God: faith in God which first produces penitence, then inspires action, then draws out sacrifice, and then breathes fortitude into the soul.

Pray God that in the full ripeness of time we shall see the plan sublime of His beneficent intent. Live on in hope, press on in faith, and Christ's great Kingdom will come at last, the Kingdom of peace and love.—Part of a sermon delivered on May 30th by Rev. Robt. Turner.

HE CARES—DO YOU?

Christ died to set men free the world over. He commissioned His church to take the "good tidings" to "every creature."

No excuse for not helping to do it can be offered by any member of any church, because all are governed by "as God gives me ability."

The U. S. government exempts missionaries from military service, proving that their work in non-Christian lands is so necessary that they cannot be taken from it.

Foreign missionary work is vital to the growth of every local church in spirituality and service.

YOU are helping to win this war to secure and preserve to all peoples liberty, self-government and world peace.

With equal zeal, sacrifice YOU must help give to the heathen lands the light and upbuilding forces of the Gospel by which individual and national life are enriched and developed.

YOU dare not limit YOUR labors and YOUR money to your local church.

YOU belong to your denomination, and it to Christ's Kingdom, and YOU must answer His call coming out of the needs of our Foreign Missionary work in Japan and India.

The Children's Day Service presents an excellent opportunity for YOU to answer HIM, by what you give in the offering.

HE cares, surely, whether YOU answer HIM generously, with glad and loyal heart.

The Sunday schools ought to lay at HIS feet this year $25,000.00.

Do YOU care whether it is done or not? HE does.

Why not give YOUR Liberty Bonds, YOUR War Saving Stamps in the offering?

(An appeal authorized by the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church.

CHRIST IS GREATER THAN DRINK OR OPIUM.

A few months ago one of our Hindustani ministers was on tour going around his circuit teaching and preaching. He arrived at the town of Narnod, and was met by the wife of one of the village leaders, who poured out a sad tale about her drunken husband who was ruining himself and his family by drink.

The minister listened with much patience and sympathy, and was led by the woman to her house, where the husband was with the rest of the family of seven children. He immediately preached Jesus to the drunkard and his family, and told of Christ's mighty power to save from sin and evil habits.

The man was convicted, gave up drink and smashed the bottles containing it in the presence of all, and surrendered to Jesus, after which both he and his family of nine persons were all publicly baptized.

Another case equally striking and illustrative of the power of Christ to save is the following: In one of our meetings I observed a man who was a slave to the opium habit, and was led to show him the end of the opium drunkard. I appealed to him to repent and give it up. The man was convicted, gave up his evil habit, and handed over his box with the opium to me, giving up the habit forever, and simply trusting the Lord Jesus to save and keep him.—James Lyon, Hissar, India, in Missionary News.

At the urgent request of the pastor, Rev. A. Ridge, the superintendent enjoyed the hospitality of the pastor and his people at Stallings last Sunday. The services lasted all day and a tempting dinner was served on the ground.

The Sunday school has become very much interested in our Children's Home and it is now making a monthly offering. The pastor and some of his members used their autos to bring out people who could not have come to enjoy the services had it not been for their machines. The superintendent is very grateful to Bro. H. B. Furr for carrying him to Charlotte in his machine. By that kindness the whole day was spent with these good people. Very kind words are spoken of the enthusiasm which Bro. Ridge is putting into his work.

I wish to call your attention to the splendid offering from Welch Memorial S. S. last Sunday. Of that amount $25 was given by the Jr. Baraca class. A number of its members give one tenth of their income and that made it possible for them to give so much more liberally than some who do not tithe. They used some of their tenth money. We have many who could get inspiration from such consecrated young people.

Bro. I. I. York loaned us his mule for two days and it is meaning much to us. We always appreciate such kindness.

Don't forget the Summer Conference. Your pastor needs to come. We are looking for a good attendance.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

I was rather far afield and too much on the "go" to furnish a letter last week.

Thomasville, Rev. W. D. Reed, Pastor.

Although I had visited this field I attended the second quarterly conference, as I was en route to another charge. I found a rather unusual condition in financial matters here. The rural churches were in advance of the town church in meeting the conference claims. I hope that these two rural churches will continue to set the pace but that the Thomasville church will fall in line with the other churches that are meeting these claims monthly.

Yarborough Charge, Rev. O. B. Williams, Pastor.

I attended the annual meeting of the Missionary Societies of Cross Anchor and visited both churches on the charge. The work here is organized and doing its usual "bit" for the kingdom. Bro. Williams is popular with the people and is energetic in his efforts to make progress. But it is no secret to many of our people in the North Carolina Conference that Yarborough Charge is using only a small part of her resources in aggressive church work. Our people are able to support a missionary within themselves—and they could well take over and support a child in the Home besides.

I held the second quarterly conference while there and was pleased with the men nominated for delegates to conference. I believe could our people here be brought into closer contact with our conference we would feel most powerfully their ability to do service for the King.

Brother Williams kindly carried me over to Camp Wadsworth and we had the pleasure of meeting Dr. T. H. Lewis; he is Religious Director of this camp.

Anderson Charge, Rev. T. E. Martin, Pastor.

I visited the two churches on this charge, conducting night services. It was 10 P. M. when I took my text at Liberty Hill church, and almost that time when I began speaking at Fairview church. These churches, like Yarborough and Harmony churches on Yarborough charge are nearly thirty miles apart. But as these brethren use automobiles they experience no great difficulty in making the appointments. Bro. Martin is the champion traveling pastor in our conference. He met me at Greer, S. C., and from that place to where I left him at Democrat, N. C., we had traveled over three hundred miles. We thoroughly tried out the powers of a Maxwell touring car in covering Pink Camp.

Anderson Charge does not appear to be so well developed as does Yarborough Charge, but Bro. Martin is making an effort to raise all the claims and I believe he will succeed in doing it. Anderson, like Yarborough, needs more intensive cultivation to bring it up to its highest state of efficiency.

Distance from the other churches of our conference and the fact that they have not been with us a great while have something to do with their failure to enter more heartily into the program of our conference.

But there are some of the most loyal Methodist Protestants it has been my privilege to meet anywhere, on these two charges; I say this, lest some one should think I did not find them; they are there and are laboring faithfully for the extension of our church.

Asheville Church, Rev. T. M. Johnson, Pastor.

It is the one regret of this visitation that I was unable to fill my appointment here. I was able, however, to go over the situation with Pastor Johnson and am more than pleased with what this loyal band of workers are doing. As the readers of the Herald know, they have purchased a parsonage this year, and are making their payments monthly. It is splendidly located, on a good thoroughfare, near the church and while not sufficiently large for a family the size of Jacob's, it is ample for a minister with a small family. I had the pleasure of spending a night in the home and know that is is an excellent place wherein to rest both body and mind.

While this work has not grown so rapidly as some thought it would when the work was first established, it has grown substantially. There are many evidences of life which presage growth in this little church. A consecrated, aggressive, pastor, working with a consecrated, aggressive band of lay workers will most assuredly succeed, although success seems delayed.

The greatest difficulty, doubtless, which our people here experience is common to a more or less degree with all other churches here—the population is so largely made up of health seekers; people, had they come to make Asheville their permanent home, who do not have the strength to give much time to church work. I mention this as one condition which Pastor Johnson, with the other pastors, meets. But the fact that this church is so far removed from other M. P. churches also makes it hard to grow rapidly here.

It is a beautiful little church, a fine body of workers, situated in a pleasant part of the city for such a church, and with patience will become a great power for good in the city of the hills.

Buncombe Charge, Rev. H. F. Fogleman, Pastor

I visited all the churches on this charge. This work has not prospered for a great number of years. Many things have entered into their failure. The work has not given a support to the pastor; the charge has often been left unsupplied, the majority of the people have not been developed, so that the field has not been an inviting one.

I held the second quarterly conference; they promised the pastor $50.00 per month for the time he will serve them this year, and are delighted with Bro. Fogleman. If Buncombe charge will pay a pastor a living salary and keep a live, aggressive pastor with good organizing ability with them, there is no reason for despair over the present situation. But unless this can be done, I see nothing else to be done with the work to save it, but make some such group of the churches as this:—put Weaverville with Asheville church, for an afternoon appointment, to put Clark's Chapel and Jupiter with Democrat, Mt. Valley and Pleasant Gap, and to set Pensacola off as a station.

This grouping would not be an impossibility, geographically, as Ivy and Pensacola now stand, and these five churches ought to support a pastor in a very good way. Ivy charge is badly in need of a constructive pastor. But little appears to be done other than to hold the services. In a church when the test was put not a subscriber to our church's papers could be found. It is not because our people there are too poor, it is because they have yet to feel the need of taking it.

Ivy Charge, Rev. J. S. Riddle, Pastor.

I spoke at Democrat, Mt. Valley, and Pleasant Gap, went to Terry's Fork, but found no congregation; rain prevented our getting to Pensacola, we went over Pink Gap in our attempt, but slippery roads made us turn back after we were half way there. This charge paid their pastor a starvation salary last year, $216, I hope it will be better this year.

Pastor Riddle came to us from the Baptist, is untrained, not too well acquainted with the workings of our church, and many of the people he serves are badly needing instruction so the situation here is acute. Our mountain people need our best preachers, but do not always appreciate a good one when they get him—but few of them seem to esteem him for the work's sake; a minister must make himself a felt necessity in their lives before he gets their affection, so the work has often been hard for the preacher to put his best effort where it is most needed.

One thing I am sure of, if these churches above the ''Ridge'' are ever to be of value to our conference we must find one of our strongest men, who is willing to put his life over there and work with those people until he sees the work of the Lord prosper in his hand.

The way our conference has served the work from time to time, has not, nor can do more than prolong the agony of a gradual decline. Sooner or later, we will awake to the realization that our Buncome and Ivy charges are dropped from our plan of appointments. These plain statements are made with the sincere desire that they may awaken in the hearts of the people over there who read them a responsive chord, and alsa awaken a desire within some pastor's heart over here the desire to plant his life where it will produce an abundant harvest some day.

R. M. Andrews.

A GREAT OPPORTUNITY FOR OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

This Is of the Greatest Importance.

You remember our Young People's Convention resolved to raise $2,000.00 for Mr. Heininger's work in China this year.

The work in China is suffering because of the advance in silver, which is another way of saying the increased cost of living, which has made it difficult for Mr. Heininger to keep the work together.

It was hoped that this could be raised within thirty days following the convention, but unavoidable delays followed. We now have a thoroughly practical way in which to accomplish this object.

The Board of Foreign Missions has agreed, if our young people and others will increase their offerings $2,000.00 that it would be possible to co-operate in the China work, and relieve the present distressing situation.

This amount can be raised easily through the Children's Day services, if our churches will simply hold the service, and if a number in each church will interest themselves in having a good offering. Only about $500.00 was raised from the Children's Day services last year. With 22,000 members in North Carolina we should have no difficulty in raising $2,500 this year, and this can be done without hurting a single individual and without hurting any other cause. On the other hand, it will help everyone who contributes.

This is a matter which cannot be neglected and which cannot be delayed. If our mission China continues to suffer, if workers must be dropped, and if needed aid must be withheld, it will be our fault, because it is within our power to afford the needed relief.

''RIGHTEOUS OVERMUCH.''

The admonition of the wise man, ''Be not righteous overmuch,'' has puzzled Bible readers not a little. For how can any one be too righteous? Works of supererogation are imposible. Jesus said, ''So likewise ye, when ye have done all those things which are commanded you say, We are unprofitable servants; we have done that which is our duty to do.'' Luke 17: 10. The key to the understanding of this passage is found in the reason given for the warning: ''Why shouldst thou destroy thyself?'' Righteous ocnduct is ordinarily and normally constructive, and builds up the character and the life. But there are some manifestations of righteousness that are destructive, and tend to impair one's standing before God and man. Let us see what some of these are.

The ascetic is righteous overmuch. In his zeal to be help by excessive fasting or other needless discipline of his body, he is actually working an injury to this temple of the Holy Spirit. One can worship and serve God without damaging in the least God's human temple. To do so in an effort to be more holy is simply to be righteous overmuch.

The misguided enthusiast is righteous overmuch. The Great Teacher warns against such enthusiasm: ''Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet and turn again and rend you.'' Matt. 7: 6. Scorners will not only treat lightly the message, but will also in turn tear to pieces the good name of the messenger.

The monastic is righteous overmuch. The sincere effort to escape temptation by shutting one's self in from the world tends in effect to destroy his influence, which is one of the greatest of Christian endowments. Man is not to live to himself. The Christian especially must live for others. To do so he must live among his fellowmen, sharing their trials and burdens, adding to their happiness, and contributing his utmost to their physical and spiritual well-being. He must be a light-bearer to the world.

To parade one's spiritual attainments by needless testimony is also to be righteous overmuch. God has blessed some greatly above others. They are spiritual millionaires. Some are led to be more humble by this enrichment. Others become self-complacent and delight in telling others about their inner treasures. To parade holiness is to seriously impair, if not to completely destroy it. Such self-complacent testimony of one's virtues or attainments exhibits pride, and pride detracts most disastrously from these same virtues or attainments.—Word of Life.

HYPOCRITES.

Many unbelievers do not embrace Christianity and become identified with the people of God because they say there are hypocrites in the church. There are hypocrites in business, but this fact does not hinder them in the least from engaging in business. There are hypocrites in society, but they do not on that account deny themselves social privileges. There are hypocrites in the political parties, yet many of them are strong party men in spite of that fact. There are hypocrites in hell, yet they persist in going where they will have to live with hypocrites forever. There are no hypocrites in heaven, yet they reject the only means of getting to that place of no hypocrites. They are not sincere in raising this objection to accepting Christ. They are themselves hypocrites. They simply pretend that hypocrites in the church is the cause of their refusal to become Christians. It is a weak excuse for a stubborn heart.

Hypocrites in the church are one of the strongest evidences of the reality and value of Christianity. Counterfeit money is convincing evidence of the worth of good money. No one ever pretends to be a thief, a liar, or a drunkard, because it is not worth while to make others believe that you are one. But some pretend to be Christians in order to have the esteem that is accorded real Christians, and get along by means of the help of real Christians. If it pays, therefore, for a little while to be a hypocrite, how much more will it pay for time and eternity to be a real Christian.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK

YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK.

We are giving to our readers this week a splendid article from the pen of Rev. M. J. Shroyer the Superintendent of Young People's Work. Bro. Shroyer is one of the young pastors in the Indiana Conference. He is pastor of a country community-center church and writes out of his experience with boys on a country charge. He also gives a list of books for teen-age workers. You will do well to read every word of his article prayerfully. And you will also do well to clip the list of books. Keep the list in your Bible, and purchase the books as needed.

THE BOY'S RECREATION.

By Rev. M. J. Shroyer, Supt. of Young People's Work.

The teen-age boys of America are working today as never before. A strong appeal has been made to the workers of the nation to speed up the forces of production. And the boys have heard the call. Throughout the land they are responding through the Boys' Working Reserve. We had thought that the boy could not be depended upon but the crisis has brought out a fine trait of character that we had not observed. The boy of the teen-age really has a great desire to do his part. He is not a shirker nor a slacker. We have seen him leaving the city and hiring himself to the farmer to take the place of the farmer boy who has gone to the army cantonment. He is finding that the working hours in the country are long and work hard. To save him from rebellion against his tasks, there needs to be some form of organized recreation to take away the monotony and drudgery of farm life. If the city boy on the farm during vacation needs recreation, what about the country boy who is one of the permanent farm fixtures. Farmer boys really learn to work in their early teens. It is nothing unusual to see a fifteen-year-old doing a man's job. Making men out of boys is accomplished in a very few years, and sometimes with disastrous results. The farm boy ought not to be robbed of his privilege of education. He deserves a good high school course to say the least. And he ought not to be robbed of his recreation. It ought to be provided in such a legitimate way that there will be no need for him to steal what few pleasures he gets.

The Boy Scouts.

There is no organization today that is doing more for the boy's recreation than the Boy Scout movement. It has been a blessing to the boy in the city. It has taken him away from the complexity of the city life and developed within him a love for the simple things of the open country. But the boy in the country has a "hankering" for the attractions of the city. He has not learned to love the country as his home. He has looked upon the farm as a place for hard work. He lives among the things that God has made, but his soul finds no pleasure in them. He has a notion that the joys of life are man-made. So he goes to the city, man's stronghold, and seeks his joys in the cheap attractions of the vaudeville and the demoralizing atmosphere of the pool-room, where tobacco smoke and profanity are mixed in dangerous proportions. There is no more effective antidote against the vices of the city than the Boy Scout plan to furnish wholesome recreation which takes the boy out where the air is pure and where he can see the handiwork of God.

Christianity and Recreation.

The time is at hand for the church to take up the problem of furnishing recreation for the teen-age boy. There was once a great prejudice against the mixing of recreation and religion. That prejudice may not be entirely done away, even now. But we are living in the new day. The church has taken upon itself unheard of duties. Religion is being given out in forms that could not have been recognized a generation ago. Take, for instance, the church in its ministry to the boys in the army cantonments. The Young Men's Christian Association, the strong arm of the church, is without a doubt undertaking one of the broadest, most comprehensive tasks of our generation. It is doing the work of religion on a tremendous scale. The Y. M. C. A. building furnishes a meeting place for services of a strictly religious nature. Evangelists drive home to the soldier the appeal to live a Christian life. In the same building the soldier boy has an opportunity to write home to his friends, and the suggestion is so powerful that it helps in keeping the home ties unbroken. In the same building is reading material for leisure hours, games and music in abundance. In the same building there is a minstrel show to furnish amusement for the boy who might otherwise be caught in a vice crusade in the city near by. In short, the Y. M. C. A. demonstrating how religion can be effectively applied on a broad scale. In the face of the great good that has been done in the camp, who shall say that the church at home must not interest itself in recreation for the boys who are growing up. After the war the boys from the camps and trenches will return, and we can imagine their contempt for a church that is too dead to enter into the life of youth and furnish legitimate channels for pleasure and recreation. There are many communities where the church is the only organization at hand to take up recreation work. The church misses its grand opportunity if it takes the course of ministering to the community only through its preaching and teaching. The rural Sunday school can do no better work for the teen-age boy than co-operation with the Boy Scout movement and using its program to furnish what is lacking in the boy's development.

SHALL WE RAISE OUR PASTOR'S SALARY THIS YEAR?

By Dr Crates S. Johnson.

The time of year is here when many churches are deciding what salary they shall pay their pastor next year. It is an important question. It is a critical question in some quarters and conference presidents are sending an S. O. S. signal to delinquent churches to increase their pastor's salary now as an emergency measure to meet the increased cost of living. Our pastors, already hampered by inadequate salaries, are feeling acutely the additional burden which the higher cost of living imposes. There are good reasons why the churches should meet this emergency.

Preaching Not a Private Business.

In the first place the preacher is not engaged in a private business. If he were he could get out of it and turn to something else more remunerative. He is called of God and given work from which he cannot turn with impunity. Necessity is upon him. With him it is "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel!" The church is sponsor for him. The church prays that the Lord may send forth laborers into His vineyard. The preacher answers, "Here am I, send me." The church owes it to the preacher to see him thru.

The church has about the same relation to the preacher that the nation has to our soldiers in France. The army is the fighting edge of the nation. For every soldier in the battle line there must be a retinue of supporters, feeding, clothing and equipping him. If the food is not sufficient or the equipment is inadequate they fail and we fail with them. Just as the whole nation is at war so the whole church is in the business of preaching and all of us are under solemn obligation either to preach or to help support those who do. Service is the law for all, and there is no principle of justice that will exempt the church from a share in the hardship the preacher bears in its behalf. The burden of the ministry should be distributed since the work of the preacher is of a representative character.

The Principle Not Applied.

This principle as a rule is not applied in the fixing of pastor's salaries. Most men would rather suffer a little privation than prejudice their work by seeming to be mercenary. They understand the sacrificial character of their work and are willing to accept small compensation. This they can do in some cases because of frequent donations from home or the gifts of discerning friends. If these supplementary sources are lacking the average minister has a hard time paying the debts incurred in his college and seminary course, making up the deficiency of the first years of his ministry when his expense exceeded his income and making ends meet today. Old age does not look particularly roseate under such circumstances, especially when the churches insist upon young ministers and make so little provision for the superannuates.

Radical Change Imperative.

But this is aside from the main point. The fact is that conditions are such now that a radical change in the matter of pastoral support is imperative. Many pulpits in the Methodist Protestant Church are unsupplied. Local preachers and sometimes strangers are called upon to fill vacancies and still pulpits are vacant. One reason for the shortage of ministers is the war. Another is the small support offered, which not only discourages the young man from entering the ministry but forces good men out to seek a livelihood, like the Scotsman who said he left the ministry for six good reasons—his wife and five children. Conditions are not improving rapidly enough. The demand for ministers is greater now than ever. Chaplains for the army and navy must be supplied in addition to pastors and missionaries. The church must supply both. The church has the men and it has the money to finance this enlarged ministerial demand. The salary offered ministers is not likely ever to be large enough to prove a temptation to cupidity. It must be increased to enable the preacher to live in comparative comfort.

The Higher Cost of Living.

The cost of living has gone up steadily and the salaries of ministers have not increased correspondingly. Prices have risen each year since 1907, except in 1911 and 1915. In 1916 they were more than 39 per cent. higher than in 1907. The Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor publishes the rate of increase in the whole sale price of commodities in the U. S. since 1913, the year preceding the outbreak of the war. Starting with 100 in 1913 the increase in price is expressed in the ration of 110 for Jan., 1916, 181 in December, 1917. Official figures estimate the increase from July, 1914, to Jan., 1918, in the cost of all items ordinarily entering the expenditures of a working man's family at 80 to 85 per cent. or, including increases due to taxation, 85 to 90 per cent. The quality of boots, clothing and household necessities has so declined that renewal is much more frequent and this entails a still greater outlay. Since July, 1914, eggs have increased 242 per cent.; butter, 104 per cent.; sugar, 187 per cent.; and fish 196 per cent.

The Diminishing Dollar.

The Ladies' Home Journal shows how the dollar has diminished in purchasing power since 1916. The shrinkage would not be felt if the dollars were multiplied correspondingly. There is a tendency in most occupations to preserve a balance between the cost of living and the wage scale. The necessary adjustments are brought about sometimes by the employer who makes a study of fair dealing with his employes; sometimes the employes make a demand. When no demand is made and when the conscience of the employer is not active the ratio may become considerably strained. That has happened in the case of the ministry. Here and there churches have dealt fairly with their pastors but there has not been the general advance in salaries that the times loudly call for. The 1918 Methodist Protestant Year Book reports pastors' salaries. Not every charge reports and in some cases the salary reported is for part time. The salaries reported include parsonage rental, except in the case of North Carolina.

Average Salaries Paid in 1917.

The following shows the number of charges reporting and the average salary paid in 16 annual conferences:—

Alabama	25	$405
Eastern	71	750
Iowa-Missouri	33	590
Indiana	58	646
Kansas	21	518
Maryland	144	968
Michigan	61	745
Muskingum	50	915
North Illinois	26	684
North Carolina	61	735
Ohio	32	884
Pittsburgh	51	1135
South Illinois	11	306
Texas	35	407
West Virginia	67	670

Opportune Time to Increase Salaries.

The conferences not reporting would bring the average down considerably. It is apparent that an upward move in the direction of better salaries is imperative. Now that pastors' salaries are being agreed upon for next year, quarterly conferences should seriously consider the matter in the light of such facts as are here presented. There is an abundance of money in the churches to give the pastor a square deal. An every-member canvass, putting every member on the roll of contributors will enable the church to pay its pastor well and none will suffer hardship.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

GRANDMOTHER'S DROPPED STITCHES.

"O grandmother, I've dropped another stitch!'' and Jennie handed the army muffler that she was knitting to her grandmother for repairs. ''Seems like these needles just love to drop stitches.''

''That's what I used to think when I was a little girl your age,'' said grandmother with a reminiscent smile. "One day I was knitting a pair of gray army socks for my father, who was off at the Civil War, and mummy was busy making hospital shirts.''

Jennie squirmed with delight at the prospect of hearing one of grandmother's ''little girl stories.'' ''And what happened, grandmother?'' she inquired.

''Well, I kept dropping stitches and saying nothing about it; so finally, when the sock was finished, I found that it was full of holes. Mummy looked at it and shook her head. 'I am sorry, Jinny,' she said (she always called me Jinny), 'but that whole sock will have to be unraveled. It wouldn't last father a day with all those dropped stitches in it.' ''

''Poor little grandmother!'' sighed her namesake. ''Did you cry?''

''No; I felt like it, for it had taken mummy a long time to knit that sock. but she talked to me about how proud father would be to have a pair of socks knitted by his little daughter. Then she said seriously (war makes folks extra serious): 'Jinny, your life is just beginning. There are really only a few rows so far. But I wonder if you really have already been dropping stitches. Unless you stop to pick each one up as you go along, your whole life will be ugly and useless, like this poor work.' ''

''What did she mean, grandmother?'' asked Jennie with wide-open eyes. ''How can we drop stitches in life and pick them up?''

''I found out very soon, my dear,'' replied grandmother, ''for every day mummy helped me. If I were about to lose my temper, which was very quick, and say something sharp, she would look at me and say: 'Jinny, don't drop a stitch!' Or if that same temper made me slam a door as I went out, mummy would call me back and say quietly, 'Jinny, pick up that stitch now,' and I would beg her pardon and close the door softly behind me.''

Jennie was thoughtful a moment, and then she laid aside her muffler and whispered in grandmother's ear: ''Excuse me a minute, please, but I must run back to the nursery and pick up two big, lazy stitches I dropped in there this morning.''

When grandmother went into the nursery half an hour later, she smiled to herself; for careless Jennie's clothes were hung primly in the closet, and her bed was neatly spread.—Annie Dickey Jones.

SERMON TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

Bad Habits.

Job 13: 28—''A garment that is moth-eaten.''

If you will look carefully in the drug store windows these days you will see in some of them neat little piles of shining white balls. . They look like marbles, and they look like candy. But they are not candy. They are moth balls. They are used to keep the moths away, and if you take one of them and hold it to your nose you will not wonder that they keep the moths away.

This is the time of the year when the moths come around. Before long you will see your mother take your winter clothes, your overcoat and your warm thick suit and give them a good brushing. Then she takes out some of those moth balls and puts them in the suit and folds it up and lays it away till the cold weather comes again. She does this to keep the moths away. If she did not do that, let me tell you what would happen. One of those tiny little white moths, so small that you can hardly see it as it floats through the air, would come and light on that new coat of yours. There the moth would lay hundreds of little eggs. By and by those eggs hatch and there are many hungry little moths. They must have something to eat, so they eat the cloth, and before long there is a great hole in the coat. And next winter when you go to get your warm coat it is full of holes like Cinderella's old dress.

Once I heard a little boy crying as if he were afraid of something. I asked him what the trouble was. He told me that he was afraid of the moths. Some one had told him that moths ate big holes in things and he was afraid they might come after him. Moths do not hurt boys and girls, but there are other things that do. We call these things bad habits.

One of these bad habits is lying. It is always hard to tell the first lie. We are so ashamed of what we have done and afraid that we are going to be caught. The second lie is not so hard, and if we keep on it is easy to lie, and it becomes a habit. Then some day, when we are older and we want a position, the man to whom we apply will hold up onr character and look at it, and there will be a great hole in it. He will say, ''I don't want this boy. He can't tell the truth.'' Moths eat holes in our coats, but lying eats big holes in our characters.

Carelessness is another bad habit agaist which we need to be on our guard. Some people are careless about their their clothes, and they are careless about their lessons, and they are careless about their talk. They were not always that way. They started out just like other people. But they became careless about some little things, and now it has become a habit and they are careless about everything. They have been spoiled by carelessness.

There are two ways that we can be safe from these habits. First be busy, doing something that is good. If you wear your clothes the moths will not trouble them. It is when they are idle that the little insects come. If you are busy with your work you will not be troubled with bad habits. It is the idle boys and girls who are troubled with temptations.

Then, second, use something to keep the bad habits away. If your mother uses plenty of moth balls, she will not be troubled with moths. You need something to keep bad habits away, and there is no better thing than prayer and the Bible. Don't forget to pray and to read your Bible every day.—Rev. Stuart Nye Hutchison, D. D., in The Southwestern Presbyterian.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Welch Memorial.—We have been silent for some time, but this is no sign that we have been idle. Our reporter has been unable to attend church for some time, but we are glad to say, her health is greatly improved. She has been permitted to worship with us again, and we hope she will soon be able to take up her church work again, and then you may expect to hear from us a little more often.

We have recently conducted revival services of evenings.

We had no regular engaged help for these services, but had two sermons from R. A. Hunter and one each from Brothers Brown and Suits, which were enjoyed and appreciated by pastor and people. As a result of these meetings we had six conversions and one accession, and we think others will join later. Our church and S. S. attendance is very good. Our S. S. has grown right much since the first of the year. Our Baracas have grown from 44 to 72. Philatheas from 34 to 60. Our average attendance for May was [illegible]—This is higher than the school ev- [illegible]

The entire budget is paid up to date, and we have raised over $200 for improvements on church and parsonage.

We have paid a nice sum on parsonage debt, and you can see in Bro. Garrett's report what we are doing for the Children's Home. All seem to be pulling together to build up the church, and we find it a pleasure to serve these good and kind people, who seem to be so deeply interested in their church, and the welfare of their pastor and family.

A. L. Hunter.

West End.—We arrived in Greensboro from Westminster on May 9th. On the following Sunday we began our work as pastor of West End Church. Despite the fact that they have been without a pastor ever since the church was organized, they have been at work, and have a wide-awake Sunday school and a good, though small, Christian Endeavor society. We have had good congregations, considering the small membership, at both morning and evening services.

On Thursday evening following the 2d Sunday in May, we held our first quarterly conference of the year, with President Andrews in the chair. Brother Andrews is well known and loved by pastor and people and it was a pleasure to have him with us on this occasion. The business of the conference was transacted in a spirit of brotherly love, and all seemed anxious to do their part in the work of the Kingdom. The pastor suggested that they purchase a supply of M. P. Hymnals to be used in our church services, and within ten minutes we had enough pledged to buy three dozen.

We believe there is a bright future for this church. The membership is small, but is composed of good people, and people who are willing to work. This being true, we will grow.

On Monday evening, June 3rd, while the pastor was in his study at work, one of our members and a member of Grace Church came in, as we thought for a short evening call; but in a few minutes others came, and still others, until every chair in the house was occupied and some of the men were sitting on the porch floor. And the best part was that they didn't come empty-handed, but each one brought a package from the grocery store. We will not attempt to enumerate the articles, but suffice it to say that we are in the best condition, so far as groceries are concerned, that we have been in for a long, long time.

After we had sufficiently recovered from the shock to know what had happened, we invited the people into the parlor, where we had some encouraging talks had several prayers and some [illegible]

We would not forget to mention that two Grace church members, Messrs. J. M. Stone and W. S. Jones, were present, who not only brought acceptable gifts, but made interesting and helpful talks, which were greatly appreciated by all present.

It is good to be in the midst of such people, and it is the humble desire of pastor and wife to do all in our power to serve them to the best of our ability. May God abundantly bless all, and grant unto us a successful year's work.

Guilford Circuit.—Since my last report we have been recipients of various gifts from the following generous donors: Geo. Johnson, J. B. Hassell, J. W. Matlock, R. L. Borum, Julius Garrett, H. A. Garrett, J W. Yow, J. M. Davis, L. W. Cashatt, J. A. Gray, E. S. Jones and Carl Jones, and Jr. O. U. A. M. The following ladies are also entitled to recognition. They will please excuse the omission of the usual prefix: Emma Bowman, Millie Bowman, Randa Cashatt, Bettie Johnson, Nannie Lowdermilk, Mary Amick, Lillie Suits, Sallie Amick, Rebecca Causey, and Bessie Wagner. Some of the above gifts date as far back as the middle of March. It is superfluous to multiply words in expressing our very great appreciation relative to the favore received.

The Sunday schools on this field are increasing in numbers and interest. Children's Day exercises will be held at 3 of the churches in June, beginning at Shady Grove next Sunday. Fairfield will hold theirs the third, and Mitchell's the fifth Sunday. A splendid exercise is looked for at each place. There will be all-day service.

The attendance on preaching days is gradually increasing. On last Sunday the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered at two of our churches. One noticeable feature was the lamentable fact that many of the professing Christians ignored their golden opportunity.

On last Friday, Robert Lee Miles, a young man twenty-two years old was buried at Groome's M. E. burying ground. Lee was not a member of any church, but was a nice, clean young man. His friends and neighbors spoke of him in highly complimentary terms. May the God of all grace comfort the stricken family during these dark hours through which they are now passing. The funeral was conducted by the writer in the presence of a large gathering of sorrowing, sympathizing relatives and friends.

Our Sunday school has reorganized and is preparing to do better work. Our scholars were divided and placed in the following classes: Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6.

We were glad to have with us last Sunday our pastor, Mr. Millaway, who preached a very interesting sermon to an attentive congregation. Mrs. M. A. Lineberry who has been very ill for some time is much improved at this writing.

Friendship, Fallston Ct.—Last third Sunday was a good day for us. We held our memorial service on that day. A large crowd assembled and were very attentive to the sermon delivered by Rev. Mr. Wood, from Shelby, at twelve o'clock. The message was very helpful and inspiring, encouraging the people to answer the great call of God to do service for Him now, as there has never been a time when we so much need to sacrifice, to spend and be spent as today. He pointed out our duty to humanity, not only by economizing but by contributing freely to good causes, prov- [illegible] to do our the awful condition of the nations today. Immediately after the sermon, the people gathered at the cemetery where the graves were decorated with beautiful flowers. Not a grave wase missed, and some were almost covered while the choir sang appropriate songs. In the afternoon we had talks by different persons, Rev. Henry Stamey being one of the speakers. Uncle Noah Wright, our Sunday school superintendent, also made us a talk, being one of the oldest members of our church now living. The talks were all interesting and the congregation seemed to enjoy them so much.

Last Sunday our pastor, S. M. Needham, gave us another plain gospel sermon, the kind we all need and which always does us good. May we all pray that this may indeed be a successful year.

On Thursday, the 30th of May, we had services at our church according to the proclamation. It was a union service, the people of all three churches gathering at the same place. Rev. D. W. Brown, the M. E. preacher at Fallston, helped our pastor conduct the service which was a very effective one. We feel that the time was well spent, as we were brought nearer God. All the business men of Fallston closed their places of business and went to church. We hope all churches everywhere had services likewise. If we are to win out in this world-wide struggle we must appeal to Almighty God for guidance, and be coworkers with Him.

Hobbs Chapel, Greensville Ct.—We had all-day service here last fourth Sunday; the weather was extremely warm but the congregation was large.

Bro. Morgan preached in the A. M. His sermon good as usual. Mr. Thompson came up from Emporia in the afternoon and gave us a splendid sermon; subject, "The serpent biting." Bro. Butler said it was what we needed only he did not hit us quite hard enough.

Our hearts were made sad again Monday, 27th, when two more of our members were called to Camp Lee for military training. This makes four of our boys—Silas Pair at Camp McClellan, Ala., Manie Hobbs entered Camp Lee last Sept., and Percy Ogburn and Willie Pair left last Monday. May God bless and protect them wherever they go; and may He help us to "keep the home fires burning."

Cleveland Ct.—It was understood at the close of our first quarterly conference that we would meet at Mt. Moriah church on Saturday before the second Sunday in May for the purpose of holding the second.

The people were reminded of this occasionally during the quarter, for as the middle of May is a busy time with the farmers I was afraid they would be inclined to forget.

But we were agreeably surprised, when we drove on the ground about 11 o'clock on the appointed day to find a crowd that reminded one of Sunday of a special meeting. It seemed that the neighborhood had turned out en masse, while there was a fine representation from all the other churches. They had come afoot, in two horse wagons, buggies, and automobiles; in about every way people could travel especially among those hills. There might have been a motor cycle or two but no airplanes.

At the tap of the bell the people gathered in the house for worship and the writer tried to talk to them a short time on "Individual Responsibility," as set forth by the Master in the "Parable of the Pounds." At the close of the service we had dinner in the grove. And what a dinner! The brethren carried out seats turning front to front—making a table that nothing could slide off of—until they had a string some 50 or 60 feet long, then the sisters spread on or in the table cloths, and then the rations. There was chicken and ham, biscuit and pie and custard and pickles, strawberries fresh from the vine, and honey, and other things too numerous to mention. And when all that crowd had eaten until they wanted no more, I am sure there were more than twelve basketfuls left—unless they had been large baskets.

It was the largest crowd and the largest dinner I have seen at quarterly conference for quite a while, if ever. It made me feel that these people love the cause, and are willing to help along in a very liberal way when they know what to do.

Of course after such a good dinner the business of the quarterly conference was transacted in harmony. The S. S. Supts. reported schools at each church doing fine work now, though all except Oak Grove were completely frozen out during the winter months. Class leaders reported the spiritual condition improving. Stewards' report showed 41 per cent. of all claims due to date, paid. Rolin Turner, of Moriah church, and Willis Hoyle, of Oak Grove, were nominated as candidates for delegate to Annual Conference.

The longer we are with this people the better we like them, and the more interesting they become, and the more fully we become convinced of their ability to do great things, when they fully know themselves. Several of the young men from the circuit are being called to the camps. We are hoping and praying that they may return in safety, and be much improved. Pray for us.

Weaverville, Buncombe Ct.—Dear Editor: We are not asleep, but have failed to do our duty in reporting, and we have so much to be thankful for. In the absence of our pastor, Rev. T. M. Johnson from Asheville came out and preached for us which we all enjoyed very much; for he always told us something worth while. We reorganized our Sunday S. the 5th Sunday in March. Mr. Frank Edwards is our superintendent. We have an encouraging school now and the interest keeps growing. We have new members almost every Sunday. We are so glad to have our beloved pastor, Mr. H. F. Fogleman, back with us again. He has entered into the work soul and body and I trust that every one will show him their appreciation by standing by him in every way possible, for he is a deserving young man and I am sure he is going to make good and I trust that every one will give him hearty co-operation, for no pastor can build a work by himself, and I hope that all our slothful church members will get wide awake to this fact and put willing hands to the wheels and help him move the work onward and upward.

Our 2d quarterly conference convened at the Weaverville Church yesterday at 5 o'clock with our president, Rev. R. M. Andrews, in the chair. It was a great pleasure to us to have him with us and to see the interest he manifests in our young pastors. I know it is a great inspiration to them. With best wishes to our Editor and the Herald, Reporter

New Hope, Why Not Ct.—Our S. S. is progressing nicely. Attendance increasing each Sunday.

We are planning to hold children's day service the fifth Sunday in June. Hope to get a nice collection. Bro. Ashburn preached another good sermon last fourth Sunday, to a large congregation. We feel that every one present was benefited. His sermons always contain instruction that we so much need.

Uncle Edmond Tucker, one of our oldest members, has been somewhat indisposed for some time, but was able to worship with us.

[illegible] m. Cox is slowly improving; he has been sick quite awhile.

Had prayer service at the church last Thursday. God be with the dear boys. May peace be in the near future.

Reporter.

Stallings, Mecklenburg Ct.—Since our last report we have had our regular services. Our Sunday school is improving every Sunday. Report for last Sunday: 100 present, collection $15.45, which went to the Children's Home at High Point, N. C., as we give our collection of every first Sunday to this purpose. We had with us Bro. Braswell from Concord, Bro. Garrett from High Point, Bro. Philips from Matthews, and Bro. Haywood from Indian Trail. It being our children's day we were gladder for them to be with us.

The program by the children was given during the forenoon beginning at 11 A. M. I am glad to write that the children acted their parts exceedingly well. They had been carefully trained by Mrs. Bessie T. Thompson and Miss Lillian Noles. Our music was in the hands of Miss Maude Stallings, Mr. J. H. Harkey, Rev. A. Ridge. The songs were sweetly sung by a selected choir. The program was as follows:—

After the children finished we all adjourned to the place prepared to spread our dinner. The good ladies put the dinner out, and we all ate with happy hearts and glad smiles.

At 3 P. M. our speakers began their discourses. The first speaker of the afternoon was Bro. Haywood; subject, Satisfaction. The second, Bro. Philips: subject, Sunday School. Third, Bro. Braswell; subject, Foreign Missions.

Their speeches were greatly enjoyed by all and we were also glad to have Mrs. Randolph from Charlotte to sing us a pretty solo, "Beautiful Land over There." Then the collection was taken up by Misses Mattie Ridge, Lura Harkey and Ruth Noles; amount being $5.70, for foreign missions.

In the evening at 8:30 Bro. Braswell delivered to us a sermon that his hearers will never forget. May God be with Bro. Braswell in all his good works.

Liberty Church.—The series of meetings beginning here second Sunday in May with Dr. George Brown of High Point as helper were attended by good congregations, and great good was accomplished; not that we had many conversions, but the gospel teachings that Dr. Brown gave will be greatly beneficial in days to come. We trust that by these teachings the church people will get closer together and work for the Master's cause as never before.

The ladies of our church will organize a ladies' aid society in the near future.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. Much interest is manifested and almost every Sunday we have good attendance; last Sunday, 84.

The Philatheas elected new officers 3d Sunday as follows: Mrs. Esther Rees, president; Miss Peace Staley, vice president; Miss Ada Garrett secretary and treasurer, with Lizzie Cameron press reporter.

Our people are contemplating the erection of quite a handsome church in the near future, perhaps work will begin in a few months. The Philatheas have given pledge for $100 for the church. They will soon give a play in which to get up some of the money. And many ways will be planned later to meet this pledge. "Where there is a will there is a way."

In honor of our Baraca boys who are under the flag our church will present a service flag on second Sunday of this month. Appropriate remarks from our pastor, Paul Kennett, will be in readiness and I am sure all will be pleased to know we remember the boys. And we want them to know their star faces their friends back at home.

In behalf of our boys of the Sunday school who have been called to the colors Mrs. Chas. Smith in her graceful and pleasing manner gave the Sunday school a talk which was inspiring, helpful, as well as patriotic, telling of the need of a flag for the young men who have gone to the front from our school and given up home and loved ones, to protect their country and fight for their rights.

In accordance with the proclamation of President Wilson, Liberty observed Thursday of last week as a day of worship and prayer. Services were held in the M. P. Church with all denominations of our town uniting. The first service was held at 11 o'clock in the morning; another at 8 in the evening. Rev. W. C. Kennett conducted the morning service, and very appropriate he was in his remarks.

We are very sorry to state that Mrs. R. E. Patterson who has been sick for several months is still unable to get out. We trust she will soon be able to come to Sunday school again, as she has been one of our teachers for many years, and the small children as well as the older ones miss her.

Gibsonville, Fairview Circuit.—The first Sunday was one of unusual interest for Gibsonville. In response to an invitation to the Baracas and Philathea classes of St. Paul's, Fairview and Carolina churches we had a union Baraca and Philathea rally of the circuit at Gibsonville. About 50 B. and P. of St. Paul's responded and about 15 from Fairview and some from Carolina. The Baracas and Philatheas of the M. E. and Baptist churches of Gibsonville were also invited to be with us. They gladly and nobly responded to the invitation. All told we had an assemblage that taxed the capacity of our church and our Philathea class room. The Philathea class occupied their room upstairs. The overflow occupied the adjoining rooms of the little folks. This class numbered 85 and was taught by Bro. C. Davidson, a brother of Dwight L. Davidson, our splendid Supt. We heard much praise of him as a teacher.

The Baracas occupied the main auditorium of the church and numbered perhaps about 200. Bro. W. J. Jennings, the efficient teacher of this class, had invited Dr. Lawrence of Elon College to be present and teach the class. Dr. Lawrence certainly must have been at his best and for about 45 minutes taught the class to the interest and satisfaction of all. Dr. Lawrence was heard to say, that this was the finest class he had ever taught. The pastor had invited Bro. J. Norman Wills of Greensboro to be present and take charge of the regular 11 o'clock service. Bro. Wills chose for his subject "Do Things" and addressed the audience for about 45 minutes. His address was full of thought and was fully abreast of the times. It was highly complimented. We feel that this was a "red letter day" for Gibsonvlile. [illegible] looking forward to some time [illegible] we can have a reunion. The occasion was very much enjoyed by all present. We want to return our thanks to Bros. Wills, Lawrence and Davidson for their service on this happy occasion.

Burlington.—There were 212 in our Sunday school last Sunday. The Lord's Supper was observed at the morning service of the church and a very large congregation was present. Nearly one hundred persons participated in the communion service.

The children's day service was held on Sunday night. The church was almost completely filled with eager and earnest listeners. The children performed fairly well, considering the limited time they had to practice the exercises. The offering was $25.00.

The Burlington-Graham C. E. Union met at the Presbyterian Church in Graham last Monday night. Bro. Pritchard, our pastor, was on the program. The union elected officers and Miss Mary Brown of our church was elected treasurer of the organization.

Next Sunday is to be a great day for our church and Sunday school. The Sunday school will observe "Home Department Day." The members of the Home Department will be invited to attend the Sunday school and preaching service. Bro. Pritchard will preach a special sermon to them at the 11 o'clock service. In the afternoon a canvass of the church membership and community will be made to enlist as many members as possible.

In the evening we will have a patriotic service, and the service flag will be unfurled. The flag contains 10 stars. We hope to have large congregations at all the services next Sunday.

C. B. Way, Reporter.

Chestnut Ridge, Orange Ct.—Our new pastor, Rev. H. Freo Surratt, just from seminary, delivered to us on Sunday, May 29, the most helpful sermon which was enjoyed by all. Every one seems to like Bro. Surratt fine and we feel that he is going to take great interest in his work. Bro. Surratt located in Efland. Second quarterly conference was held at Efland the 4th Sat. in May with all churches represented. We think the time has come when every one should be taking more interest in prayer meeting, Sunday school and church work of all kinds. We should all do more praying, especially for our soldier boys. We have had a good many boys to leave this community for military service whom we miss very much. May they return safe is my prayer. Best wishes to the Herald. Effie Bristow, Rep.

Saxapahaw Circuit.—It gives me great pleasure at this time to be able to report that I am really living among the good people of Saxapahaw charge. I am making my headquarters, however, at Saxapahaw, N. C. I am privileged to room and board with Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Mann for the present until some furniture is placed in the parsonage. We are glad to report that the Ladies' Aid at this place has money already in hand to furnish a room or more. I bid these good ladies God's speed in the great work they are undertaking for the interest of the Kingdom. The pastor is anxious to have more that will co-operate with him in the work of the Master. Beloved, we can do all things through Jesus Christ who gives us strength.

Sunday found me again with the Concord people. At this time the pastor with the aid of the members of the church conducted a memorial service. At the conclusion of the preaching service the little girls and boys marched up to the front and each one received a boquet of the many beautiful flowers that had been placed there by the friends of the deceased. After the children had received the flowers, they marched out of the church in pairs to the cemetery where the flowers were received by young ladies and distributed on each grave.

In the afternoon of the same day a number of the ladies met with me and organized a ladies' aid society: Miss Addie Bell Lewis president, Beulah Curl treasurer, Mrs. C. C. Moore secretary, Miss Rosa Johnson assistant secretary, and Miss Lena Robinson vice president. These ladies expect to do some real active work under the leadership of Miss Lewis.

Thursday night of this week the Baracas are to meet and plan some real service they can do for the interest of the Kingdom.

On the third Sunday afternoon of this month Concord church and Sunday school expect to have a children's day service. You will honor us with your presence.

President Coming.

This coming Saturday at eleven o'clock the President of the Conference, R. M. Andrews, will preach at Concord church, Saxapahaw at night, Salem Sunday morning at the usual time for service, and at Orange Chapel in the afternoon at three o'clock. At each of these services the several members of each church are urged to be present to hear what Bro. Andrews has to say.

J. Clyde Auman.

Thomasville.—Had a good day at Canaan 4th Sunday. Bro. Brown and wife united with us. Glad to receive [illegible] Bowers, of Thomasville, took the service at Mt. Pleasant in the interest of the Red Cross. Raised $40. Good for union church.

Our special meeting at Thomasville began 1st Sunday. Bro. Lamar came to us Monday night. The people were delighted with his coming, and we are praying for a great meeting. W. D. Reed.

Mt. Carmel, Yadkin College Ct.—Our pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil, filled his regular appointment here Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, standard time. He always preaches well. But the sermon he delivered Sunday was unusually good and enjoyed by those present. There was a good number there. We held our children's day service afternoon at 2 o'clock. The exercise was very good. The contribution was $4.20,—not very much considering the number present.

Our Sunday school is doing very well; the attendance is not very large but increasing with young folks. We would be glad if some of the older people would come. If the Sunday school is good enough for the children it certainly ought to be good enough for the older people. Take this in consideration, people, and think of the matter more seriously. It is an awful thing to think of—the older people so indifferent.

With best wishe sto the Herald. Rep.

High Point.—A beautiful communion service was held in the church Sunday morning at 11 o'clock in which a large number of members participated. At the evening hour Dr. Brown delivered a most practical and timely sermon from the Parable of the Tares, "An enemy hath done this." He gave especial emphasis to a number of tares which have sprung up in our modern life, such as profanity, intemperance, gambling, and pernicious literature.

The Ladies' Aid Society met yesterday afternoon in the Philathea room at the church. It was decided to hold our meetings at the homes of the different members at 7:30 o'clock during the warm summer months.

A large and beautiful service flag containing fifteen stars hangs from the top of the pulpit. These stars represent the young men who have gone out from our church to bear arms in defense of democracy.

Children's Day exercises will be held next Sunday morning. Misses Carrie and Flossie Stout and Mesdames C. L. Gray and C. C. Robbins are training the children, and the occasion promises to be entertaining and interesting.

The school at the Children's Home [illegible] cises. Mrs. Minnie P. Harrell, the excellent teacher, has closed a very successful year's work, and she and little son are spending the summer with her parents on N. Main St., Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Pickett.

At the commencement of the High Point High School last week there was a class of 28 unusually fine and promising boys and girls who received diplomas. Among this number our church was represented by six of the strongest members: Misses Margaret Rankin, Juanita Moffitt, and Alene Tomlinson, Messrs. Klein Pickett, Lewis E. Teague, and Wyatt A. Pickens. A majority of these young people will go to college this fall.

Mr. H. A. Moffitt annually awards a medal to the girl who makes the greatest progress in the Cooking Class, and this year it was won by Miss Kathleen Welch, a bright and attractive young lady of our church, and the medal was presented by Dr. Geo. R. Brown.

Misses Gertrude Hughes and Daisy Osborne of the City Schools Faculty will teach at Pine Ridge, Ky., this summer.

Richard Reitzel is home from Virginia Polytechnic Institute to spend the summer vacation with his mother, Mrs. J. R. Reitzel.

Geo. T. Penny, Esq., is on Long Island this week conducting land sales. Rep.

Halifax.—A good day yesterday at Eden. All the folks we could accommodate and a helpful service. One young man, Brother Walter Moone, was received into membership from the Baptist Church. We are glad to welcome him. Plans are on foot at this church put into operation by the Ladies' Aid Society to purchase a piano for the church. This is a step forward that we believe will be a help in the music as well as to encourage in other ways.

At Union in the afternoon notwithstanding the extreme heat we had an attentive audience and one striking thing about the communion service was the large number of young people that partook. Our congregation is small here but we have some true blue.

Children's Day service at Bethesda the second and Harmony the third Sunday. We are hoping to raise a nice sum for foreign missions in these services.

We are expecting a good day in our circuit rally to be held at Hollister the 5th Sunday. We will have our president with us that day. We are urging all our folks to attend and bring a war lunch along as there will be no picnic dinner but every one to furnish his own meal and let the feast be on the good things that our speakers will give us that day. [illegible]

I called on Bro. Tom [illegible] the other day and as he said something about some work he was doing with lime I asked him if he could let me have some for disinfecting purposes. So when I went after it he came out with a box of lime and a nice ham. Thank you, brother. A good combination. One to keep down germs and the other to keep down hunger. But that is not all. Strawberries from Mrs. Thomas, Misses Willie Cheek, Emma Louis Vinson, and Mrs. Thos. Taylor. Garden peas from Mrs. N. M. Harrison and clover for the cow from Bro. Joe Aycock; apples and a large jar of sweet pickles from Aunt Peggy Lee.

Thank ye all!

Our work is moving along very well considering there is no bigger man behind it. Some of our churches are up to date with the budget and some of the others are not far behind. We are expecting to come out in full. We are now trying to bring before our folks the importance of being ready for our revival campaign which begins in just two Mos. with the Eden meeting. Pray for us, please. Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

—The German authorities recently issued a call for a list of all bells weighing more than 20 pounds as well as all organ pipes in Belgium. They are to be melted for guns.

DECEASED.

Peeples.—Laura Naomi Peeples, nee Calhoun, was born Jan. 2, 1885, near Friendship, N. C., and died May 29, 1918, about three miles from Oak Ridge, from burns received through an accidental explosion of gasoline. She was married to "Web" Peeples Dec. 24, 1907. This union was blest with two children, George Webster and Mary Frances Peeples, 7 and 5 years old respectively.

Sister Peeples was converted at about 12 years of age, and joined the church at Moorehead's Chapel where she remained a member till after her marriage. Then she became a member of the Ai M. P. Church.

She was the most active member of Ai church, being superintendent of the S. S. An appointment had been made by her on Wednesday to meet the children in preparation for a children's day program. On Thursday night she was to open the prayer service. But being burned on Monday night, she was a corpse on Wednesday eve; and on Thursday afternoon her body was laid in the cemetery at Ai, her funeral services being conducted by her pastor, in the presence of a large concourse of people. Her grave was covered with flowers.

Sister Peeples was one of the best of God. [illegible] was faithful in every duty. No task was too hard. No one else in the whole vicinity would be missed as she is.

Patiently and bravely she bore her suffering. May a kind Providence comfort her suffering husband, her children, her parents, and all the sorrowing ones, and her bright faithful life prove a blessing for years to come! At last, may all meet her in Heaven! A. O. Lindley.

At the last Branch Meeting of the W. H. M. S., a resolution was passed asking that all money raised by the W. H. M. S. for support of children and from Sunday eggs be sent to the Treas. of the North Carolina Branch and that she report same in Methodist Protestant Herald.

—Reports say that the family and close friends of the German emperor are alarmed at his mental condition and are vainly trying to keep him away from the front in the hope that the trouble may be lessened. He is said to be the victim of hallucinations and to be constantly speaking of his "divine commission to save the world and humanity."

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. W. H. Guthrie.—On Wednesday night, May 15, 1918, the angel whose name is Death entered the home of Mr. W. H. Guthrie and took the spirit of his loving companion into the presence of her Saviour.

Emma Morris Guthrie was born Feb. 15, 1845, and died May 15, 1918, aged 73 years, 3 Mos. She was married to W. H. Guthrie Dec., 1865. She is survived by one sister, a brother, her aged husband and nine children, two having died in their infancy. Those living are: Messrs. M. S. Guthrie, J. C. Guthrie, L. E. Guthrie, and Mesdames J. T. Love, L. G. Andrews, J. G. Braxton, A. N. Roberson, J. S. McBane, Percy Lindley. Besides these there is a large number of grandchildren, great-grandchildren and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

She was sick for a long while, having been confined to her room almost a year. She bore her suffering quietly, putting her trust in a Higher Power. Everything was done for her that loving hands could do, but the love of earthly friends could not prolong her stay among us when the Saviour said, "Come; it is enough."

[illegible] faith in Christ early in [illegible] Christian, thinking not of herself, but gently and quietly doing His will in her home, church and neighborhood.

Some of the most touching scenes during her illness were when the Holy Spirit was so near to her that she fancied she could see His face. Many times, with tears running down her cheeks, has she said that she wished a photographer would come and get His picture so that other members of the family might view Him.

She was distressed when she got so weak that she could not pray aloud or ask her children, grandchildren, her neighbors and friends, all of whom were so dear to her, to meet her "over yonder." But we know by the expression on her face and the feeble notion of her hand pointing heavenward what her message to us was. And although loved ones could not hear the sweet words of her prayers, God in His infinite wisdom saw and understood them all. Now she is standing just across the river and with strength renewed is watching and beckoning us to come.

The funeral was held Thursday afternoon at Concord Church, of which she was a member. The service was conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. C. Auman, assisted by a former pastor, Rev. H. S. B. Thompson.

There amid a countless number of sorrowing relatives and friends the beautiful casket containing her body was lowered into the earth. The mound was covered with beautiful flowers. One of her sons, with weeping eyes, said, "The grave is so pretty; if she could only see it." She was a great lover of flowers; it seems that there was nothing but the good and the beautiful connected with her life.

It was so hard to give her up, and a vacant place which cannot be filled is left in her home and our hearts. But we grieve not as one without hope, for we know that she is standing at the right hand of God ready to welcome with Him her husband, children and other loved ones as they, one by one, enter that beautiful home where cometh no sorrow, no care.

Sweet mother: as an angel, here below,—
And thou art now a angel—thou dost shine
Awhile, then left this dreary world of woe,
Then soar'd on high, to realms of bliss
    divine.
Thou art in Heaven. Never shall a throe
Of pain or sorrow pierce that breast of thine;
For thou art gone where pain and sorrow never [illegible]

Sweet is the thought of those we love
    in heaven,
When in sweet dreams the soul would meet them there;
Rejoin the ties which here on earth are riven,
Their happiness in that bright world to share.

Iola Braxton.

Captain John R. Stockard, the oldest member of Mt. Hermon Church, and the last member of the first Sabbath school class organized in North Carolina, went to his reward Saturday, June 1st, at about 11 o'clock. He was 91 years old. In his death Alamance County loses one of its best citizens and Mt. Hermon Church one of its most loyal members. A fuller account of his life will appear later.

Ellis.—William J. Ellis was born in Davie County, N. C., near Advance October 23, 1835, and departed this life at his home in Winston-Salem May 20, 1918. He was a son of the late J. B. and Mary Ellis. He was educated at Germanton Masonic Institute. On July 7, 1857 he was married to Miss Dorothy A. Law, of Franklin County, Va. He served thru the civil war as a lieutenant in the 42nd regiment.

His early youth was spent on the farm, but after he completed his education he taught school for a number of years. In 1887 he engaged in the tobacco business in Winston-Salem and in 1889 he moved his family from Davie County to this city, where they have resided since.

Brother Ellis professed faith in Jesus Christ early in life and united with Elbaville M. P. Church where he remained a faithful member till about twelve years ago, when he transferred to the M. P. Church in Winston-Salem. He was a splendid Christian gentleman and the pastor and people of the church and his many friends in this city feel very keenly the departure of this good man.

He had been in declining health for several years and could not attend the services of the church very often, yet he was intensely interested in his local church and the church at large and was a liberal contributor to every interest of the church. The deceased is survived by Mrs. Ellis and five children as follows:—Mrs. Ralph J. Raucer, of Anderson, S. C., W. B. Ellis, York, Pa., T. J. Ellis, of Advance, C. W. Ellis, of Greenville, S. C., and R. L. Ellis, of Asheville, N. C.

The funeral service was conducted by his pastor in Elbaville M. P. Church and the interment was in the church cemetery.

MARRIED.

On Sunday morning, June 2nd, at 8 o'clock the writer united in marriage at the M. P. parsonage in Burlington Mr. Clarence Franklin Parks and Miss Carrie Crutchfield. Both of these splendid young people have lived within a mile or two of Burlington and the bride is a member of our church and Sunday school. Mr. Parks is an industrious young farmer and the happy couple expect to live on the farm near town, so that we shall expect to have them in our services still. Our prayer for them is that our Father's blessing may be upon them through life.

J. E. Pritchard.

At the M. P. Parsonage in Winston-Salem, N. C., June 2, 1918, Mr. Willis Reed and Miss Dollie Myers were united in marriage, Rev. J. D. Williams officiating.

—Elon College is helping in the food production of our country by giving credit for farm work done this summer by students. The student must work three full months in order to be entitled to this credit. Young women may also help in the same problem by canning, and receive credit in Domestic Science and Household Arts. This is a reasonable combination of home and school wark, we think.

Enjoying the Other Fellow's Good Time.

There is a subtle fact in life which most people admit, some believe and a few practice. And that is that the deepest, purest, the most untainted and unalloyed joy comes from giving others joy, or making a good time for others, or as a little four-year-old put it when she leaned on her mother's knee, looked up into her face and said, "Happy me, mamma." It is a mark of an exceptionally fine nature, one akin to the divine, when a person grasps that God-instilled element in human living and finds his joy in another's good time. We never [illegible] the good time we are looking for, but always come into possession of the one we try to furnish for some-one else.

The desire to stir another's feelings is universal, to arounse them to pity, sympathy, generosity, to cause them to laugh, to cry, or even to be angry. And it is wonderful the influence we have over one another intentionally or unintentionally. We are depressed when those around us are, we are lifted out of our gloom by the gladness of others, and a whole day is often made happier by one having met some one who seemed bubbling over with the pure joy of living. We all enjoy making good times for our friends, but how about Making a Good Time for God?

Zephaniah 3:17 says, "He will joy over thee with singing." If we love to touch the heart strings of humanity and have them respond to our moods; if we find it so wonderful that this is possible, how much more wonderful it is that the heart is touched and influenced and responds to our moods and conduct, and our good time on earth is causing a good time in the glory world. Dr. M. D. Babcock used frequently to pray, "O, God, help us to be a joy unto thee." I can assure you on the authority of God's Word that if you will undertake to make a good time for God you will yourself have the best time of your life.

What Is a Good Time?

So many of us have come to think of a good time as a time filled with laughter and music and general merrymaking. The real truth is that a genuine good time may have very little and possibly none of these in it at all. The Psalmist said, "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High: to show forth thy loving kindness in the morning and thy faithfulness every night." He also said, "I delight to do thy will, O my God."

A little girl had been separated from her mother for some time. She missed her mother very much and when she came home she sat by her mother's side and held her hand. After sitting this way for a long while, during which time neither had spoken, the child looked up with a radiantly happy face and said, "I'm having such a good time." Whether the goodness in the good time will last depends on the heart, for if it is selfish and only to amuse for the time the after effects will more than likely be such as to leave "a sour taste."

Commencement at the Children's Home.

I wonder if it is known among our church members that we have a splendid school in connection with our Children's Home, and that our children are given some advantages not to be found in the public schools? The school is under the direction of Mrs. Minnie Pickett Harrell, a graduate of Western Maryland College, and a better person for the purpose would be hard to find in any denomination. Mrs. Harrell lives in the home during the school term, and the boys and girls have the advantage of her association and fellowship at all times. In addition to her other acquirements Mrs. Harrell is a fine musician, and has organized a splendid orchestra, one that is a credit to the institution and to the church. These boys and girls furnish music frequently for our church in town, and occasionally they visit other churches and communities to the delight of all who hear them. A few weeks ago they furnished the music at the commencement of the Denton High School, and it was good music, too. But I started to tell our people about the commencement exercises held at the Home a few days ago.

The programme was replete with music, instrumental and vocal, recitations, orations and essays, and dialogues of a high order. Each child acquitted himself splendidly. The following prizes were awarded: three prizes were given to the fourth grade for the highest number of headmarks in spelling, and they were won by Vista Garrett, Pauline Halton and Mangum Harrell. The prize given to the second grade for the highest number of headmarks in spelling was won by Ruth McClure. Virgil Randall received a prize for having written the best composition during the year. Grace Robbins received a prize for having made the most improvement in writing. The prize for the best application to work was won by Vista Garrett. Every member of class eight made an average of more than 91. The following also received honorable mention: Kathleen McClure, George Caldwell, Esther Tarkington, Bertha Brown, Pauline Halton, Mangum Harrell, Vista Garrett and Robbie Clouse. The prizes were all given by Mrs. Harrell.

The first evening of the commencement was devoted to the rendition of an operatta by the children. A large crowd assembled on the lawn in front of the Home and witnessed the play. The hearty applause given the children as they sang and played was but a slight indication of the delight of all those present. No Methodist Protestant could have witnessed these exercises without thanking a kind Heavenly Father for such an institution as this, and for the great privilege of helping to support and maintain it. I question if there is an institution of like character that is so well managed. My observation of the management of the Home leads me to say that few, very few, private homes can boast of children as well-behaved as our children here. Most of them are members of the church, and attend Sunday-school and church services with great regularity; not simply because they are made to do so, but because they want to do so. If all our Methodist Protestants, north and south, east and west, could spend a few days at the Home Brother Garrett would never have to ask for a dollar towards its support; the money would come in streams without solicitation, and it would come as an expression of love and gratitude to our Heavenly Father for such a place to which the homeless, friendless children may come and be cared for, and trained and fitted for the duties and responsibilities of life. Happy, thrice happy, ought that church to be that finds itself engaged in such a pleasant task. Geo. R. Brown.

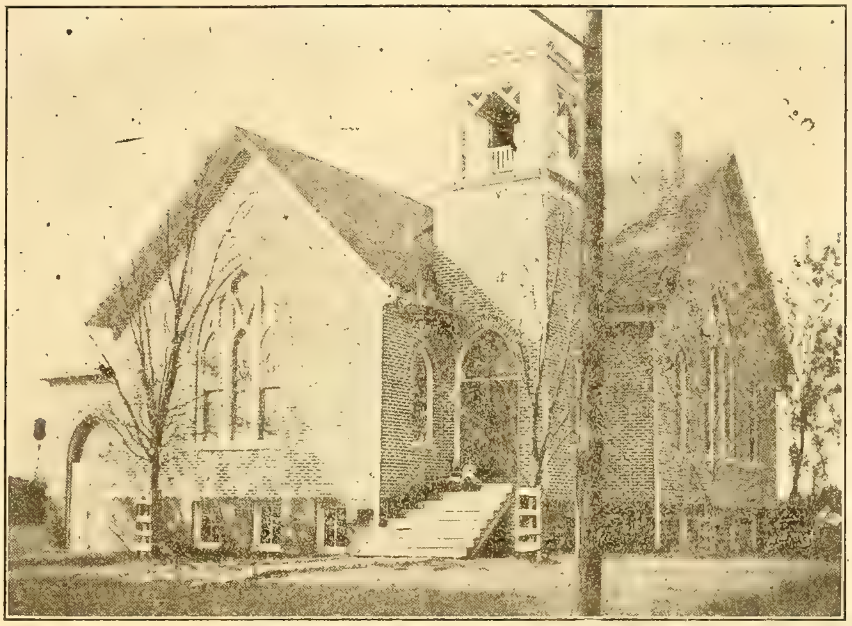
—Bro. Harris points out the difference between joining the Masonic order and joining the church. A man considers it a high privilege to join the Masonic order. It is a select company that he is to enter, and he understands that his application for membership has been acted on deliberately and that he has been accepted by a vote taken by ballot and we believe that the order requires a unanimous vote to elect to membership. But when one joins the church, he feels that he ought not only to be acceptable to those already members, but that he ought to be a real Christian and acceptable to God. If after he joins the church he were asked whether he is a church member, he would not say he hopes so, but he would say yes, and, maybe, "Yes, sir!" When he says modestly, he "hopes so," to the question whether he is a Christian, he is thinking of God's infallible judgment of his character—not of his mere formal relationship to his fellowmen. Some of the methods used to induce people to confess their need of Christ and some of the ways prescribed for confessing Christ may well be scrutinized, but earnest Christian workers feel that no means that promises to reach the desired end should be untried, that they may "by all means save some."



WEST END M. P. CHURCH, GREENSBORO.

DULINS.—This church was visited by the editor last Sunday for the first time. It is on Mocksville Ct., a few miles from Cornatzer, which is a station on the Southern railway from Winston to Charlotte. We were met at the station by our young brother, J. Walker Jones, who is a son of Brother W. H. Jones, one of the Herald's fast friends and one of the best supporters of his church until the time of his death. The son has taken up the responsibilities the father laid down. After a brief visit at the home of Bro. Jones where we met a number of other Joneses including his mother, sister, wife, children, two uncles and a cousin, we all proceeded to the church. We found a rather large building in a pleasant location. We met a number of people with more names than we can now recall. They use sun time there, and the service began at 12 o'clock by legal time. There was some uncertainty as to there being service at all that day there (the people knowing that the pastor was sick), and the congregation was smaller than usual, we were told. We had the support of a goodly number of young people in the song service, with a young lady at the organ. The people were very attentive to our message.

We were told that this church was organized about thirty years ago by Rev. S. W. Coe while he was pastor of Mocksville Ct. The people impressed us as being intelligent and capable, and a pastor who goes to Mocksville may feel that he has at Dulin's a force as well as a field.

They have their Sunday school in the afternoon.

The pastor, Rev. T. F. McCulloch, had intended to protract this meeting, but being unwell and his engaged help failing to come, there was nothing that could be done but to postpone the meeting. The pastor has had an attack of malarial fever, but is now convalescent.

The face of the country about Dulins' is somewhat rugged, and many of the farmers use mules in preference to horses.

—An Enfield lady who is much interested in the progress of our church writes: "I wish all the ministers would write more about their work. It is interesting to those who read their church paper. It makes the members take more interest to know their leader is wide awake spiritually, which is the most important."

—The federal court building in Chicago was partially wrecked, four persons killed and about 75 others injured, by a bomb yesterday. Suspicion is directed to the I. W. W.s, some of whose leaders were tried and convicted there recently.

—Many gratifying reports of meetings held appear in our columns from week to week. We hope our ingathering this year will total well. But we ought to be satisfied with nothing less than all we can do.

A BIG DIFFERENCE.

There is much stress laid on the act of confessing Christ in these days. It is frequently urged upon people as though He were some fault of theirs or some disgrace. Sometimes and not infrequently the congregation is called to prayer and asked to pray very earnestly, and while they are down the sinners are asked, if any one wants to confess Christ, to hold up his hand! Perhaps five or six hands will go up and the preacher locates them and sometimes recognizes them before they get out of church and induces them to join the church. When one asks them afterward if they are Christians they say they hope so.

When one joins the Masons, he doesn't sneak in while all the members have their eyes shut. He must submit to every part of the ceremony and nothing is left out. The initiation fee precedes his coming and all Masons know of his desire to join. After he joins you never hear him giving an equivocal answer as to his membership. Ask him if he is a Mason, he answers immediately, yes, sir. I'm a Mason and am made to do whatever Masonry requires. There may be twenty-five or more degrees above him, but he is not ashamed of his degree. He stands for a man and fills a man's place and if he can't do that the others help him. If he can and won't, then he is disposed of as far as the lodge is concerned. Isn't there a big difference?

When Masons are associated together a little while they know one another and usually trust one another and protect one another. Christians(?) often remain strangers for years and frequently instead of declaring themselves Christians (which the word confess means) they confess "with shame" the terrible disgrace. If Christianity were not the very greatest force in the world and if the church were not the greatest organization, it would have failed long ago.

Masonry has no boss, no board of directors, no dictator, no classes, no caste, no shifting of responsibility. What a church we would have if to her present greatness these characteristics could be added.

OBSERVATIONS OF MILITARY LIFE.

To the Readers of the Herald:—

Through the courtesy of our genial editor I am permitted to give you a few more observations of camp life. I have been in military life seven weeks and during this time I have observed many things, of which I will mention only a few in this communication. I have written of the location, size and nature of Camp Greenleaf in my former communication, so I will endeavor to mention some phases of camp life.

The first thing a man experiences upon entering a military training camp is law and order. From the time he steps from the train that brought him from the pursuits of civil life he is under military discipline and rule. Almost every move by each individual in military life is directed by military authority. Everything is done in order, which implies that it is done in the proper manner and at the proper time. Each man is allowed certain privileges at certain times, however, and every activity of the soldier has been planned for him proportionately, giving him a certain amount of work, exercise, amusement and pleasure, in order that he may become or be made a well rounded soldier of the United States.

While the men in the training camp are subjected to a well regulated form of discipline and order, and are developed into strong men of valor, their religious condition and spiritual welfare is by no means neglected. There is the chaplain of the camp and the staff of Y. M. C. A. and K. of C. workers who administer to the spiritual needs of the men in khaki. Camp Greenleaf has several Y. M. C. A. buildings and tents where Sunday school and preaching services are conducted every Sunday, and preaching services on Wednesday nights.

It has been the writer's pleasure to attend Sunday school and preaching nearly every Sunday and during the week, when not on duty, since coming to camp. You will perhaps be interested in the manner or form in which the Sunday school and preaching services are conducted. The Sunday school begins at 9:15 A. M. and closes at 10 A. M. It is conducted by the Y. M. C. A. religious secretary, and the men are assembled into groups and the lesson is taught by Y. M. C. A. men. Union lesson sheets, published by the American Sunday School Union, are used, containing the regular lesson prepared by the International S. S. committee. The hymn book used is called "Songs for the Army and Navy," prepared by the National Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, and contains many of the songs that are in the Methodist Protestant Hymnal. One peculiar thing I have observed about the singing is, almost every song that is sung the leader will omit the third stanza. I cannot approve of the manner in which a great majority of music directors in Sunday schools completely ignore the third stanza of a song, and thereby leave off, in many instances, the leading truth of the hymn.

The preaching services are held at 10 A. M. and 7:30 P. M. on Sundays, and 8 P. M. on Wednesdays. The religious secretary of the Y. M. C. A. usually delivers the sermon, and occasionally a visiting speaker is secured. It was my pleasure to hear a North Carolinian speak here a few weeks ago, Rev. D. E. Earnhardt, former pastor of the M. E. Church at Graham, N. C. I was especially glad to hear this minister because of the personal acquaintance I have with him. He is engaged in Y. M. C. A. work at Camp Forest, Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

My communication has become quite lengthy so I must stop. If this escapes the waste basket, I will write again later. Personally speaking, I am adapting myself to the ways of military life more each day and have been developed considerably in bodily strength and weight. Have gained ten pounds in weight during the seven weeks in military life.

Wishing the readers of the Herald the very best success in the great work of promulgating the Gospel of Christ and developing the Methodist Protestant Church in North Carolina, C. B. Way.

THE NOBLE FELLOWSHIP OF THE POETS.

A missionary in India was traveling on the railroad. In the same coach was seated a Brahmin gentleman, who entered into conversation with him, perhaps for the sake of practice in English. He asked the Missionary if he read Shakespeare. Upon his acknowledging that he had some slight familiarity with the works of the master, the Brahmin said that he had read not only Shakespeare but Tennyson and Browning and other poets. ''In fact,'' said he, I write a little English poetry myself.''

''Indeed!'' said the missionary.

Perhaps you would be pleased to hear me repeat one of my poems,'' said the Brahmin loftily.

''I should be delighted.''

Whereupon with perfect gravity, dignity, and deep feeling the Brahmin repeated these lines,—

''Come, dearest, come!
I have loved you since last autumn,
I love from my heart's bottom.
Come, dearest, come!''

This, with a strong accent on the last syllables of ''autumn'' and ''bottom'' that made it difficult for the missionary to restrain a smile. What's an accent?—Sel.

LIKE AS A FATHER PITIETH HIS CHILDREN.

This has been a bitter cold day. I went out to make a business call and faced a cutting wind that made the tears come to my eyes. I was warmly clad and had all the comforts that could be asked for, but even then I felt the sting of the cold wind so keenly that I regretted having undertaken to face it.

During this cold weather the cries of distress from the poor are never out of our ears. Abject poverty and utter destitution are beyond description. As I was returning home. I heard the voice of a beggar in the crowded street and looked to see who was in distress. I saw a man of about forty, whose lower limbs were utterly exposed to the biting wind, and whose upper garments were too ragged to be called garments except by a stretch of the imagination. He was groping his way by means of two long sticks of bamboo, and in his bosom he was carrying a tiny baby.

I had with me no means of helping him but as I came along I prayed that God would have mercy on the poor and, in his own way, help them.

Only a few minutes after I reached home I heard the voice of a beggar passing by our door, his pathetic wailing rending the air. I went to the door to see who it was, and found it was the same man whom I had wanted to help, so I had the cook bring him into the house. You would smile to know what wonders of transformation quickly changed a warm petticoat into a pair of trousers, and the great convenience of a woman's having large enough feet so that a pair of half-worn shoes could be made use of by this barefoot man.

While the tailors (?) were doing their work of cutting and fitting, the beggar was given some wholesome, warm food which, with touching love, he attempted to share with his three-months-old son, resting in his bosom. Though the food was unsuitable, he would not take it without seeking to relieve the hunger of the little one

While waiting for the evolution of a petticoat into the needed trousers he told us, in answer to questions, that his wife was also blind and they lived in a small hut—a mat shed probably not more than six by seven feet. They had another child.

We asked him if he would gove away his baby, for the prospects were that the child would certainly not live through the exposure of winter. He said he could not give him up, and with tenderness in voice and touch that was a fine commentary on fatherly love he soothed the hungry, weary child to rest. Several times he was asked if he would not give the baby to some one who had means to take good care of it, but his invariable answer, given without the slightest hesitation, was, "No, I cannot give him up."

If you then, being a beggar, blind, destitute beyond description, and withal a heathen man, know how thus to love your child, how much more shall your Heavenly Father abundantly love his helpless children?

Among all the beautiful demonstrations of love seen in earthly parents, I have never seen an example that more deeply imprssed upon my heart the text, "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him." If this poor man, whose starved soul was even more pitiable and destitute than his body, had such love for his child, what riches of blessing are potential in such lives when won to the service of God! My heart has sunk under the terrible depression of this people, and the question has often sprung to my lips, "What can God do for these utterly hopeless conditions?" In this incident I have the answer: beauty of character, perfected praise, fullness of glory are possible, even in such lives. The only thing they ask is the knowledge of the Saviour.—Woman's Missionary Friend.

A PRE-METHODIST HEROINE.

Susanna Wesley, the mother of the founder of Methodism, was not only a rare exponent of the "larger motherhood," but she was also a heroine and a saint. Well born and well educated, married at the age of nineteen, we are told that she was "very pretty and retained her symmetry of figure and good looks to old age, although she was the mother of nineteen children. Only ten of this number grew to years of maturity however, and every one of them was a distinct personality. The Rev. Samuel Wesley, a man of wide learning and marked literary gifts (owing, perhaps, to his strain of Irish blood), was possessed of a "hot-headed love of engaging in small controversies," which may have been the reason he never rose to eminence in the church. But while he struggled all his useful life with insufficient means, he was most fortunate in having as his life companion a woman of Susanna Wesley's caliber.

For nearly forty years the Wesley family called Epworth parish their home. It was a parish of about two thousand souls, and something of the degree of intelligence prevailing in the parish may be inferred from this incident handed down by John Wesley: Visiting a parishioner on his dying bed a man who had never missed going to church in forty years, Mr. Wesley said, "Thomas, where do you think your soul will go?"

"Soul! Soul!" said Thomas.

"Yes," said Mr. Wesley, "do you not know what your soul is?"

"Surely," said Thomas; "it is a little bone in the back that lives longer than the body.'

As the parish schools were of very low grade Mrs. Wesley started a family school which she kept up for twenty years, six hours a day, herself the capable teacher; thus laying deep and broad foundations for useful lives. Spiritual and secular training went hand in hand, and her children had reason to call her blessed, for she not only trained them for this life, but for the life to come. In addition to the regular school lessons Mrs. Wesley held intimate private converse with each child on the higher things of life, taking them in turn day by day. This careful seed-sowing bore abundant fruit in after years. Susanna Wesley thus methodically ordering and training her gifted brood, showed herself a true "Pre-Methodist."

In many ways stands revealed the heroic character of this noble woman. With serene composure she bore with restrictions of ill health, small means, uncongenial surroundings and sorrows many from losses of children and friends. But a test arose in which she was called to brave the opposition of her husband, who was supposed to be her spiritual mentor. During his absence of several months in London the church services were left in the care of the curate, a man of narrow mind and small wisdom as a spiritual guide. The attendance upon the services fell off, and Mrs. Wesley, concerned for the souls of her own little flock, began giving increased attention to their spiritual needs. Sunday evenings she gathered her children and servants about her for readings, prayers, and conversation on the heavenly life. The servants told their friends, and soon neighbors asked that they might attend the meetings and the attendance rose to forty, and finally to two hundred! She read to them the best sermons she could find and talked to them freely and affectionately about their spiritual life.

Mr. Wesley, to whom she dutifully reported, did not approve, deeming it improper for a woman to read a sermon in a public assembly, and suggested that should she continue he desired that she find a man to read the sermon. To this she replied, "I do not think you consider what a people these are. I do not think one man among them could read a sermon without spelling out a good part of it; would that edify the rest?"

But a letter of complaint from the curate, saying that more attended these meetings than came to church, led Mr. Wesley to ask that the meetings be given up at once. To this Mrs. Wesley replied in a wise, convincing and submissive spirit, requiring however a definite command from her husband, that she might not be held responsible for withholding the bread of life from hungry souls; nothing further was heard as to closing the ‘‘Conventicle,’’ as the curate called the meeting. Mrs. Wesley herself named her gathering a ‘‘Society.’’ Was not this the first Methodist Society?

Our Society has honored itself and the memory of a great and good woman by naming two of its institutions for her—the Susanna Wesley Home in Honolulu, and the Susanna Wesley Home for Immigrant Girls in Chicago, Ill.

That Mrs. Wesley was a true Methodist Home Missionary woman, who can question?—M. Van Marter.

CHANGES IN RHODESIA.

The country of Rhodesia has been called the key to Africa. ‘‘But she lay through the ages the home of wild beasts, the battle ground of savages . . . waiting the advent of that race that was to lead her into the fulfillment of her destinies.’’ How did this land become a part of the British Empire and what changes have been wrought in less than twenty-five years?

The history of the country under savage rule is connected with two chiefs, father and son. Ninety years ago Mosilikatze was in Zululand a trusted captain under Chaka, ‘‘the black Napoleon of South Africa.’’ Mosilikatze had successfully executed a command of his chief ‘‘to eat up’’ a neighboring tribe, but had failed to hand over all the cattle taken from the enemy. Learning that his disobedience had been discovered and knowing that the penalty would be death, he gathered together a large band of followers and fled to the northwest, so devastating the country through which he passed that Chaka could not follow him. In his new home his soldiers constantly ‘‘washed their spears in blood’’ by raidinb the more peaceable Basutos and Bechuanas.

The first inland mission of the American Board in Africa was among Mosilikatze's people, not far from Mafeking. About the same time the Boers from the Cape Colony made their ‘‘Great Trek’’ into the Transvaal. Before they were settled Mosilikatze attacked them, killing men, women and children, and driving away large numbers of their cattle. Later one hundred and thirty-five Boers attacked Mosolikatze. After nine days of fighting he saw that his well trained army of ten or twelve thousand, armed with native weapons, was no match for this small company of Europeans with their guns and horses. Mosilikatze and his people fled to the north, not stopping until they were six hundred miles from the white men. He built his royal kraal two hundred and fifty miles south of the Zambezi. and most appropriately named it Bulawayo—the killing place. The ‘‘tree of judgment’’ is still standing from which Mosilikatze and his son Lohengula, during the fifty years of their cruel rule, sent thousands to an awful death.

Hunters and traders occasionally visited Matabelaland; about forty years ago they discovered that in some prehistoric age gold had been mined in many places. At first Lobengula refused to allow prospectors to travel about the country, but his greed for gold finally led him to sign what is known as the Rudd-Rhodes Concession, which gave the holder the privilege of opening up the country, the chief to receive $500 at the beginning of each lunar month. Later permission was given to make a road four hundred miles long through the eastern part of the country and to govern that region. Although making these concessions, Lobengula intended by his own cunning and the power of his warriors to prevent the white man from entering the country.

Mr. Rhodes hastened to England, interested financiers in his plans, the British South Africa Company was formed with a capital of five million dollars and a charter secured from Queen Victoria, defining the privileges and responsibilities of the company and safeguarding the rights of the natives.

April, 1890, an intrepid band of pioneers started from Cape Town for Mashonaland, their destination being seventeen hundred miles distant. Thirty hours by train took them six hundred miles to Kimberley; two months were occupied in making the next seven hundred miles to the Tule, the southern boundary of Lobengula's country. Here a message was received from the chief that he was unable to control his young warriors and could not be responsible for the consequences if the river were crossed. Nothing daunted, the pioneers pushed forward, constantly on their guard lest they should be attacked by the nine thousand savage warriors not far away who had threatened to kill all the white men, but those for whom special tortures were reserved. One day a friendly native said: “O white men, white men. Alas! Alas! you are going to be sacrificed on the spears of Lobengula's warriors, and the white mother will weep for her children.’’ On the morning of September 12, 1890, five months after leaving Cape Town, the goal was reached. The company halted on the top of a ‘‘kopje’’ in what is now the up-to-date city of Salisbury, the Union Jack was unfurled, the chaplain led in prayer, the four hundred men sang ‘‘God save the Queen,’’ and the beneficent rule of Britain was extended in Africa.

To-day it is a journey of three and a half days from Cape Town to Salisbury, traveling most of the way on the Cape to Cairo railway. Three years after the occupation of Salisbury, Bulawayo came into the hands of the British because of the treachery and cruelty of Lobengula. This town is a striking illustration of the ambitious plans of Rhodesia; it was laid out with thirty-six miles of streets, a palatial hotel and large business blocks were erected. Many tourists pass through Bulawayo on their way to the Victoria Falls; the railway journey can be continued into the Belgian Congo, crossing the Zambezi on the highest bridge in the world.

About four thousand miles of highway have been built in Rhodesia, at great expense. The installation of some three thousand miles of telegraph lines was attended with unusual difficulties; many workmen died from malarial fever, natives stole the wire to make bracelets, while elephants knocked down the poles!

How have these changes affected the natives and have they aided or hindered the work of carrying to them the gospel It is to be regretted that the natives are so ready to copy the follies and vices of civilization, but on the whole English rule has greatly benefited the natives and has made mission work possible. Some of the laws made especially for the natives are helpful; the practice of witchcraft is a crime; parents who kill their twin babies are guilty of murder; a girl cannot be legally married by native rites without going before a government official and being asked if she marries the man of her own free will; her father cannot take lobola more than a year before the marriage—this prevents him from selling his daughter to an old man when she is a mere child, or as has sometimes been the case before she is born. Justice miscarries in Rhodesia, as in other parts of the world, but it is not usually the fault of the government. A sentence imposed by a magistrate upon a native for any serious offense cannot be executed until the case has been reviewed by the attorney general. The present attorney general is an activ member of the Presbyterian Church—his wife a granddaughter of Dr. Moffat.

No native can be executed until all the testimony has been submitted to the Governor General of South Africa, and his approval secured; men like Lord Selborne and Viscount Gladstone have recently held this position.—Life and Light for Women.

WHAT SHALL THE PREACHER PREACH.

A minister reported that a member of his congregation said, "I am not going to church or to prayer meeting any more while these war conditions last. Every time I go the thought of the war is pressed upon me in the sermon and in the prayer, and I cannot longer bear the burden which this lays upon me." The experience of this pastor is not exceptional. Ministers are asking themselves, What shall we preach? What messages shall we bring to our people that they may go from the sanctuary girded with strength for life's duties?

There are times when every pastor will feel that he has a special message for his people growing out of present-day conditions. There is perhaps not a United Presbyterian pulpit from which war messages have not already been spoken. There will be other special times or occasions when such messages should be spoken. And we know that our pastors will prove themselves equal to such demands.

We believe also that the feelings and experiences of such members as are voiced above ought not to be disregarded. These are times in which the perfect adaptability of the Gospel to human needs can be fully demonstrated. Philip went down to Samaria and preached Christ unto its people and "there was great joy in that city." The broadest subject to which any one ever applied himself is Jesus Christ and His redemption. There is no want in human life which He is not able to satisfy. He is strength for times of weakness, wisdom in times of perplexity, courage and cheer in times of disheartenment, protection in times of danger. There are promises for every condition in life. There are precepts to direct us at every moment of wavering and uncertainty. There is a crown of life held before us in the Gospel to lure us on to highest and holiest endeavors.

The preaching for the day should ring emphatically true to Jesus Christ. The pastor should preach above all things else to present Christ in His fullness and richness of adaptation to human conditions. Perhaps it is not well to dwell too constantly upon the darkness of the hour or the heaviness of the load which people everywhere are carrying. Let us follow the example of him who said, "I determined to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." The minister who presents Jesus Christ and His Word of promise most fully to his people during these shadowed hours will most fully meet the demand for the preaching needed for the times.—Christian Union Herald.

WOMAN'S LOVE.

It takes a hundred men to make an encampment, but it takes only the influence of one woman to make a home.

I not only admire woman as the most beautiful object ever created, but I reverence her as the redeemed glory of humanity, the sanctuary of all virtues, the pledge of all perfect qualities of heart and head.

It is because women are so much better than men that their faults are considered greater.

The one thing in this world that is considered constant, the only peak that rises above the clouds, the window in which the light burned forever, the one star that darkness cannot quench, is woman's love. It rises to the greatest height, it sinks to the lowest depths, it forgives the most cruel injuries.

A woman's love is the perfume of the heart. This is the real love that subdues the earth; the love that has wrought miracles of art; that gives us music all the way from cradle on to the grand symphony that bears the soul away on wings of fire. A love that is greater than power, sweeter than life, and stronger than death.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

THE JOURNEY.

"Upon a large flat rock, in the midst of a wide, grassy meadow, I seated myself," muses a contributor in the Masonic Tribune. The sun shone out from the blue vaults of heaven and shed warmth and brightness round about. The wild flowers nodded to the whispers of the gentle breeze floating through the air. The insects droning drowsily, with strange melodious sound, lulled the soul to rest. All was peace and quietude. A railway train flashed in the distance, hurrying onwards toward the great city lying beyond. Ah, thought I, how like our life is that swift-moving train. Down the track of life we journey rapidly, and, ere we are aware, the end is reached.

"In infancy the train is made. Our tottering steps are turned in the direction they should go. In childhood the freight is taken on. Our characters are formed and, by the class of freight, our destination fixed. In youth we fill the boilers from the reservoir of learning, to furnish steam to carry us through life.

"And then we start—amid genial words and hearty wishes. The loved ones say: 'Godspeed you.' We're off. At first, with slow and cautious movement we pull out. The track of life stretches before us. How far it ssems!

"The speed increases. We must hasten down the way. Hasten, hasten! is the cry. It's high pressure now; the brain throbs, the blood courses through the veins, the heart beats strong and fast.

"The speed slackens, little by little. We're approaching the end. The brain no longer thinks with clearness; the heart beats slower. We look back over the road we have traveled—how short it seems! The wheels revolve very slow now; the eyes are blurred. A solemn sadness broods around us. Slow, slower; the final stopping place is reached. The death darkens and, with a gurgling murmur, we leave behind the surging throng of humankind.

"Unseen voices call—the voices of loved ones gone before. We go down to the shore of that great sea, that separates the little life from the vast continent of eternity. The way is very dark. Still ringing in our ears sounds the chorus of the loved ones. 'Coming, coming, we are coming,' we reply.

"We're on the swelling flood. Louder and more clear the notes of heavenly music burst upon our soul. The headlands of the celestial shore loom before us. The past is one forever; a new life is opened unto us."—Selected.

NOT TAKING ORDERS.

An exchange strikingly relates the following interview between a layman and a minister:

"Doctor, I heard you preach last Sabbath. I was greatly moved by your sermon. But, if you will permit me, I would like to offer this criticism: I am a business man at the head of a large concern. We send out many salesmen. If one of my salesmen went into a prospective customer's place of business, talked as convincingly for an hour as you did last Sabbath about the fine qualities of our goods, and then walked out without trying to get an order, we would discharge him."

And the minister, after relating the incident, added:

"I was rebuked. The layman was right. I was pleading for a verdict. I sought no announcement of it. I was selling goods. I did not try to get an order."

The rebuke was, of course, due. The marked lack in some sermons is the absence of appeal for immediate results. The effort to please, to interest, to inform is apparent; but to seek for and expect the sermon to come back in strengthened purpose and renewed consecration is quite beyond the intent or hope of many preachers.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

CONCERNING THAT ACRE OF LAND.

At a meeting of the Trustees of the Children's Home, held during the Preachers' Summer Conference, which was participated in by the preachers present, a resolution was unanimously adopted to request every station or charge in our Conference to contribute an amount equal to the cost of one acre of land recently purchased for the Home, which is $146.00.

The undersigned were appointed to communicate with the pastors not present at the meeting, and request their co-operation. We are a little late in getting out this letter, but we have felt that the letter might not be necessary at all, and we think now every pastor is deeply interested and will raise the amount before Conference, but we have decided to call on them to make a special effort to raise the amount during the month of September, and have the money in the hands of the Treasurer by October 10th, in order that we may have our entire holding clear of debt when Conference convenes. A number of charges have made the pledge and paid in the money, and if all will do it, bigger and more important things can be planned for next year.

It is the plan to have a permanent record of some kind placed in the Library of the Home showing what each church does toward raising this fund, and we know there is not a charge in the North Carolina Conference that wants to be left out of this permanent record. If we will stop and think of the great good being accomplished for humanity at this institution, we will be willing and glad to contribute what we can to continue the good work and enlarge its usefulness. Respectfully,

A. M. Rankin,
George T. Penny,
J. M. Millikan.

In telling about the good things last week I failed to tell that Mr. Chas. Hammer, St. Paul, sent two boxes chocolate bars which have been much enjoyed.

It was our pleasure to meet the Fairfield, Guilford congregation, last Sunday. We were profoundly impressed with the attention these good people are giving their cemetery. They are not allowing weeds, briars and bushes to grow, but are beautifying the grounds, which shows their love and respect for the dead. (Here rest the remains of the Rev. Alson Gray, one of our greatest pioneer preachers.) All helped increase our belief that we would have a splendid offering towards Guilford's share of an acre of our farm. We were not disappointed. In a few minutes they had paid $53.34 and $11.00 in pledges.

It was the beginning of their special meeting and our heart's desire is that the church may be greatly revived and strengthened.

There is one church that makes a monthly offering to the Home and then gives every fifth Sunday too; it is Lebanon, Lebanon. It was our pleasure to occupy the 8 o'clock hour. They said they are already looking after their share of the acre and wanted just a freewill offering for maintenance. The offering was $9.65. It is with great pleasure we visit Lebanon.

We are glad to report part of an acre paid for by Yadkin College, Guilford and Haw River Cts. Who will be the next to send in for their acre? We must pay for this farm by Nov. 21st. Surely our farmer friends will give us the price of 50 lbs. of priming leaves from their tobacco crop this year. And I am sure our merchants, mechanics, lawyers, doctors, and all the rest will give us a good lift on paying for our splendid farm. Thanks. Yours truly,

REPORT OF CONFERENCE TREASURER

Receipts on Annual Conference Budget.

Burlington, $109.25; Haw River, $25; Yadkin College, $86.94; Ivy, $3; Halifax, $161.50; Henderson, $100; Welch Memorial, $22; Guilford, $13; Asheboro, $25; Uwharrie, $31; Greensville, $25; Asheville, $26; Stanley, $6.60; Granville, $40; Mebane, $15; High Point, $115; Siler City, $10; Fallston, $40.72; Rockingham, $11.08; Charlotte, $17.50; Saxapahaw, $20.42; Alamance, $35; Why Not, $25.33; Reidsville, $39.67; Concord, $75; Graham and Haw River, $25; Davidson, $32; Spring Church, $49.25; Mt. Hermon, $65; Cleveland, $17; Mecklenburg, $12.64; Midland, $41.35; Lebanon, $16; Anderson, $16.46; Pinnacle and Mt. Zion, $9; Greensboro, $156.50; Oak Ridge, $43.20; Tabernacle, $85. Total, $1,647.61.

This is an encouraging total from two standpoints: First, it shows a gain over last year for the same period of nearly $600; second, it shows that last year, for the same period, 31 charges had made payments, while this year there are 38—an indication that the budget system is growing in favor.

Were it not for the heavier demands that we have had to meet this year, there would be a nice balance to our credit. As it is, we have just one penny. Besides keeping our president paid and meeting other expenses that have arisen during the year, we have sent $275 to the Board of Church Extension and expect another call from Bro. Wills any day. Last year no payments were made to this board till Conference. Unless sufficient money is received on the budget, the Board of Church Extension will have to borrow in order to meet its obligations.

This of course is not meant to be an itemized statement. It only aims to set forth, in a general way, our financial status. We now have ONE PENNY to our credit.

CONFERENCE GUILD.

The constitution and by-laws of the Guild are in the hands of the executive committee and are being placed in many of our churches. In brief the object of the Guild is to keep in repairs (and furnish when necessary) the President's Parsonage. In every church in the conference we want a society which is to consist of a local treasurer and the members of the Guild. Dues are 50 cents a year and should be sent to Mrs. George R. Brown (state treasurer), Main St., High Point, N. C. The pastors of the different charges are to appoint one lady in each church to take up this work.

PRESIDENT'S LETTER.

NOVEMBER TENTH.

Let's make November the tenth pay up day; the day upon which all claims of the church shall be fully met. It may be done on every charge if pastor and people are willing to do it Will you begin now to plan for this?

A WORTHY GOAL—

Every cent of every claim paid by every charge. An HONOR ROLL with every church upon it. YOU can put your church, on it, my brother. Will you do it? Let's do it by TENTH DAY OF NOVEMBER.

SOME GOOD THINGS FROM PASTORS' THIRD QUARTERLY REPORTS—

Bro. Atlas Ridge writes that he has had 82 professions and 37 accessions; that Stallings Church on Mecklenburg has paid every cent of all claims up to date and more.

Bro. Gerringer writes that the net gain in membership up to date is 24 with more to join. That the Reidsville church has paid every cent of every claim up to date.

Brother Morgan writes that he has had 45 professions and 23 accessions in four revivals, the net gain to date is forty.

Bro. W. F. Kennett writes that finances are nearer over the top at the end of the third quarter this than last year. Offering at children's day was about twice the Amt. raised last year.

Bro. Taylor writes that the contract for improvement on Sunday school rooms has been let, pastor's salary paid up to date.

Bro. Cecil writes that since last report have had 29 professions and 31 accessions with several subscribers to the Herald, that Yadkin College charge will pay for an acre of ground for the Children's Home.

Bro. Lindley reports 19 professions during the past quarter.

Bro. Paul S. Kennett writes that the windows have been bought for Hope church and will be put in at once; also the belfry of the church is to be finished at once. About 60 per cent. of total assessments on the charge have been paid.

MORE PRAYING—

Unquestionably we need to pray more. There are many burdens lifted by prayer, many sorrows soothed by prayer, many doubts dissolved by prayer; labors are often lightened by prayer; hopes grow brighter or fears lighter, love stronger and God becomes more real through prayer. Have you prayed today? Did you pray with your family in the beginning of the duties of the day? Do you pray that the tempter shall not have dominion over your soul and the souls of your loved ones?

Much is wrought by prayer by those who pray; but how many are there in the church who never pray; never give thanks, never ask for pardon for past offenses nor for power to keep them from future ones. Fires on the family altar have died out in some homes. How about yours? I fear from investigations which I have made this year that not half, no, not one third of the heads of families ever pray with their children. DO YOU?

IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—

Are you in need of more efficient Sunday school teachers in your school? Do you want to know how to get them? Train them. They are like other things worth while, cannot be picked up without preparation. An orchard must be grown; all of us know this; but some people seem to think they can have fine Sunday school teachers in their schools without ever giving a thought to their preparation. We do have good ones in many schools whom the school had nothing to do with producing, but I am urging that we have enough for all needs by training them. Organize a teacher training class in your school. Get the books from Secretary A. G. Dixon, elect the best teacher in your school to teach the class, and in the proper time you will have your school fully supplied with teachers.

HOW ABOUT THAT RALLY DAY?—

Has your school decided to hold one? If not, it is now time to get ready. Order the literature and arrange to hold the service. It will do your school good and it will aid the Board of Young People's Work very materially.

LITTLETON CHARGE, Rev. W. E. Swain, Pastor.

This charge consists of five churches; three are in Halifax county and two in Warren: Littleton and Vaughn churches are in Warren county.

The third quarterly conference was held at Littleton on Saturday; all the churches were represented. I visited Hawkin's, Weaver's, Corinth, and Littleton churches; rain prevented our getting to Vaughn.

Bro. Swain had just closed a good revival at Weaver's where there had been a great number of professions and conversions, the meeting at Corinth is being conducted this week. There were very good congregations at the churches visited on Sunday and the people seemed interested in what was said to them. But in this part of the country the Sunday schools suffer greatly from the habit of many of the people who go from place to place, attending the revival meetings and the singings, not seeming to feel very keenly the sense of responsibility for the success of the Sunday schools.

This charge has not been paying the pastor either monthly or quarterly, and according to the reports made at the quarterly conference has paid but little for the general claims of the church, but Brother Swain is expecting them all to be fully met.

Weaver's has just purchased an additional acre of ground to be used for hitching purposes, and Hawkin's Church has been recently covered, but both Hawkins and Weaver's are rather antiquated and should be replaced by new and modern buildings.

I was deeply impressed by the great number of young people present at Weaver's and feel that there is a fine opportunity for our church here, but there is great need of leadership. What a pity that we do not have a central supply that could be distributed wherever needed and thereby build up the church in these weak places.

R. M. Andrews.

PASTORS, PLEASE READ

The new pastor's report blanks and the delegate's credentials authorized by the last Annual Conference have been printed and are ready to be sent out. I am waiting to get hold of a suitable envelope in which to send them before mailing out the blanks. It will be ten days or two weeks before I can get the envelopes. In the meantime do not send me the name of your delegate, but wait for the postal card I have had printed. It will help me greatly to have the uniform card, and you will save yourself that amount of postage. But I shall appreciate it if, when you get the card, you will fill it out promptly and mail to me. All third quarterly conferences should be held by this time, and there ought to be no delay in making up the complete list of delegates.

I am at work on the Journal for the 1918 session. I shall appreciate it if you will make any suggestions for its improvement that may occur to you. You cannot do me a greater favor than to call my attention any errors of fact or omissions that may have crept into the Journal to date; it is no small task to get together the matter that goes into the Journal from year to year. It is my ambition, so long as I may have that task, to do it the best of my ability. But I must have your help, and I am sure you will give it.

C. W. Bates, Secretary.

THOSE RALLY DAY PROGRAMS.

They are here in the office in abundance. If you order at once your order will be among the first. By the way, our boys on the field are giving us lessons in being in the front lines.

It is necessary for every wide-awake superintendent to hold some kind of an inspirational service to get his forces together again after the heat has scattered the grown-ups and school vacation days the children. This program is gotten up for the purpose of helping him in the best possible way. The children will enjoy rendering the program and the older people always come to hear the children. Then when he has his school together again he can put before them his plans and hopes for the future and suggest the changes that he desires made to keep from falling into a rut or a haphazard way of doing things.

To those schools that held Rally Day services and ordered the programs I am duplicating the order this year. If you ordered last year and have not received your order by the time you see this in the paper, send your order again, for something has happened to your order since it left the office. To those who did not order—and they are by far the largest number—I am sending samples. Let me have your order if you receive the sample or if you do not, for if you do not it is lost in the mail. Have the envelopes for the collection this year also. Yours for a good Rally Day Service.

Mrs. A. G. Dixon.

I SAID TO MY HEART.

I said to my heart, "Be still!
If the waters are deep to-day,
It is God's will;
And He who ruleth the wind and the tide
Will bear thee safe to the other side."

I said to my heart, "Be still!
If the furnace is hot to-day,
It is God's will;
And ever His way from the years of old,
In the heart of the furnace to try His gold."

I said to my heart, "Be still!
If the road seems long today.
It is God's will
That every patient, enduring soul
Shall reach some day the utmost goal."

And my heart was still—as a babe at rest
In the velvet folds of the mother's breast,
And hears no sound, and has no choice,
But the sweet love-song of the mother's voice.

Shady Grove Church.—Bro. Millaway filled his regular appointment last second Sunday and preached a most impressive sermon, the leading thought being the power of prayer. He explaained to us how we should pray, not that we should be seen by men but in secret, that our Father in heaven may reward us openly.

On account of the protracted meeting at Moriah M. P. church there were not any services at this place the fourth Sunday in August, this being the custom of the two churches.

There will be preaching at this place the second Sunday in Sept. at 11 A. M., Sunday school at 10 A. M. Reporter.

Friendship, Yadkin Collyge Ct.—Death entered our church Aug. 21 and claimed for its own Mr. John A. Hartley. Bro. Hartley has been living between life and death for a long while and his death brings sorrow to our hearts. Bro. Hartley for a long time was class leader and always present at church when at home and able to come. He leaves a wife and eight children and other relatives and a host of friends. His funeral was conducted by Rev. W. T. Totten, and his pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil, and his body laid to rest in Friendship cemetery. May God bind up the broken hearts of his loved ones, and may they weep not as those that have no hope. One by one God is gathering his children home.

Reporter.

Weaverville, Buncombe Ct.—Sun., Aug. 25, was a good day for our S. S. We held our chuldren's day service; the children all did their parts real well. We have a promising class of boys and girls and hope that these services will be stepping stones to greater things. Our collection was $5.50. It was a great pleasure to all present to have Mr. Chatman and Mr. Johnson from S. C. to sing for us, but we were very sorry that our pastor, Rev. H. F. Fogleman, could not be with us: we missed him so much. He has not been able for service for nearly two weeks: he had a very serious operation on his throat that has kept him indoors, but we trust he will soon be able to be out with us again. He has been so much to the work since he has been with us. We were glad of having the privilege of hearing our former pastor, Rev. T. E. Martin, preach again. He holds a warm place in many hearts in N. C. Reporter.

Oak Ridge Church.—On account of bad health I have been away all the summer so of course I have not sent in any report.

Our revival meeting closed Aug. 25th. We had a union meeting, the M. E. and M. P. churches united and held the meeting in our church.

Bro. Gerringer assisted Bros. Ogburn and Lindley. The sermons from each of them were grand, every one present enjoyed them so much.

We were indeed glad to have Bro. Gerringer back with us, for we will never forget what he did for us in our distress over our church being burned and are always glad when he can visit us, for our church and community love him dearly.

We Had good meeting and hope our church and S. S. will make a greater progress than ever before.

We are sory to tell you one of our most faithful church members, Bro. Albert Clark, passed away Wed. P. M. at 7 o'clock. He was buried at the O. R. cemetery Friday A. M. at eleven o'clock. We will miss him so much. The family has our deepest sympathy.

High Point.—The Sabbath school held its annual picnic last Thursday evening at Hayworth's Mineral Spring, 3 miles from town. The children were taken out about 4 o'clock, grown-ups following later, and a delicious and abundant supper was spread on improvised tables. It was a most pleasant occasion indeed for the whole school.

Dr. Brown held an impressive communion service last Sunday morning, in which a large number of the members of the church, and notably young people, participated. Just prior to the communion service, an interesting and delightful feature was the baptism of Julia Elizabeth, the sweet little baby daughter of Dr. and Mrs. S. S, Coe. A number of relatives and friends were present to witnes this beautiful and solemn service.

Our special meeting will begin next Sunday morning and continue two weeks. Dr. Brown announces that he will be assisted by Dr. L. A. Bennett, a noted evangelist of Baltimore, who will arrive here Saturday evening, and occupy the pulpit Sunday morning. The coming of this able divine is eagerly awaited by the congregation, and many prayers are ascending for a gracious harvest of souls into the kingdom. Prayer meetings at different homes are being held each evening this week.

At the recent quarterly conference, Mr. J. H. Pritchard was announced as delegate to the annual conference in Concord next November.

The Ladies' Aid Society held their monthly meeting at the Children's Home Monday evening at 8 o'clock. The members drove out in automobiles and after the adjournment of the meeting, Supt. and Mrs. H. A. Garrett served the most delicious watermelons we have had the pleasure of sampling this summer. They were grown on the farm by the boys, and we would advise them not to let the public into the secret of the whereabouts of that patch of juicy Kleckley's Sweets. We always greatly enjoy a visit to the Home, and this ocasion proved unusually pleasant. The front window of the Home bears a service flag with one star for Leroy Sykes, who is now on the trip overseas. The boys at the Home are very busy and happy preparing for a large wheat crop next year, while the girls are getting ready for school again.

Mrs. Armacost, of Westminster, Md., and two small sons are the guests of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Geo. R. Brown, at the parsonage. Another guest in this home is the young wife of the elder son, Lieut. Geo. R. Brown Jr., who is with the American forces in France.

A number of the young people of our church are preparing to enter college within the next few weeks; Miss Margaret Rankin will go to Western Maryland College, Miss Juanita Moffitt, to Salem College, Messrs. Wyatt Pickens, Lewis Teague, and Klein Pickett to the State University, and Earl Teague will enter A. and E. College at Raleigh. Richard Reitzel will return to Va. Polytechnic Institute.

Miss Helen Brown has gone to Ga. to visit her uncle and other relatives. She will be a member of the Faculty of the city schools, which open Sept. 16th.

Mrs. R. T. Pickens and little daughter have returned from a visit to her sister, Mrs. Frank Armfield of Concord.

Mrs. Minnie B. Harrell is spending a few weeks at Moore's Springs.

Miss Carrie Stout will teach at Roanoke Rapids, N. C., the coming session. We regret to lose her from the congregation and choir, of which she is such an able member.

CHILDREN'S CORNER

WHY THE CATBIRD LIVED IN THE THORN TREE.

Jimmy Johnson was enjoying the best vacation he had ever had, and the pleasant thing about it was that it was to last all summer. Just as soon as school was over Jimmy had packed up his clothes and left the hot, noisy city to spend the summer with his grandparents, who lived away out in the beautiful, green country. At first he had been a tiny bit lonesome; his playground was too large; he could roam over the big farm at his own leisure; and while he liked it, he also found it lonely to play by himself all the time.

Now Grandmother Johnson had reared eight boys, and she knew all there was to know about them; and when Jimmy came in one morning with a long face she immediately set about to find out what was the matter. "You're not homesick, Jimmy?" she questioned.

"No'm," the boy answered; "I'm not homesick, grandma; grouchy lonesomeness."

"Well," laughed grandma, "we'll have to get away from that. When your father was a little boy he would get lonely at times, and I'd have to help him get rid of old grouchy lonesomeness."

"What in the world did he do, grandma, to pass the time away?" Jimmy queried anxiously.

"What did he do?" the old woman repeated. "Well, in the first place, he was busy part of the time; but when his work was done he would romp and play with his brothers. But your father was different from the other boys, and play didn't satisfy him altogether; he wanted to know things, and his special hobby was birds."

"Birds?" Jimmy repeated. "Why, dad is crazy about birds now; and, by the way, grandma," Jimmy continued in excitement, "dad told me to see if the gray catbirds still build their nests in the thorn tree, and, if they did, to see if I could find out why."

For a moment the woman looked down upon her little grandson in silence. Time seemingly had turned the wheels backward; she saw herself as a young woman, and in the face of her grandson she saw the image of his father when he was a little boy. They had stood in that self-same place together when Jimmy's father had come to her and asked why the catbird built her nest in the thorn tree. Vividly she remembered that she had told him the bird evidently had a reason for so doing and for him to find out. Well did she remember how he had studied to learn the secret; it had taken him days. Suddenly she threw her arms about the little boy, and her old face was wreathed in smiles. "Jimmy," she said softly, "the catbirds are still building their nests in the thorn tree, and there may be a reason. See if you can't find out the secret alone; and, when you go home, you can tell your father."

Jimmy was delighted; he'd have something to do now. For days and days he watched the gray catbirds flutter about the thorn tree; they seemed very happy and contented, and Jimmy could see no reason for their desiring the thorn tree.

But one morning as he sat watching them a peculiar thing happened. He saw a stray cat creep through the yard; she crept about slowly for a few moments, and then up a cedar tree she went, and a moment later Jimmy heard a bird's pitiful cry, and he knew the cat had gotten some mother bird's baby. Nervously he watched the cat ascend and descend the various trees, leaving a wrecked home behind her.

Finally, however, he saw the cat walk beneath the big thorn tree and wag her tail indignantly while she gazed upward, where a number of birds seemingly had assembled for a morning musicale. The temptation was too great for the big cat, and she made a dash for the tree; but no sooner had she struck it than she fell back to earth, shrieking with pain, for the long thorns had stuck her at every turn.

Jimmy didn't wait any longer, but went flying to the house as fast as his legs would carry him. "Oh, grandma!" he exclaimed when he reached the door, "I've learned the secret, and I think the catbirds are about the smartest birds in the world; and if I were a bird, I'd always build my nest in a thorn tree."

And the rest of Jimmy's stay was delightful, for he had become interested in birds, and spent all his leisure moments after that in finding out secrets about them.

FROM PASTORS AND PEOPLE

Mt. Pleasant Circuit.—Our meeting at Mt. Pleasant began the 3rd Sunday in August and closed on the following Sunday. Bro. J. D. Williams was with us at the beginning and did the preaching until Thursday; then he had to leave. I am sorry he could not stay longer. The pastor did the preaching after he left, and I am so glad I continued the meeting. We had good attendance all the way through and the day the meeting closed we had a packed house. Bro. Williams did as good preaching as I ever heard, and his work was appreciated both by pastor and people. We had 20 conversions while Bro. W. was with us and 20 after he left, making 40 in all, and 21 joined the church. This was one of the best meetings I have ever been in, and some of the older ones say the best they have had here in years. The day the meeting closed Bro. Alexander proposed that they show their appreciation of the pastor's efforts in the meeting, and in just a few minutes they made up a purse of $24.00 and presented it to me. I was never more surprised in my life, but never received any thing I appreciate more. I am glad to say that our work is in good shape. Our finances are a little behind, but we are going to try to be out by the time Bro. Andrews suggests. We have raised more than enough to pay for our acre of land. This work is not doing more than it ought to do; but I guess we are an average.

Bro. J. F. McCulloch will fill our appointment at Mt. Pleasant the 3rd Sunday in this month. We are glad to have him visit us, and I am sure the people will be glad to hear him. The pastor will be away at that time helping in a meeting.

A. D. Shelton.

Shiloh, Yadkin College Ct.—How rapidly time is passing! As we begin this report we are reminded that it has been 12 months since we have written a report from our local church, Shiloh. Our silence must not be construed to mean that we have been inactive or indifferent about our Master's work. The inactivity has been on the part of the reporter and not the church, for I do not believe there is a church in the N. C. Conference that is more wide-awake and active in all departments of church work than is this one. This is not said in the spirit of boast but from the viewpoint of a reporter and is said from the fact that when people pull together so systematically and harmoniously and bring about such results, the reporter is due his people to tell it and it is due others to know of it.

To our worthy expresident, Rev. G. W. Holmes, Rev. N. G. Bethea and others who visited our church last year in the interest of the Forward Movement, we would say that your suggestions and plans followed closely by co-operation and hard work on the part of our wide-awake, tireless, and progressive pastor, Rev. C. A. Cecil, was not without result. We paid every cent of every claim last year and increased our budget for this year and the momentum we got last year has easily carried us "up the hill" this year. We say "up the hill" because we already have about $450.00 of our $600.00 budget in hand with splendid crops and the money-crops selling at tiptop prices. We say "momentum of last year" because the weather was so rough (as many country pastors, especially, remember) we did not get to make our every-member canvass or do hardly any work at the first (and important) part of the year, but our people are voluntarily increasing their pledges of last year.

Our special meeting began the third Sunday in August and closed on Wednesday evening. Rev. D. R. Williams was the efficient help. Although a little unwell at the beginning of the meeting, he came full of the Holy Ghost and of power and hardly those whom he told could discern but what he was at his full strength. He opened the services at 11:00 on Sunday, using as a text, "Where art thou?" a very appropriate text to begin a special meeting with. To say that Rev. D. R. Williams preached is enough comment, for every one who has ever heard him knows it could not have been otherwise than good.

We had the utmost confidence in Brother Williams and expected him to come fully charged with the Holy Ghost—in fact, he was our first choice as help, but as a precaution, we did him (as we try to do all our help)—sent him to the home of our spiritual dynamo to spend Saturday night that he might be surcharged with the spiritual current. He spent Saturday night with Bro. W. J. Berrier and family.

We had a splendid meeting. The visible results are 19 conversions with 22 accessions. Some came from other churches by letter. As a slight token of appreciation the church presented Bro. Williams with $25 and Prof. B. F. Sink, who conducted the singing so efficiently, with $10.00.

Brother Williams' instruction to the young converts and the communion service at the close were big features of the meeting.

Bro. Cecil said the communion service was the largest he had ever held and that is saying a good deal as he has been an active pastor for 26 years or longer and has traveled the district for three years as president.

We gladly welcome Mrs. J. A. Byerly who comes by letter from Midway M. E. Church to join our church with her husband.

In conclusion will say that Bro. Williams met our highest expectations and will have a hearty welcome any time he chances to pass this way.

A. H. Evans, Rep.

Yarborough.—Now our reporter is in the service of Uncle Sam, I will write. We have been very busy in this field during the last quarter. We began our special meeting at Yarborough Chapel on the third Sunday in July, Dr. Frank T. Benson of Baltimore was with us and he preached at every service; we consider his preaching to be the best we have ever heard. The church seems to be revived and many souls were saved. There have been eight accessions to the church, others to join later; Prof. T. O. Pender of Mebane, N. C., was with us and led the singing which was enjoyed by all. We are always glad to have Bro. Pender with us in our revival meetings; to know his Christian character makes us appreciate his gospel singing. We are pleased to know that he enjoyed his visit "down in Dixie." We are also glad to learn that Dr. Benson enjoyed his visit to the Pelmetto State; we are very sure that he will not be forgotten soon by those who heard his preaching. There were many who subscribed to the Methodist Protestant.

HARMONY.

We held our special meeting at Harmony the fourth week in July, Rev. R. C. Stubbins of Charlotte, N. C., was with us and he preached to appreciative congregations throughout the week. Bro. Pender led the singing; there were many young people who took part in every song service, which made a good impression. Bro. Stubbins preached with great power, which was very effective; at one service there were twenty-seven people at the altar for prayer. During that service there were about thirty professions of faith; the weather was very rainy most all the week but the attendance was very good.

We have received eleven members, there are possibly others to join. Several gave their names to join the Baptist and M. E. churches.

Special prayer is being offered for our boys who are in U. S. service.

O. B. Williams, Pastor.

Midway, Haw River Circuit.—The special meeting began here the fourth Sunday in July. Rev. and Mrs. A. G. Dixon were with us on Sunday. Bro. Dixon preached at the morning service and Mrs. Dixon at the afternoon service. Glad to have them with us; their messages were greatly appreciated. Rev. L. W. Gerringer did the preaching after Sunday. His messages were clear and forceful. Two new members were added to the church.

MIZPAH.—The special meeting began here first Sunday in August. Bro. J. F. Dixon preached for us Sunday afternoon. Rev. A. D. Shelton came Monday and remained until the close of the meeting. He presents the truth fearlessly. The people heard him gladly. Four new members were added to the church.

The second Sunday in August found us at Fair Grove to begin the special meeting. Rev. J. D. Williams came Monday and did the preaching until Thursday afternoon. Three new members were added to the church.

FRIENDSHIP.—The third Sunday in August the special meeting began here. Monday we were completely rained out. Rev. J. R. Hutton came on Tuesday and did the preaching until the meeting closed. These people were pleased to have Bro. Hutton with them again. One member was added to the church.

The third quarterly conference met at Friendship Sat., Aug. 31st. Regular business was transacted harmoniously. Bro. J. M. Weatherly was declared the delegate elected to represent this charge in the next Annual Conference. Bro. W. H. Chilcutt was elected alternate. We are now trying to pay for some of the orphanage land. Friendship paid $37 yesterday. Mizpah subscribed some on her part. If the other churches do as well as these two, Haw River Ct. will pay for an acre or more.

B. M. Williams.

THE POSTAL CARD.

W. F. Kennett, Editor.

Last week we meant to give the Mebane Girls' Philathhea Class credit for contributing $37 toward clearing our Mebane church of debt. It came out $27. If this was our mistake we regret it. If the mistake was made in the Herald office then—. [Can't tell now whose mistake it was, but as we can't go halvers in it, we'll be generous and take it all, and correct it with pleasure.—Ed.]

CHILDREN'S DAY.

We take pleasure in reporting the most successful children's day service that Hebron has ever held. The children had been trained by Mesdames Albert Nicholson, Wright Kirkpatrick and Julian Jobe. The music was under the direction of Miss Alma McAdams. The Superintendent, A. K. McAdams, called the program. The congregation was large. The children did fine. The offering was $23.22. Is it necessary to say more to indicate that the service was a very successful one? We think not.

THOSE S. S. ROOMS.

We took another step toward S. S. rooms for Hebron. A subscription list was started. The people, many of them at least, are interested. Hebron can do it and many think she will. There is no better community than the Hebron community and the community is susceptible of wonderful development. We hope to steadily go forward.

Mebane, N. C., Sept. 3, 1918.

BURLINGTON.—Yesterday was communion day at our church and a large majority of those present communed. There were 195 in S. S. Our school has not yet gotten over the vacation season but we hope soon to have our usual number back. Since my last report our S. S. secretary, Bro. Herbert Wade, has been called to the colors and now this week Bro. Casper Riddle, the Pres. of the Baraca class, is called for limited military service.

In our reporter's letter last week the statement was made that finances were somewhat behind. That was the report made at our quarterly conference but the treasurer now informs us that all bills due have been paid. The deficit a few weeks ago was due to the fact that we missed a few services while our church was undergoing repairs.

There will be a special service at our church next Sunday morning to be known as Educational Day, to bring pressure to bear upon our young people to stay in the high school until they finish. The new superintendent of schools, Prof. Hayworth, will make a short address, and the school board is to be present and as many of the teachers will be present as we can possibly get. I have found that it is poor worth while to stress the matter of our young people going to college so long as they do not stay in the high school to prepare for college. We are hoping for a great day.

J. E. Pritchard.

Monday.

GRAHAM.—Our attendance last Sunday was 124 and the offering $12, which goes to the Children's Home.

The C. E. Societies held a joint meeting Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, with our pastor, Rev. R. S. Troxler, as leader. He gave us an interesting talk on the subject which was enjoyed by all the members and visitors.

Prayer meeting services will be observed as usual on Tuesday evening at eight o'clock and every member is requested to be present. Bro. McPherson will be the leader and the subject "Personal Work."

Announcement was made that the revival services will begin on the fifth Sunday in this month. The pastor will be assisted by Rev. D. R. Williams. Eunice Rich, Rep.

ST. PAUL CHURCH.—Our Sunday school is moving along nicely. Our attendance last Sunday was 128. Collection, $4.90. The Baraca and Philathhea classes are still contesting with much interest. Bro. Garrett and some of the children will be with us next Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. Let everybody come out and enjoy the exercise that the children will render.

We pray that the blessing of the Lord may be upon our pastor, Bro. Bowman, and his people in their effort of saving souls at Fairview.

Bro. Herbert Wade, who was a member of this church, joining little more than five years ago (Mr. and Mrs. Wade and daughter are now members of our church)—Bro. Herbert Wade served as secretary of Sunday school for one year and went off to school; and when he came back he was elected secretary again, which duty he performed until he moved to Burlington carrying his membership with him, at which place he has been president of the Baraca class and secretary of the Sunday school, but who now is in the service of his country training at Wadsworth, Spartanburg, S. C., H. 2, Co. 57, Infantry. It is a call to duty to which every true man in the country will respond with pride and with the consciousness that in doing so he plays his part in vindication of a great cause at whose summons every true heart offers its supreme service. To the memory of the babies of France and Belgium who have been impaled on bayonets and carried off over the shoulders of German soldiers,—that our babies may never be in danger of a like death.

May the blessing of the Lord be with us.

C. E. Wilson, Rep.

HALIFAX.—The meeting at Eden is a thing of history. Would have been reported before now but the press of other work caused the delay. A good revival in the church and several professions. The available material here was worked up mainly in the meeting two years ago. Though there are a number of souls that are yet unsaved. We are still praying that these may come to Christ. Bro. Brown endeared himself to all who heard him by his plain gospel messages. We are all glad down here that he has come among us to stay. We appreciate your work, Dr. Brown.

The next effort was at Union. Here we had the good help of Bro. O'Briant. He did effective work. A number of conversions, one joined there and one at Eden as a result of this meeting. One from the Eden meeting joined the Baptist. The two last days of this meeting the weather cooled down and we could see a difference in the interest and the attendance. In both of these meetings we had the record breaking hot weather. I am talking winter time meetings now and I verily believe that we could do better work. I fully sympathized with Bros. Brown and O'Briant trying to work in such weather. We are glad of the messages given us and want to assure the brethren that the people appreciate very much their good work among us.

We are now in the second week of a glorious revival at Hollister. About thirty professions so far,--a number of renewals. Charlie Tilman and his pianist, Frank Twilley, are with us. Tillman is doing part of the preaching and leading the singing and we are having great crowds. People even from Henderson and the towns in reach are attending the services. These men are doing great work. They are specialists along this line. A full report later.

Bro. Richard Hunter is our delegate to Annual Conference. Work is going nicely. Too much to do to write much now. A number of good things have been coming in like hams and melons but have not the time to report that now. Will later. Thanks, you folks, till I can say more.

Our meeting at Bethesda begins Sunday with two services with Bro. Bates as pulpit help. Individual lunch on the grounds. Come and bring yours. Pray for us in all these efforts. Sincerely, N. G. Bethea.

Brinkleyville, Sept. 2.

Friendship, Fallston Ct.—Our revival meeting began third Sunday in August, and closed fourth Sunday night. We had three services each Sunday. Through the week we had two preaching services each day; one at eleven o'clock in the morning, and the other at eight-forty-five in the evening. We also had a prayer service each morning just before preaching. It was a union meeting and Rev. D. W. Brown, pastor of the M. E. church at Fallston, helped our pastor, Rev. S. M. Needham, do the preaching. They both did good preaching and we had a great meeting. About thirty-five were converted and reclaimed. The churches were also greatly revived. For the afternoon service on fourth Sunday we had a love feast, also a testimonial meeting. Then after receiving the new converts into the churches, the Lord's Supper was administered.

We have organized a union Christian Endeavor Society at Fallston, which meets every Wednesday evening. We hope all the young people will see the importance of attending these meetings and come every time they possibly can. We feel sure they will be benefited by so doing.

Lona Bingham.

Saxapahaw Ct.—Since our last report I feel like we have accomplished something on Saxapahaw charge in and for the interest of the kingdom.

SALEM.

The second Sunday in August was the beginning of our special meeting here. Bro. H. F. Surratt came over Monday and did the preaching the remainder of the week. Bro. Surratt did some good preaching. He shall be held in fond recollections by the Salem people. The meeting resulted in 8 conversions and 4 additions to the church. Also during this week there was $105 in cash raised on the parsonage debt, besides a purse of $19.65 for Bro. Surratt.

ORANGE CHAPEL.

The third Sunday in August and the week following found me at Orange Chapel with Rev. F. C. Lester of the Christian Church as my help. Our people at large were very much pleased with Bro. Lester's preaching and became very much attached to him while there. Our efforts here resulted in 24 conversions and 16 additions to the church and the church greatly revived. Also during the week there was raised $323.14 for the following causes: on parsonage debt, $225.02; on pastor's salary, $66.47; Children's Home, $5; and a purse of $26.65 for Bro. Lester.

Our people at Orange Chapel are really awake. It is very encouraging to the pastor to have this response.

QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

The third quarterly conference met with Saxapahaw church Saturday before the fourth Sunday in August at 2 P. M. All of the churches were represented and the usual business of the conference conducted. Bro. H. G. Parris was declared delegate to Conference and Bro. Graham Crawford alternate. The writer reported paid to date $400.37 on pastor's salary, general interests $76.50 and a total of all money received and paid for all causes during the nine months of the year just passed $1,406.74.

This conference voted to build a barn and dig a well for the parsonage. The pastor greatly needs both. The next quarterly conference will be held at Orange Chapel.

On Sunday following the conference Bro. W. L. Holt was made an active member of Saxapahaw church. We welcome him back to our midst.

CONCORD.

Sunday was a good day for us at Concord. Bros. M. W. Curl and Clyde Rogers united with the church here. Following this service I held the Lord's supper.

J. Clyde Auman.

New Hope, Vance Ct.—Our children's day service held the first Sunday morning in August was a decided success. The children did their part well, the attendance was large, and the offering for foreign missions entirely satisfactory. Nearly everybody present brought their lunch and spent the day. Bro. Powell preached to us in the afternoon, and in his usual good way delivered a most interesting and helpful sermon. This was the beginning of our special meeting. Rev. S. W. Taylor came on Monday and did all of the preaching until the meeting closed on Thursday afternoon. The weather was extremely warm, but not withstanding this he and our pastor were untiring in their efforts to save the lost and we had a gracious meeting.

As a result, the church was revived, there were fourteen conversions and eleven accessions to the church. We think we have never listened to more earnest preaching than that delivered by Bro. Taylor, every one of his sermons was good and helpful and especially did everybody enjoy his splendid talks to the children. The attendance was very good throughout the meeting. Those who did not attend will never know how much they missed. Bro. Taylor has won the love and esteem of the people of this church and community, and we hope to have him come again.

Yesterday was our regular preaching day, and Bro. Powell was with us. After preaching service the sacrament of the Lord's supper was administered. We were glad to see so many partake of this holy ordinance.

Our S. S. is moving along nicely. Attendance good, and all seem interested. Love to the Herald. Clara B. Paschall, Rep.

Sept. 2, 1918.

Orange Ct.—Sunday was our day at Union Grove. An unusually large crowd greeted the pastor. We trust that this good attendance will keep up and that the last part of the conference year will be the best. The third quarterly conference was held on Saturday. The representation was not as good as it could have been. Two of the churches were represented. Bro. Geo. F. Crutchfield was elected delegate to Annual Conference. The fourth quarterly conference will be at Chestnut Ridge, the time to be announced later.

A service flag containing four stars was presented to the church at Union Grove on last Sunday. Our prayers are continually sent to God our Father in behalf of "our boys."

Efland Church has recently voted to give one Sunday's collection of each month to the Orphan's Home. Bro. L. W. Gerringer is to be with us in our special meeting at this place. H. Freo Surratt.

Concord Church.—As Sunday was the first Sunday and our pastor's appointment at Fairview, we did not have any preaching service at the morning hour but at night Bro. Lowdermilk preached a splendid sermon to a very good congsegation.

Mr. Roland Haupt, one of the most faithful young men of our church, has been called into service for "Uncle Sam" and left Sunday for the University of S. C. for training. We shall miss him at all our services, and we shall pray God's richest blessings upon him wherever he may go. Before leaving Mr. Haupt was presented with a Testament, a gift from the Baraca class. This makes 24 stars for our service flag.

Mrs. R. B. Causey is visiting her daughter, Mrs. E. G. Lowdermilk.

The following is the report for the year ending June 30, 1918, of a part of the Sunday schools of Concord. Our school stands next to the top.

The first figures denote the officers and pupils, and the others the amounts of the collection:

First Presbyterian—314, $650; Methodist Protestant—313, $500; Central Methodist—179, $264.32; First Baptist—154, $182; Epworth Methodist—266, $198.11. This is only a part of the schools, we will not try to report them all as it will take up too much space. Reporter.

TABERNACLE CT.—Our third quarterly meeting was held at Moriah on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in August. The business was transacted. Bro. E. M. Witty was elected delegate to the Annual Conference. Finances not discouraging.

Our special meeting began at Moriah on the fourth Sunday in August. Rev. C. L. Whitaker came on Monday and remained till Friday. His preaching was splendid—instructive and moving. Everybody was pleased and deeply impressed with his preaching. Preachers of his type are not found every day. There were thirteen conversions, fifteen accessions, a good revival in the church. G. F. Millaway.

ROSE HILL, PAGELAND CT.—Our Sunday school last Sunday was very good, as well as the collection for the Children's Home.

We now have a service flag in our church with six stars upon it to represent the young men who have enlisted in actual service for "Uncle Sam": George and Jeff Turner, the former having been in France for about a year; Walter, Lee and Raymond Sanders, the latter also being in France; and W. A. Kirkley, who is on a submarine chaser, having crossed the ocean several times already. May God's blessings be upon these young men and may they some day be permitted to come back to us.

Robert Turner was elected teacher for the adult male Bible class.

Thomas W. Turner, son of the late Rev. Jno. H. Turner, was elected as a member of the legislature at the first primary over five other men.

With best wishes for the readers of the Herald. Ex-reporter.

LEBANON CHURCH, LEBANON CT.—Our people enjoyed a rare treat last Sunday night in having a program by the children from the Children's Home. It is indeed remarkable how well versed in the Holy Scriptures these small children are and Miss Bowman does certainly deserve credit for the work she is doing in our Home. O that many fathers and mothers in our church and other churches would teach their children likewise. I have longed to see a diligent study of God's Word in our S. S. (I speak of the local. I cannot speak of the general Sunday schools) for a long time and I am still longing unsatisfied. Too many of our pupils who have been in our S. S. for years know but little Scripture and I do not say it is altogether the S. S. at fault. Home study is needed. Home study will bring the knowledge. That big beautiful family at the home is learning to know God by the daily study of His Word. We enjoyed every minute of their program and were impressed in such a way as nothing else but an innocent child could impress the mind. Personally, I received such an inspiration as perhaps many sermons would not have given. And I do resolve to study the Word more diligently and more prayerfully than in former days.

The hat was passed and received $8.65. Some cash was also handed in to be used on the "land acre" purse. Bro. Suits has not made the canvass yet for our acre of land but he has announced that he expects to begin that next Sunday. This is a very seasonable time to collect as some are beginning to market their tobacco at a handsome price.

Don't forget that our special meeting begins on next Sunday at 11 o'clock. Rev. Mr. Gerringer is pulpit help. Pray, pray earnestly for a great revivaal.

Mrs. J. W. Thacker, Rep.
High Point, N. C., Sept. 3, 1918.

FALLSTON CT.—Before the conference year comes to a close I want just a few words in the church paper.

Now I feel that I have been here long enough to write the truth. I have been waiting to get acquainted and that takes me right around a year.

I could have told you what we were trying to do; but now I will tell you what we have done. First, after settling down in the county we called the first quarterly conference together and made an effort to adopt the "budget system," the "every-member canvass," and "systematic paying." This was all opposed like sixty and all of it fell through. Then I looked very much disappointed to see all this modernized machinery of the "Forward Movement" torn to pieces. And so at the close of the conference a good layman asked President Andrews if the matter could be reconsidered; and without any more speech-making it was all adopted.

And now I am glad to say that all the above is working fine. And I believe that the budget system will work on most any charge if the pastor will let it.

Rev. Mr. Brown, pastor of the M. E. Church, and myself held a union meeting at Lawndale in May that did some good, we hope. About eight or ten church members were reclaimed.

Back early in the spring our people and the M. E. people decided to hold a union meeting in Fallston and demanded that the pastors do the preaching, and so we did it as best we could. And this was a real union meeting. There were thirty-five conversions and reclamations. One joined the Baptist church, one joined the M. E. church and 24 joined the M. P. church. This was a great meeting in every way. The congregations were large,—averaging 400 or more throughout, the eight days. The meeting began the third Sunday in August, and closed the fourth Sunday in August.

On the last day we held an old-fashioned love feast, then received the new members in the church and closed with a union communion service. This was indeed a great time for Fallston.

There is the best spirit between pastor and people that it has ever been my privilege to enjoy. And to my knowledge there is no trouble whatever in the church at this time.

Finances are a little behind, but I have every reason to believe that every claim will be met.

The third quarterly conference has been held. Bro. R. A. Lackey is elected delegate and Bro. T. B. Richard is alternate.

Poundings. There have been no old-fashioned poundings here this year, but there has been almost a continued stream of good things coming in, and we certainly appreciate these gifts, for they mean so much to us.

Now let me ruin all that I have said. I don't know how preachers will live next year unless the salaries are increased as much as 50 per cent., for prices are looking mighty scary.

By our next report I think that we can report every claim paid with a number of other things to our credit.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PRAYER MEETING.

BY REV. PAUL S. KENNETT.

C. E. Topic Sept. 15, The Saloon Power and How to Overthrow It.

Hab. 2: 1-17.

DAILY READINGS.

Sept. 9. Shun the evil. 1 Thess. 5: 22.
Sept. 10. Resist the devil. Jas. 4: 7-10.
Sept. 11. Bind the evil one. Rev. 20: 1-3.
Sept. 12. Rescue the lost. Luke 7: 36-50.
Sept. 13. Educate the people. Prov. 23:17-23.
Sept. 14. Warn the people. 1 Cor. 6: 9-10.

People in North Carolina have stopped arguing about the evil of the saloon. That is admitted and besides it's gone forever from among us. But our nation is not yet entirely free from the evil and so we have the opportunity of doing some work yet.

Things are happening so rapidly one hardly knows how to write. As I write this wartime prohibition has not yet passed the Senate but assurance has come that it will and that soon the country will be free from the legalized traffic for the period of the war. I'm sure before you read these words we will be celebrating that victory, but if not, write to your Senators at once and ask them to work for it.

The National Amendment comes up in our legislature next winter. We feel sure that our state will ratify it but sometimes the sure things are the ones that fail. Now is the time to see to it that our candidates of both parties pledge themselves to vote for the Amendment and make it unanimous in North Carolina.

These two things settled, so far as laws are concerned we will have complete success.But the greatest evil in North Carolina in connection with the liquor traffic is the fact that whiskey is made and sold illegally and people who are church members and pass as good citizens do not make an effort to prevent it. If our citizenship can be aroused to its duty not a "speak easy" could exist for two days. And so here lies our opportunity as Christians and Christian Endeavorers. 1st. To see to it that we do our own duty in our own community. 2nd. To use our influence in getting others to have the courage to do their duty. 3rd. To make the world see that the man who shields evil is as guilty as the one who actually does the dirty work.

ONLY SAFE ON YOUR KNEES.

Principal George Adam Smith tells a tale of how, in his early Alpine-climbing days, he was climbing one of the Swiss Alps on the sheltered side. Though they did not know it, a great wind was blowing, and as they climbed to the topmost crag the guide, who had been leading the way upward, stepped back, as was his wont, that the traveler might have his foot first upon the top. Dr. Smith sprang up to the top of the peak and was almost blown back over the edge by the wind. The guide seized him and brought him down to his knees, crying in his ear: "Down! Here on the summit you are safe only on your knees." So with the heights of our gladness, when life is splendid, and the world is full of glory, we are safe only upon our knees.—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

THE ROAD TO BLIGHTY.

There are two faces—one of a nurse and one of a doctor—that Coningsby Dawson, Lieutenant Canadian Field Artillery, will aways remember. He saw them during the days he spent in a hospital in France. He describes them as follows in Good Housekeeping:

"I arrived about nine on a summer's evening at the Casualty Clearing Station. In something less than an hour I was undressed and on the operating table. You might suppose that when for three interminable years such a stream of tragedy has flowed through a hospital, it would be easy for surgeons and nurses to treat mutilation and death perfunctorily. They don't. They show no emotion. They are even cheerful; but their strained faces tell the story and their hands have an immense compassion.

"Two faces especially loom out. I can always see them by lamplight, when the rest of the ward is hushed and shrouded, stooping over some silent bed. One face is that of the Colonel of the hospital, gray, concerned, pitiful, stern. His eyes seem to have photographed all the suffering which in three years they have witnessed. He's a tall man, but he moves smoothly. Over his uniform he wears a long white operating smock—he never seems to remove it. And he never seems to sleep, for he comes wandering through his Gethsemane all hours of the night to bend over the more serious cases. He seems haunted by a vision of wives, mothers, sweethearts, whose happiness is in his hands. I think of him as a Christ in khaki.

"The other face is of a girl—a sister, I ought to call her. She's the nearest approach to a sculptured Greek goddess I have seen in a living woman. She's very tall, very pale and golden, with wide brows and big gray eyes like Trilby. I wonder what she did before she went to war—for she's gone to war just as truly as any soldier. I'm sure in the peaceful years she must have spent a lot of time in being loved. Perhaps her man was killed out here. Now she's ivory white with overservice and spends all her days in loving. Her eyes have the old frank, innocent look, but they're ringed with being weary. Only her lips hold a touch of color; they have a childish trick of trembling when any one's wound is hurting too much. She is the first touch of home that the stretcher-cases see when they've said gool-bye to the trenches. She moves down the ward; eyes follow her. When she is absent, though others take her place, she leaves a loneliness. If she meant much to men in days gone by, today she means more than ever. Over many dying boys she stoops as the incarnation of the woman whom, had they lived, they would have loved. To all of us, with the basphemy of destroying still upon us, she stands for the divinity of womanhood.

"What sights she sees and what words she hears; yet the pity she brings to her work preserves her sweetness. In the silence of the night those who are delirious re-fight their recent battles. You're half-asleep when in the darkened ward some one jumps up in bed shouting, 'Hold your bloody hands up.' He thinks he's capturing a Hun trench, taking prisoners in a bombed-in dug-out. In an instant, like a mother with a frightened child, she is bending over him; soon she has coaxed his head back on the pillow. Men do not die in vain when they evoke such women."

TEN THINGS FOR YOUR LIFE.

There are ten things for which no one has ever yet been sorry. They are: For doing good to all, for speaking evil of none, for hearing before judging, for thinking before speaking, for holding an angry tongue, for being kind to the distressed, for asking pardons for all wrongs, for being patient towards everybody, for stopping the ears of a tale-bearer, for disbelieving most of the ill reports.—Exchange.

—Heartkeeping is much like housekeeping. There must be continual sweeping out of dirt and clearing out of rubbish, a daily washing of dishes, and a perpetual battle with all sorts of vermin. If heart-cleaning could be done up once for all, then the Christian might discharge all his graces and have an easy time of it.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

A SWARM OF BEES.

Be kind and be truthful in all that you say;
Be pure in your thoughts and be prompt to obey;
Be smiling; be wide awake, cheery, and bright;
Be neat in appearance; be always polite;
Be busy—there's work that your small hands should do—
Be quick to aid those that are weaker than you;
Be studious in school and be fair in your play;
Be brave and drive cowardly fears far away;
Be modest, be earnest, be faithful—these be's
Are such as gain friends and are certain to please,
A fine swarm of bees that has never a drone,
All serving Be Good, the queen bee, on her throne.
They never will sting you nor cause you a fear,
But yield sweetest honey each day in the year.

OUR BIBLE GAMES.

It was Sunday afternoon. The family was gathered in the cozy sitting room, reading or occasionally exchanging a few words. Snow began to fall soon after they returned from church, and the now raging storm was bringing an early twilight. As the room grew dim, first grandfather, and later the younger ones, laid down their books or papers and looked out at the storm, or sat quietly thinking.

''Let's play our Bible game,'' said ten-year-old Alice, nestling up to her mother. ''You begin, Grandpa.''

Grandpa returned from a mental excursion into the past, and as a mighty blast swept the trees, he said, ''And he arose and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, 'Peace, be still.' ''

Mother followed with ''And he saw them toiling in rowing, for the wind was contrary to them.''

Then Alice, ''Ask and it shall be given you.''

''A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another,'' repeated grandma, softly.

''And all things whatsoever ye ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive,'' put in father, with conviction.

The boy of fifteen remembered his teacher's talk in class that day, and said, ''Am I my brother's keeper?''

''Now B, grandpa,'' prompted Alice.

''Yes, child,'' said grandpa. ''Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might.''

''Blessed are the peacemakers,'' continued the mother.

Then there was a wait for Alice to think. All at once she burst out with, ''Be ye kind one to another.''

''Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith,'' said grandma.

''Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord.'' This from father:

''Can't seem to think of any,'' said the boy.

''Oh, yes, you can, Don't hurry.''

After a pause, the boyish voice gave, ''Blessed are the pure in heart.''

''You could hardly have done better,'' said his father.

Long before they reached the W's, the room was dark, but the game was so pleasant that no one cared. Indeed, the darkness and the storm were the best setting for the thoughts that gathered around the dear familiar words. Even the children felt the influence of the tender and the strong messages.

When they had finished this list, mother proposed a round with one verse for each letter, and began, ''Abide in me and I in you.''

''Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth is Mount Zion,'' came promptly from grandpa, for in this game the first to think of a verse gave it.

''Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden,'' quoted Alice.

All puzzled in silence over the next letter, but at last grandma said, ''Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole.''

''Enter in at the strait gate,'' said the boy, and father ended the first round with ''Fear not, for I am with thee.''—Eliza F. Miller, Continent.

THE SOLDIER AND THE SAVIOUR.

Does army life make a soldier more or less inclined to accept the religion of Jesus Christ? Undoubtedly it disposes him favorably. This does not mean that they will rush in large numbers to the altar, or seek otherwise to indicate their acceptance of Him, but it does mean that most of them will think seriously of His claims upon their lives. The trouble with multitudes on the outside is that they will not think. But life is a serious proposition with the soldier, despite all the fun involved. He is not especially anxious to prepare to die. Except in rare situations every soldier knows that his chances for living are greater than his chances of getting killed, and strange as it may seem that thought of possible death itself gives a thrill which will send him ''over the top'' or on any other errand often with a smile. The reason is not hard to find. He is an idealist fundamentally. He isn't shooting because he hates some one; he is risking his life because he loves some one or many, and is ready to make good that love with his life. He actually comes nearer to following the example of our Lord than most of the folks who stay at home. And who can tell how far he is from the Kingdom in such an hour? Theologians may debate it. There is no question but that he would be a stronger man if he knew Jesus Christ personally, but he feels akin to Christ, at least close to His ideals, even though he has not settled the doctrinal or more important question.

In other words, the soldier is eager to know about life rather than about death. He will study the Bible if a good teacher is available, he will hear a sermon gladly if the speaker has a message. He will gladly identify himself with the Christian groups in camp, if the professing Christians are the big wholesome characters in camp.

America is setting new ideals before the world. If present efforts are a sure index, she intends to send to France the healthiest soldiery in physique and morals which the world has ever seen. God grant she may succeed, and God grant that any one who can render aid in this great work may use his resources to the limit.—A. A. Brown, in New York Christian Advocate.

''I was a stranger and ye took me not in,'' said our Lord. He did not say ''a poor and needy stranger.'' There is many a homeless heart with a mansion to lodge in, many a lonely soul with money to buy everything but friendship.—Forward.

PRE-OCCUPATION OF SIN.

We must co-operate with God. If there is any sin in my heart that I am not willing to give up, then I need not pray. You may take a bottle, and cork it uptight, and put it under Niagare, and there will not a drop of that mighty volume of water get into the bottle. If there is any sin in my heart that I am not willing to give up, I need not expect a blessing.—D. L. Moody.

It is the hardest thing in the grammar of life to learn to put ''mine'' and ''thine'' in just the right place. That is life's lesson. Paul had learned it when he said, ''Ye are not your own,'' and when he stood on that deck in the storm and said, ''God, whose I am and whom I serve.'' The Christian man is the man who has found to whom he belongs. The world wants men who know where they belong and to whom they belong.—W. W. Moore.

Editor Herald:

I read the views of Brother Hinshaw on the subject: "Argue, Argue, Argue". I agree with him that communications over assumed names, containing personal thrusts and reflections on others, with cheap ridicule; articles intended to magnify the writer and minify others, do more harm than good, and ought not to be published.

But there are yet myriads of unsettled questions. The world, we are told, is about to be made safe for democracy. In other words, the people are to be the rulers. To that end, they need to be informed. Every discussion that sets forth the results of mature reflection; that controverts seriously what the writer regards to be error and advocates, with reasons, his views of truth, must certainly benefit every reader, though the views expressed may be erroneous. Contentions! belittling others, personal exaltations and conceits in the paper, never. Arguments containing ideas new and original, give us more and more of them.

We want no spleen nor sneers at others; but our minds are open for new and original thoughts on almost any question. These make live and interesting reading. Ours is a very democratic church. Its forum must be kept wide open. What do you think of these views, Brother Hinshaw? If you do not agree with them, we shall be pleased to know your reasons to the contrary.

PORTER, STANLY CT.—We have just closed our revival meeting and we think there was good accomplished. Our meeting began Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. Our pastor, A. M. Hamilton, preached us a good sermon at that hour. Rev. J. H. Moton was at hand afternoon and began preaching his Holy Ghost sermons, preached twice a day for two days. Bro. D. L. Surratt from Jackson's Hill was with us and did some good faithful work. We thank Bro. T. W. Johnson from Albemarle for his earnest and faithful work on Wednesday. We had a glorious revival. The church was greatly revived, one sinner was converted and joined the church. We are not dead at Porter yet as some think. We have some faithful ones who are still praying and say they expect to hold on until death. Dear readers, pray for us at Porter.

We expect to paint our church in a few weeks; that speaks a little.

THE DEATH OF THE CROSS.

''This he said, signifying what death he should die." John 12:33.

''(He) beamec obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.'' Phil. 2:8.

Let us study for a while the death which Jesus died: not just now the readily admitted atoning purpose and sacrificial character of his death; but the death of being ''lifted up,'' ''on the cross,'' involving actually and necessarily the cruel part men took in accomplishing ''his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem." The reconcilement of the seemingly contradictory scripture statements on the subject would, if possible, prove helpful and comforting. Some of these scriptures, disconnected or taken alone, would suggest a purely voluntary, and perhaps a suicidal, painless death, experienced before admiring and sympathizing friends. Five times is Jesus' death spoken of as a laying down of his life. He declares: ''I lay down my life for the sheep.'' ''I lay it down of myself. No man taketh it from me.'' ''I have power (''exousia,'' permission, privilege, authority) to lay it down, and I have 'exousia' to take it again.'' ''This commandment (to lay down my life) have I received of my Father.'' ''Therefore doth my Father love me; because I lay down my life that I might take it again.'' ''He gave himself for us''—''for me''—''for the church.'' Here Jesus' ''laying down his life'' seems a voluntary act of his own, just as independent as his act of ''taking it again.'' ''He poured out his soul (or life) unto death.'' As both Priest and sacrificial Lamb ''he offered himself to God,'' and ''put away sin by the sacrifice of himself.'' There is here no hint of any human agency in effecting the death of Christ.

But other scriptures, too numerous to mention and too plain for explanation, clearly attribute Jesus' death to the voluntary, murderous action of wicked men. Jesus had so clearly in mind all the while the very form of the death he should endure that every act and expression of his relating thereto are easily capable of the cross construction, and most of them are incapable of any other. He speaks of being ''lifted up''—''signifying what death he should die.'' ''He showed unto his disciples how he must be killed,'' and in rebuking Peter's resentment of such prediction he declared his death by killing was of ''the things that be of God.'' To his sad disciples Jesus explained his mysterious and perplexing death as being altogether scriptural, and he charged them with folly in being ''slow to believe all that the prophets had spoken.'' The cross conception or interpretation is so generally and so essentially involved in the atoning plan that the cross is made the symbol of the gospel saving plan in which St. Paul and all true Christians glory. God's saving wisdom and power are manifested in the love of ''Christ crucified.''

This question concerning the martyr-like death of Jesus is not answered, but only shifted, by saying it was prophesied. Why were all these sufferings predicted? They must have been foreseen as important factors in the great atoning scheme, and so were foretold. Evidently the kind of death Jesus should die was a very important—if not even a necessary factor. ''Thus it is written and thus it behooved Christ to suffer.'' Conditions required that ''Christ ought to suffer these things, and enter into his glory." His Father could have sent more than twelve legions of angels to defend him; ''but how then should the scriptures be fulfilled'' which had foretold his cross-sufferings?

The following considerations may lead us towards light on this interesting subject.

The very beautiful supposition or theory of Christ's being received in love by those beings for whom and in whose presence he came in wondrous love to die a voluntary death, over which they wept in grateful sympathy, appeals to merely human reason. For ''then is the offence of the cross ceased.'' But the loving sympathy contemplated could itself be made possible only by the cross death so offensive to human reason. ''Thus it behooved Christ to suffer (on the cross) that he might give repentance.'' Nor could this supposedly ideal death have been so becoming the heroically submissive Lion-like Lamb of God as was his martyr death of suffering and shame willingly endured for those who wilfully inflicted it and for all mankind.

Jesus' life and teachings—a necessary part of his saving work—so powerfully condemned wicked men as to excite their murderous hatred which God permitted finally to manifest itself in murderous action. His cross death was an experience no more abnormal than were all his life experiences so fearfully presaging it; and only direct providential intervention could have averted the dreadful end. But this intervention God withheld. The more than twelve legions were not sent to deliver him from his enemies, whose cruel acts, voluntarily performed, God directed to the end long before predicted. And Jesus yielded himself to the attacks of foes he could so easily and ordinarily in strict justice have destroyed. ''He was led as a lamb to the slaughter.'' He could have slaughtered his leaders, ''tearing them like a lion, rending them in pieces.'' ''He gave his back to the smiters and his cheek to them that plucked off the hair.'' He could have ''smitten all his enemies upon the cheek bone'' and have ''broken the teeth of the ungodly.'' ''As a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth.'' ''Out of his mouth goeth a sharp two-edged sword'' ''and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.'' Unresentfully he received the vile traitors kiss. ''Kiss the Son, O ye kings, ye judges of the earth, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little.'' Clearly, then, Jesus ''was consenting to [illegible] (own) death,'' which he permitted his foes to inflict; and he thus truly though indirectly gave his life for the world.

The humanly inflicted and humanly suffered death of Jesus on the cross was entirely consonant or "all of a piece" with the humanly inflicted persecutions of his human life. "The cross is the culmination of the mystery of that life," which had all along its course forefelt the death whose hour had not yet come. "The cross was never dissociated from the life; he brought it with him. . . . The child of the manger is the man of the cross.' "Ecce Deus." Any death other than that of the cross would have been an ill befitting close of the life he had lived. Having assumed the incarnate, earthly life he must accept all its attendant experiences "even unto (as far as to) death." He had shown men how to live the human life in human conditions; he must show men how to die a human death under human conditions—how to be "obedient as far as to death, even the death of the cross." His life experiences and his death experiences were reciprocally consistent.

Surely nothing could more clearly exhibit the depravity of the human heart nor better prove the futility of the saving means previously employed and the depth of man's wickedness and hatred to God than man's crucifixion of Christ, the very most dazzling Jewel in heaven's crown, the brightness of God's glory, the fairest among ten thousand and the One altogether lovely and the ideal and glory and crown of perfected manhood. Some of the best Church people of his day crucified him, the very best Being heaven itself could send to earth, committing to a death of shame "the Prince of life" and Lord of glory." I believe that but for the actual crucifixion of Jesus it would never have been considered possible for humanity to sink so low in hatred to virtue and purity and goodness. as to crucify Jesus Christ, their highest and completest and most beautiful—their perfect manifestation and expression. Goodness was in Jesus, not abstractly as in a sermon, or a moral essay; not as philosophically considered, and eloquently described: but as beauty and fragrance are in the living flower rather than in botany —goodness warm, and living, and loving, and shining, and going about doing good. Jesus was not relatively or comparatively good, but infinitely, absolutely, perfectly good. Men's hatred of Jesus in their crucifixion of him was the expression of their deepest and bitterest hate against the best goodness the infinitely good and omnipotent God could present in its best and most living and most lovable form. Men can never hate infinite badness, even in Satan himself, more bitterly than men have hated infinite goodness in Jesus Christ. In the cross-death God's best love to man meets man's worst hatred to God. Man did the very worst he could do against the very best God could do. He hated with murderous hate God's dying but life-giving love—actually killed the very Being who loved him well enough to die for him. Would we realize how greatly God hates sin and loves the sinner? Behold the Savior on the cross, there dying to put away the sins of sinners who killed him! Would we know how sinners love sin and hate God? See how they crucified him who died to save them from their sins! Divine love and human hate meet in the cross. While men were such enemies to Christ as to crucify him, he so loved them as to die for them. One's murder of another is the supreme expression of one's hate to another: one's death for another is the supreme expression of one's love for another. The death of the murdered man endured willingly for his murderer is supreme love exercised towards supreme hate—is love's supreme answer to hate's supreme expression. On the cross Christ's dying, life-giving love meets man's murderous hate. And I believe it is demontrably true that greater love is utterly undemonstrable and that holy love and sinful hate can find no sublimer demonstration than in the cross.

Almost every kind of sin in iniquity's dark catalogue was committed or illustrated in the crimes of men bringing about and connected with Jesus' crucifixion—crimes so deep and black that only the crucifixion blood might wipe them away. All the elements of sin were involved. All sin is opposed to all goodness. Every sin is an arrow, from Satan's quiver, aimed at the heart of the Son of God, who is the personal and perfect and purest embodiment of that goodness all good beings love and all evil beings hate. The murder of the holy One of God is the maturity or ripeness of all sin. Every lie, being opposed to the truth of God, is opposed to the God of truth, and every liar would destroy the God of truth, as all anarchy is against the throne of government and him that sits therein. Jesus was all goodness made flesh and dwelling among us; and the hatred of sinful men against all manner of goodness expressed itself in all manner of sinfulness, even in the murder, at last, of goodness' supreme concrete manifestation. God, the Father, for a while, delivered his "Darling to the power of the dogs," leaving him to their rage and fury—to the custody of those he came to bless. And what did they do? They gave the Holy Child no home in which to be born. "His own received him not." He had "not where to lay his head." He was without honor in his own country. He "was wounded in the house of his friends." They called him a devil who cast out devils with his word. They sought how they might bring him to death and never was any death brought about more cruelly, more illegally, more unreasonably, more hypocritically or more basely in every way than the ignominious death of the meek, lamb-like Son of God. See Pilate, the cowardly governor, to whom the high priest and scribes had for envy delivered Jesus, weakly vacillating between his fear of the Jews and his fear of Cesar, resorting to political trickery and cowardly double dealing in trying to please both these irreconcilably hostile parties, and washing his hands with water in assumed innocence while staining his soul with the innocent "blood of this just man" he was unjustly condemning after having thrice declared him innocent! Study the contemptible fanaticism of the Jews who while thirsting, like beasts of prey, for innocent blood, "would not go into Pilate's hall, lest they should be defiled": as if the very soot and slime of the bottomless pit could smirch their dark, murderous souls! And hear their plea before Caiaphas, that he claimed to be the Son of God; and their plea before Pilate, that he claimed to be king of the Jews. They pleaded that he claimed to be the King of the Jews, that they might crucify him for not being that king! They accused him before Pilate of claiming to be the very character they hated and murdered him for not being!

In this trying hour one of his disciples denied him, another basely betrayed him, and they all forsook him and fled. Having been condemned by an unjust trial, not a single process of which was legal, almost every indignity was heaped upon him whom angels adore. They placed a purple robe of mock royalty upon his shoulders upon which universal government should be. They put a thorn crown upon the brow of the King of kings, and a reed sceptre in his hand which should sway universal dominion. They scourged his back which bore the burdens of a weary world. They drove the nails into his hands so often lifted up in blessing, and into his feet always going about doing good. They spat on his face in which had shined the light of the knowledge of the glory of God. They thrust the cruel spear into his tender heart breaking with love. O blessed Christ! Thou Son of Man, born in a stall among the cattle! Thou Son of God, dying on a cross between two thieves!

The cross phenomena supply the necessary visibility to the sublime and decisive conflict between the powers of good and evil, of light and darkness, of heaven and hell. "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" suffered death on the cross; and thus the eternal atoning fact in heaven's history was visibly demon-

Elon College

For Both Men and Women

Elon College, North Carolina

For a quarter century Elon College has rendered the best families of the South a paragon service in providing young men and young women with the best mental, moral and physical training under positive Christian influences, tho entirely free from sectarianism.

Karl Lehman, of Boston, testifies that "of all the Colleges I have visited as International Field Secretary of Christian Endeavor during six years, the spirit of Elon College appeals to me as most genuinely Christian." Elon College is situated in the delightful hill country, a section unsurpassed for beauty, with a climate far-famed for its healthfulness. There is no medical fee, for there is no necessity for it. Its campus, comprising twenty-five acres of native oak and hickory, shrubbery, winding walks and driveways, is one of the most beautiful in the South and, with its two unsurpassed gymnasia, provides abundant opportunity for recreation and relaxation.

The splendid equipment of Elon College was only made possible through liberal endowment. It maintains seven elegant new buildings, especially designed and appointed for college work. These are furnished with every known convenience; steam heat, electric lights, running water, baths and sewerage. The College plant is conservatively valued at $300,000.00.

Elon College is distinctly a high-grade institution, though its charges are moderate. Its graduates are admitted to the graduate departments of all the great universities without examination. Its literary and scientific courses are arranged in various departments which lead to the degrees of Master of Arts, Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Science, Bachelor of Philosophy, Bachelor of Pedagogy, and a three-years' course leading to the degree of Licentiate of Instruction, designed especially for teachers. This institution affords special opportunities for training in Piano, Voice, Expression, Fine Arts, Normal Training, Physical Culture and Commercial Practice.

The Faculty consists of twenty-one specialists; men and women selected not only for their superior teaching ability, but also for their exemplary character and manners.

The student body numbers nearly four hundred and comes from thirteen states.

The lowest Rates in the South, only $131 to $191 per College session of ten months. Fall Term always opens the first Wednesday in September. For full descriptive catalogue and view-book, address —International Peace day, May 18, the birthday of the Hague tribunal, is to be celebrated even more widely than usual by peace advocates throughout the United States this year. The Emergency Peace Federation has sent out from its home office, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, 8,000 letters calling for mass meetings, school meetings and parlor meetings to discuss peace and problems arising out of our present war. "In time of war prepare for peace" was the keynote of this letter, which is signed by Lella Faye Secor, secretary of the organization.

It is urged that each of these meetings shall pass resolutions asking the United States government to state definitely the terms upon which it would be willing to make peace, as President Wilson demanded that the European belligerents do in his message of December 18.

Rebecca Shelly, field secretary of the Emergency Peace Federation, has issued the following appeal:

"For the sake of agonizing humanity which still calls to us across the barriers of nationalism, let us on this Peace Day pledge anew our allegiance to the ideal of international co-operation. Let us not despair because this ideal has not yet been realized.

"Let us rather courageously resolve to learn from the mistakes of the past. Let us ask for such concrete peace terms which do not bear in themselves the seeds of future wars.

"Let us ask the terms of peace: that no nation shall retain territory acquired by conquest, that no punitive indemnities shall be demanded and that the people themselves in the small and subject nations shall decide their own political and economic destiny, and their alliances with the stronger nations."

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT.

This is a subject that should arouse every saved member of every church to a sense of their duty; but what will it take to get that movement? To my mind there was needed only one pledge for the preacher to take at our last Annual Conference: that was to pledge himself to save more souls than ever in all his life. Somehow it seems that we do some of us try to get up all the money we can and fail to see and get the soul saved first. I will say again and again that you will not have any trouble with the saved to get money, but you will with some that are just church members and not Christians. Then why will some preachers try to swell the membership? Just to have a name, I suppose. Just save people and leave the other with the Lord.

Again I sincerely believe the most needed thing in the world today is prayer. Could the preacher get all members to pledge themselves to pray for themselves—we do sometimes, I think, pray for some one to be saved when we ourselves need to pray for our own selves. We can never light another one's candle until ours is lit and we should be as a flame of fire. It seems the churches at large are at a stand-still almost. We as a church are comparatively doing nothing; could we but get the church to pray, not for the unsaved so much as for themselves! We are to be instruments in saving others and could we keep from saving others if we were as submissive as the clay in the potter's hand? Then I say we as a church are fast asleep; we are just like the five foolish virgins and when the cry is made, go ye out to meet him, the Bridegroom, then where will we be? I fear our lamps will be gone out again. I would like to urge all preachers to get your members to pledge themselves to spend some time every day in secret prayer, not so much for the unsaved but for themselves. It is like someone has already said, that the Lord intends for us to be in his hands to be used for the salvation of others just as we use a lead pencil to write with. It makes no difference how many good things I could write, if my pen or pencil will not do as I want it to do; my pencil must be sharpened and be in such a condition as I can use it, and so when it is and I use it as I want to, it just can't help writing. So we are just as the pencil and when we do get right and get as submissive as we should can we keep from doing much good? We then do not have to try to let our light shine for it will just shine in spite of the world, the flesh and the wicked one. I would just like to ask one and all preachers and members, what are we going to do with such facts before us? I will venture to say that some of us never are seen on our bended knees before our Maker. What kind of creatures ought we to be? We are told to work out our salvation with fear and trembling. How we do need to examine ourselves often and see if we are in the faith. David prayed and said, Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation, then will I teach transgressors thy ways and sinners shall be converted unto thee. Does not say they may be converted to thee but they shall be converted. What can we do with such facts before us all? Yes, we do need the Forward movement. But to my mind we all do need to start it in our own lives first of all, then the unsaved will surely take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus.

Again, we think a great work done to get people saved, and what could be greater? Well, to my mind it is greater to just keep them saved. We see people saved and so soon they do not seem to enjoy the strait and narrow way, it calls for self denial and it costs too much. So it is one great thing to be saved but seems much greater in a way to just keep saved. Then where we need the forward movement is in the pulpit. A great responsibility rests on the preacher; he must be up and doing to keep his flock. We see the shepherd of the sheep always carrying his crook and he sees to it that every one is under his care and if not he leaves the ninety and nine and goes back and seeks the lost one until he finds it. That, it seems, would represent the preacher visiting his flock and inquiring how and where they are spiritually. I was very favorably impressed with Rev. R. A. Swaringen's subject and talk at the Summer Conference and we all know just as he said in order to spiritualize the people the gospel just must be preached everywhere. It is not enough to preach it in the pulpit but must, as he said, be preached in the homes, man to man, and I believe that God requires every preacher to visit every home on his work and not only on his work but all other homes he can, saved and unsaved, and I want to say if you do not do and will not do what you should, I would say come out of the ministry and stop being a drone. I do not want to be harsh but laziness is a very bad thing indeed, and is going to cause many to be lost. The sin of omission, it seems, will be as great as commission, if not greater. O well, some will say, the members do not ask me to come in their homes; that may be true, but Jesus Christ says, Follow me. I am the way, the truth and the life. Some preachers I have heard of will say to their families, I will be home just as soon as I get through with my sermons and I will not even stop over for dinner, and they carry out their promise. We just must forsake all; if not, can not be his disciples. Who is it that does not enjoy being with their loved ones. But we are, as it were, to hate father and mother for Jesus' sake; but when we let Jesus have the first place in our lives then it is we can trust our loved ones in his loving care and can go where he wants us to go. Is it not wonderful to be saved?
